20. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.3(e) (2012); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.3(e) (2016).

21. See Booth v. Churner, 532 U.S. 731, 733–734, 121 S. Ct. 1819, 1821, 149 L. Ed. 2d 958, 962 (2001) (holding that the PLRA requires incarcerated people to exhaust any administrative remedies that are available before suing over prison conditions, even if the available remedy is not what you are seeking); see also Alexander v. Hawk, 159 F.3d 1321, 1326–1327 (11th Cir. 1998) (holding that an incarcerated person was required to submit his claims to the available prison grievance program even if the relief offered by that program was not necessarily plain, speedy, and effective in comparison to the federal court system); Sallee v. Joyner, 40 F. Supp. 2d 766, 770 (E.D. Va. 1999) (holding that an incarcerated person must bring confinement-related grievances to the Administrative Remedy Program even if he seeks money damages, which are not available through the Administrative Remedy Program).

22. See Davis v. Frazier, No. 98 Civ. 2658 (HB), 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8911, at *9–10 (S.D.N.Y. June 15, 1999) (unpublished) (citing State of New York, Department of Correction Services, Directive No. 4040, Directive No. 3375R, which states that complaints about alleged assaults or verbal harassment and matters under investigation by the Inspector General are non-grievable); Kearsey v. Williams, No. 99 Civ. 8646, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18727, at *9–10 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 20, 2004) (unpublished) (finding that an incarcerated person was informed by a written decision that, under State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 3375R, his complaint was non-grievable, which is why the incarcerated person sued in court); see also Marcello v. Dept. of Corr., No. 07 Civ. 9665, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 60895, at *9 (S.D.N.Y. July 30, 2008) (unpublished) (“[Incarcerated people] may overcome the exhaustion requirement only if they are able to show either (1) that administrative remedies were not actually ‘available’ to them; (2) that defendant should be estopped from raising plaintiffs’ failure to exhaust as an affirmative defense; or (3) that special circumstances exist that excuse plaintiffs’ non-compliance with official procedural requirements.”).

23. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1900.6 (2012).

24. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(4)(i) (2012); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(4)(i) (2016).

25. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(4)(i)(a)–(c) (2012).

26. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(4)(i)(c)(1) (2012).

27. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(4)(i)(c)(1) (2012).

28. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(4)(i)(c)(2) (2012).

monitoring,²⁹ inmate claims, or records review procedures,³⁰ or any other program or procedure involving a written appeal which extends review outside of the facility;³¹

(4) your grievance involves issues outside DOCCS' supervision; or

(5) your grievance relates only to an individual no longer in your facility.

If a majority of the committee (three out of four members) votes that your grievance falls into one of these categories, your grievance will be dismissed as non-grievable.³² If there is less than a majority, the committee will hear your grievance.³³ If you believe that your grievance was improperly dismissed as non-grievable, you can apply for review directly to the IGP supervisor. You must do so within seven calendar days after receiving the committee's decision to dismiss the grievance.³⁴

You cannot use the IGP for complaints concerning the decisions of other committees such as those relating to disciplinary proceedings and records review as listed above.³⁵ But you can use the IGP to file a grievance concerning the IGP's general policies, rules, and procedures.³⁶ However, complaints you may have against any policy, regulation, or rule of an outside agency, or action taken by an outside agency, are non-grievable under the New York IGP.³⁷ Outside agencies are those not under the supervision of the DOCCS Commissioner, including the Division of Parole, Citizenship and Immigration Services,³⁸ and the Office of Mental Health.³⁹ Note that New York City DOC Directive 3376, Inmate Grievance Resolution Program, sets out non-grievable issues specific to New York City jails (as opposed to New York prisons).⁴⁰

29. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(4)(i)(c)(3) (2012).

30. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(4)(i)(c)(3) (2012). Records review includes freedom of information (FOI) requests and expunction (erasing a record). See Chapter 7 of the JLM, "Freedom of Information," for information about FOI requests and appeals.

31. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.3(e)(1) (2012); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.3(e)(1) (2016).

32. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(4)(i) (2012); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(4)(i) (2016).

33. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(4)(iv) (2012); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(4)(iv) (2016).

34. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(4)(iii) (2012); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(4)(iii) (2016).

35. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.3(e)(2) (2012); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.3(e)(2) (2016); see, e.g., Harris v. Coughlin, 143 A.D.2d 1018, 1018, 533 N.Y.S.2d 604, 605 (2d Dept. 1988) (holding that where administrators deny an incarcerated person's temporary release application and also his only chance at administrative appeal, the incarcerated person can then seek judicial review).

36. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.3(e)(3) (2012); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.3(e)(3) (2016). An example of a rule that could be challenged using the IGP is the rule governing membership of the Temporary Release Committee. See Cintron v. Coughlin, 141 A.D.2d 1006, 1007, 531 N.Y.S.2d 46, 47 (3d Dept. 1988) (allowing incarcerated person to challenge his rejection for release by the Temporary Release Committee by arguing that a parole officer should not be allowed on the committee). Note that this decision is pre-PLRA, but it serves as an example of the grievable rules of the committees listed in DOCCS Directive 4040.

37. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(4)(i)(d) (2012); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(4)(i)(d) (2016).

38. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.3(f) (2012). The U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services is a bureau of the Department of Homeland Security and was formerly referred to as Immigration and Naturalization Services.

39. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.3(f) (2012); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.3(f) (2016).

40. New York City Department of Correction, Directive No. 3376, Inmate Grievance and Request Program § IV(B)(2) (2012), available at https://www1.nyc.gov/assets/doc/downloads/directives/Directive_3376_Inmate_Grievance_Request_Program.pdf

Finally, if you are filing a claim for loss of or damage to personal property, the New York State Court of Claims requires you to first exhaust the administrative procedures available for paying back incarcerated people, and then file your claim within 120 days of doing so.⁴¹ The IGP cannot be used to do this. See Chapter 17 of the JLM, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions,” for more information about property claims.

If you are unsure whether an issue is grievable under the IGP, you should file a grievance, and the committee will decide through the grievance process in Section 701.5 of DOCCS Directive 4040.⁴²

3. How to Write an Effective Grievance

When using the IGP, you should follow several guidelines to increase your chances of obtaining relief (help). First, if you file a formal grievance with a grievance resolution committee, write out your grievance in detail and list exactly what attempts you made to resolve the problem.⁴³ If you do not try to resolve the problem on your own, your grievance may be dismissed and closed at the grievance committee hearing.⁴⁴

Second, your complaint must show that you are personally affected by the policy or issue that you are filing a grievance against.⁴⁵ If that is not the case, your complaint must show that you will be affected at some point in the future unless relief is granted and changes are made.⁴⁶ Grievances submitted by third parties will be sent to the Inmate’s Grievance Coordinator and Inmate Grievance Resolution Program Director. The Grievance Coordinator will speak to the corresponding incarcerated person to determine if the incarcerated person wishes to pursue the formal grievance process. If the corresponding incarcerated person declines to pursue this process, the grievance will not be addressed.

Third, you should state the problem accurately and precisely. Using inflammatory, disrespectful, or offensive language (such as curse words) in your complaint will reduce your chances of success.

Fourth, the more specific you are about the relief you are seeking, the more likely you are to receive it. You should list in detail every aspect of relief that you seek because the Inmate Grievance Resolution Committee may not consider types of relief that you do not specifically request. For example, explain the conditions or policies you want changed.

Finally, you should keep copies of all papers filed and received. For a more detailed discussion of what information you must include in your grievance, see Part E(1)(b)(i) of this chapter.

(last visited Nov. 4, 2019). This city jail grievance directive lists the following issues as non-grievable: matters under investigation by the Inspector General; complaints pertaining to an alleged assault or harassment; complaints where the remedy involves the removal of a staff person from an assignment, or the censure, discipline, or termination of a staff person; matters outside the jurisdiction of the Department of Correction; and complaints involving any program or procedure having its own administrative or investigative process, such as requests for accommodation based on disability or claims for discrimination based on disability, or Freedom of Information Law requests.

41. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 10(9) (McKinney 2009).

42. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.3(e) (2012); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.3(e) (2016). The committee has 16 days to decide the issue informally. If the grievant is not satisfied with the informal solution, the committee will schedule a full hearing. The full hearing must be within 16 days of the receipt of the grievance. After the full hearing, the committee will deliberate in private session. The committee must issue its decision in writing to the grievant within two days.

43. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(a)(2); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(a)(2) (2016).

44. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, §§ 701.3(a), 701.5(b)(4)(i)(a); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program §§ 701.3(a), 701.5(b)(4)(i)(a) (2016).

45. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, §§ 701.3(b), 701.5(b)(4)(i)(b); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program §§ 701.3(b), 701.5(b)(4)(i)(b) (2016).

46. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, §§ 701.3(b), 701.5(b)(4)(i)(b); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program §§ 701.3(b), 701.5(b)(4)(i)(b) (2016).

D. The Basic Structure of the New York IGP

1. Levels of Authority

The IGP has three levels of authority. Higher levels of authority supervise lower levels of authority. The three levels, starting with the lowest, are: the Inmate Grievance Resolution Committee ("IGRC"), the Superintendent, and the Central Office Review Committee ("CORC").⁴⁷

(a) The Inmate Grievance Resolution Committee ("IGRC")

Each correctional institution must have an IGRC.⁴⁸ The IGRC must be a five-person group, made up of two voting incarcerated people, two voting staff members, and a non-voting chairperson.⁴⁹ The incarcerated IGRC representatives are elected by their peers for a term of six months and ordinarily serve full-time.⁵⁰ An incarcerated representative may not be removed from his position without a limited due process hearing.⁵¹

(b) The Role of the Superintendent and Staff

The superintendent selects staff IGRC representatives from a list of personnel who successfully complete a training course designed for individuals who want to serve as IGRC representatives.⁵² The Superintendent must ensure that the IGP staff is trained and available.⁵³ Chairpersons for IGRC hearings are selected by the IGP Supervisor from a list submitted by the IGRC representatives.⁵⁴ The chairperson may be an incarcerated person, staff member, or a volunteer associated with the facility's program. Incarcerated people may communicate with the Superintendent when appealing a decision by the IGRC. Incarcerated people may also communicate with the Superintendent when the Superintendent issues a decision regarding a grievance. Incarcerated people may also interact with the Superintendent when he conducts an investigation.

(c) The Central Office Review Committee ("CORC")

CORC consists of Deputy Commissioners and staff members.⁵⁵ It functions on behalf of and under the authority of the Commissioner of Correctional Services.⁵⁶ An Office of Diversity Management representative attends CORC hearings and may offer input on grievances alleging discrimination, but cannot vote.⁵⁷ Incarcerated people may communicate directly with CORC when appealing a decision of the Superintendent.

47. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.1(c); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.1(c) (2016).

48. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.1(a); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.1(a) (2016).

49. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.4(a); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.4(a) (2016).

50. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.4(b)(2),(4); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.4(b)(2),(4) (2016).

51. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.4(c)(1); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.4(c)(1) (2016).

52. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.4(d); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.4(d) (2016).

53. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.4(d); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.4(d) (2016).

54. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.4(f); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.4(f) (2016).

55. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(d)(2)(i); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(d)(2)(i) (2016).

56. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(d)(2)(ii); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(d)(2)(ii) (2016).

57. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(d)(2)(i); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(d)(2)(i) (2016).

CORC decisions have the effect of directives. CORC decisions requiring corrective action are implemented by the appropriate facility and/or departmental office.⁵⁸ Although the Director of the IGP is not a voting member of the CORC, he is responsible for the administrative function of the IGP and for ensuring that the appropriate facility and/or departmental office carry out CORC decisions.⁵⁹

E. The New York IGP Rules

Understanding how the IGP works will help you use the program effectively. The rules are in two DOCCS directives. Directive 4040 contains the rules for the general program, while Directive 4041 contains alternative rules for special facilities. The policies, rules, and procedures contained in Directives 4040 and 4041 are also in Title 7 of the Codes, Rules, and Regulations of the State of New York.⁶⁰ Also, Directive 4002 establishes the Inmate Liaison Committee (“ILC”), which is concerned with the general welfare of incarcerated people.

1. Directive 4040: The Inmate Grievance Program

(a) General Procedures

IGP procedures work along three levels of authority, in order from lowest to highest: the IGRC, the Superintendent, and the CORC. As noted earlier, before filing a complaint with the IGRC, you should try to resolve the complaint on your own through existing formal or informal methods.

(b) The IGRC

(i) Filing the Complaint⁶¹

You must submit your complaint to the Grievance Clerk, using the Inmate Grievance Complaint Form 2131, within twenty-one calendar days of the incident described in your complaint.⁶² In some cases, the IGP supervisor can approve exceptions to this time limit if you attempt to resolve the situation on your own or if your complaint is referred back to the IGP by the courts.⁶³ If for some reason a Grievance Form is not available, you should submit your complaint to the clerk on a piece of paper. Your Grievance Form must include:

- Your name;
- Department Identification Number;
- Housing unit, program assignment, and other identifying information;
- A short, specific description of the problem and the remedies you are requesting; and
- Details of the actions you have already taken to try to resolve the complaint, including people you have contacted and responses you have received.

If you submit your complaint on a plain piece of paper, be sure to include the same information.

(ii) IGRC Hearing⁶⁴

If there is no immediate resolution after you file your complaint, the full IGRC will consider your complaint. If a hearing is necessary, it must be held within sixteen calendar days after your complaint

58. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(d)(2)(ii); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(d)(2)(ii) (2016).

59. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(d)(2)(iii); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(d)(2)(iii) (2016).

60. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, §§ 701–702.

61. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(a); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(a) (2016).

62. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(a)(1); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(a)(1) (2016).

63. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.6(g); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(g) (2016).

64. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(2); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(2) (2016).

is received.⁶⁵ The IGRC will conduct the hearing at a set time and place. At the hearing, you, your advisor, anyone the grievance directly affects, or any witnesses, can offer evidence. The IGRC will judge the relevance and importance of the evidence offered.⁶⁶

You can miss your IGRC hearing twice before the committee will rule in your absence, but only if you miss your hearing for a legitimate reason, such as a visit, parole hearing, program committee, sick call, keeplock (confinement to cell), etc.⁶⁷ However, at the third scheduled hearing, it will rule in your absence, even if you have a good excuse. You should make every effort to be at the hearing so you can explain your evidence.

If your confinement status prevents you from appearing within sixteen days and you will be released within thirty calendar days, you can have the hearing postponed until your release or have the hearing held in your absence.⁶⁸ But if you will not be released within thirty days, the hearing will be held without you.⁶⁹

(iii) Committee Decision/Recommendation⁷⁰

After the hearing, the IGRC will discuss the complaint privately. When it has reached a decision, the IGRC may choose to tell you its decision orally. Within two working days of the hearing, the Committee must inform you of its decision and reasons in writing.⁷¹ If the decision requires action by the Superintendent or Central Office, the IGRC will make recommendations for the Superintendent to respond and take action. If a majority of the committee cannot agree on a decision, your complaint will be sent to the Superintendent for a response.⁷²

(iv) Dismissals⁷³

As discussed in Part C, the IGRC may dismiss and close your grievance if it decides: (1) you have made no effort to resolve the complaint on your own “through existing channels,” (2) you are not or will not be personally affected by the issue you raise, (3) you seek a remedy that is available through other DOCCS programs, (4) your grievance involves issues outside the supervision of DOCCS, or (5) the grievance is institutional and the only person affected by the grievance has been released or paroled.⁷⁴

65. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(2)(ii); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(2)(ii) (2016).

66. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(2)(ii)–(iii); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(2)(ii)–(iii) (2016).

67. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(2)(ii)(b)–(c); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(2)(ii)(b)–(c) (2016).

68. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(2)(ii)(a); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(2)(ii)(a) (2016).

69. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(2)(ii)(a); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(2)(ii)(a) (2016).

70. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(3); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(3) (2016).

71. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(3)(i); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(3)(i) (2016).

72. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(3)(ii); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(3)(ii) (2016).

73. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(4); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(4) (2016).

74. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(b)(4)(i)(a)–(e); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(b)(4)(i)(a)–(e) (2016).

(c) Appealing to the Superintendent

(i) Filing an Appeal⁷⁵

Within seven calendar days of receiving the Committee's written response to your grievance, you may appeal the decision to the Superintendent by filing an appeal (Form 2131) with the Grievance Clerk. If you want to appeal the decision, it is important that you file on time. If you do not file within seven calendar days, it will be presumed that you have accepted the IGRC's decision.⁷⁶

(ii) Superintendent's Action⁷⁷

The Superintendent's response to your appeal will depend on whether the issue involved is departmental or institutional. A Departmental Grievance is one that affects you during your confinement at any of the many facilities in the Department.⁷⁸ An Institutional Grievance is one affecting you only as long as you remain a resident of the facility in which you filed the grievance.⁷⁹

If the matter concerns changing or revising a Departmental policy or directive, then the Superintendent will forward the grievance papers and a recommendation to the CORC for further review—and notify you that he has done so—within seven calendar days of the appeal. But if the matter does not concern changing or revising a Departmental policy directive, then the Superintendent will answer your appeal within 20 calendar days.⁸⁰

In all institutional matters, the Superintendent will make a decision and notify you of it, with reasons stated, within 20 calendar days of the appeal.⁸¹

(d) Appeal to the CORC

(i) Filing an Appeal⁸²

If you are not satisfied with the Superintendent's decision, you may appeal the Superintendent's action to the CORC. To do so, you must file an appeal (Form 2133) with the Grievance Clerk within seven calendar days of receiving the Superintendent's written response to your grievance.⁸³

75. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(c)(1); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(c)(1) (2016).

76. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(c)(1); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(c)(1) (2016).

77. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(c)(3); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(c)(3) (2016).

78. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.2(b); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.2(b) (2016).

79. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.2(c); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.2(c) (2016).

80. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(c)(3)(i); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(c)(3)(i) (2016).

81. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(c)(3)(ii); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(c)(3)(ii) (2016).

82. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(d)(1); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(d)(1) (2016).

83. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(d)(1)(i); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(d)(1)(i) (2016).

(ii) CORC Action

The CORC will review the appeal, make a decision, and inform you of its decision, with reasons for its decision, within 30 calendar days from the time it receives the appeal.⁸⁴ It may take the CORC up to seven calendar days to actually receive your appeal. However, if you have not received notice of receipt or a decision within 45 days of filing your appeal, you should send a letter to the IGP supervisor to confirm that your appeal was filed and sent to the CORC.⁸⁵

(e) Procedural Safeguards for Fair Consideration of Grievances

(i) Advisors⁸⁶

During the grievance process, you may present the grievance yourself without help, or you may receive advice or assistance from a staff member who is willing to serve as an advisor. You may also receive assistance from another incarcerated person. An advisor is not a direct party to a grievance.⁸⁷ A direct party is a person who is so affected by the grievance that he is given the opportunity to provide input before the decision, and he can also appeal the decision afterward.⁸⁸

If you are incarcerated in the Special Housing Unit, you will have restricted access to other incarcerated people and may be prohibited from using another incarcerated person as an advisor. In that case, you may also be prohibited from serving as an advisor to another incarcerated person. In this situation, a willing staff member can serve as your advisor.⁸⁹

(ii) Reprisals Prohibited⁹⁰

Reprisal means “any action or threat of action against anyone for the good faith use of ... the grievance procedure.”⁹¹ The reprisal rule forbids anyone from retaliating against you if you use the IGP to file a grievance about an issue you believe is appropriate for the grievance process. If such retaliation occurs, you can respond by filing a complaint. You also cannot receive a misbehavior report only for making a supposedly false statement to the IGP.⁹²

(iii) Objection to IGRC Representatives⁹³

If you object to any of the incarcerated representatives on the IGRC, that incarcerated representative will not take part in the resolution of your grievance and will be replaced by one of the

84. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(d)(3)(ii); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(d)(3)(ii) (2016). It is important to note that some versions of the New York regulations have an error and does not have § 701.5(d)(3) in between § 701.5(d)(2) and § 701.5(d)(4). Instead, it lists § 701.5(d)(2) twice. The JLM cites to § 701.5(d)(3) when it refers to the second § 701.5(d)(2) that is listed. However, you should cite to § 701.5(d)(2) if you are using this provision in written documents.

85. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(d)(3)(i); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.5(d)(3)(i) (2016).

86. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, §§ 701.2(h), 701.6(a); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program §§ 701.2(h), 701.6(a) (2016).

87. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.2(h); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.2(h) (2016).

88. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.2(i); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.2(i) (2016).

89. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.7(c)(3); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.7(c)(3) (2016).

90. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.6(b); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(b) (2016).

91. 28 C.F.R. § 40.9 (2016).

92. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.6(b); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(b) (2016).

93. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.6(c); State of New York, Department of Corrections and alternates. If you object to all of the incarcerated representatives and the alternates, the committee staff members will make the decision on their own, without any incarcerated representatives. In addition, a staff representative who is a party to your grievance cannot vote on the matter. In some especially sensitive circumstances, only staff members will conduct the investigation, even if you do not object to the incarcerated representatives.⁹⁴ If that happens, the incarcerated representatives will still vote.

(iv) Code of Ethics⁹⁵

A Code of Ethics for IGRC staff and incarcerated representatives, clerks, and chairpersons has been established to strengthen the credibility and effectiveness of the IGP.⁹⁶ For example, the Code of Ethics prohibits IGRC members from preventing an incarcerated person from filing a grievance⁹⁷ or improperly disclosing confidential information (including confidential medical information).⁹⁸ Under the Code of Ethics, a member must have a willing, tactful attitude, a working knowledge of the IGP, and awareness of his responsibilities under the IGP.⁹⁹

(v) Time Limits¹⁰⁰

The IGRC may only get an extension on the time limit for review if you consent in writing. Otherwise, if the IGRC does not decide a matter within the time limit, you may appeal to the next level.¹⁰¹

(vi) File Maintenance/Confidentiality¹⁰²

Grievance files are maintained in a specific area to be used by the IGRC and the clerk. Unless you consent in writing, no copies of documents may be placed in your central file or facility file. None of the grievance materials will be given to anyone other than you, a direct party, or someone involved in the review process without the IGP supervisor's approval.¹⁰³ The superintendent is responsible for assuring the confidentiality and maintenance of grievance records. Grievance files are kept for at least four years following their conclusion.¹⁰⁴

Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(c) (2016).

94. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.6(e)(2); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(e)(2) (2016).

95. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.6(f); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(f) (2016). The Code of Ethics can be found in N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.11 and in the State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.11 (2016).

96. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.6(f)(1); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(f)(1) (2016).

97. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.11(a); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.11(a) (2016).

98. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.11(e); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.11(e) (2016).

99. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, §§ 701.11(b), (h); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program §§ 701.11(b), (h) (2016).

100. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.6(g)(2); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(g)(2) (2016).

101. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.6(g)(2); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(g)(2) (2016).

102. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.6(k); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(k) (2016).

103. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.6(k); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(k) (2016).

104. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.6(k)(3); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(k)(3) (2016).

(vii) IGRC Reference Materials¹⁰⁵

The IGRC at each facility is responsible for keeping an up-to-date set of code “A B” departmental directives and a set of the IGP monthly index of written opinions. A copy of the index must also be kept in the prison law library.

(viii) Emergencies¹⁰⁶

If your grievance is an emergency, it will be referred directly to the superintendent or the CORC, depending on who has the authority to ensure a quick and meaningful response. Emergencies include situations in which your health, safety, or welfare is in danger.

(f) Procedures for Incarcerated People in Special Housing Units¹⁰⁷

If you are living in a Special Housing Unit (“SHU”), your access to the IGRC may be more restricted than that of incarcerated people living with the general population. Facilities must follow slightly different procedures to help you file a grievance.

The area supervisor must make inmate grievance complaint forms (Form 2131) available to you at all times.¹⁰⁸ You will be given envelopes so you may forward your grievance confidentially to the Inmate Grievance Office.¹⁰⁹ Your facility may also use an inmate grievance deposit box. This box must be kept locked. Only the IGP supervisor and IGRC staff representatives should have keys to it, and they should collect any inmate grievances at least twice a week.¹¹⁰ You should also be able to directly speak to IGRC staff members, who must make rounds to all SHUs at least once a week to “give inmates who are having communication problems or difficulty writing their complaints an opportunity to request and receive assistance.”¹¹¹ For security reasons, you may have to use a staff member, rather than another incarcerated person, as your advisor.¹¹²

The IGP supervisor is responsible for monitoring the grievance procedure in SHUs and for making sure that all of the requirements are met.¹¹³ If the procedures are not being followed, for example if there are never any envelopes or Inmate Grievance boxes, you should tell the IGP supervisor.

(g) Employee Harassment¹¹⁴

There are faster procedures for grievances concerning employee harassment. Employee harassment is defined as “employee misconduct meant to annoy, intimidate or harm an inmate.”¹¹⁵ For example, if a Corrections officer made sexually suggestive comments towards you or assaulted 105. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.6(l); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(l) (2016).

106. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.6(m); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.6(m) (2016).

107. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.7; State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.7 (2016).

108. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.7(a)(1) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.7(a)(1) (2016).

109. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.7(a)(2) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.7(a)(2) (2016).

110. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.7(b) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.7(b) (2016).

111. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.7(c)(1) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.7(c)(1) (2016).

112. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.7(c)(3); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.7(c)(3) (2016).

113. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.7 (2019).

114. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.8 (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.8 (2016).

115. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.2(e) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.2(e) (2016).

you, that would be “employee harassment.”¹¹⁶ If this happens to you, you should first report the problem to the harassing employee’s immediate supervisor; but you can still file a complaint in the IGP if you choose not to report the employer to his supervisor.¹¹⁷

In order to make a stronger case, you should write down and keep a record of every incident of harassment. Your records should include the time, date, nature of the harassment, who was involved, and if there were any other witnesses. You should also keep a record of anything that happened after the harassment, like a conversation you had with someone else about the incident.

In cases of harassment, your grievance and supporting documents should be forwarded directly to the superintendent by the end of the day.¹¹⁸ If the superintendent concludes that the issue does not relate to harassment, then the grievance will be returned to the IGRC for normal processing.¹¹⁹ If the superintendent determines that the issue does relate to harassment, he must investigate further. If the superintendent investigates further, you will not be allowed to withdraw your complaint.¹²⁰ The superintendent will then make a decision within 25 calendar days and inform you of the decision, with reasons stated.¹²¹ That time limit can be extended only with your consent. If the superintendent does not respond within 25 days, you may appeal to the CORC by filing a Form 2133 with the inmate grievance clerk.¹²² If you receive a decision from the superintendent and you want to appeal, you must file your appeal with the inmate grievance clerk within seven calendar days.¹²³

(h) Unlawful Discrimination¹²⁴

There is also a faster grievance process if you suffer unlawful discrimination. Unlawful discrimination includes “acts or policies which adversely affect individuals based on race, religion, national origin, sex, sexual orientation, age, disabling condition(s) or political belief, except as provided by law.”¹²⁵ You may only file a grievance if you are personally and directly affected by the act or policy.¹²⁶ If you are being unlawfully discriminated against by an employee, program, policy, or procedure, you should report the incident to the immediate supervisor of the offending employee or the administrator of the policy. However, this is not required before filing a complaint in the IGP.¹²⁷ This grievance will be forwarded to the superintendent, and a copy sent to the office of diversity

116. See Morris v. Eversley, 205 F. Supp. 2d 234, 240 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (finding that sexually suggestive comments, forcible restraint, and sexual assault by a corrections officer were “employee harassment”).

117. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.8(a) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.8(a) (2016).

118. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.8(b) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.8(b) (2016).

119. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.8(c) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.8(c) (2016).

120. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.8(d)–(e) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.8(d)–(e) (2016).

121. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.8(f) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.8(f) (2016).

122. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.8(g) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.8(g) (2016).

123. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.8(h) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.8(h) (2016).

124. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.9 (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.9 (2016).

125. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.2(f) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.2(f) (2016).

126. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.3(b) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.3(b) (2016).

127. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.9(a); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.9(a) (2016).

management within 24 hours.¹²⁸ Either a high-ranking supervisor or the office of diversity management will investigate your grievance.¹²⁹

After supervising an investigation, the superintendent will give a decision within 25 calendar days of the grievance and inform you of the decision, with reasons stated.¹³⁰ If the superintendent does not respond within 25 days, you may appeal to the CORC by filing a Form 2133.¹³¹ If you receive a decision from the superintendent and want to appeal, you must file Form 2133 with the clerk within seven calendar days.¹³²

Directive 4041: The Inmate Grievance Program Modification Plan

(a) Application of the IGP Modification Plan

It may be difficult for some incarcerated people to participate in regular IGP procedures. For example, if you are involved in a temporary release program, you may spend many hours each day looking for a job or education, and you may have weekend furloughs (leaves of absences) and daily family visits. In cases like these, the IGP Modification Plan is used to allow you the same opportunity to file a grievance.¹³³

(b) Procedures

The procedures for filing a grievance under the Modification Plan are found in N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 702.4 and in DOCCS Directive 4041 § 702.4(a)–(c). First, you must request a grievance form, and the facility's duty office will provide you with one within 24 hours of your request. You can ask for help in filling out the form from any incarcerated person or staff member. A designated staff member will try to resolve your grievance informally within 16 days. If resolution is not possible in that time period, the staff member must request an IGRC hearing.¹³⁴ The IGRC members will include two staff representatives and a non-voting chairperson the superintendent chooses, and two incarcerated people you choose. After the hearing, the IGRC will make a recommendation about your claim and send it to you in writing.

If you disagree with the IGRC's recommendation, you can appeal to the superintendent within seven days of receiving the written recommendation from the IGRC.¹³⁵ The appeal will follow the procedure described in Part E(1)(c) of this Chapter. If you do not file an appeal within seven days, you are presumed to have accepted the recommendation.¹³⁶

128. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.9(c) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.9(c) (2016).

129. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.9(d) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.9(d) (2016).

130. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.9(e) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.9(e) (2016).

131. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.9(f) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.9(f) (2016).

132. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.9(g) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4040, Inmate Grievance Program § 701.9(g) (2016).

133. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 702.2(a) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4041, Inmate Grievance Program Modification Plan § 702.2(a) (2011) (as revised Apr. 30, 2015).

134. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 702.4(a)(4) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4041, Inmate Grievance Program Modification Plan § 702.4(a)(4) (2011) (as revised Apr. 30, 2015).

135. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 702.4(b)(1) (2019).

136. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 702.4(b)(1) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4041, Inmate Grievance Program Modification Plan § 702.4(b)(1) (2011) (as revised Apr. 30, 2015).

Within seven calendar days of receiving the Superintendent's response, you can appeal to the CORC.¹³⁷ The appeal will follow the procedure described in Part E(1)(d) of this chapter.

2. Directive 4002: The Inmate Liaison Committee

The superintendent in your facility must establish an Inmate Liaison Committee ("ILC").¹³⁸ This committee's goal is to provide effective communication between incarcerated people and the administration, and to promote the accurate distribution and exchange of information. The ILC must discuss the incarcerated people's general welfare with prison officials. This includes, for example, suggestions from incarcerated people on facility operations. These discussions may not relate to specific problems of individual incarcerated people. The superintendent and Facility Executive Team will meet with the ILC monthly, and informal discussions should occur consistently.

The ILC is made up of a group of incarcerated people chosen by the general population. Representatives are elected by secret ballot for a term of six months and may serve for two terms in a row. The ILC will elect officers and an executive committee who can serve for one six-month term per year. The superintendent can deny membership to incarcerated people with recent or ongoing disciplinary problems.¹³⁹

The ILC must have a room with facilities, including a typewriter, desks, supplies, and stationery.¹⁴⁰ The ILC will be governed by a Constitution and By-Laws, which it will prepare with the help of a staff member. A suggested format for the Constitution and By-Laws is attached to Directive 4002.¹⁴¹

F. Rules for Inmate Grievance Procedures in Other States

In 1979, Congress set out minimum standards for formal inmate grievance procedures to help reduce the large number of civil rights cases by incarcerated people that were waiting to be heard in courts.¹⁴² States with grievance procedures that meet these standards are certified by the Attorney General.¹⁴³ Remember, you must exhaust all available administrative procedures before you can file a claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983.¹⁴⁴

In order for an inmate grievance procedure to be certified, the state must meet certain federal minimum standards for the communication of those procedures to all incarcerated people.¹⁴⁵ A certified inmate grievance procedure must be readily available to all incarcerated people and employees of the institution. Every incarcerated person and employee must receive written notification and verbal explanation of the procedure when they get to the institution. You should also have the opportunity to ask questions about the procedure when it is explained to you. The procedure must be

137. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 702.4(c)(1) (2019); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4041, Inmate Grievance Program Modification Plan § 702.4(c)(1) (2011) (as revised Apr. 30, 2015).

138. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4002, Inmate Liaison Committee § II(A)(1) (2017) (as revised Aug. 16, 2019). Note, however, that some facilities may be exempt from this requirement.

139. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4002, Inmate Liaison Committee § II(B) (2017) (as revised Aug. 16, 2019).

140. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4002, Inmate Liaison Committee § II(E) (2017) (as revised Aug. 16, 2019).

141. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4002, Inmate Liaison Committee § II(F) (2017) (as revised Aug. 16, 2019).

142. Civil Rights of Institutionalized Persons Act, S. Rep. No. 96-416, at 34 (1979), as reprinted in 1980 U.S.C.C.A.N. 787, 816. The minimum standards for inmate grievance procedures can be found at 28 C.F.R. §§ 40.1–40.10 (2019).

143. The procedures for obtaining certification of a grievance procedure can be found at 28 C.F.R. §§ 40.11–40.22 (2019).

144. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(a); See Chapter 16 of the JLM, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law," for more information on § 1983 claims.

145. 28 C.F.R. § 40.11(b) (2019).

written in any language that is spoken by a significant portion of the prison population, and there must be appropriate assistance for incarcerated people who speak other languages, or have disabilities.¹⁴⁶

In general, you should be able to find guidelines and procedures for filing a grievance in your prison law library. Ask your librarian if you need help finding them. It is important for you to understand these rules before filing your grievance to make the best use of the grievance procedure.

G. Conclusion

If you have a grievance, you must go through your state's inmate grievance program before going to court. Once you receive a final decision from the IGP, and have appealed it to the Superintendent and the CORC, you may file a complaint in court. If you fail to exhaust your remedies, your case will be dismissed. Even if you feel that the grievance system in your prison is unfair, inefficient, or pointless, you must exhaust it. Though all of the requirements under the PLRA may seem complicated and intimidating, you should try your best to properly exhaust your grievance. If you make an honest, good faith effort to comply with the requirements, the courts are more likely to excuse mistakes. For example, if you miss a deadline, you should not give up. Continue to pursue your grievance and request to be excused from the rule you failed to follow, or ask to be able to re-file your grievance and start over.

146. 28 C.F.R. § 40.3 (2019).

CHAPTER 16

USING 42 U.S.C. § 1983 TO OBTAIN RELIEF FROM VIOLATIONS OF FEDERAL LAW*

A. Introduction

1. Overview

The U.S. Constitution and federal law provide you with numerous individual rights that you can use to protect yourself from unfair government actions. For example, the Eighth Amendment protects your right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment, while the First Amendment protects your right to practice your religion.¹ Incarcerated people may bring lawsuits challenging violations of either their constitutional or federal statutory rights using the Civil Rights Act of 1871 (“Section 1983”).² Section 1983 allows you to sue state and local officials, and to challenge state prison rules and regulations, that violate your constitutional and statutory rights.³ For example, you can use Section 1983 to challenge prison rules that violate your practice of religion, or to challenge prison officers who assault you in prison. (For more information on your right to practice religion and your right to be free from assault, see Chapter 24, “Your Right to Be Free from Assault by Prison Guards and Incarcerated People” and Chapter 27, “Religious Freedom in Prisons” of the JLM.)⁴

Section 1983 does not allow you to sue federal officials. However, there are lawsuits called “Bivens” actions which allow you to sue federal officials.⁵ Bivens actions often rely on case law (law based on

* This Chapter was rewritten by Kodjo Kumi, based on previous versions by David Bright, Elana Pollak, Amy Lowenstein, Colin Starger, Ambreen Delawalla, Michael Irvine, Kimberly Mazzocco, Manjula Gill, Amy Longo, Paul Clabo, and Kim Sweet. Special thanks to Professor Philip Genty for his guidance, and John Boston of The Legal Aid Society for his valuable comments.

1. U.S. CONST. amend. VIII.; U.S. CONST. amend. I. See Figure 1 of this Chapter for a list of other important rights granted to you by the Constitution.

2. Constitutional rights are rights guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution. Section 1983 may allow you to sue someone who violates your constitutional rights if that person is acting “under color of law,” meaning that person was acting under the state’s authority. Section 1983 cases usually involve constitutional rights found in the first ten amendments to the Constitution (also called the Bill of Rights) or in the 14th Amendment. The Bill of Rights originally limited only the power of the federal government. Using the legal theory of “incorporation” and the Due Process Clause of the 14th Amendment, the Supreme Court has ruled that most of its guarantees also protect citizens against state governments. See, e.g., Ingraham v. Wright, 430 U.S. 651, 673 n.42, 97 S. Ct. 1401, 1413 n.42, 51 L. Ed. 2d 711, 731 n.42 (1977) (noting that the 4th Amendment was incorporated against the states by the 14th Amendment). This means that state actors have to respect most of the rights found in the Bill of Rights as well. See Part B(2) of this Chapter for more information about constitutional rights and Section 1983. Federal statutory rights are those rights created by federal laws passed by Congress. Many federal statutes include their own “enforcement provisions,” which means that the statute gives you a particular right and allows you to sue someone for violating that right. If a federal statute has its own enforcement provision, you must use that statute rather than Section 1983 to bring your lawsuit. See Part B(3) of this Chapter for more information about statutory rights and Section 1983.

3. 42 U.S.C. § 1983. See Part B(1) of this Chapter for the full text of the statute. See Monroe v. Pape, 365 U.S. 167, 172–174, 81 S. Ct. 473, 476–477, 5 L. Ed. 2d 492, 497–498 (1961) (explaining that Section 1983 gives a federal remedy to parties deprived of constitutional rights, privileges, and immunities by an official’s abuse of his position), overruled in part on other grounds by Monell v. Dep’t. of Soc. Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1978). If an official deprives you of constitutional or federal statutory rights, you may also be able to sue that official under state law. However, Section 1983 allows you to sue that official under federal law even if there is no state remedy available. Monroe v. Pape, 365 U.S. 167, 183, 81 S. Ct. 473, 482, 5 L. Ed. 2d 492, 503 (1961) (noting that Section 1983 provides an alternative to state remedies).

4. See, e.g., Chapter 27 of the JLM, “Religious Freedom in Prison”; Chapter 24, “Your Right to Be Free from Assault by Prison Guards and Other Prisoners.”

5. Bivens actions are named after Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388, 397, 91 S. Ct. 1999, 2005, 29 L. Ed. 2d 619, 627 (1971) (holding that an implied cause of action may prior judicial decisions) that interprets Section 1983. Although Bivens actions are similar to Section 1983 claims, the Supreme Court has recently said that you can only bring Bivens actions in three specific situations.⁶ These specific situations will be discussed in Part E of this Chapter.

This Chapter focuses only on 1983 claims for people who have been officially convicted of a crime (either through a guilty verdict at trial or by pleading guilty). If you are a pretrial detainee, please see Chapter 34 of the JLM, “The Rights of Pretrial Detainees.”⁷ This Chapter is organized into several Parts. This Part, Part A, is the introduction, and includes seven essential tips to follow when bringing Section 1983 claims. Part B explains how to use Section 1983 to challenge state prison conditions and other practices that violate your constitutional or federal statutory rights. Part C explains what you can sue for (the types of relief, like money damages, injunctions, etc.), whom to sue, typical defense arguments you will have to defeat, when to sue, where to sue, and how to proceed with your Section 1983 suit. Part D describes other ways to bring lawsuits, including class actions and state court lawsuits. Part E explains Bivens actions against federal officials. Remember, Bivens actions closely rely on case law that interprets Section 1983, so you should still read this entire Chapter if you want to bring a Bivens action. Finally, the Appendices to this Chapter have sample forms that you can use as examples when preparing your case.

2. Seven Essential Tips for Bringing Section 1983 and Bivens Actions

(a) It Is VERY Important That You Read Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,” Before You Begin Your Section 1983 Claim.

The Prison Litigation Reform Act (“PLRA”) is a federal law that significantly affects Section 1983 cases.⁸ You should be aware of the PLRA’s “three strikes” rule.⁹ This rule gives you a “strike” whenever you have a case dismissed as frivolous, malicious, or failing to state a valid legal claim. If you have three cases dismissed as “strikes,” you will not be able to use the in forma pauperis procedure (which allows you to file a lawsuit as a “poor person” without having to pay the normal court fees or costs) unless you are under imminent danger of serious physical injury, or you may lose good time credit.¹⁰ So, you must be sure that you meet all of the PLRA requirements before you begin any lawsuit. In particular, you should be careful about the PLRA requirement that you need to exhaust (use up) all your administrative remedies—such as prison grievance procedures and appeals—before you go to court. In other words, you need to figure out what procedures exist within your prison to protest your situation and use all of those procedures before you file a lawsuit.¹¹ Although some courts used to require that you describe what you have done already to exhaust your remedies in your complaint, the Supreme Court recently said that such requirements are not allowed.¹² The complaint only begins the lawsuit, however. You will still have to describe what you have done to exhaust administrative remedies at some point. Many incarcerated people’s Section 1983 complaints are dismissed because they did not exhaust their prison’s administrative remedies.¹³ exist where an individual’s 4th Amendment right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures has been violated by federal agents).

6. Ziglar v. Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. 1843, 1855, 198 L. Ed. 2d 290, 306 (2017) (explaining that the Supreme Court has only allowed individuals to sue over constitutional violations without an explicit statutory cause of action in three cases).

7. See generally Chapter 34 of the JLM, “The Rights of Pretrial Detainees.”

8. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e.

9. U.S.C. § 1915(g).

10. See Stephen Michael Sheppard, In Forma Pauperis (I.F.P. or IFP), in THE WOLTERS KLUWER BOUVIER LAW DICTIONARY (Desk ed., 2012); 28 U.S.C. § 1932.

11. See Chapter 15 of the JLM, “Inmate Grievance Procedures.”

12. Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 215–216, 127 S. Ct. 910, 921–922, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 813–814 (2007) (holding that an incarcerated person is not required to plead or demonstrate exhaustion in his complaint).

13. See, e.g., Booth v. Churner, 532 U.S. 731, 741, 121 S. Ct. 1819, 1825, 149 L. Ed. 958, 967 (2001) (affirming dismissal of prisoner’s Section 1983 complaint for failure to exhaust all available administrative remedies because prisoner did not appeal an unfavorable administrative decision to the highest level of review).

(b) Your Constitutional Rights Are Not Absolute.

In most cases, your constitutional rights will be balanced against the state or federal government's interest in maintaining a secure prison environment. In many situations, your constitutional rights may be outweighed by the government's interest in prison security. For most constitutional claims, courts use a test established in a case called Turner v. Safley to determine whether your constitutional rights have been violated.¹⁴ This test is discussed in detail in Part B(2)(a) of this Chapter.

(c) Do NOT Use Section 1983 to Challenge Your Original Criminal Conviction, Your Sentence, Loss of Good Time, or Denial of Parole.

You cannot use Section 1983 to claim that your constitutional rights were violated based on the fact that you were convicted or based on the length of your sentence, except in very limited circumstances.¹⁵ Instead of using Section 1983, you can challenge your conviction or sentence by appealing or, if your appeal is denied, by filing for a writ of habeas corpus or other post-conviction relief.¹⁶ You also cannot use Section 1983 to challenge a loss of good time credit, a parole denial, or other official actions that directly affect how much time you spend in prison.¹⁷ You should use state procedures to challenge these losses. For example, in New York, incarcerated people can challenge the loss of good time credit or denial of parole through an Article 78 proceeding.¹⁸ For information about Article 78 proceedings, see Chapter 22 of the JLM, "How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules".

However, you can usually use Section 1983 to challenge administrative decisions that do not directly affect the length of your sentence.¹⁹ This Chapter mostly focuses on how you can use a Section 1983 suit if government officials have abused or denied your constitutional or federal statutory rights while you have been in prison. Again, you should not use Section 1983 to challenge the amount of time to be spent in prison.

14. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89–90, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261–2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79–80 (1987); Turner does not apply to claimed violations of the 8th Amendment's prohibition on "cruel and unusual punishment." Johnson v. California, 543 U.S. 499, 510–511, 125 S. Ct. 1141, 1149–1150, 160 L. Ed. 2d 949, 961–962 (2005). See Part B(2)(a) of this Chapter for more information about Turner. Remember that you may have a better claim under a different federal statute than under Section 1983 and Turner.

15. See Heck v. Humphrey, 512 U.S. 477, 486–487, 114 S. Ct. 2364, 2372, 129 L. Ed. 2d 383, 393–394 (1994) (holding that Section 1983 suits are not available if the outcome of the suit would imply that a prisoner's conviction or sentence is invalid, unless he proves that his "conviction or sentence has been reversed on direct appeal, expunged by executive order, declared invalid by a state tribunal authorized to make such [a] determination, or called into question by a federal court's issuance of writ of habeas corpus").

16. See Chapter 9 of the JLM, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence"; Chapter 20, "Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence"; Chapter 13, "Federal Habeas Corpus"; and Chapter 21, "State Habeas Corpus: Florida, New York, and Texas," and state-specific habeas Chapters in the upcoming State Supplements for more information on post-conviction relief.

17. See Edwards v. Balisok, 520 U.S. 641, 648, 117 S. Ct. 1584, 1589, 137 L. Ed. 2d 906, 915 (1997) (holding that a Section 1983 claim alleging that the incarcerated person was deprived of good time credits without procedural due process could not go forward, because if successful it would imply that the deprivation of good time credits was invalid).

18. If you are an incarcerated person in New York and your prison is not following its own rules or policies, you can file an Article 78 petition. For more information, see Chapter 22 of the JLM, "How To Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules."

19. See Wilkinson v. Dotson, 544 U.S. 74, 82, 125 S. Ct. 1242, 1248, 161 L. Ed. 253, 262–263 (2005) (allowing incarcerated people to use Section 1983 to challenge parole procedures to request new reviews of parole eligibility, where winning the lawsuit would not necessarily result in their obtaining earlier parole); Muhammad v. Close, 540 U.S. 749, 754–755, 124 S. Ct. 1303, 1306, 158 L. Ed. 2d 32, 38 (2004) (holding that a Section 1983 claim may challenge an administrative decision as long as it does not dispute the validity of the underlying conviction); Leamer v. Fauver, 288 F.3d 532, 543 (3d Cir. 2002) (finding valid a Section 1983 claim that challenged a disciplinary action which could affect the granting of parole, but would not directly affect length of sentence); Jenkins v. Haubert, 179 F.3d 19, 27 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding that Section 1983 may be used to challenge an incarcerated person's term of disciplinary segregation, which did not implicate the length of confinement).

(d) Be Sure That All Defendants in Your Section 1983 Lawsuit Had Personal Involvement in the Violation of Your Rights.²⁰

Pro se litigants (people who file a suit without a lawyer) often want to include everybody they can think of as defendants, including supervisory prison officials like wardens or the head of the state department of corrections. You may want to do this too, but naming everybody is often not a good idea. Courts usually dismiss all claims against supervisory officials unless you provide enough facts in your complaint to show that the supervisory officials you name were personally involved in violating your rights.²¹ If you make claims against defendants that the court quickly dismisses because they were not personally involved, the judge may be less likely to trust the rest of your claims. Try your best to find out which officials were personally involved.

(e) Explain the Facts of Your Case in as Much Detail as Possible.

The most common mistake made by pro se litigants is not stating the facts clearly and adequately. Remember, the court already knows something about the law, but it knows nothing about the facts of your claim. Make sure that you tell the court exactly what happened to you, when and where it happened, who was involved, and how it happened. If you know why your rights were violated, you should explain that too. More than anything else, the facts of your case will determine the success of your claim. For an example of a written complaint, see Appendix A-29 of this Chapter.

Here's an example. Imagine that you are claiming that your access to the prison law library has been unfairly restricted. The court will want to know the details. When did you want to get into the library? Why did you need access to the library? Are there any set rules in your prison for library access? Exactly how did the denial of access hurt you? Were you unable to meet a filing deadline or respond to a legal argument? Did you have a case pending or a court date? What research were you trying to do? Who stopped you? How many times did this happen, and when? Include as much of this information as possible in your complaint. Of course, the kinds of questions you will want to ask yourself and answer for the court depends on your claim. Give as much relevant detail as possible.²²

If possible, try to get sworn, written statements—also known as affidavits or declarations—from witnesses who saw your rights being violated.²³ Try to get as much proof as possible that supports the factual claims you are making in your case.

(f) Confirm the Information in This or Any Other Chapter of the JLM Through Library Research.

Remember that the cases discussed in this Chapter are only examples to use as starting points in your research. There are many court decisions relating to Section 1983 claims. It is essential that you research and make sure the courts still follow the cases in the footnotes of this Chapter.²⁴ Although we have tried to make the JLM as up-to-date as possible, some cases may not be good law anymore if a higher court has made a different decision.²⁵

20. Part B(1)(a) of this Chapter explains how you can prove a defendant official was personally involved in violating your rights.

21. See Monell v. Dep't. of Soc. Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 663 n.7, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2022 n.7, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 619 n.7 (1978) (holding that supervisory officials are not automatically responsible for the actions of their employees). However, sometimes you can name supervisory officials as defendants even if they were not directly involved in violating your rights. See Part C(2)(b) of this Chapter ("Supervisor Liability").

22. Relevance is a legal idea. Evidence is "relevant" where it "has any tendency to make a fact more or less probable than it would be without the evidence" and "the fact is of consequence in determining [your claim]." FED. R. EVID. 401. Basically, relevant evidence is anything that helps to prove your story or your legal claim.

23. See Chapter 6 of the JLM, "An Introduction to Legal Documents."

24. See Chapter 1 of the JLM, "How to Use the JLM," and Chapter 2, "Introduction to Legal Research," for more information.

25. It is very important that you read the full cases contained in these footnotes. You should also try to read any cases cited in those cases. If possible, look up 42 U.S.C. § 1983 in the United States Code Annotated (U.S.C.A.) or United States Code Service (U.S.C.S.). The U.S.C.A. and U.S.C.S. are commercial publications of

(g) Bivens Actions Against Federal Officials Are Similar to Section 1983 Claims Against State or Local Officials, but the Grounds on Which These Lawsuits May Be Brought Are Much More Limited.

If you want to sue federal officials, you cannot use Section 1983. Instead, you can bring a type of lawsuit based on case law which is called a Bivens action. Most federal incarcerated people bring Bivens actions, which are described in Part E of this Chapter. Bivens actions are very similar to Section 1983 claims, so you should still read Parts B and C of this Chapter discussing Section 1983 claims. However, since 2017 the grounds on which you can bring Bivens actions have been limited to three types of situations, which are described in Part E of this Chapter.

B. Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Challenge State or Local Government Action

1. Essential Requirements for Obtaining Relief Under Section 1983

Section 1983 states:

Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress[.]²⁶

The words and phrases in italics state the three essential requirements (also known as elements) that you must fulfill when bringing a lawsuit under Section 1983. In your complaint, you need to show that all three elements of Section 1983 are met.

(a) First Requirement: Person

Section 1983's first requirement is that you show your rights were violated by a "person." The legal definition of "person" for Section 1983 claims includes more than actual people (prison wardens, guards, etc.). A city, county, or municipality can also be a "person" under Section 1983.²⁷ The definition of "person," however, does not include state governments or their agencies.²⁸ For example, you cannot sue the State of New York or the New York State Department of Corrections and Community Supervision under Section 1983.²⁹ Thus, while officials (actual people) at any level of government (including state government) may be sued under Section 1983, only non-state governments and their agencies (such as cities, counties, local agencies, and private corporations) may be sued as a "person" the United States Code that include the federal statutes and summaries of cases interpreting those statutes. You should also look at the Federal Practice Digest and other digests that have case summaries organized by subject matter. The process of making sure a case is up-to-date—that the decision is still valid and another court has not overruled it—is called "Shepardizing." See Chapter 2 of the JLM, "Introduction to Legal Research," for more information on how to Shepardize a case.

26. 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (emphasis and alteration added).

27. See Monell v. Dep't. of Soc. Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 690, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2035–2036, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 635 (1978) (holding that municipalities and local government units are considered "persons" under Section 1983).

28. See Will v. Mich. Dep't. of State Police, 491 U.S. 58, 71, 109 S. Ct. 2304, 2312, 105 L. Ed. 2d 45, 58 (1989) (holding that states may not be sued under Section 1983).

29. You may, however, be able to sue states and state agencies under other federal laws, such as the Americans with Disabilities Act. See United States v. Georgia, 546 U.S. 151, 159, 126 S. Ct. 877, 882 163 L. Ed. 2d 650, 660 (2006) (holding that the Americans with Disabilities Act creates a right to sue states for damages from violations of the 14th Amendment); Pennsylvania Dep't. of Corr. v. Yeskey, 524 U.S. 206, 213 118 S. Ct. 1952, 1956 141 L. Ed. 2d 215, 221 (1998) (holding that the protections of the Americans with Disabilities Act extend to state incarcerated people). See generally 42 U.S.C. §§ 12101–12213. For information on the rights of incarcerated people with disabilities, see the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, 29 U.S.C. § 701 and Chapter 28 of the JLM, "Rights of Prisoners with Disabilities."

under Section 1983.³⁰ See Part C(2) of this Chapter, “Whom to Name as Defendants” for more information on whom you can sue using Section 1983.

You should name all “persons” who violated your rights as defendants. This includes individuals, local government agencies, or both. You may name as many defendants as you choose, as long as each of them is personally involved in violating your rights. Courts consider officials and local government agencies to be personally involved if they:

- (1) Directly participated in the wrong; or
- (2) Was told about the wrong but did not try to stop or fix it; or
- (3) Failed to oversee the people who caused the wrong, for example by hiring unqualified people or failing to adequately train their staff; or
- (4) Deliberately failed to act on information showing that a wrong was happening; or
- (5) Created a policy or custom that allowed the wrong to occur.³¹

The situations listed in (1), (2), (3), and (4) are most common in cases where you are challenging defendants’ specific behavior or failure to act. The fifth situation occurs when you challenge general rules of the prison.

An example of a type (1) situation could be a guard refusing to get help for an injured incarcerated person who asks him for medical care. An example of a type (2) situation could be when, after receiving reports that a person in a prison had been attacked by other detainees and that there was a hit on their life, a warden or other official fails to do anything to protect that individual from the threat on their life. In a type (3) situation, prison officials may be held liable for hiring unqualified people or failing to properly train or supervise their staff.³² An example of a type (4) situation could be a guard seeing an incarcerated person being attacked by other incarcerated people and not trying to stop the attack.

Finally, in a type (5) situation, prison officials can be liable for creating rules, policies, or customs that violate your rights. These rules and policies can be written or unwritten.³³ You should always be specific about what kind of rule or practice you are challenging and who was responsible for creating

30. See Hafer v. Melo, 502 U.S. 21, 31, 112 S. Ct. 358, 365, 116 L. Ed. 2d 301, 313 (1991) (finding state officials, sued in their individual capacities, to be “persons” within the meaning of Section 1983, and not absolutely immune from personal liability or barred from being sued under the 11th Amendment).

31. See Littlejohn v. City of New York, 795 F.3d 297, 314 (2d Cir. 2015) (noting the ways that a plaintiff can establish that officials and local government agencies were personally involved in their U.S.C. § 1983 violation).

32. See Bd. of the Cty. Comm’rs v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 411, 117 S. Ct. 1382, 1392, 137 L. Ed. 2d 626, 644 (1997) (holding that a municipality may be liable for hiring decisions under a deliberate indifference standard if adequate screening of the employee alleged to have violated the plaintiff’s rights would have made it clear to a reasonable policymaker that hiring the employee was highly likely to result in the particular type of constitutional violation alleged by the plaintiff). See City of Canton v. Harris, 489 U.S. 378, 388–389, 109 S. Ct. 1197, 1204–1205, 103 L. Ed. 2d 412, 426–427 (1989) (holding that a city could be held liable under Section 1983 for failing to train employees if the failure amounted to deliberate indifference to the constitutional rights of persons coming into contact with those employees).

33. See, e.g., Shain v. Ellison, 273 F.3d 56, 66 (2d Cir. 2001) (holding that a prison’s written policy of strip searching all persons arrested for misdemeanors without requiring reasonable suspicion was unconstitutional); Barrett v. Coplan, 292 F. Supp. 2d 281, 287 (D. N.H. 2003) (allowing an incarcerated person who suffered from gender identity disorder to proceed with a claim that a prison’s written policy of refusing to consider surgical or hormonal treatment for any incarcerated person regardless of medical condition violated her 8th Amendment right to adequate medical care). See, e.g., Fairley v. Luman, 281 F.3d 913, 918 (9th Cir. 2002) (holding that city’s failure to have procedures in place to verify warrants was an unwritten policy that violated right to due process of plaintiff who was mistakenly held on outstanding warrants for the arrest of his twin brother); Garrett v. Unified Gov’t of Athens-Clarke Cty., 246 F. Supp. 2d 1262, 1279–1280 (M.D. Ga. 2003) (noting that even when there is no formal written policy, supervisors can be held liable where there is enough use of an unconstitutional practice that it becomes an unconstitutional custom), rev’d on other grounds sub nom., Garrett v. Athens-Clarke Cty., 378 F.3d 1274 (11th Cir. 2004) (per curiam); Gonzalez v. City of Schenectady, 141 F. Supp. 2d 304, 307 (N.D.N.Y. 2001) (holding that an unwritten city policy of strip searching all detainees prior to court action was unconstitutional).

the rule or practice (if you know). If you are arguing that an unwritten policy or custom violated your rights, you need to gather as much evidence as possible to show that it is widely followed in your jail or prison. This will show the court that it is an actual policy or custom.³⁴ An example of a type (5) situation could be guards making sure that incarcerated people who violate a prison rule do not receive medical care for a month, even if they are sick or injured.

Sometimes, several people or agencies will be involved in violating your rights, and they will all be involved in different ways. For example, if a prison guard assaults you, you can sue that guard because he violated your rights. If another guard sees the assault but does not try to stop it, you can sue that guard as well, because he did not try to stop or fix the wrong. If you complain to the warden that this guard has assaulted you several times, and the warden does nothing, you might also be able to sue the warden. If you can show there is an informal prison policy of allowing guards to assault incarcerated people, or if you find out that the guard had a history of assaulting incarcerated people at his previous job, then you might be able to sue the local department of corrections for creating an unconstitutional policy or hiring an unqualified guard. In this situation, it is probably obvious to you that the guard who assaulted you and the guard who watched the assault were personally involved in violating your rights. However, it is much more difficult to figure out whether the warden and/or the local department of corrections were personally involved. Remember, if you cannot give specific facts showing that a defendant was personally involved, the judge will dismiss your claims against the defendant. For more about showing personal involvement, see Part C(2)(b) of this Chapter, “Supervisor Liability,” and Part C(2)(c) of this Chapter, “Municipal or Local Government Liability.”

(b) Second Requirement: Under Color of State Law

The second requirement for suing under Section 1983 is that the person who violated your rights must have been acting “under color of state law.” This means that the person you sue must be someone who was acting under the state’s authority. States have authority over their own agencies and employees. They also have authority over cities, counties, and municipalities, as well as over the employees of cities, counties, and municipalities. In prison, persons acting under color of state law include:

- (1) Employees of state or local prisons or jails, like prison doctors and guards; and
- (2) Private parties who make contracts with the state to perform services.³⁵

34. See, e.g., Henry v. Farmer City State Bank, 808 F.2d 1228, 1237 (7th Cir. 1986) (explaining that if there is no formal written policy, “the plaintiff must allege a specific pattern or series of incidents that support the general allegation of a custom or policy; alleging one specific incident in which the plaintiff suffered a deprivation will not suffice.”); Gailor v. Armstrong, 187 F. Supp. 2d 729, 734 (W.D. Ky. 2001) (holding that one incident of failure to follow a jail’s excessive force policy plus thirty to forty other instances of excessive force over a ten-year period for which officers were punished was not enough to show a custom of failing to follow the excessive force policy).

35. See Corr. Servs. Corp. v. Malesko, 534 U.S. 61, 71 n.5, 122 S. Ct. 515, 522 n.5, 151 L. Ed. 2d 456, 466 n.5 (2001) (noting that people incarcerated in state prisons may sue private prison corporations under Section 1983); West v. Atkins, 487 U.S. 42, 54–57, 108 S. Ct. 2250, 2258–60, 101 L. Ed. 2d 40, 53–57 (1988) (holding that a private doctor under contract with a state to provide medical services to people incarcerated at a state prison hospital on a part-time basis acts under color of state law within the meaning of Section 1983); Rosborough v. Mgmt. & Training Corp., 350 F.3d 459, 461 (5th Cir. 2003) (holding that private prison-management corporations and their employees may be sued under Section 1983); Conner v. Donnelly, 42 F.3d 220, 223 (4th Cir. 1994) (holding that “a physician who treats a prisoner acts under color of state law even though there was no contractual relationship between the prison and the physician.”); Skelton v. Pri-Cor, Inc., 963 F.2d 100, 102 (6th Cir. 1991) (holding that private corporation under contract with the state to operate its prisons may be sued under Section 1983); Ancata v. Prison Health Servs., Inc., 769 F.2d 700, 703 (11th Cir. 1985) (noting that employees of Prison Health Services, a private company providing medical care to incarcerated people, were clearly state actors); Christy v. Robinson, 216 F. Supp. 2d 398, 412 (D.N.J. 2002) (holding that doctors employed by a private medical association that contracts with the state to provide medical services to incarcerated people acted under color of state law); Mauldin v. Burnette, 89 F. Supp. 2d 1371, 1376–1377 (M.D. Ga. 2000) (holding that a private individual who was responsible for signing an incarcerated person in and out of prison and supervising him on work release

Be aware that a person may act under color of state law even though the person does something that is illegal under state law. In other words, for something to be done under color of state law, it does not have to be legal to do it. For example, state law forbids a prison guard from assaulting you. But, if a prison guard assaults you, he is acting under color of state law because the guard carries a “badge of authority” from the state.³⁶ Thus, “under color of state law” loosely means “as a representative of the state.”

(c) Third Requirement: Deprivation of Federal Right

The third and final requirement is that each person you sue must have deprived you of a right, privilege, or immunity you have under the Constitution or federal laws. In simpler terms, the person must have violated one of your constitutional or federal statutory rights. Section 1983 does not itself create any substantive right; instead, it creates the procedural right to sue for the violation of a substantive violation of federal law. Part B(2) of this Chapter explains the general rules for determining whether the constitutional rights of incarcerated people have been violated. It also gives examples of violations of constitutional rights. Part B(3) of this Chapter discusses Section 1983 claims for violations of rights that have been created by federal statutes.

2. Constitutional Bases for Section 1983 Claims

Not every violation of state law or prison regulations is a constitutional violation that you can challenge using Section 1983. For example, a prison may have a regulation stating that all persons in the general population are allowed five phone calls each week. This “right to five phone calls” is not a constitutional right. If the prison suddenly allows only one call each week, you won’t be able to sue using Section 1983. Instead, you may want to challenge that change in privileges through your prison’s grievance system or in a state court.³⁷

Similarly, if a prison guard harms you or your property by acting negligently (carelessly), you won’t be able to sue using Section 1983. Instead, you may be able to sue using state tort law.³⁸ For example, the Supreme Court has said that in a case where an incarcerated person’s mail was lost because a prison official negligently failed to follow proper mail procedures, the official’s action wasn’t enough for a Section 1983 claim. The Court ruled that this wasn’t a failure of the state’s procedures but rather one person’s failure.³⁹ Instead, the Court said that the incarcerated person should sue through state tort law, because the state already had a process that covered situations like this where state actors carelessly did something that resulted in an incarcerated person losing property.⁴⁰ The Supreme Court has also held that where a person was injured because he slipped on a pillow that a sheriff’s deputy acted under color of state law). However, some courts have found that independent contractors were not acting under color of state law. See, e.g., Black v. Ind. Area Sch. Dist., 985 F.2d 707 (3d Cir. 1993) (affirming that a bus company and its driver employee that contracted with the school district to transport children were not state actors because they were independent contractors, and thus could not be liable in a Section 1983 action); Nunez v. Horn, 72 F. Supp. 2d 24, 27 (N.D.N.Y. 1999) (holding that a doctor who treated the incarcerated person was not acting under color of state law because the treatment was provided at a non-prison hospital and the doctor was not under contract with the state or Bureau of Prisons to treat incarcerated people).

36. See Monroe v. Pape, 365 U.S. 167, 172, 81 S. Ct. 473, 476, 5 L. Ed. 2d 492, 497 (1961) (holding that officials who violate constitutional rights act under color of state law for the purposes of Section 1983, whether they act in accordance with their authority, abuse their authority, or act illegally), overruled in part on other grounds by Monell v. Dep’t. of Soc. Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611 (1978).

37. If a New York state prison is not following its own rules or policies, incarcerated people can also file an Article 78 petition. See Chapter 22 of the JLM, “How To Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules,” for information on filing Article 78 petitions.

38. See Chapter 17 of the JLM, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions,” for information on bringing a tort claim.

39. Parratt v. Taylor, 451 U.S. 527, 543, 101 S. Ct. 1908, 1917, 68 L. Ed. 2d 420, 433–434 (1981), overruled in part on other grounds by Daniels v. Williams, 474 U.S. 327, 106 S. Ct. 662, 88 L. Ed. 2d 662 (1986).

40. Parratt v. Taylor, 451 U.S. 527, 543–544, 101 S. Ct. 1908, 1917, 68 L. Ed. 2d 420, 433–434 (1981), overruled by Daniels v. Williams, 474 U.S. 327, 106 S. Ct. 662, 88 L. Ed. 2d 662 (1986).

carelessly left on a stairway, this was not a constitutional violation that could lead to a Section 1983 case, but rather a case that was better left to state tort law.⁴¹ On the other hand, if a prison guard were to intentionally or recklessly push you down the stairs, or you could prove that the guards in a prison had an unofficial game of intentionally leaving objects on stairs to injure people and you were injured as a result, you might be able to bring a Section 1983 claim in that case.⁴²

The next part of this Section begins with a general discussion of incarcerated people's constitutional rights and the "reasonably related" test (Turner test). Parts B(2)(b) and B(2)(c) of this Chapter explain two specific constitutional rights that incarcerated people have and which specific constitutional amendments give them those rights. Make sure you read the other chapters of the JLM that also talk about these particular rights. Also, remember that your claim might involve violations of more than one constitutional right. Think about your situation from as many different angles as possible.

(a) General Framework for Constitutional Rights in Prison

As discussed earlier, keep in mind that your constitutional rights are not absolute. The government is allowed to take away some of your rights in order to run the prison more safely or smoothly. When you sue government officials or agencies for violating your rights, the officials or agencies must explain to the court why they acted that way. The reasons they give must have some reasonable relationship to the violation of your rights. The court then balances your constitutional rights against the reasons given by the defendants for taking away some of those rights. Most of the time, courts accept the prison officials' explanation for the violation and rule against the incarcerated person.

In your claim, you should emphasize why your right is important and reasonable and why the prison officials' actions were unnecessary or unreasonable. Just saying that your rights were violated is usually not enough. You must try to expect and respond to the arguments that the prison will make about the need for security or order.

One of the leading Supreme Court cases dealing with constitutional rights in prison is Turner v. Safley.⁴³ In Turner, the Supreme Court held that when a prison regulation has an impact on constitutional rights, the regulation is still valid if it is "reasonably related to legitimate penological interests."⁴⁴ A penological interest is legitimate if it is a valid and justifiable concern for the prison and/or the officials operating the prison. "Legitimate penological interests" may include concerns for safety, discipline, effective punishment, and other management issues. Under the Turner test (also called the "reasonably related" test), a court will compare the importance of the state's valid penological interests to the impact of the state's actions on your rights.

The Turner test has been used in cases challenging both formal and informal prison policies and practices. It has also been used in cases challenging individual actions.⁴⁵ The test applies both to prison regulations and to actions taken by prison officials. Note that Turner does not apply to claims of racial 41. Daniels v. Williams, 474 U.S. 327, 335–336, 106 S. Ct. 662, 667, 88 L. Ed. 2d 662, 671 (1986).

42. See Smith v. Wade, 461 U.S. 30, 51, 103 S. Ct. 1625, 1637, 75 L. Ed. 2d 632, 648 (1983) (upholding a jury award for an incarcerated person's Section 1983 claim that a prison guard recklessly placed him in a cell with other incarcerated people who were likely to assault him and rejecting the argument that the incarcerated person needed to show that the prison guard knew that he was likely to be assaulted by his cellmates).

43. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64 (1987).

44. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987).

45. See, e.g., Allah v. Al-Hafeez, 208 F. Supp. 2d 520, 529–531 (E.D. Pa. 2002) (applying the Turner test to a chaplain's decision to exclude an incarcerated person from religious services after the person disrupted the service); Youngbear v. Thalacker, 174 F. Supp. 2d 902, 914 (N.D. Iowa 2001) (applying the Turner test to an administrative decision resulting in a yearlong delay in building a sweat lodge).

discrimination,⁴⁶ Eighth Amendment violations,⁴⁷ restrictions on private religious exercise,⁴⁸ or some procedural due process claims.⁴⁹

To use the Turner test, courts ask if a regulation (or action) is “reasonably related” to the government’s interests. They do this by looking at four factors:

- (1) Whether there is a valid, rational connection between the regulation and the government’s reason for it;⁵⁰
- (2) Whether you still have other ways of exercising your constitutional right despite the regulation;⁵¹
- (3) Whether there will be a “ripple effect”⁵² on the rights of others if you are allowed to exercise the right;⁵³ and

46. Johnson v. California, 543 U.S. 499, 509–511, 125 S. Ct. 1141, 1148–1149, 160 L. Ed. 2d 949, 961–962 (2005) (holding that the Turner test could not be used to evaluate the prison policy of assigning new incarcerated people cellmates of the same race, and noting that Turner has never been applied to racial classifications). For more information on equal protection rights in prison, including the right against racial discrimination, see Part B(2)(c) of this Chapter.

47. See, e.g., Jordan v. Gardner, 986 F.2d 1521, 1530 (9th Cir. 1993) (refusing to apply the Turner test to an incarcerated person’s 8th Amendment claim and noting that the Supreme Court has never used Turner for an 8th Amendment claim); Austin v. Hopper, 15 F. Supp. 2d 1210, 1255 (M.D. Ala. 1998) (refusing to apply the Turner test to an incarcerated person’s 8th Amendment claim). For information on 8th Amendment claims for “cruel and unusual punishment,” see Part B(2)(b) of this Chapter.

48. The Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (“RLUIPA”), 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000cc–2000cc-5 (2018), increased the protection for religious freedoms of incarcerated people and people in other institutions. Under RLUIPA, when the government limits the exercise of religion in institutions like prisons, it must show that those restrictions serve a “compelling government interest” and are the “least restrictive means” of achieving that interest. This is a higher standard than Turner’s “legitimate penological interest” test for restrictions on constitutional rights. See Warsoldier v. Woodford, 418 F.3d 989, 994 (9th Cir. 2005).

49. See Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 223–225, 228–229, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1037–1038, 1040–1041, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 199–200, 202–203 (1990) (using the Turner test to analyze an incarcerated person’s substantive due process claim but not applying it to the individual’s procedural due process claim). For further discussion of your procedural due process rights, see Chapter 18 of the JLM, “Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Proceedings.”

50. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89–90, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987) (“[T]here must be a ‘valid, rational connection’ between the prison regulation and the legitimate governmental interest put forward to justify it.”) (quoting Block v. Rutherford, 486 U.S. 576, 586, 104 S. Ct. 3227, 3232, 82 L. Ed. 2d 438, 447 (1984)).

51. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 90, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987) (explaining that “[w]here ‘other avenues’ remain available for the exercise of the asserted right, courts should be particularly conscious” of giving weight to prison officials’ decisions (citation omitted)). For example, in McRoy v. Cook Cty. Dept. of Corr., 366 F. Supp. 2d 662, 676–677 (N.D. Ill. 2005), a court upheld a prison’s cancellation of Muslim services on certain occasions, in part because the court found that the prison had provided other opportunities for an incarcerated person to observe his religion, such as allowing him to keep religious materials and allowing incarcerated people to pray together in community rooms.

52. A “ripple effect” means that your exercise of this right could affect the use of prison resources, affect the safety of guards, affect other incarcerated people, etc. For example, if a large group of incarcerated people are allowed to pray in the chapel while everyone else is on lockdown, this might either mean that too many guards have to be there to watch the chapel and leave other parts of the prison unguarded, or that the prison would have groups of unguarded incarcerated people in violation of safety procedures. This in turn might make the non-religious incarcerated people who do have to be in lockdown resentful and demand that they also be allowed special privileges, potentially causing a domino effect.

53. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 90, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79–80 (1987) (“A third consideration is the impact accommodation of the asserted constitutional right will have on guards and other inmates, and on the allocation of prison resources generally. . . . When accommodation of an asserted right will have a significant ‘ripple effect’ on fellow inmates or on prison staff, courts should be particularly deferential to the informed discretion of corrections officials.”).

- (4) Whether there is an easy way to meet the regulation's goal without limiting your constitutional right.⁵⁴

In most cases challenging prison regulations, the government wins. This is because the Turner test only requires the government to have a rational explanation (one that makes sense) for the regulation. Now when you are outside of a prison setting, if the government creates a law or policy that affects your rights, different tests are used. For instance, if the government is controlled by one political party and they create a law saying that you cannot publicly support candidates from the opposite party, that would affect your fundamental right to free speech. Since free speech is a fundamental right, a court would only allow this policy to stay in place if it passes a test called “strict scrutiny”. To pass this test, the government would have to show the court that this law has both a compelling interest and that the law is narrowly tailored to achieve that interest (which means that there cannot be another policy option available that is less restrictive).⁵⁵ However, if the government passes a law for the purposes of protecting people's lives (such as wearing a mask when outside to prevent you from getting a life threatening disease), then the law will most likely have to pass a test called the “rational basis” review. The rational basis test states that when the government has a valid interest—such as public safety or health concerns—it may create laws that are related to protecting that interest even if those laws only minimally relate (or bear very little relation) to those valid interests of the government.⁵⁶ Like the rational basis test, the Turner test is not a very high standard for the government to meet.

With the Turner test, the government needs to show that there is a connection between the regulation you are challenging and the purpose that it is supposed to accomplish.⁵⁷ However, the government does not need to show that the regulation is better than other regulations that would be less restrictive. This means that even if there are other potential regulations that would help the government achieve its goals without impacting incarcerated people's rights, the government can still pass the Turner test.

In the Turner case, the Court applied this test to a prison regulation banning incarcerated people from sending or receiving letters from persons incarcerated at other prisons (not including family members). The prison argued that letters between incarcerated people could be used to plan escapes or assaults. Looking at factor (1), the Court first found that preventing escapes and assaults was a valid government interest, and that banning letters between incarcerated people was a rational way to help prevent escapes and assaults. As for factor (2), the Court noted that incarcerated people still had other ways to exercise their First Amendment rights to express themselves, since incarcerated 54. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 90–91, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 80 (1987) (“[T]he absence of ready alternatives is evidence of the reasonableness of a prison regulation. . . . By the same token, the existence of obvious, easy alternatives may be evidence that the regulation is not reasonable, but is an ‘exaggerated response’ to prison concerns.”). A prison that is able to meet a goal by using one of several different rules is not required to choose the rule that has the least impact on your rights. However, the fact that there are other rules that accomplish the same goals may be considered evidence that the rule you are challenging is unreasonable, especially if the alternative rules do not have additional drawbacks. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 90–91, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 80 (1987).

55. See Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310, 340, 130 S. Ct. 876, 898, 175 L. Ed. 2d 753, 782 (2010).

56. Heller v. Doe, 509 U.S. 312, 320, 113 S. Ct. 2637, 2642, 125 L. Ed. 2d 257, 270 (1993).

57. See Walker v. Sumner, 917 F.2d 382, 385–387 (9th Cir. 1990) (holding that prison officials must provide support for the justifications of their regulations; assertions made without explanation or factual support are not enough); Hunafa v. Murphy, 907 F.2d 46, 48 (7th Cir. 1990) (finding the factual record provided by the prison was too “skimpy” to determine whether the prison's refusal to provide a pork-free meal to an incarcerated person was reasonably related to a legitimate penological interest). But see Whitmire v. Arizona, 298 F.3d 1134, 1136 (9th Cir. 2002) (noting that a plaintiff's case should not be dismissed unless the prison has provided evidence supporting a rational relationship between a policy and the policy's justification, or unless there is a “common-sense connection” between the policy and the prison's penological interests); Austin v. Hopper, 15 F. Supp. 2d 1210, 1235 (M.D. Ala. 1998) (refusing to require “evidence demonstrating a valid, rational connection” between the claimed goals of a policy and the policy itself, and instead using a “common sense” approach to whether a policy is reasonably related to legitimate correctional interests).

people could write to and receive letters from anyone besides other incarcerated people. Under factor (3), the Court found that allowing people who are incarcerated to communicate with other incarcerated people would have a significant “ripple effect” on others, because it might threaten the safety of other incarcerated people and prison guards. Finally, looking at factor (4), the Court found that there was no simple other way of ensuring that escapes and assaults were not planned through letters between incarcerated people. After going through the four factors, the Court held that the regulation was “reasonably related” to legitimate interests in security. As a result, the Court held that the prison could keep the rule in place even though it interfered with incarcerated people First Amendment rights to free expression and communication.⁵⁸

However, Turner also decided that a regulation preventing incarcerated people from marrying unless the superintendent found “compelling circumstances” was not “reasonably related” to legitimate security concerns.⁵⁹ The prison had claimed that the regulation was justified because “love triangles” among incarcerated people might lead to violence. The Court stated that there was no reasonable relationship between preventing marriage and preventing violence, since “love triangles” were just as likely when incarcerated people were unmarried. The Court also mentioned that a marriage was generally a private decision that would not have a “ripple effect” on others. The Court said that less restrictive regulations on prison marriages, such as those used at many other prisons, would still meet the concerns of prison officials.

As you can see from these examples, you need to carefully consider how to argue your claim in terms of the four factors. You have a better chance of success if a regulation completely deprives you of the ability to exercise your right, since such a regulation fails factor (2). In these cases, you should suggest other rules that could accomplish the same prison goal without completely violating your rights. Comparing the bad practices of your prison with the better practices of other prisons may also be helpful.

Figure 1 below explains your rights, the source of these rights, and which chapters of the JLM you should read if you think one of these rights has been violated.

Types of Constitutional Rights	Source of Constitutional Rights ⁶⁰	JLM Chapter
Rights to Freedom of Expression and Communication: includes the right to mail, visitation, telephone use, and other communications, as well as the right to express yourself	First Amendment	Chapter 19: “Your Right to Communicate with the Outside World”

58. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 93, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2264, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 82 (1987) (“The prohibition on correspondence is reasonably related to valid corrections goals. The rule is content neutral, it logically advances the goals of institutional security and safety . . . and it is not an exaggerated response to those objectives.”). But see Allen v. Coughlin, 64 F.3d 77, 81 (2d Cir. 1995) (holding that a prison had not established a valid reason for a regulation banning newspaper clippings sent through the mail).

59. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 97–98, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2266, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 84 (1987) (“The Missouri prison regulation . . . [restricting prisoner marriage] represents an exaggerated response to . . . security objectives. There are obvious, easy alternatives to the Missouri regulation that accommodate the right to marry while imposing a [minimal] burden on the pursuit of security objectives.”). Although the right to marry comes from the substantive due process part of the 14th Amendment, and not from the 1st Amendment, the analysis on how to balance the rights is the same.

60. This chart is only a simple outline for what parts of the Constitution establish these rights. Some of these rights may also be protected by federal statutes. Your case will depend on your particular facts, so you should use this chart to begin your research, not end it.

Types of Constitutional Rights	Source of Constitutional Rights ⁶⁰	JLM Chapter
Religious practices ⁶¹	First Amendment	Chapter 27: “Religious Freedom in Prison”
Freedom from unreasonably intrusive body searches ⁶²	Fourth Amendment	Chapter 25: “Your Right to Be Free from Illegal Body Searches” ⁶³
Prison conditions: overcrowding, cleanliness, etc.	Eighth Amendment	Chapter 16 (This Chapter)
Medical care	Eighth Amendment	Chapter 23: “Your Right to Adequate Medical Care”
Assault/failure to protect	Eighth Amendment & Fourteenth Amendment	Chapter 24: “Your Right to Be Free from Assault by Prison Guards and Other Incarcerated people
Privacy of medical information	Fourteenth Amendment	Chapter 26: “Infectious Diseases: AIDS, Hepatitis, Tuberculosis, and MRSA in Prisons” & Chapter 23: “Your Right to Adequate Medical Care”

61. If your religious rights are being violated, instead of bringing a Section 1983 claim, you may want to sue under the Religious Freedom Restoration Act. 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-1 (2018). You may not bring a lawsuit against state governments or officials under RFRA. You can only sue federal officials and agencies. See City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507, 534–536, 117 S. Ct. 2157, 2171–2172, 138 L. Ed. 2d 624, 648–649 (1997) (holding RFRA’s application to state governments and state officials unconstitutional); see also O’Bryan v. Bureau of Prisons, 349 F.3d 399, 401 (7th Cir. 2003) (finding that RFRA could constitutionally be applied to federal officers and agencies). Also, if the agency that operates your prison receives federal funding you can sue under another law called the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (“RLUIPA”). 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1 (2018). Prisons also have a harder time defending these suits. See Warsoldier v. Woodford, 418 F.3d 989, 998 (9th Cir. 2005) (noting that RLUIPA was designed to enhance protection of incarcerated people’s religious freedom by replacing the Turner “legitimate public interest” test with a “compelling interest” test).

62. See, e.g., Hurley v. Ward, 584 F.2d 609, 611 (2d Cir. 1978) (holding that invasive anal and genital searches of an incarcerated person, without probable cause, outweighed the prison’s security justifications).

63. Note that in most cases, this does not apply to cell searches. See Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 526, 104 S. Ct. 3194, 3200, 82 L. Ed. 2d 393, 402–403 (1984) (holding that the 4th Amendment prohibition against unreasonable searches does not apply to prison cells because “[t]he recognition of privacy rights for incarcerated people in their individual cells simply cannot be reconciled with the concept of incarceration and the needs and objectives of penal institutions”); Willis v. Artuz, 301 F.3d 65, 68–69 (2d Cir. 2002) (holding that incarcerated people are not protected from cell searches initiated by prosecutors or police even when such searches are not related to prison security).

Types of Constitutional Rights	Source of Constitutional Rights ⁶⁰	JLM Chapter
Due Process in disciplinary hearings ⁶⁴	Due Process Clause of the Fifth & Fourteenth Amendments ⁶⁵	Chapter 18: “Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Proceedings”
Discrimination on the basis of race, ethnicity, etc.	Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment	Chapter 16 (This Chapter)
Discrimination on the basis of gender	Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment	Chapter 16 (This Chapter)
Rights of persons with mental illness	Eighth & Fourteenth Amendments	Chapter 29, “Special Issues for Incarcerated people with Mental Illness”
Discrimination on the basis of disability	Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment	Chapter 28, “Rights of Incarcerated people with Disabilities”
Discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation or gender identity	Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment	Chapter 30: “Special Information for Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, and Transgender Incarcerated people”
Access to courts—law libraries or legal assistance	First, Sixth, & Fourteenth Amendments	Chapter 3: “Your Right to Learn the Law and Go to Court”

Since Eighth Amendment claims are some of the most common Section 1983 claims (as well as Bivens Actions) brought by people incarcerated in federal prisons, Part B(2)(b) of this Chapter goes into those claims in more detail. Additionally, B(2)(c) of this Chapter addresses discrimination claims on the basis of race, ethnicity, and gender. Sometimes these rights relate to one another, so make sure you read any other relevant JLM chapters.

(b) Eighth Amendment Claims

The Eighth Amendment states that “[e]xcessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.”⁶⁶ Most prison cases brought under the Eighth

64. The Due Process Clause of the 14th Amendment says that the state cannot “deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law.” See U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, §1. The right to liberty includes some rights you keep if you are in prison. However, the government only violates these rights when it acts in a way that is not related to a legitimate goal. Whether a government action reasonably relates to a legitimate goal is determined using the Turner test, described in Part B(2)(a) of this Chapter.

65. The government cannot deprive you of life, liberty, or property without going through certain procedures. This right is created by the 5th and 14th Amendments. The 14th Amendment applies to state government action. The 5th Amendment contains an identical prohibition: “No person shall be ... deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law” and applies to the federal government. U.S. CONST. amend. V. People incarcerated in federal prisons therefore usually use the 5th Amendment instead of the 14th Amendment to challenge due process violations. As mentioned in Figure 1, see Chapter 18 of the JLM for more details about your due process rights.

66. U.S. CONST. amend. VIII (emphasis added).

Amendment relate to “cruel and unusual punishment.” There are several types of claims that courts will consider under the cruel and unusual punishment part of the Eighth Amendment. These claims can include harm resulting from prison conditions, inadequate medical care, and assault. The cases below provide some specific examples of Eighth Amendment claims that courts have recognized.

Note that you should read Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act” (“PLRA”), if you plan to file a claim for cruel and unusual punishment under the Eighth Amendment. Under the PLRA, incarcerated people may not seek compensatory damages for mental or emotional injury without an accompanying physical injury, with limited exceptions.⁶⁷

A claim that prison conditions or practices constitute cruel and unusual punishment must satisfy two tests. These tests are referred to as the “objective” and “subjective” tests:

- (1) The objective test requires proof that prison conditions were bad enough to be considered cruel and unusual. Conditions must amount to “unquestioned and serious deprivations of basic human needs” or deprivation of the “minimal civilized measure of life’s necessities,” or they must include the “wanton and unnecessary infliction of pain.”⁶⁸ Supreme Court cases have emphasized that, in general, prison conditions must pose serious threats to health and safety.⁶⁹ However, under some circumstances, conditions do not need to inflict or threaten serious injury to meet the objective test. For example, cell searches causing “calculated harassment unrelated to prison needs” may be considered cruel and unusual punishment.⁷⁰ Similarly, excessive force may violate the Eighth Amendment if it is “repugnant to the conscience of mankind”⁷¹ (even if it inflicts little physical injury). It is possible that other conditions that do not actually cause physical injury (like sexually

67. Compensatory damages are awarded to make you “whole” by putting you back in the same position you were in before you suffered the wrong. An example of compensatory damages would be the cost of medical bills. They are different from punitive damages, which are meant to punish a wrongdoer rather than compensate you for your injuries. See Part C(1)(a) of this Chapter for a more complete explanation of compensatory damages. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e) (2018) (The statute states that “[n]o Federal civil action may be brought by an incarcerated person confined in a jail, prison, or other correctional facility, for mental or emotional injury suffered while in custody without a prior showing of physical injury[.]”). Courts have held that the statute only prohibits compensatory damages for mental or emotional injury, so incarcerated people can still claim other forms of damages or injunctive relief for mental or emotional injuries. See, e.g., White v. Holmes, 21 F.3d 277, 281 (8th Cir. 1994) (finding that “. . .some actual injury is required in order to state an 8th Amendment violation.”). Courts are split on the applicability of Section 1997e(e) to 1st Amendment claims. Compare Canell v. Lightner, 143 F.3d 1210, 1213 (9th Cir.1998) (“The deprivation of [1st] Amendment rights entitles a plaintiff to judicial relief wholly aside from any physical injury he can show, or any mental or emotional injury he may have incurred.”), and Siggers-El v. Barlow, 433 F. Supp. 2d 811, 816 (E.D. Mich. 2006) (holding that Section 1997e(e) of the PLRA is unconstitutional as applied to 1st Amendment claims to the extent that it bars recovery of damages for emotional harms without physical injury), with Searles v. Van Bebber, 251 F.3d 869, 876 (10th Cir. 2001) (“The plain language of the statute does not permit alteration of its clear damages restrictions on the basis of the underlying rights being asserted.”).

68. Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 347–348, 101 S. Ct. 2392, 2399–2400, 69 L. Ed. 2d 59, 69–70 (1981) (finding that a practice of placing two incarcerated people in a single cell did not violate the 8th Amendment, when the practice was necessary due to an increase in prison population and the practice did not cause “unnecessary and wanton pain”).

69. See, e.g., Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 837, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 825 (1994) (finding that knowing disregard of excessive risk to inmate health and safety—whether for reasons unique to one incarcerated person or to all in his situation—could qualify as a violation of the 8th Amendment).

70. Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 530, 104 S. Ct. 3194, 3202, 82 L. Ed. 2d 393, 405 (1984). Note that the court in Hudson did not find the conduct by prison guards rose to the level of calculated harassment.

71. Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 10, 112 S. Ct. 995, 1000, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 168 (1992) (allowing the claim to go forward even where there was no significant injury or need for medical attention).

intrusive searches,⁷² credible threats of immediate harm that are not acted upon,⁷³ conditions that “pose an unreasonable risk of serious damage to . . . future health,”⁷⁴ and psychological torture⁷⁵ may also be considered cruel and unusual punishment.

- (2) The subjective test requires that prison officials had a certain state of mind when they created the conditions you are challenging. In most prison conditions cases, the standard is “deliberate indifference,” which means that the officials must have had actual knowledge that they were subjecting you to an excessive risk of harm or other unconstitutional conditions.⁷⁶ In use of force cases, however, the test is harder to meet than the “deliberate indifference” test. Instead, you must show that the official who used force against you acted “maliciously and sadistically” in order to cause harm.⁷⁷

Under the objective test, as mentioned above, if your complaint is about the conditions of your imprisonment, you have to show that, “alone or in combination,” the conditions deprived you of “the minimal civilized measure of life’s necessities.”⁷⁸ Life’s necessities (or basic human needs) include “food, clothing, shelter, medical care, and reasonable safety,”⁷⁹ warmth,⁸⁰ exercise,⁸¹ and the “basic elements of hygiene.”⁸² If you are trying to show that several conditions combined to deprive you of a 72. See, e.g., Jordan v. Gardner, 986 F.2d 1521, 1522, 1530–1531 (9th Cir. 1993) (en banc) (holding that a policy of “random, non-emergency, suspicionless clothed body searches on female prisoners” by male guards violated the 8th Amendment).

73. See, e.g., Northington v. Jackson, 973 F.2d 1518, 1524 (10th Cir. 1992) (holding that, if true, an allegation that a corrections officer brandished a gun and threatened to kill an incarcerated person could be an 8th Amendment violation); Burton v. Livingston, 791 F.2d 97, 100 (8th Cir. 1986) (holding that an incarcerated person has a right to be free from “the terror of instant and unexpected death at the whim of his allegedly bigoted custodians”).

74. Helling v. McKinney, 509 U.S. 25, 33, 35–36, 113 S. Ct. 2475, 2480–2482, 125 L. Ed. 2d 22, 31, 33 (1993) (explaining “[w]e have great difficulty agreeing that prison authorities may not be deliberately indifferent to an inmate’s current health problems but may ignore a condition of confinement that is sure or very likely to cause serious illness and needless suffering the next week or month or year” and allowing an incarcerated person assigned a cellmate who smoked five packs of cigarettes a day to make a claim of future harm from secondhand smoke).

75. See, e.g., Parrish v. Johnson, 800 F.2d 600, 605 (6th Cir. 1986) (finding that a paraplegic incarcerated person who was threatened with a knife, denied requests for medical attention, and continuously and aggressively taunted by a guard could claim a violation of the 8th Amendment).

76. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 839–843, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1980–1982, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 826–829 (1994).

77. Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 6–7, 112 S. Ct. 995, 998–999, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 165–166 (1992).

78. Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 347, 101 S. Ct. 2392, 2399, 69 L. Ed. 2d 59, 69 (1981).

79. Helling v. McKinney, 509 U.S. 25, 32, 113 S. Ct. 2475, 2480, 125 L. Ed. 2d 22, 31 (1993) (quoting DeShaney v. Winnebago Cty. Dept. of Soc. Servs., 489 U.S. 189, 199–200, 109 S. Ct. 998, 1005, 103 L. Ed. 2d 249, 261–262 (1989)).

80. Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 304, 111 S. Ct. 2321, 2327, 115 L. Ed. 2d 271, 283 (1991); Palmer v. Johnson, 193 F.3d 346, 352–353 (5th Cir. 1999) (holding that overnight exposure to winds and cold with no means of keeping warm could violate the 8th Amendment). But see Bibbs v. Early, 541 F.3d 267, 272, 275 (5th Cir. 2008) (holding that only exposure to “extreme” cold could violate the 8th Amendment, and that an incarcerated person with two blankets and layers of clothes was not exposed to “extreme” cold, even in alleged 20-degree temperature).

81. Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 304, 111 S. Ct. 2321, 2327, 115 L. Ed. 2d 271, 283 (1991); Perkins v. Kan. Dept. of Corr., 165 F.3d 803, 810 (10th Cir. 1999) (holding that an allegation of prolonged denial of outdoor exercise could violate the 8th Amendment).

82. Palmer v. Johnson, 193 F.3d 346, 352 (5th Cir. 1999) (quoting Novak v. Beto, 453 F.2d 661, 665 (5th Cir. 1971)) (holding that depriving 49 incarcerated people of toilet facilities in a small area could violate the 8th Amendment); see also Bradley v. Puckett, 157 F.3d 1022, 1025–1026 (5th Cir. 1998) (holding that the defendant who alleged an inability to bathe for several months—resulting in a fungal infection that required medical attention—stated an 8th Amendment claim). But see Davis v. Scott, 157 F.3d 1003, 1006 (5th Cir. 1998) (holding that confinement in a cell with blood on the floor and excrement on the wall was not unconstitutional because it was only for three days and cleaning supplies were available).

life necessity, keep in mind that the conditions must have a “mutually enforcing [(in other words, combined)] effect that [deprives you] of a single, identifiable human need such as food, warmth, or exercise.”⁸³ For example, you may suffer cruel and unusual punishment if the inadequate heat in your cell-block, combined with the prison’s failure to issue blankets, deprives you of warmth.⁸⁴

The amount of harm that the court will require you to show also varies depending on the type of Eighth Amendment claim that you bring. For example, if you are complaining about prison guard brutality, you may not have to show that your injury was “serious.” Instead, you may only have to show that it was more than minor and that the assault was unjustified under the circumstances.⁸⁵ On the other hand, if your claim is that you were deprived of medical care, you will have to show that your medical needs were sufficiently “serious” and that prison officials were “deliberately indifferen[t]” to them.⁸⁶ Ultimately, it is important to remember that you must show different things for different types of Eighth Amendment Claims. Parts B(2)(b)(i) through B(2)(b)(iv) of this Chapter provide more information on the different types of Eighth Amendment claims you can make.

(i) Prison Conditions

Poor prison conditions may amount to cruel and unusual punishment. If they do, then they violate the Eighth Amendment. Such conditions can include a lack of basic necessities or the presence of safety hazards, like poor fire prevention safety measures.⁸⁷ Excessively long confinement in a small cell and denial of outdoor exercise can also violate the Eighth Amendment.⁸⁸ Other conditions that may constitute cruel and unusual punishment include unsanitary facilities, overcrowding, and inadequate

83. Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 304, 111 S. Ct. 2321, 2327, 115 L. Ed. 2d. 271, 283 (1991) (“Some conditions of confinement may establish an [8th] Amendment violation ‘in combination’ when each would not do so alone, but only when they have a mutually enforcing effect that produces the deprivation of a single, identifiable human need such as food, warmth, or exercise—for example, a low cell temperature at night combined with a failure to issue blankets.”).

84. See, e.g., Wilson v. Schomig, 863 F. Supp. 789, 795–796 (N.D. Ill. 1994) (holding that lack of heat in prison cells may, combined with other circumstances such as cold temperatures, could be found to violate 8th Amendment principles).

85. See, e.g., Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 10–11, 112 S. Ct. 995, 1000–1001, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 168–169 (1992) (holding that an assault on an incarcerated person by prison guards resulting in a cracked dental plate and minor bruises and swelling was enough harm to constitute a valid 8th Amendment claim).

86. See Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 297, 111 S. Ct. 2321, 2323, 115 L. Ed. 2d 271, 278 (1991) (holding that a claim of an 8th Amendment violation must show at least deliberate indifference to serious medical needs by prison officials). To bring a claim for inadequate medical care, see Chapter 23 of the JLM, “Your Right to Adequate Medical Care.”

87. See, e.g., Newman v. Alabama, 559 F.2d 283, 291 (5th Cir. 1977) (holding that a state must provide “prisoners with reasonably adequate food, clothing, shelter, sanitation, medical care, and personal safety so as to avoid the imposition of cruel and unusual punishment”), rev’d on other grounds sub nom. Alabama v. Pugh, 438 U.S. 781, 98 S. Ct. 3057, 57 L. Ed. 2d 1114 (1978) (per curiam); Nicholson v. Choctaw Cty., 498 F. Supp. 295, 308–312 (S.D. Ala. 1980) (finding that prison violated 8th Amendment rights through, among other things, the unsanitary conditions in the jail, the lack of adequate medical care, unsafe conditions, and the lack of religious services or instruction). See, e.g., Hoptowit v. Spellman, 753 F.2d 779, 783–784 (9th Cir. 1985) (holding that a hazardous work environment including inadequate lighting, plumbing, fire safety, ventilation, and vermin infestation, could constitute inhumane conditions in violation of the 8th Amendment); Newman v. Alabama, 559 F.2d 283, 291 (5th Cir. 1977) (holding that a state must provide “prisoners with reasonably adequate . . . personal safety so as to avoid the imposition of cruel and unusual punishment”), rev’d on other grounds sub nom. Alabama v. Pugh, 438 U.S. 781, 98 S. Ct. 3057, 57 L. Ed. 2d 1114 (1978) (per curiam). But cf. Osolinski v. Kane, 92 F.3d 934, 938–939 (9th Cir. 1996) (finding that failure to repair a broken oven, without additional aggravating factors, cannot reasonably be said to violate the 8th Amendment).

88. See Perkins v. Kan. Dept. of Corr., 165 F.3d 803, 810 (10th Cir. 1999) (holding allegation of prolonged denial of outdoor exercise could violate the 8th Amendment); Spain v. Procunier, 600 F.2d 189, 199 (9th Cir. 1979) (stating that with the exception of “inclement weather, unusual circumstances, or disciplinary needs . . . [that make it] impossible,” outdoor exercise is required when incarcerated people are otherwise confined to small cells 24 hours per day).

heating and ventilation.⁸⁹ Some courts have held that failing to protect incarcerated people from secondhand smoke may violate the Eighth Amendment.⁹⁰ However, secondhand smoke cases usually require incarcerated people to show that the secondhand smoke poses an unreasonable risk of future harm to their health.⁹¹ For more information about addressing secondhand smoke exposure, see Chapter 23 of the JLM, “Your Right to Adequate Medical Care.” Although,

Overcrowding is not unconstitutional in itself,⁹² but courts have found that it can violate the Eighth Amendment rights of people who are incarcerated when it leads to harmful consequences.⁹³ For example, successful lawsuits have been brought when a prison’s failure to check newcomers for contagious diseases, combined with overcrowding, increased the risk of infection.⁹⁴ Since 2011, the Supreme Court has been more willing to consider overcrowding as a violation of the Eighth Amendment rights of people who are incarcerated. For example, in Brown v. Plata, the Supreme Court held that the number of people in prisons in California had to be capped at 137.5% of each prison’s maximum capacity.⁹⁵ The Court found that there was enough evidence to support the fact that “crowding creates unsafe and unsanitary conditions that hamper effective delivery of medical and mental health care. It also promotes unrest and violence and can cause incarcerated people with latent mental illnesses to worsen and develop overt symptoms.”⁹⁶ In Plata, the Court also said that overcrowding was the main reason for many constitutional violations.⁹⁷

89. See, e.g., Palmer v. Johnson, 193 F.3d 346, 352–353 (5th Cir. 1999) (finding that the combined circumstances of overnight outdoor confinement without shelter, blanket, heating, or access to bathroom facilities were a denial of necessities in violation of the 8th Amendment); DeMallory v. Cullen, 855 F.2d 442, 445 (7th Cir. 1988) (finding that an incarcerated person stated sufficient 8th Amendment claim in Section 1983 complaint alleging unsanitary and dangerous conditions); French v. Owens, 777 F.2d 1250, 1252–1255, 1257–1258 (7th Cir. 1985) (holding that overcrowding, medical neglect, and failure to protect incarcerated people from threats to safety violated the 8th Amendment); Morales Feliciano v. Hernandez Colon, 697 F. Supp. 37, 40–45 (D.P.R. 1988) (ruling that overcrowding, vermin-infestation, and otherwise unsanitary conditions violated the 8th Amendment), aff’d sub nom. Morales-Feliciano v. Parole Bd., 887 F.2d 1 (1989); Toussaint v. McCarthy, 597 F. Supp. 1388, 1409–1411 (N.D. Cal. 1984) (finding constitutional violation due to certain conditions, including double-celling, insufficient ventilation and heating, and inadequate and unsanitary clothing and bedding supplies), aff’d in part and rev’d in part, 801 F.2d 1080 (9th Cir. 1986).

90. See, e.g., Atkinson v. Taylor, 316 F.3d 257, 262–269 (3d Cir. 2003) (allowing an incarcerated person to go forward with 8th Amendment claim that exposure to secondhand smoke posed a substantial risk of future harm); Gill v. Smith, 283 F. Supp. 2d 763, 769 (N.D.N.Y. 2003) (allowing an incarcerated person with asthma to go forward with 8th Amendment claim that exposure to secondhand smoke posed an unreasonable risk of future harm to his health).

91. See Helling v. McKinney, 509 U.S. 25, 35–36, 113 S. Ct. 2475, 2482, 125 L. Ed. 2d 22, 33 (1993) (holding that exposure to extreme levels of tobacco smoke that pose an unreasonable risk to future health may be an 8th Amendment violation, and that the plaintiff did not need to wait until he was actually harmed to ask a court to correct unsafe conditions); Atkinson v. Taylor, 316 F.3d 257, 262–269 (3d Cir. 2003) (same); Gill v. Smith, 283 F. Supp. 2d 763, 769 (N.D.N.Y. 2003) (same).

92. See Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 348, 101 S. Ct. 2392, 2400, 69 L. Ed. 2d 59, 69–70 (1981) (finding no constitutional violation when double-celling “did not lead to deprivations of essential food, medical care, or sanitation” and did not “increase violence among inmates or create other conditions intolerable for prison confinement”).

93. See Tillery v. Owens, 907 F.2d 418, 427–428 (3d Cir. 1990) (holding that double-celling due to overcrowding, in combination with other factors, such as the physical condition of the cell, violated the 8th Amendment); Mitchell v. Cuomo, 748 F.2d 804, 807–808 (2d Cir. 1984) (granting incarcerated people an injunction against the closing of a facility that would result in overcrowding in other prisons); Fisher v. Koehler, 692 F. Supp. 1519, 1561–1565 (S.D.N.Y. 1988) (holding that the level of both prisoner-prisoner violence and staff-prisoner violence resulting, in part, from overcrowding violated the 8th Amendment), aff’d, Fisher v. Koehler, 902 F.2d 2 (2d Cir. 1990).

94. See Lareau v. Manson, 651 F.2d 96, 109 (2d Cir. 1981) (finding failure to screen for diseases constituted inadequate medical practice that violated the 8th Amendment).

95. Brown v. Plata, 563 U.S. 493, 493, 131 S. Ct. 1910, 1917, 179 L. Ed. 2d 969, 976 (2011).

96. Brown v. Plata, 563 U.S. 493, 495, 131 S. Ct. 1910, 1919, 179 L. Ed. 2d 969, 978 (2011).

97. Brown v. Plata, 563 U.S. 493, 495, 131 S. Ct. 1910, 1919, 179 L. Ed. 2d 969, 978 (2011).

Some Section 1983 claims challenge prison housing arrangements. Courts have generally held that double-celling (placing two persons in each cell) is constitutional as long as both persons are provided with their basic needs, such as having enough space to sleep and a clean interior. Double-celling is not a constitutional violation by itself because incarcerated people may still exercise their rights and because prison officials have strong administrative concerns in providing housing for everyone in the prison population.⁹⁸ Similarly, administrative segregation does not violate a person's rights.⁹⁹ However, it is unconstitutional for prison officials to put you in administrative segregation in order to get back at you for filing a complaint or claim.¹⁰⁰ If you bring a case because you were administratively segregated, it must be brought as a procedural due process claim, not as an Eighth Amendment claim. For a discussion of procedural due process, see Chapter 18 of the JLM, "Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Proceedings." Claims for inadequate cell assignments often overlap with Eighth Amendment claims for assault. If you think you have these claims, you should be sure to review the cases cited in this section and Chapter 24 of the JLM, "Your Right to Be Free from Assault by Prison Guards and Other Incarcerated people."

(ii) Inadequate Medical Care and Other Health Risks

Inadequate medical care can also violate the Eighth Amendment. As discussed above, the Court held in Brown v. Plata that unreasonable risks to your health may violate the Eighth Amendment even if you have not been harmed yet.¹⁰¹ For information on your right to medical care, see Chapter 23 of the JLM, "Your Right to Adequate Medical Care."

(iii) Assault

In at least one Section 1983 case, the Supreme Court has held that the infliction of pain by guards through practices such as handcuffing to hitching posts for prolonged periods of time violates the Eighth Amendment.¹⁰² Further, many Section 1983 cases have claimed that prison officials' failure to protect incarcerated people from assaults violates the Eighth Amendment. For more detailed information, see Chapter 24 of the JLM, "Your Right to Be Free from Assault by Prison Guards and Other Incarcerated people."

98. See Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 348, 101 S. Ct. 2392, 2400, 69 L. Ed. 2d 59, 69 (1981) (holding that double-celling did not violate the 8th Amendment since it did not lead to deprivations of basic needs, and did not "increase violence among inmates or create other conditions intolerable for prison confinement").

99. See, e.g., Sealey v. Giltner, 197 F.3d 578, 589–590 (2d Cir. 1999) (finding that administrative confinement, after a required factual determination that plaintiff posed a threat to prison safety, was not an "atypical and significant hardship" when compared to the ordinary conditions of prison life). Note that Sealey is not an 8th Amendment case, but was brought under the Due Process Clause of the 14th Amendment.

100. See Allah v. Seiverling, 229 F.3d 220, 223–226 (3d Cir. 2000) (allowing an incarcerated person to go forward with a due process claim that he was kept in administrative segregation in retaliation for filing civil rights suits).

101. See Brown v. Plata, 563 U.S. 493, 495, 131 S. Ct. 1910, 1919, 179 L. Ed. 2d 969, 978 (2011); see also Helling v. McKinney, 509 U.S. 25, 34–36, 113 S. Ct. 2475, 2481–2482, 125 L. Ed. 2d 22, 32–33 (1993) (holding that exposure to extreme levels of environmental tobacco smoke that pose an unreasonable risk to future health may be an 8th Amendment violation, and that the plaintiff did not need to wait until he was actually harmed to ask a court to correct unsafe conditions). But see Glick v. Henderson, 855 F.2d 536, 538–540 (8th Cir. 1988) (denying an incarcerated person's 8th Amendment claim based on exposure to HIV in prison, because it was based on an "unsubstantiated fear").

102. See Hope v. Pelzer, 536 U.S. 730, 738, 745–746, 122 S. Ct. 2508, 2514–2515, 2518, 153 L. Ed. 2d 666, 677–678, 682 (2002) (reversing judgment that guards were entitled to qualified immunity and holding that defendants could be liable under Section 1983 for violating an incarcerated person's 8th Amendment rights by handcuffing the incarcerated person to a hitching post for seven hours in extreme heat, and without bathroom breaks or an adequate supply of drinking water).

(iv) Exercise, Work, and Education

Eighth Amendment claims challenging deprivations of exercise and recreation have had mixed results. Whether a right to exercise has been violated depends on whether you have been deprived of your basic needs. Because prison officials are constitutionally required to provide for your health, they must generally allow you to have certain minimum levels of exercise.¹⁰³ However, this right has been found to be violated only if a person's movement is so restricted that his muscles are allowed to waste or his health is threatened.¹⁰⁴ Most courts will not find that a deprivation of recreation time violates constitutional rights, since general recreation, unlike exercise, does not necessarily affect health.

Eighth Amendment claims challenging deprivations of meaningful work or educational programs have not been very successful. The Supreme Court has said that limited work hours or delays in accessing education do not cause pain and are not punishments, and that therefore the Eighth Amendment does not generally protect against deprivations like these.¹⁰⁵

(c) Fourteenth Amendment Claims: The Equal Protection Clause

The Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment guarantees every person in the United States, including those who are incarcerated, "the equal protection of the laws."¹⁰⁶ This means that the state may not treat you differently (discriminate against you) because you belong to a particular group or "class" of people. In general, when you are incarcerated, you must meet two requirements to make a claim under the Equal Protection Clause.¹⁰⁷ First, your claim must state that you were treated differently from others who were in a similar situation or similar circumstances.¹⁰⁸ Second, your claim 103. See Davenport v. DeRobertis, 844 F.2d 1310, 1315 (7th Cir. 1988) (finding an 8th Amendment violation where incarcerated people in a segregation unit were allowed only one hour each week of exercise outside of their cells); Spain v. Proconier, 408 F. Supp. 534, 547 (N.D. Cal. 1976) ("[T]he denial of fresh air and regular outdoor exercise and recreation constitutes cruel and unusual punishment. . ."), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 600 F.2d 189 (9th Cir. 1979). But see Anderson v. Coughlin, 757 F.2d 33, 36 (2d Cir. 1985) ("[N]either an occasional day without exercise when weather conditions preclude outdoor activity nor reliance on running, calisthenics, and isometric and aerobic exercises in lieu of games is cruel and unusual punishment."); French v. Owens, 777 F.2d 1250, 1255–1256 (7th Cir. 1985) (holding prison provided sufficient opportunity for exercise that did not rise to level of 8th Amendment violation).

104. See French v. Owens, 777 F.2d 1250, 1255–1256 (7th Cir. 1985) ("Lack of exercise may certainly rise to a constitutional violation. Where movement is denied and muscles are allowed to atrophy, the health of the individual is threatened and the state's constitutional obligation is compromised."); see also Mammanna v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, 934 F.3d 368, 373–374 (3d Cir. 2019) ("[A]lleged deprivations and exposure reflect more than the denial of a 'comfortable prison[]', but rather the denial of 'the minimal civilized measure of life's necessities,' in particular, warmth and sufficient sleep."); Mitchell v. Rice, 954 F.2d 187, 192 (4th Cir. 1992) (stating that prisons may restrict exercise only in exceptional circumstances, such as when an adult incarcerated person is in disciplinary segregation).

105. See Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 348, 101 S. Ct. 2392, 2400, 69 L. Ed. 2d 59, 70 (1981) ("[L]imited work hours and delay before receiving education do not inflict pain, much less unnecessary and wanton pain; deprivations of this kind simply are not punishments."); Granillo v. Corr. Corp. of Am., No. 99-5720, 2000 U.S. App. LEXIS 28037, at *2–3 (6th Cir. Nov. 6, 2000) (unpublished) (dismissing as frivolous a complaint where an incarcerated person claimed administrative detention deprived him of "goods, recreation, work opportunities, money, schooling, television, telephone, contact visitation, and a microwave to heat his cold meals"); Women Prisoners v. District of Columbia, 93 F.3d 910, 927 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (noting that an incarcerated person "has no constitutional right to work and educational opportunities"); Higgason v. Farley, 83 F.3d 807, 810 (7th Cir. 1996) (determining that reduction in privileges, including educational programs, "did not infringe on a protected liberty interest").

106. U.S. CONST. amend. XIV.

107. See Veney v. Wyche, 293 F.3d 726, 730–731 (4th Cir. 2002) (naming the two requirements that must be met for an incarcerated person to make an equal protection claim); Wilson v. Taylor, 515 F. Supp. 2d 469, 472 (D. Del. 2007) (same); Williams v. Manternach, 192 F. Supp. 2d 980, 990 (N.D. Iowa 2002) (same).

108. Klinger v. Dept. of Corr., 31 F.3d 727, 731 (8th Cir. 1994) (noting that the Equal Protection Clause must state that the unequal treatment resulted from intentional or purposeful discrimination.¹⁰⁹ You are most likely to be able to make an equal protection claim if you have been discriminated against because of your race, gender, ethnicity, or disability.¹¹⁰

You may also have an equal protection claim if you are discriminated against because of your custodial status (e.g., the type of custody you are in, such as protective custody, or general population).¹¹¹ However, in practice, equal protection claims for discrimination based on custodial status are difficult to win. This is because treating incarcerated people in different ways is allowed as long as the prison has some reasonable explanation.¹¹²

The Supreme Court has also said that it may be possible to make an equal protection claim if you are singled out as an individual for “arbitrary and irrational treatment,” meaning you were singled out for no apparent or logical reason, even if you are not being discriminated against as a member of requires the state to treat people alike when they are in similar situations).

109. McCleskey v. Kemp, 481 U.S. 279, 292, 107 S. Ct. 1756, 1767, 95 L. Ed. 2d 262, 278 (1987) (noting that a successful equal protection claim must prove that there was purposeful discrimination). This means that it is not enough to argue that you were treated differently, but that you must also argue that you were intentionally treated differently (treated differently on purpose).

110. See Johnson v. California, 543 U.S. 499, 512, 125 S. Ct. 1141, 1150, 160 L. Ed. 2d 949, 963 (2005) (finding that an incarcerated person’s 14th Amendment rights to equal protection are violated if the prison discriminates on the basis of race, unless the prison can demonstrate that such discrimination is necessary to achieve a compelling government interest); Sockwell v. Phelps, 20 F.3d 187, 191–192 (5th Cir. 1994) (finding equal protection violations where incarcerated people were segregated by race in their cells, because a general fear of racial violence could not justify segregation); Santiago v. Miles, 774 F. Supp. 775, 777 (W.D.N.Y. 1991) (finding that plaintiffs had proven the existence of equal protection violations based on a pattern of racism affecting job placement, housing assignments, and discipline). But see Wilson v. Taylor, 515 F. Supp. 2d 469, 473 (D. Del. 2007) (dismissing equal protection claim based on race discrimination in prison discipline because the incarcerated person did not provide evidence that the discipline was racially motivated or that white incarcerated people who were similarly situated were treated differently); Hill v. Thalacker, 399 F. Supp. 2d 925, 929 (W.D. Wis. 2005) (dismissing incarcerated person’s claim of race discrimination in promotion policy because he did not provide any evidence that the white incarcerated people who were promoted before him were similarly situated); Bass v. Becher, No. 04-C-033-C, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2372, at *12 (W.D. Wis. Feb. 17, 2004) (unpublished) (dismissing claim of equal protection violation based on race because the plaintiff did not provide facts to show how his treatment was different from that of a white incarcerated person in the same position); Brown v. Byrd, No. 00-3118, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17354, at *15–19 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 1, 2000) (unpublished) (finding that defendants’ policy of assigning cells based on whether they thought incarcerated people would get along, even if shown to have a racial impact, did not violate the Equal Protection Clause because it was reasonably related to the prison’s legitimate interests in safety and security); Giles v. Henry, 841 F. Supp. 270, 275 (S.D. Iowa 1993) (finding African-American plaintiff’s argument that defendants treated similarly situated white incarcerated people more favorably than him to be unpersuasive because there was no clear pattern of discrimination in the evidence). For information on and cases regarding equal protection violations based on gender, see Chapter 41 of the JLM, “Special Issues of Women Prisoners.” See Jean v. Nelson, 711 F.2d 1455, 1485 n.29 (11th Cir. 1983) (noting that “[a] claim of discrimination based on nationality does not differ from that based on race”), vacated on other grounds en banc, 727 F.2d 957 (11th Cir. 1984); Parisie v. Morris, 873 F. Supp. 1560, 1562–1563 (N.D. Ga. 1995) (finding that a plaintiff’s claim that the parole board had impermissibly considered his ethnicity in denying him parole was valid). See Green v. McKaskle, 788 F.2d 1116, 1125 (5th Cir. 1986) (noting restrictions on movement and access based on disability may violate equal protection if no possible justification is shown). See Chapter 28 of the JLM, “Rights of Prisoners with Disabilities,” for more information on disability discrimination.

111. Williams v. Manternach, 192 F. Supp. 2d 980, 989–992 (N.D. Iowa 2002) (finding that plaintiff made a valid equal protection claim by stating that, “as a lifer”, he was treated differently with regard to jobs and classification). But see Gerber v. Hickman, 291 F.3d 617, 623 (9th Cir. 2002) (en banc) (finding no equal protection violation for a life incarcerated person barred from providing his wife with a sperm sample for the purposes of artificial insemination because keeping up with contacts outside of prison is not as important for incarcerated people who will never be released from prison).

112. See, e.g., Little v. Terhune, 200 F. Supp. 2d 445, 452 (D.N.J. 2002) (rejecting plaintiff’s equal protection claim because the lack of programming available to incarcerated people in administrative segregation compared with those in the general population was rationally related to the prison’s security concerns and budgetary constraints).

a certain group.¹¹³ However, like other constitutional rights, the right to equal protection is compared to the state's legitimate interests. One of these legitimate interests is keeping prisons safe and orderly.

3. Federal Statutory Bases for Section 1983 Claims

Sometimes, in addition to claims based on federal constitutional violations, you can bring a Section 1983 claim if a state actor has violated a right created by a federal statute.¹¹⁴ However, only a few federal statutes can be enforced using Section 1983.

One example is a claim related to payment of veteran's benefits. At least one court has held that the statute dealing with this, 38 U.S.C. § 5301(a), permits a Section 1983 lawsuit to be brought to enforce the statute.¹¹⁵

You may also be able to bring a Section 1983 claim if a prison has violated your rights under certain international treaties. For example, a few courts have held that Article 36 of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations ("VCCR") can be used as the basis for a Section 1983 claim. The VCCR describes foreign nationals' right to consular access.¹¹⁶ Consular access means granting permission to contact your home nation's embassy in the United States. If you are a foreign national, and you are arrested or detained, the federal, state, or local law enforcement agency responsible for your arrest or detention must ask you whether you would like to notify your embassy of your arrest. If so, then they must notify a consular official from your embassy. They must also grant the consular official access to you.

Some federal statutes, such as provisions of the Americans with Disabilities Act, cannot be enforced through Section 1983 because they have their own enforcement provisions.¹¹⁷

Sometimes it is easier to show that your rights under a statute have been violated than it is to show a constitutional violation. If courts have already found that a particular statute can be used as

113. Village of Willowbrook v. Olech, 528 U.S. 562, 564, 120 S. Ct. 1073, 1074–1075, 145 L. Ed. 2d 1060, 1063 (2000) (finding that equal protection claims can be made by a "class of one" if the plaintiff has been arbitrarily and irrationally singled out and treated differently from others in similar situations and there is no rational basis for the difference in treatment).

114. Maine v. Thiboutot, 448 U.S. 1, 4, 100 S. Ct. 2502, 2504, 65 L. Ed. 2d 555, 559 (1980) (holding that Section 1983 may be used to sue for violations of a right created by a federal statute).

115. Higgins v. Beyer, 293 F.3d 683, 689–690 (3d Cir. 2002) (holding that 38 U.S.C. § 5301(a) which prohibits veterans benefits from being seized or attached, creates a right that can be enforced under Section 1983). In Higgins, an incarcerated person brought a Section 1983 claim against the New Jersey Department of Corrections and other defendants for taking a portion of the money from his veteran's disability check to pay a fine the incarcerated person owed to the Victims of Crime Compensation Board. Higgins v. Beyer, 293 F.3d 683, 685–687 (3d Cir. 2002).

116. Vienna Convention on Consular Relations art. 36, Apr. 24, 1963, 21 U.S.T. 77, 100, 596 U.N.T.S. 261, 292. Note that the federal courts disagree on whether Article 36 of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations ("VCCR") creates a right enforceable by an individual who has been arrested. Compare Jogi v. Voges, 480 F.3d 822, 834 (7th Cir. 2007) (holding that Article 36 of the VCCR confers individual rights on detained nationals), with Gandara v. Bennett, 528 F.3d 823, 827–829 (11th Cir. 2008) (holding that Article 36 of the VCCR does not create individual rights), De Los Santos Mora v. New York, 524 F.3d 183, 209 (2d Cir. 2008) (holding same), and Cornejo v. County of San Diego, 504 F.3d 853, 855 (9th Cir. 2007) (holding same). The majority of federal courts that have addressed the issue have concluded that the Vienna Convention does not create enforceable individual rights. The Supreme Court has not yet addressed the issue of whether Article 36 can provide the basis for a Section 1983 claim. United States v. Perez-Sanchez, No. CR02-4065-MWB, 2006 WL 2949503, at *8 (N.D. Iowa Oct. 17, 2006) (unpublished) (noting that federal circuit courts have not agreed on the enforceability of VCCR Article 36 and that the Supreme Court has declined to decide the issue). For more information on consular access, see the Immigration and Consular Access Supplement to the JLM.

117. See Blessing v. Freestone, 520 U.S. 329, 341, 117 S. Ct. 1353, 1360, 137 L. Ed. 2d 569, 582 (1997) (quoting Smith v. Robinson, 468 U.S. 992, 1005, n. 9, 104 S. Ct. 3457, 3464 n.9, 82 L. Ed. 2d 746, 760 n.9 (1984)) ("[D]ismissal is proper if Congress 'specifically foreclosed a remedy under § 1983' . . . by creating a comprehensive enforcement scheme that is incompatible with individual enforcement under § 1983."); Williams v. Pa. Human Relations Comm'n, 870 F.3d 294, 297–300 (3d Cir. 2017) (holding that provisions of the American with Disabilities Act (ADA) may not be enforced using Section 1983). For more about your rights under the ADA, see Chapter 28 of the JLM, "Rights of Prisoners with Disabilities." For more about your rights under RLUIPA, see Chapter 27 of the JLM, "Religious Freedom in Prison."

the basis for a Section 1983 claim, you should examine the cases interpreting that statute to see if your case is similar to them. You should pay special attention to which cases rely on Section 1983 and which do not.¹¹⁸

C. Procedural Requirements for Your Lawsuit

1. Types of Relief a Court May Grant

Whether your Section 1983 claim is based on a violation of constitutional or federal statutory rights, you may generally ask a federal district court for several types of relief. These types of relief include: damages (money payment), injunctive relief (an order from the court to the person you sued to do something or to stop doing something), and declaratory relief (a court statement of what your rights are). You may ask for more than one type of relief in your suit. However, the type of relief you can ask for may be different depending on whom you sue or name as defendants.¹¹⁹

(a) Money Damages

The court may require individual defendants (such as a warden, guard, or employee) to pay you money damages. You generally cannot get a judgment for money damages against states or state agencies like state prisons.¹²⁰ However, you can get a judgment for money damages against municipalities and private corporations. If you are suing for damages, either you or the defendant can demand a trial by jury.

There are three general categories of money damages: compensatory, punitive, and nominal damages. Compensatory damages, also known as actual damages, are awarded to make you “whole.” This means that they are supposed to put you back in the same position you were in before you suffered the wrong. For example, imagine that an item of your property has been unlawfully damaged by a prison official and the property was worth seventy dollars. If you win your suit, you could receive seventy dollars in damages or a lesser amount that is enough to repair or restore the item to its original condition. Or, if you were physically injured by the defendant’s conduct, a court or jury might award you enough money to cover your medical expenses or to compensate you for a resulting disability. In addition, compensatory damages may include pain and suffering damages. These try to compensate you financially for the physical pain and suffering you experienced because of the wrongful conduct. When you ask for compensatory damages, you must state and prove the nature, extent, and cause of your injuries in detail.

The second type of money damages is punitive damages. These are not awarded very often. The purpose of punitive damages is to punish the defendants for what they did, rather than just to compensate you for what happened. Punitive damages are available when the defendants acted with

118. Courts generally decide on a case-by-case basis which statutes can be used as the basis for Section 1983 lawsuits, depending on how the court thinks that Congress intended the statute to work. See Blessing v. Freestone, 520 U.S. 329, 340–341, 117 S. Ct. 1353, 1359, 137 L. Ed. 2d 569, 581–582 (1997) (discussing how courts have traditionally determined whether federal statutes create rights that are enforceable using Section 1983). For example, courts have held that juvenile offenders who are illegally housed with adult offenders in adult prisons can use Section 1983 to enforce their right to be housed separately. See Hendrickson v. Griggs, 672 F. Supp. 1126, 1136–1137 (N.D. Iowa 1987) (holding that the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act, codified at 42 U.S.C. § 5633(a)(12)–(14), creates enforceable rights under Section 1983). However, if you are an adult whose criminal history is wrongfully disclosed, you cannot sue under Section 1983. See Polchowski v. Gorris, 714 F.2d 749, 751 (7th Cir. 1983) (holding that 42 U.S.C. § 3789g does not create enforceable rights under Section 1983). Sometimes, different courts do not agree on whether a particular statute can be used as the basis for a Section 1983 claim. You should research your jurisdiction’s case law about bringing Section 1983 claims based on federal statutory rights.

119. For a list of the types of relief available from different defendants, see Figure 2 in Part C(3)(c) of this Chapter.

120. As a practical matter, it is often the case that if you sue state employees in their individual capacity (as opposed to the actual state or state agency), the state will voluntarily pay the damages for the employees. This is called “indemnification.”

“evil motive or intent” or “reckless or callous indifference” to your federal rights.¹²¹ A court cannot award punitive damages against governmental agencies, like a prison or a jail, but it can award them against individual officials or employees.¹²²

The third type of money damages is nominal damages. Nominal damages are symbolic, and usually no more than one dollar.¹²³ You may be awarded nominal damages instead of compensatory damages if you prove that the defendants violated your rights, but did not cause you any harm.¹²⁴ If you are awarded nominal damages, you may be able to get punitive damages as well.¹²⁵

However, if even if a court awards you money damages for your Section 1983 case, there are laws that might prevent you from receiving all of your award.

At least thirty-one states, and the federal government, have some type of “Son of Sam” statute.¹²⁶ The purpose of these statutes is to stop people who are convicted of a crime from profiting off of that crime. If you profit from that crime, “Son of Sam” statutes allow the victims of that crime to sue for some, if not all, of those profits. For instance, if you are convicted of a crime and later on write a book or a movie based off of that crime, “Son of Sam” statutes could allow any victim of that crime to seek 121. See Smith v. Wade, 461 U.S. 30, 56, 103 S. Ct. 1625, 1640, 75 L. Ed. 2d 632, 651 (1983) (holding that an incarcerated person may be awarded punitive damages for recklessness or serious indifference to his rights, as well as for “evil intent”); see also Reilly v. Grayson, 310 F.3d 519, 521 (6th Cir. 2002) (upholding punitive damages award against prison officials whose refusal to house asthmatic incarcerated person in smoke-free environment was found to be a reckless disregard for his rights); Blissett v. Coughlin, 66 F.3d 531, 535–536 (2d Cir. 1995) (upholding jury award of punitive damages against prison guards for assault and unlawful confinement of incarcerated person).

122. See City of Newport v. Fact Concerts, Inc., 453 U.S. 247, 271, 101 S. Ct. 2748, 2762, 69 L. Ed. 2d 616, 634–635 (1981) (holding that punitive damages are not available against a municipality in a Section 1983 suit); Ciraolo v. City of N.Y., 216 F.3d 236, 241–242 (2d Cir. 2000) (reversing an award of punitive damages against New York City in a Section 1983 action based on City of Newport and holding that municipal immunity from punitive damages is absolute, with no “outrageous conduct” exception).

123. Courts may award more than one dollar. See, e.g., Hatch v. Yamauchi, 809 F. Supp. 59, 61 (E.D. Ark. 1992) (awarding nominal damages in the amount of ten dollars for violation of incarcerated person’s right to access the courts, including access to the law library and trained legal assistance).

124. See Thompson v. Carter, 284 F.3d 411, 418 (2d Cir. 2002) (holding that under the Prison Litigation Reform Act (“PLRA”) claims for constitutional violations without physical injury need not be dismissed outright, but recovery is limited to nominal and punitive damages (as well as injunctive and declaratory relief) because allowing compensatory damages without physical injuries would amount to recovery for mental or emotional injury, which the PLRA prohibits); see also Royal v. Kautzky, 375 F.3d 720, 722–723 (8th Cir. 2004) (holding that the compensatory damages limitation of the PLRA applies to all federal prisoner lawsuits, including those for 1st Amendment violations); Searles v. Van Bebber, 251 F.3d 869, 875–877 (10th Cir. 2001) (holding that an incarcerated person could not recover compensatory damages for the violation of his constitutional rights without first showing a physical injury). However, some courts do not require any showing of physical injury where the deprivation involves the 1st Amendment. See Williams v. Ollis, Nos. 99-2168/99-2234, 2000 U.S. App. LEXIS 23671, at *5–6 (6th Cir. Sept. 18, 2000) (unpublished) (stating that the plaintiff’s 1st Amendment claim for money damages was not precluded by PLRA); Rowe v. Shake, 196 F.3d 778, 781–782 (7th Cir. 1999) (holding that “[a] deprivation of First Amendment rights standing alone is a cognizable injury,” and therefore “[a] prisoner is entitled to judicial relief for a violation of his First Amendment rights aside from any physical, mental, or emotional injury he may have sustained”); Canell v. Lightner, 143 F.3d 1210, 1213 (9th Cir. 1998) (holding that “[t]he deprivation of First Amendment rights entitles a plaintiff to judicial relief wholly aside from any physical injury he can show”).

125. See Allah v. Al-Hafeez, 226 F.3d 247, 251–252 (3d Cir. 2000) (noting that in appropriate cases, both nominal and punitive damages may be awarded for a violation of constitutional rights without an accompanying injury). In the cited case, the plaintiff sought punitive damages for the alleged violation of his constitutional right to the free exercise of religion, but not for any emotional or mental distress that he may have suffered as a result of that violation. However, his claims for compensatory damages were barred by the court. See Allah v. Al-Hafeez, 226 F.3d 247, 250–251 (3d Cir. 2000).

126. Validity, construction, and application of “Son of Sam” laws regulating or prohibiting distribution of crime-related book, film, or comparable revenues to criminals, 60 A.L.R.4th 1210 (Originally published in 1988).

those profits.¹²⁷ However, many states like New York have expanded these statutes, and if you are convicted of a crime, the individuals who are considered victims of that crime may sue you for any funds that you might receive—which would include money damages from your §1983 case.¹²⁸ While many “Son of Sam” laws are similar to New York’s, each law will likely have unique features. So, before seeking money damages in your Section 1983 suit it is important to consider the “Son of Sam” laws of that state in which you were convicted, as well as the federal “Son of Sam” law.

No matter which type of damages you ask for, you should read Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act.” The PLRA limits the types of damages you can recover in different situations.¹²⁹

(b) Injunctive Relief

Another type of relief the court can award in a Section 1983 action is an injunction. An injunction is an order to prison officials either to take or not to take certain actions. For example, a judge may order a prison to act to improve the conditions of your confinement. Or, a judge may order a prison to stop censoring your mail.¹³⁰ An injunction is often referred to as “equitable relief.”

When you make the decision to ask a court for a permanent injunction, there are a few actions that you should take first. First, you might seek a temporary restraining order (“TRO”). Courts will only grant a TRO in exceptional and urgent situations. To get a TRO, you must show that you will suffer “immediate and irreparable injury, loss, or damage” if you have to wait for a hearing.¹³¹

If you believe you are eligible for a TRO, you must file an “Order to Show Cause and Temporary Restraining Order” with the court. See Appendix A-4 of this Chapter for an example. If possible, you must also notify the prison officials that you are requesting a TRO and send them copies of your request. You must also submit to the court an affidavit that describes your efforts to contact the prison officials, and a short memorandum stating the reasons why the court should grant your request for a TRO.¹³² If you are granted a TRO, the court will set a date for a hearing as soon as possible. At this

127. Validity, construction, and application of “Son of Sam” laws regulating or prohibiting distribution of crime-related book, film, or comparable revenues to criminals, 60 A.L.R.4th 1210 (Originally published in 1988).

128. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 632-a (McKinney 2020); see also Validity, construction, and application of “Son of Sam” laws regulating or prohibiting distribution of crime-related book, film, or comparable revenues to criminals, 60 A.L.R.4th 1210 (Originally published in 1988).

129. See Harris v. Garner, 216 F.3d 970, 974 (11th Cir. 2000) (en banc) (holding that the PLRA’s language stating that “[n]o action shall be brought” operates as a bar to an incarcerated person’s entire suit absent physical injury). Note that Harris v. Garner was specifically about lawsuits that are filed while the plaintiff is in jail, prison, or some other correctional facility, but which are not decided until after he is released. Compare Davis v. District of Columbia, 158 F.3d 1342, 1349 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (“§ 1997e(e) precludes claims for emotional injury without any prior physical injury, regardless of the statutory or constitutional basis of the legal wrong.”), with Rowe v. Shake, 196 F.3d 778, 781 (7th Cir. 1999) (citation omitted) (“§ 1997e(e) applies only to claims for mental or emotional injury. Claims for other types of injury do not implicate the statute.”), and Canell v. Lightner, 143 F.3d 1210, 1213 (9th Cir. 1998) (“The deprivation of First Amendment rights entitles a plaintiff to judicial relief wholly aside from any physical injury he can show, or any mental or emotional injury he may have incurred. Therefore, § 1997e(e) does not apply to First Amendment claims regardless of the form of relief sought.”).

130. See, e.g., Koch v. Lewis, 216 F. Supp. 2d 994, 1007 (D. Ariz. 2001) (ordering prison to release incarcerated person from segregation into the general population after finding that indefinite segregation based solely on gang membership was unconstitutional), vacated on other grounds, Koch v. Schriro, 399 F.3d 1099 (9th Cir. 2005); Northern v. Nelson, 315 F. Supp. 687, 688 (N.D. Cal. 1970) (ordering prison to allow Muslim incarcerated person to practice his religion), aff’d, 448 F.2d 1266 (9th Cir. 1971); Luparar v. Stoneman, 382 F. Supp. 495, 502 (D. Vt. 1974) (ordering prison to allow circulation of current issue of prison newspaper).

131. FED. R. CIV. P. 65(b).

132. There are no technical rules that you must follow in writing your supporting memorandum. Simply state your arguments as clearly as possible and stress what will happen if the court does not grant your request. Be sure to tell the court why you need action immediately and why you cannot wait for a hearing. Chapter 2 of the JLM, “Introduction to Legal Research,” explains how to conduct research for a memorandum of law. Chapter 6 of the JLM, “An Introduction to Legal Documents,” will also help you in writing your memorandum.

hearing, you must convince the court to convert the TRO into a preliminary injunction.¹³³ Additionally, If the court grants you a TRO, it may require you to provide money for assurance purposes. You can ask the court to waive this requirement. To take advantage of this waiver, you should file your TRO request in forma pauperis.¹³⁴ See Appendix A-5 of this Chapter for sample in forma pauperis documents.

Regardless of whether you are eligible for a TRO, before you seek a permanent injunction you should request what is known as a preliminary injunction. With a preliminary injunction, if you can show that an injunction is necessary to protect your rights until the end of your trial, you may be able to get a temporary injunction before the end of the trial and even before it begins.¹³⁵ In order to get a preliminary injunction, you must follow the procedures described in Rule 65(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Most courts also require you to show that:

- (1) You are likely to succeed on the merits of your claim,
- (2) You are likely to suffer irreparable harm if the preliminary injunction is denied,
- (3) If the injunction is denied, you will suffer more than the defendant would suffer if the injunction were to be granted, and
- (4) Granting the preliminary injunction is consistent with the public interest.¹³⁶

133. FED. R. CIV. P. 65(b)–(c).

134. “In forma pauperis” is Latin for “in the manner of a pauper” — basically, in a poor person’s manner. It means that you cannot afford the fee or costs and are asking the court to waive them. See In Forma Pauperis, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019). Some states use the English “Poor Person Status” instead of the Latin term.

135. See, e.g., Mitchell v. Cuomo, 748 F.2d 804, 808 (2d Cir. 1984) (upholding preliminary injunction that prohibited closing a prison where incarcerated people proved that if the prison were closed they would be moved to prisons that were already too crowded); Inmates of Attica Corr. Facility v. Rockefeller, 453 F.2d 12, 23–24 (2d Cir. 1971) (granting preliminary injunctive relief to incarcerated people after extended mistreatment by prison guards, where prison officials had not taken sufficient steps to ensure that such mistreatment would not continue during trial); Campos v. Coughlin, 854 F. Supp. 194, 214 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) (granting preliminary injunction requiring prison to allow incarcerated people to wear religious beads); Dean v. Coughlin, 623 F. Supp. 392, 405 (S.D.N.Y. 1985) (ordering prison officials to provide “adequate dental care to inmates with serious dental needs”). But see Parker v. State Bd. of Pardons & Paroles, 275 F.3d 1032, 1037 (11th Cir. 2001) (finding plaintiff was not entitled to a preliminary injunction since he was unable to show that there was a substantial likelihood of success on the merits of his claims); Espinal v. Goord, 180 F. Supp. 2d 532, 541 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (denying plaintiff’s motion for a temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction because plaintiff had not made a “substantial showing of likelihood of success on the merits of his due process claims”).

136. Consistency with the public interest is the standard for a preliminary injunction in most federal courts. See Yoltan v. El Paso Tenn. Pipeline Co., 435 F.3d 571, 578–581 (6th Cir. 2006) (affirming grant of preliminary injunction), abrogated on other grounds by M & G Polymers USA, LLC v. Tackett, 574 U.S. 427, 135 S. Ct. 926, 190 L. Ed. 2d 809 (2015); Joelner v. Village of Washington Park, 378 F.3d 613, 619 (7th Cir. 2004) (affirming and reversing grants and denials of various preliminary injunctions); Rodde v. Bonta, 357 F.3d 988, 999–1000 (9th Cir. 2004) (affirming grant of preliminary injunction); Nieves-Marquez v. Puerto Rico, 353 F.3d 108, 130 (1st Cir. 2003) (affirming grant of preliminary injunction); Shire U.S., Inc. v. Barr Labs., Inc., 329 F.3d 348, 358–359 (3d Cir. 2003) (affirming denial of preliminary injunction); Newsom v. Albemarle Cty. Sch. Bd., 354 F.3d 249, 261 (4th Cir. 2003) (vacating denial of preliminary injunction and remanding for reconsideration); In re Sac & Fox Tribe, 340 F.3d 749, 758 (8th Cir. 2003) (affirming grant of preliminary injunction); Kikumura v. Hurley, 242 F.3d 950, 955, 963 (10th Cir. 2001) (affirming and reversing on preliminary injunction factors); Parker v. State Bd. of Pardons & Paroles, 275 F.3d 1032, 1035 (11th Cir. 2001) (affirming denial of preliminary injunction); Wenner v. Tex. Lottery Comm’n, 123 F.3d 321, 325 (5th Cir. 1997) (respecting grant of preliminary injunction by Pennsylvania district court). However, some courts modify the test slightly. Courts in the Second Circuit require you to show that: (1) you are likely to suffer irreparable harm if the preliminary injunction is denied, and (2) either (a) you are likely to succeed on the merits of your claim, or (b) your claim raises sufficiently serious questions to justify litigation and you will suffer more if the injunction is denied than the defendant will suffer if it is granted. See Mitchell v. Cuomo, 748 F.2d 804, 806–808 (2d Cir. 1984) (upholding preliminary injunction that prohibited the closing of a prison where incarcerated people proved that if the prison were closed they would be moved to prisons that were already too crowded).

In general, you can only receive a preliminary injunction after a hearing where your opponent has the opportunity to argue against the injunction.

Note though under 18 U.S.C. § 3626(a)(2) of the PLRA, any preliminary injunction that is granted will automatically expire after 90 days, unless the court finds that a permanent injunction should be granted and issues a final order for an injunction before the 90-day period is over.¹³⁷ It is often difficult or impossible for the parties to complete discovery and for the court to complete a trial and issue a decision within 90 days. However, the court can issue a new preliminary injunction if it finds that you still face the risk of irreparable (irreversible) harm if it is not granted.¹³⁸

Now in order to get a permanent injunction you must meet a four-factor test. First, you must show that there is a likelihood of substantial, immediate, and irreparable (irreversible) injury without an injunction. To meet the irreparable injury requirement, you must show that your injury is likely to happen to you again in the foreseeable (likely) future, and that your injury was not the result of a single, isolated incident.¹³⁹ You can effectively show that you are likely to suffer future harm under a written policy. Or, you may show that the defendant is engaging in a pattern or custom of officially sanctioned behavior (behavior approved by officials).¹⁴⁰ You also have to prove that your injury is substantial and irreparable (irreversible).¹⁴¹ You can show that your injury is substantial (serious) by pointing out the specific ways that you are being harmed. Demonstrating that your injury is irreparable means showing that you are being harmed in a way that cannot be fixed in the future. Many courts say that the ongoing violation of a constitutional right causes substantial and irreparable harm.¹⁴²

137. See 18 U.S.C. § 3626(a)(2).

138. See, e.g., Mayweathers v. Newland, 258 F.3d 930, 936 (9th Cir. 2001) (upholding a district court's second preliminary injunction allowing incarcerated people to attend religious services without being punished).

139. See City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95, 109, 103 S. Ct. 1660, 1669, 75 L. Ed. 2d 675, 688 (1983) (holding that injunctive relief is unavailable where plaintiff has not shown that "he is realistically threatened by a repetition of [the violation]," where the plaintiff sought to enjoin the general use of chokeholds by police); Hague v. CIO, 307 U.S. 496, 518, 59 S. Ct. 954, 965, 83 L. Ed. 1423, 1438 (1939) (granting injunctive relief because the threat of continued police misconduct in the enforcement of a municipal ordinance made the threat of constitutional deprivations ongoing); Kritenbrink v. Crawford, 313 F. Supp. 2d 1043, 1053 (D. Nev. 2004) ("The mere fact that a plaintiff has suffered an injury in the past is not sufficient to allege standing for injunctive relief.").

140. See Armstrong v. Davis, 275 F.3d 849, 861 (9th Cir. 2001) (stating that a realistic threat of a repeating injury may arise from a written policy or a pattern of officially sanctioned behavior), abrogated on other grounds by Johnson v. California, 543 U.S. 499, 125 S. Ct. 1141, 160 L. Ed. 2d 949 (2005).

141. See Williams v. Cozza-Rhodes, No. 12-CV-01580-BNB, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 159527, at *6 (D. Colo. Nov. 7, 2012) (unpublished) (denying an order enjoining prison guards from banging on incarcerated person's cell door at night and confiscating his property because the incarcerated person failed to "demonstrate that he will suffer substantial and irreparable harm if a preliminary injunction is not issued"); see also City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95, 111, 103 S. Ct. 1660, 1670, 75 L. Ed. 2d 675, 690 (1983) (quoting O'Shea v. Littleton, 414 U.S. 488, 502, 94 S. Ct. 669, 679, 38 L. Ed. 2d 674, 687 (1974)) (finding injunction unavailable "where there is no showing of any real or immediate threat that the plaintiff will be wronged again—a 'likelihood of substantial and immediate irreparable injury'"); Heron v. City of Denver, 317 F.2d 309, 311 (10th Cir. 1963) (explaining that "the injury incurred or impending under the circumstances here existing must be substantial and irreparable; it must be clear and imminent").

142. See, e.g., Jolly v. Coughlin, 76 F.3d 468, 482 (2d Cir. 1996) (stating that there is a "presumption of irreparable injury that flows from a violation of constitutional rights"); Nat'l People's Action v. Vill. of Wilmette, 914 F.2d 1008, 1013 (7th Cir. 1990) ("Even a temporary deprivation of [1st] amendment freedom of expression rights is generally sufficient to prove irreparable harm."); Ross v. Meese, 818 F.2d 1132, 1135 (4th Cir. 1987) (noting that deprivation of a constitutional right amounts to irreparable harm); Mitchell v. Cuomo, 748 F.2d 804, 806 (2d Cir. 1984) (holding that a plaintiff need not show irreparable harm when an alleged violation of a constitutional right is shown). But see Wis. Cent. Ltd. v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 95 F.3d 1359, 1372 (7th Cir. 1996) (holding that where the only constitutional right at issue related to the procedures for receiving compensation for a governmental taking of property, irreparable harm was not shown because plaintiffs failed to avail themselves of the available procedures); Pinckney v. Bd. of Educ., 920 F. Supp. 393, 400 (E.D.N.Y. 1996) (noting that although courts will usually find irreparable harm when substantive constitutional rights are violated, when procedural Second, you must show that the “remedies at law,” such as money damages, are inadequate.¹⁴³ This means that you have to show that no other available legal remedy will address your injury. In other words, you must show that an injunction is the only way to prevent and correct the source of your injury, and that money damages will not do this.¹⁴⁴ Because an injunction often involves court monitoring, you should also explain why such ongoing court involvement is necessary.

When attempting to decide whether these requirements have been met, just like with a preliminary injunction, a court will have to consider who will suffer more between you and the defendant if they grant the injunction in your favor, or deny the injunction in the defendant's favor.¹⁴⁵ It is your responsibility to show the court that that harm you would suffer if your injunction is denied, is greater than the harm the defendant would suffer if your injunction is granted. Finally, you also need to convince the court that granting your permanent injunction would not hurt the public interest. As with a preliminary injunction, you can attempt to satisfy these requirements by showing that granting the injunction will not have a negative impact on public resources.¹⁴⁶

(c) Declaratory Relief

Finally, the court may issue a declaratory judgment. A declaratory judgment is a statement about the nature and limits of your rights. An example would be a court order declaring that a particular prison procedure is unconstitutional. The court can issue a declaratory judgment in response to a pleading that appropriately states that your rights have been violated, or it can be granted as part of the final relief in the lawsuit.¹⁴⁷ A declaratory judgment can be useful if prison officials threaten to take some action that you believe would violate your rights. In these cases, you may use Section 1983 to ask the court for a declaratory judgment saying that it would be illegal for the prison to take that action. You may ask for a declaratory judgment even if you are not seeking any other type of relief, but a lawsuit often asks for another type of relief, like an injunction ordering a prison to change its procedures, in addition to declaratory judgment.¹⁴⁸ So, if you believe that the declaratory judgment is not enough to protect you, you can still ask for an injunction.

due process violations are involved, “courts must consider the nature of the constitutional injury before making such a conclusion.”).

143. See O’Shea v. Littleton, 414 U.S. 488, 502, 94 S. Ct. 669, 679, 38 L. Ed. 2d 674, 687 (1974) (noting that to obtain equitable relief, plaintiff must prove “likelihood of substantial and immediate irreparable injury, and the inadequacy of remedies at law”); Younger v. Harris, 401 U.S. 37, 46, 91 S. Ct. 746, 751, 27 L. Ed. 2d 669, 676 (1971) (stating that proof of an irreparable injury is required for any injunction). These requirements are often referred to as the requirements for “standing” (the right to make a legal claim before the court) to seek injunctive relief.

144. See O’Shea v. Littleton, 414 U.S. 488, 502, 94 S. Ct. 669, 679, 38 L. Ed. 2d 674, 686–687 (1974) (holding that plaintiffs did not meet the requirements for injunctive relief because there were state and federal remedies that could provide them with adequate relief for their alleged wrongs); Pinckney v. Bd. of Educ., 920 F. Supp. 393, 400–401 (E.D.N.Y. 1996) (holding that irreparable harm was not shown by alleged procedural due process violation where plaintiff could be compensated with money damages).

145. See eBay Inc. v. MercExchange, L.L.C., 547 U.S. 388, 391, 126 S. Ct. 1837, 1839, 164 L. Ed. 2d 641, 645 (2006); see also Amoco Prod. Co. v. Vill. of Gambell, 480 U.S. 531, 546 n.12, 107 S. Ct. 1396, 1404 n.12, 94 L. Ed. 2d 542, 556 n. 12 (1987).

146. See eBay Inc. v. MercExchange, L.L.C., 547 U.S. 388, 391, 126 S. Ct. 1837, 1839, 164 L. Ed. 2d 641, 645 (2006); see also Amoco Prod. Co. v. Vill. of Gambell, 480 U.S. 531, 546 n.12, 107 S. Ct. 1396, 1404 n.12, 94 L. Ed. 2d 542, 556 n. 12 (1987).

147. Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2201(a).

148. Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2201(a); see, e.g., Clarkson v. Coughlin, 898 F. Supp. 1019, 1051 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (granting plaintiffs’ motion for declaratory judgment that the corrections department deprived them of equal protection of law by creating a special unit for deaf incarcerated people that was unavailable to male but not female incarcerated people).

2. Whom to Name as Defendants

Figuring out exactly whom to name as a defendant in your Section 1983 lawsuit can be confusing. As noted in Part B(1)(a) above, you can only sue a “person” who violated your rights while acting “under color” of state law. For the purposes of Section 1983, the definition of a “person” includes individual people (like prison wardens, guards, and other employees). The definition also includes cities, counties, or municipalities that adopt policies, rules, or regulations that violate your rights.¹⁴⁹ However, the definition of a “person” does not include state governments and their agencies (including your state’s department of corrections).¹⁵⁰

(a) Individual Defendants

If any of your defendants are individuals, you must decide in what “capacity” you will sue them. You can sue them in their “individual capacities,” in their “official capacities,” or both. When you sue someone in his individual capacity, you are suing him personally. When you sue someone in his official capacity, you are suing his office. For example, if you sue someone in his official capacity, you are suing the county jail warden’s office rather than suing the individual who happens to be the county jail warden. Whether you sue a particular individual in his individual capacity, his official capacity, or both, will affect the type of damages you can receive. It will also affect the defenses that the individual can raise.¹⁵¹

In general, if you want to get an injunction (described in Part C(1)(b) of this Chapter), you should sue defendants in their official capacities. If you want to receive money damages, you should generally sue defendants in their individual capacities. For example, if one of the defendants in your case is a state official, and you sue them in their official capacity, the suit would be considered a suit against the state rather than that person.¹⁵² So if you were to sue a state official in their official capacity, they would not be considered a “person” under the definition of Section 1983 and they would be immune from liability.¹⁵³ If you are seeking money damages against a high-ranking local official, like a sheriff or a warden, then you should probably sue him in both his official and individual capacities. If you are confused about which capacity to use for a particular defendant, you always have the option of suing that defendant in both capacities. However, you should be aware that suing defendants in both capacities might lead the defendants to file motions asking that a part of your lawsuit be dismissed. These motions can delay your lawsuit.

Sometimes you may not know the name of the person who violated your rights. In such a case, you must refer to the defendant as “John (or Jane) Doe.”¹⁵⁴ This tells the court that you do not know the person’s name. You must, however, locate and identify all John and Jane Does at some point or the claims against them will be dismissed.¹⁵⁵ You also have to be concerned with the statute of limitations

149. See Monell v. Dep’t. of Soc. Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 690–691, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2035–2036, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 635 (1978) (holding that municipalities and local governments are considered “persons” under Section 1983 when an official government policy or custom caused a constitutional violation).

150. See Will v. Mich. Dep’t. of State Police, 491 U.S. 58, 68–71, 109 S. Ct. 2304, 2311–2312, 105 L. Ed. 2d 45, 56–58 (1989) (holding that states and state defendants sued in their official capacities are not “persons” under Section 1983 and therefore may not be sued for money damages).

151. See Part C(3) of this Chapter for an explanation of how individual and official capacities affect potential defenses and the types of damages you can receive.

152. See Hafer v. Melo, 502 U.S. 21, 25, 112 S. Ct. 358, 361, 116 L. Ed. 2d 301, 309 (1991); see also Will v. Michigan Dep’t. of State Police, 491 U.S. 58, 70–71, 109 S. Ct. 2304, 2312, 105 L. Ed. 2d 45, 57 (1989).

153. See Will v. Michigan Dep’t. of State Police, 491 U.S. 58, 70–71, 109 S. Ct. 2304, 2312, 105 L. Ed. 2d 45, 57 (1989); see also Figure 2 of this Chapter.

154. See Roper v. Grayson, 81 F.3d 124, 126 (10th Cir. 1996) (holding that it is permissible to name John or Jane Doe as a defendant “so long as the plaintiff provides an adequate description of some kind which is sufficient to identify the person involved so process eventually can be served”); Dean v. Barber, 951 F.2d 1210, 1215–1216 (11th Cir. 1992) (finding plaintiff adequately identified unnamed defendant such that he could be added later when his identity was determined).

155. See, e.g., Figueroa v. Rivera, 147 F.3d 77, 82–83 (1st Cir. 1998) (upholding dismissal without that sets the time limit for the claim. You will need to identify the John and Jane Does and amend your complaint before the statute of limitations on the claim has expired.¹⁵⁶ Once the lawsuit is started, you should be able to learn the defendants' identities through discovery. For more information on discovery, see Chapter 8 of the JLM, "Obtaining Information to Prepare Your Case: The Process of Discovery."

(b) Supervisor Liability¹⁵⁷

A supervisory official who causes or participates in a violation of your rights may be liable. "Respondeat superior" is the idea that supervisors are legally responsible for their subordinates' (lower-ranked staff members') actions, whether or not the supervisor knew about those actions.¹⁵⁸ However, the concept of "respondeat superior" does not apply to Section 1983 lawsuits.¹⁵⁹ Instead, in Section 1983 lawsuits, supervisory officials can only be charged with responsibility for lower officials' acts if they were personally involved in them.¹⁶⁰ A supervisor is considered to be "personally involved" in a constitutional violation if:

- (1) The supervisor, "participated directly in the alleged constitutional violation"; or
- (2) The supervisor, "after being informed of the violation [of your rights] . . . failed to remedy the wrong"; or
- (3) The supervisor "created a policy or custom under which" your constitutional rights were violated, "or allowed such a policy or custom to continue"; or
- (4) The supervisor was "grossly negligent" in that he did not adequately supervise the subordinates who violated your rights; or
- (5) The supervisor, "exhibited deliberate indifference to the right by failing to act on information indicating unconstitutional acts were occurring".¹⁶¹

To win in a supervisor liability claim, you must be able to show two things: (1) that your constitutional rights were actually violated, and (2) that there was a clear connection between the violation of your rights and the supervisor's actions or failure to act.¹⁶² If the supervisor participated prejudice of a claim where plaintiffs had made no attempt to identify or to serve John Doe defendants 17 months after filing the lawsuit). Note that under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 4(m), "a district court may dismiss a complaint without prejudice as to a particular defendant if the plaintiff fails to serve that defendant within 120 days after filing the complaint." Figueroa v. Rivera, 147 F.3d 77, 83 (1st Cir. 1998).

156. See Singletary v. Pa. Dept. of Corrections, 266 F.3d 186, 196–200 (3d Cir. 2001).

157. Please note that the law on Supervisory Liability changes frequently, and varies depending on the federal circuit in which your case is being heard. For example, as this edition of the JLM went to print, the Second Circuit released a decision that makes it harder to show personal involvement by a supervisor. See Tangreti v. Bachmann, No. 19-3712, 2020 U.S. App. LEXIS 40392, at *15 n.4 (2d Cir. Dec. 28, 2020). Although this chapter list five ways in which a supervisor may be considered personally involved, if your case is being heard in the Second Circuit, only factor (1) and the first half of factor (3), which states that the supervisor "created a policy or custom un which your constitutional rights were violated," may be used to show that a supervisor was personally involved in violating your constitutional rights. As the law continues to develop, please be sure to review recent cases in the federal circuit in which your case is being heard.

158. Respondeat superior is Latin for "let the superior [master] make answer." Respondeat Superior, Black's Law Dictionary (10th ed. 2014).

159. See, e.g., Worrel v. Henry, 219 F.3d 1197, 1214 (10th Cir. 2000) ("Under § 1983, a defendant may not be held liable under a theory of respondeat superior"); Aponte Matos v. Toledo Davila, 135 F.3d 182, 192 (1st Cir. 1998) (quoting Seekamp v. Michaud, 109 F.3d 802, 808 (1st Cir.1997)) ("Supervisory liability under § 1983 'cannot be predicated on a respondeat theory, but only on the basis of the supervisor's own acts or omissions.'").

160. See Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 676–677, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1948–1949, 173 L.Ed.2d 868, 883 (2009).

161. See Brandon v. Kinter, 938 F.3d 21, 36–37 (2d Cir. 2019) (discussing the ways in which supervisors may be found liable under Section 1983); Warren v. Pataki, 823 F.3d 125, 136 (2d Cir. 2016); see also Lilly v. Town of Lewiston, No. 1:18-CV-00002 EAW, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 53904, at *25 (W.D.N.Y. Mar. 27, 2020) (unpublished); Hincapie v. City of N.Y., 434 F. Supp. 3d 61, 77 (S.D.N.Y. 2020) (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 22, 2020) (unpublished).

162. See Peatross v. City of Memphis, 818 F.3d 233, 241–242 (6th Cir. 2016) (detailing the requirements for supervisory liability); see also Dodds v. Richardson, 614 F.3d 1185, 1197–1202 (10th Cir. 2010) (explaining directly in the alleged violation, they clearly may be held liable as a supervisor or in their individual capacity.¹⁶³ What follows is a discussion of the four other types of situations in which you may be able to hold a supervisor liable.

(i) Failure to Act to Remedy A Wrong

Before 2009, a supervisor could be liable under Section 1983 if he became aware of a violation of your rights but did not take steps to remedy that violation.¹⁶⁴ However, in 2009, the Supreme Court made it harder to assert supervisor liability. Now, a supervisor will only be held liable under Section 1983 when you can show that he actually participated in the constitutional violation.¹⁶⁵ Due to this, if you are looking to bring a supervisory liability claim, do not use cases that took place before 2009.

(ii) Creating or Allowing an Unconstitutional Policy or Custom

A supervisor may be personally involved in a violation of your rights if he develops an unconstitutional policy or if he allows an unconstitutional policy to continue.¹⁶⁶ Supervisors can be liable for an unconstitutional policy even if that policy is not written down. Unwritten policies include informal policies or customs.¹⁶⁷ Supervisors generally cannot be held liable for a constitutional policy that a subordinate simply fails to follow.¹⁶⁸ However, the supervisor can be held liable if subordinates fail to follow the policy because the supervisor did not do a good enough job of hiring or training them. This exception is discussed in Part C(2)(b)(iii), below.

how the Supreme Court's ruling in Iqbal effected the requirements for § 1983 supervisory liability claims).

163. See Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 676, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1948, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868, 882 (2009); see also Brandon v. Kinter, 938 F.3d 21, 36 (2d Cir. 2019); Littlejohn v. City of New York, 795 F.3d 297, 314 (2d Cir. 2015).

164. See, e.g., Vance v. Peters, 97 F.3d 987, 993 (7th Cir. 1996) (permitting supervisor liability where “[t]he plaintiff . . . [demonstrated] that the communication, in its content and manner of transmission, gave the prison official sufficient notice to alert him or her to [a constitutional violation] . . .”) (citation omitted); Taylor v. Mich. Dept. of Corr., 69 F.3d 76, 81–82 (6th Cir. 1995) (finding that the warden could be found to have known of the possibility that an incarcerated person would be raped because warden knew that there were problems in the classification procedures and that young incarcerated people were more vulnerable to sexual assaults); Williams v. Smith, 781 F.2d 319, 324 (2d Cir. 1986) (holding that a supervisor who affirmed an incarcerated person's disciplinary conviction when that incarcerated person had not been permitted to call witnesses may be liable for violating the incarcerated person's due process rights); Boone v. Elrod, 706 F. Supp. 636, 638 (N.D. Ill. 1989) (finding supervisors would be liable under Section 1983 where plaintiff claimed they ignored complaints of threats and attacks by other incarcerated people).

165. In 2009, the Supreme Court held that “[b]ecause vicarious liability is inapplicable to . . . § 1983 suits, a plaintiff must plead that each Government-official defendant, through the official's own individual actions, has violated the Constitution.” Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 676, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1948, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868, 882 (2009) (emphasis added). In Iqbal, the Supreme Court explicitly rejected the argument that a supervisor could be liable merely by knowing of a subordinate's discriminatory intent. Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 677, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868, 883 (2009) (finding that “a supervisor's mere knowledge of his subordinate's discriminatory purpose . . .” does not make them liable for a constitutional violation).

166. See Taylor v. Mich. Dept. of Corr., 69 F.3d 76, 84 (6th Cir. 1995) (finding that a warden could be liable for failure to adopt reasonable policies to ensure that transferees were not placed in grave danger of rape); Redman v. Cty. of San Diego, 942 F.2d 1435, 1446–1447 (9th Cir. 1991) (en banc) (noting that sheriff could be liable for incarcerated person's rape where he approved a deficient classification policy and knew of overcrowding at the facility), abrogated on other grounds by Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 128 L.E. 2d 811 (1994); Williams v. Coughlin, 875 F. Supp. 1004, 1014–1015 (W.D.N.Y. 1995) (finding that the superintendent of a prison could be liable for policy of withholding food from incarcerated people who committed disciplinary infractions if they knew such a policy was in place and failed to take actions to remedy it).

167. See Leach v. Shelby Cty. Sheriff, 891 F.2d 1241, 1247–1248 (6th Cir. 1989) (stating that a sheriff may be liable for an unwritten policy of deliberate indifference to incarcerated people's serious medical needs).

168. See Buffington v. Balt. Cty., 913 F.2d 113, 122–123 (4th Cir. 1990) (holding that the county was not liable for subordinates' violation of a suicide prevention policy); Vasquez v. Coughlin, 726 F. Supp. 466, 473–474 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) (noting that a supervisor was not liable for a subordinate's violation of incarcerated person's rights where policies existed that were designed to prevent such violations).

(iii) Deficient Management of Subordinates

A supervisor may be liable if a subordinate violates your constitutional rights because of the supervisor's mismanagement of his subordinates. A subordinate is an individual who works under the command of the supervisor. This type of liability can occur when the supervisor:

- (1) Knew of a subordinate's past misconduct and failed to take action to fix it;¹⁶⁹ or,
- (2) Failed to set up policies that help guide subordinates' conduct to prevent violations of constitutional rights;¹⁷⁰ or,
- (3) Failed to inform and train subordinates on policies designed to avoid violations of constitutional rights;¹⁷¹ or,
- (4) Failed to properly supervise subordinates to make sure that they followed policies.¹⁷²

If your complaint alleges that inadequate training caused a violation of your rights (as described in situation (3) above), then you must show that the failure to train staff was so reckless or negligent that bad behavior from the staff was almost guaranteed to happen.¹⁷³

(iv) Deliberate Indifference

For situation (4), the definition of deliberate indifference can vary from one circuit to another. It may also depend on the type of supervisor liability you are claiming. Be sure to look at cases in your circuit to see how your circuit defines "deliberate indifference" for the purposes of supervisor liability. Most courts say that a supervisor acts with "deliberate indifference" when they know or should have known that there is a substantial risk of harms that violate your constitutional rights and they also fail to prevent or remedy those harms.¹⁷⁴

(c) Municipal or Local Government Liability

A municipality or local government—such as a county, city, or town—can be held liable under Section 1983. You must show that the violation of your constitutional rights was either (1) caused by a policy or custom of the municipality or (2) caused by a municipal policymaker's failure to do certain things, like properly train employees. In the first situation, the municipality has "direct liability" for violating your rights. In the second situation, the municipality has "indirect liability" for violating your

169. See Estate of Davis v. Delo, 115 F.3d 1388, 1396 (8th Cir. 1997) (affirming a finding that the superintendent of a prison was liable for a guard's use of excessive force where the superintendent knew of the guard's propensity for excessive force, had received written complaints about the guard, and nonetheless failed to take steps to investigate and correct the problem).

170. See Bryant v. McGinnis, 463 F. Supp. 373, 387–388 (W.D.N.Y. 1978) (holding that a commissioner could be liable for failing to create policies for protecting and allowing Muslim religious practices).

171. See Gilbert v. Selsky, 867 F. Supp. 159, 166 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) (finding that a Director of Inmate Discipline may be liable for failing to adequately train disciplinary hearing officers who violated incarcerated people's rights by refusing to allow them to call relevant witnesses at a disciplinary hearing).

172. See Taylor v. Mich. Dept. of Corr., 69 F.3d 76, 80–82 (6th Cir. 1995) (noting that a warden's failure to ensure that staff properly carried out a transfer policy may create supervisor liability); Allman v. Coughlin, 577 F. Supp. 1440, 1448 (S.D.N.Y. 1984) (finding that a state commissioner could be liable for failing to supervise an emergency response team).

173. McDaniels v. McKinna, No. 03-1231, 96 F. App'x 575, 579, 2004 U.S. App. LEXIS 8262, at *8 (10th Cir. Apr. 27, 2004) (quoting Meade v. Grubbs, 841 F.2d 1512, 1528 (10th Cir. 1988)) (unpublished); see also Smith v. Hill, 510 F. Supp. 767, 775 (D. Utah 1981) (requiring that the actions of the relatively remote supervisors be grossly negligent before liability attaches).

174. See generally Parker v. Landry, 935 F.3d 9, 15 (1st Cir. 2019) (citations omitted) (establishing that in the First Circuit "[a] showing of deliberate indifference has three components: the plaintiff must show (1) that the officials had knowledge of facts, from which (2) the official[s] can draw the inference (3) that a substantial risk of serious harm exists."); see generally Morgan v. Dzurenda, 956 F.3d 84, 89 (2d Cir. 2020) (noting that for an 8th Amendment deliberate indifference claim, a prison official must "know[] of and disregard[] an excessive risk to inmate health or safety ... [and] be aware of facts from which the inference could be drawn that a substantial risk of serious harm exists, and he must also draw the inference.").

rights. The requirements for each type of liability are discussed in detail in Parts C(2)(c)(i) and (ii) of this Chapter below.

There are several benefits to naming a municipality as a defendant. First, you can sue it for both compensatory damages and injunctive relief.¹⁷⁵ But note that you cannot recover punitive damages from a municipality.¹⁷⁶ Second, municipalities, unlike individuals, cannot claim qualified immunity.¹⁷⁷ Third, if you win, the municipality will probably make broad changes in handling situations like yours – possibly helping others in the future.

(i) “Direct” Municipal Liability

In order to hold a municipality directly liable for violating your rights, you must meet the regular requirements for a Section 1983 claim, and you must also show that:

(1) A policy or custom of the municipality caused your rights to be violated;¹⁷⁸ and

(2) The policy was created by someone who is a final policymaker for the municipality.¹⁷⁹

A policy or custom violates your rights if it is “unconstitutional on its face,” meaning that the policy or custom itself directly causes your rights to be violated.¹⁸⁰ For example, if a jail guard refuses to get medical help for you when you are injured, the municipality will not be liable for failing to provide medical care. However, the municipality can be liable if the jail has a known policy of delaying medical help to some or all persons in jails,¹⁸¹ or if it has unwritten policies (such as a custom or settled practice) that are unconstitutional.¹⁸² A municipality may also be held liable for the actions of policymakers. For example, if a policymaker fires an employee for an unconstitutional reason, the firing may be considered a “policy.”¹⁸³ A municipality can also be held responsible for a custom or settled practice of 175. See Monell v. Dept. of Soc. Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 690, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2035–2036, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 635 (1978) (concluding that local government entities may be sued under Section 1983 for compensatory damages, as well as injunctive and declaratory relief).

176. See City of Newport v. Fact Concerts, Inc., 453 U.S. 247, 271, 101 S. Ct. 2748, 2762, 69 L. Ed. 2d 616, 634–635 (1981) (holding that punitive damages are not available against municipalities in Section 1983 actions for reasons of policy and history).

177. See Owen v. City of Independence, 445 U.S. 622, 638, 100 S. Ct. 1398, 1409, 63 L. Ed. 2d 673, 685–686 (1980) (holding that qualified immunity is not available to a municipality). “Qualified immunity” is discussed in further detail in Part C(3)(c) of this Chapter.

178. See Oklahoma City v. Tuttle, 471 U.S. 808, 822–823, 105 S. Ct. 2427, 2436, 85 L. Ed. 2d 791, 803–804 (1985) (requiring a showing of an actual connection between the policy or custom and the violation for a finding of municipal liability).

179. See Pembaur v. Cincinnati, 475 U.S. 469, 481–483, 106 S. Ct. 1292, 1299–1300, 89 L. Ed. 2d 452, 464–465 (1986) (noting that municipalities can only be held liable under Section 1983 for policies made by officials who had final authority to make the challenged policy).

180. See Monell v. Dept. of Soc. Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 694–695, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2037–2038, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 638 (1978) (holding that a municipality can be held liable when an unconstitutional official policy is the “moving force” behind a violation).

181. See Gibson v. Cty. of Washoe, 290 F.3d 1175, 1189 (9th Cir. 2002) (finding that a municipal policy of delaying medical care to incarcerated people who are “combative, uncooperative or unable to effectively answer questions due to intoxication” may create municipal liability for deliberate indifference to serious medical needs of incarcerated people) (internal quotation marks omitted).

182. See Bd. of Comm’rs v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 404, 117 S. Ct. 1382, 1388, 137 L. Ed. 2d 626, 639 (1997) (observing that a policy or custom need not be formal or written so long as a plaintiff can demonstrate that the alleged unwritten policy or custom is “so widespread as to have the force of law”); Paige v. Coyner, 614 F.3d 273, 284 (6th Cir. 2010) (“[A] policy or custom does not have to be written law; it can be created ‘by those whose edicts or acts may fairly be said to represent official policy.’” (quoting Monell v. Dept. of Social Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 694, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2037–2038, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 638 (1978))).

183. See Hall v. Marion Sch. Dist. No. 2, 31 F.3d 183, 196 (4th Cir. 1994) (holding that a school board that had final authority to make firing decisions could be liable for the unconstitutional firing of teacher); Bowles v. City of Camden, 993 F. Supp. 255, 268–269 (D.N.J. 1998) (allowing plaintiff to go forward with his claim against city and mayor for unconstitutional firing). eHowever, the municipality must, in some way, have deliberately caused the injury. See Pembaur v. Cincinnati, 475 U.S. 469, 483, 106 S. Ct. 1292, 1300, 89 L. Ed. 2d 452, 465 the municipality that is unconstitutional.¹⁸⁴ In all of these situations, you must be able to show a clear link between the existence of the policy or custom and the constitutional violation.¹⁸⁵

Under the second requirement for “direct” municipal liability, the person who created the policy must be someone who has final authority to make that particular policy for the municipality.¹⁸⁶ A court will look at the law in your state to see if your state gives that individual the authority to make policy.¹⁸⁷

If you are claiming that a municipal custom (rather than an official policy) caused a violation of your rights, you generally must show that the custom was so widespread that policymakers knew about it or should have known about it.¹⁸⁸ In other words, you will be arguing that, because the custom was so widespread, policymakers must have approved of it.¹⁸⁹

(ii) “Indirect” Municipal Liability

There are two “indirect” ways that a municipality can be held responsible when its employees violate your rights. The first involves bad training. A municipality may be liable when its failure to adequately train, supervise, or discipline its employees results in an employee violating your rights.¹⁹⁰ The second involves bad hiring. A municipality may be liable for failing to adequately screen (look at the background of) an employee during hiring if that employee later violates your rights. For both of these, you will need to show that an employee of the municipality violated your constitutional rights and that the municipality showed “deliberate indifference” to your constitutional rights. To prove (1986) (“municipal liability under § 1983 attaches where – and only where – a deliberate choice to follow a course of action is made from among various alternatives”).

184. See Monell v. Dep't. of Social Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 690–691, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2036, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 635 (1978) (finding a municipality may be liable for a custom that causes a violation of rights where a plaintiff can demonstrate that the custom is so “persistent and widespread” that it constitutes a “permanent and well settled” city policy (citing Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 167–168, 90 S. Ct. 1598, 1613–1614, 26 L. Ed. 2d 142, 159–160 (1970))).

185. See Bd. of Comm'rs v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 404, 117 S. Ct. 1382, 1388, 137 L. Ed. 2d 626, 639 (1997) (“[I]t is not enough for a § 1983 plaintiff merely to identify conduct properly attributable to the municipality. . . . [A] plaintiff must show that the municipal action was taken with the requisite degree of culpability and. . . [is] a direct causal link between the municipal action and the deprivation of federal rights.”). This is a high standard to meet, and you may have to prove that the municipality’s legislative body or authorized decision maker intentionally deprived you of a federally protected right or that the action itself violated federal law. See Oklahoma City v. Tuttle, 471 U.S. 808, 823, 105 S. Ct. 2427, 2436, 85 L. Ed. 2d 791, 804 (1985) (finding that municipal liability requires a showing of an actual connection between the policy or custom and the constitutional violation).

186. See St. Louis v. Praprotnik, 485 U.S. 112, 123, 108 S. Ct. 915, 924, 99 L. Ed. 2d 107, 118 (1988) (“[O]nly those municipal officials who have ‘final policymaking authority’ may by their actions subject the government to § 1983 liability.” (quoting Pembaur v. Cincinnati, 475 U.S. 469, 483, 106 S. Ct. 1292, 1300, 89 L. Ed. 2d 452, 465 (1986))).

187. See McMillian v. Monroe Cty., 520 U.S. 781, 786, 117 S. Ct. 1734, 1737, 138 L. Ed. 2d 1, 8 (1997) (finding that state law determines whether an individual is an authorized policymaker for a municipality).

188. Trevino v. Gates, 99 F.3d 911, 918 (9th Cir. 1996) (“Absent a formal governmental policy, [the plaintiff] must show a ‘longstanding practice or custom which constitutes the standard operating procedure of the local government entity.’” (quoting Gillette v. Delmore, 979 F.2d 1342, 1346 (9th Cir. 1992))).

189. See, e.g., Pineda v. City of Houston, 291 F.3d 325, 328 (5th Cir. 2002) (holding that in order for a municipality to be liable for a widespread custom, the municipality or a municipal policymaker must have “actual or constructive knowledge” of the custom); Sorlucco v. N.Y.C. Police Dept., 971 F.2d 864, 871 (2d Cir. 1992) (concluding a plaintiff may establish a municipality’s liability by showing that the actions of subordinate officers are sufficiently widespread to amount to “constructive acquiescence,” or implied approval, by senior policymakers).

190. See City of Canton v. Harris, 489 U.S. 378, 388, 109 S. Ct. 1197, 1204, 103 L. Ed. 2d 412, 426 (1989) (holding that a city could be liable under § 1983 for failure to train its employees, but only if that failure “amount[ed] to deliberate indifference to the rights of persons with whom the [employees] come into contact”).

“deliberate indifference” here, you must show that the municipal policymakers knew that their actions were likely to cause someone’s rights to be violated in a particular way.¹⁹¹

(iii) Failure to Train, Supervise, or Discipline

Some types of training are so obviously necessary that a municipality can be held liable for not providing such training. For example, failing to train armed jail guards about when they may use deadly force would likely be illegal. That training failure would create an obvious risk that an incarcerated person’s rights will be violated and can amount to “deliberate indifference.”¹⁹²

In other situations, existing trainings might not be enough. For example, there may be a pattern of repeated unconstitutional behavior by municipal employees. At some point, this pattern makes it obvious that better training, supervision, or discipline is needed.¹⁹³ A municipality may be held liable for failing to adequately address these obvious needs.¹⁹⁴ In all cases, you must be able to show that the inadequate training policies were the direct cause of, or the “moving force” behind, your injuries.¹⁹⁵ Importantly, just because the training is imperfect or not done exactly how you would prefer is not enough to establish municipal liability.¹⁹⁶ Also, it is not enough to claim that only one officer (perhaps

191. See Castro v. Cty. of L.A., 833 F.3d 1060, 1076 (9th Cir. 2016) (finding that “deliberate indifference” is an objective standard, and noting that even in cases that do not involve pre-trial detainees, this objective standard applies.); Gibson v. County of Washoe, 290 F.3d 1175, 1186 (9th Cir. 2002) (“[T]he plaintiff must show that the municipality was on actual or constructive notice that its omission would likely result in a constitutional violation.”); Brown v. Muhlenberg Twp., 269 F.3d 205, 216 (3d Cir. 2001) (“To survive summary judgment on a failure to train theory, the [plaintiffs] must present evidence that the need for more or different training was so obvious and so likely to lead to the violation of constitutional rights that the policymaker’s failure to respond amounts to deliberate indifference.”).

192. See City of Canton v. Harris, 489 U.S. 378, 390, 109 S. Ct. 1197, 1205, 103 L. Ed. 2d 412, 427 (1989) (“[I]t may happen that in light of the duties assigned to specific officers or employees the need for more or different training is so obvious, and the inadequacy so likely to result in the violation of constitutional rights, that the policymakers of the city can reasonably be said to have been deliberately indifferent to the need.”).

193. See Bd. of the Cty. Comm’rs v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 407, 117 S. Ct. 1382, 1390, 137 L. Ed. 2d 626, 641 (1997) (“If a [training] program does not prevent constitutional violations, municipal decisionmakers may eventually be put on notice that a new program is called for. Their continued adherence to [an insufficient training program] may establish the . . . ‘deliberate indifference’ . . . necessary to trigger municipal liability.”); City of Canton v. Harris, 489 U.S. 378, 397, 109 S. Ct. 1197, 1209, 103 L. Ed. 2d 412, 432 (1989) (O’Connor, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part) (“[M]unicipal liability for failure to train may be proper where it can be shown that policymakers were aware of, and acquiesced in, a pattern of constitutional violations involving the exercise of police discretion. In such cases, the need for training may not be obvious from the outset, but a pattern of constitutional violations could put the municipality on notice that its officers confront the particular situation on a regular basis, and that they often react in a manner contrary to constitutional requirements.”).

194. See, e.g., Young v. City of Providence, 404 F.3d 4, 27–28 (1st Cir. 2005) (concluding that municipal liability could be established where a city failed to train police officers to avoid misidentifications of off-duty police officers because problems with misidentifications had occurred in the past and a failure to train officers in the area posed an “obvious risk”); Olsen v. Layton Hills Mall, 312 F.3d 1304, 1320 (10th Cir. 2002) (holding that a jury must decide whether a county’s failure to train its officers to recognize detainees’ symptoms of Obsessive Compulsive Disorder—which the court noted is a fairly common disease—amounts to deliberate indifference); Davis v. Lynbrook Police Dept., 224 F. Supp. 2d 463, 479 (E.D.N.Y. 2002) (finding that six reports and complaints alleging potential unconstitutional conduct of a police officer could “demonstrate [to a jury] an ‘obvious need for more or better supervision to protect against constitutional violations’”) (quoting Vann v. City of New York, 72 F.3d 1040, 1049 (2d Cir. 1995)); Perrin v. Gentner, 177 F. Supp. 2d 1115, 1125 (D. Nev. 2001) (finding that evidence of a municipality’s failure to adequately train police officers and discipline them for use of excessive force could support an inadequate training and supervision claim).

195. See City of Canton v. Harris, 489 U.S. 378, 389, 109 S. Ct. 1197, 1204–1205, 103 L. Ed. 2d 412, 427 (1989) (noting that the deliberate indifference standard “is most consistent with our admonition in Monell . . . that a municipality can be liable under § 1983 only where its policies are the ‘moving force [behind] the constitutional violation’”) (quoting Monell v. Dep’t. of Soc. Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 694, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2038, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 638 (1978)).

196. See City of Canton v. Harris, 489 U.S. 378, 391, 109 S. Ct. 1197, 1206, 103 L. Ed. 2d 412, 428 (1989) (observing that imperfect training cannot itself be the basis for § 1983 liability); Grazier ex. rel. White v. City of the one who violated your rights) was inadequately trained. Rather, you must claim that the training program as a whole is inadequate.¹⁹⁷

(iv) Inadequate Screening

You can also make an inadequate screening claim. Here, you are claiming that the municipality knew or should have known that it was highly likely that the individual it hired would violate your rights.¹⁹⁸ For example, imagine that a jail hired a guard who was fired from a previous job for assaulting persons confined in the jail. If that guard then assaulted you, you could claim that the municipality was responsible because it should have known that there was a high risk that this guard would assault someone.¹⁹⁹

In order to win on an inadequate screening claim, you must show that the decision to hire the individual who violated your rights shows “deliberate indifference to the risk that a violation of a particular constitutional or statutory right will follow the [hiring] decision.”²⁰⁰ It is not enough to show that the city or town hired someone who committed bad acts in the past.²⁰¹ Instead, you must show that an adequate look at the job applicant’s background would cause an objectively “reasonable policymaker” to conclude that it was “plainly obvious” that hiring that person would result in a violation of someone’s federal rights.²⁰² You must also show that it was highly likely—not simply possible or probable—that the particular harm you suffered would be the result of hiring the person.²⁰³

Philadelphia, 328 F.3d 120, 125 (3d Cir. 2003) (noting that the scope of failure to train liability is narrow, and it is likely not sufficient for plaintiffs to “merely allege that a different training program than the one in place would have been more effective”).

197. Palmquist v. Selvik, 111 F.3d 1332, 1345 (7th Cir. 1997) (finding that where a town gave police officers some training on handling suspects exhibiting abnormal behavior, the argument that even more training should have been given was unpersuasive, given that “[i]n determining the adequacy of training, the focus must be on the program, not whether particular officers were adequately trained”).

198. See Bd. of the Cty. Comm’rs v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 412, 117 S. Ct. 1382, 1392, 137 L. Ed. 2d 626, 644 (1997) (“[A] finding of culpability simply cannot depend on the mere probability that any officer inadequately screened will inflict any constitutional injury. Rather, it must depend on a finding that [the particular] officer was highly likely to inflict the particular injury suffered by the plaintiff.”).

199. See Romero v. City of Clanton, 220 F. Supp. 2d 1313, 1318 (M.D. Ala. 2002) (finding plaintiff had validly alleged an inadequate screening claim against a city that hired a police officer who allegedly had a prior history of sexual misconduct and who later attempted to sodomize the plaintiff). Please note that when evaluating the plaintiff’s inadequate screening claim against the city, the court let the complaint proceed because it also saw the inadequate screening as a failure to train on the part of the city.

200. Bd. of the Cty. Comm’rs v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 411, 117 S. Ct. 1382, 1392, 137 L. Ed. 2d 626, 644 (1997) (holding that a plaintiff must show that the decision to hire reflects deliberate indifference to the risk that the particular violation that occurred would follow the decision).

201. See Snyder v. Trepagnier, 142 F.3d 791, 797 (5th Cir. 1998) (holding that evidence that an officer had committed two nonviolent offenses in the past was not enough to hold the municipality liable, on an inadequate screening claim, for that officer having shot the plaintiff in the back); Waterman v. City of New York, No. 96 Civ. 1471 (AGS), 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17087, at *9–10 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 26, 1998) (unpublished) (concluding that a plaintiff could not prevail on an inadequate screening claim where an off-duty officer caused plaintiff to suffer cuts, bruises, and a laceration to the head because plaintiff only offered evidence that the officer had been arrested once for assault).

202. Bd. of the Cty. Comm’rs v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 411, 117 S. Ct. 1382, 1392, 137 L. Ed. 2d 626, 644 (1997) (finding that in order to hold a municipality liable for a hiring decision, a plaintiff must show that “adequate scrutiny of an applicant’s background would lead a reasonably policymaker to conclude” that the violation is a “plainly obvious consequence” of the decision to hire); see also Lawson v. Dallas County, 286 F.3d 257, 264 (5th Cir. 2002) (“Unlike the deliberate indifference standard applied to individual employees, this standard [for municipal deliberate indifference] is an objective one; it considers not only what the policymaker actually knew, but what he should have known, given the facts and circumstances surrounding the official policy and its impact on the plaintiff’s rights.”).

203. Bd. of the Cty. Comm’rs v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 412, 117 S. Ct. 1382, 1392, 137 L. Ed. 2d 626, 644 (1997) (“[A] finding of culpability simply cannot depend on the mere probability that any officer inadequately screened will inflict any constitutional injury. Rather, it must depend on a finding that [the particular] officer was

In other words, the violation of your rights must have a strong link to the bad acts that the supervisor knew or should have known that the employee committed in the past, and it must have been highly likely that the employee would repeat those bad acts.²⁰⁴

Making a successful claim for inadequate screening during hiring is very difficult. A court will demand a very close connection between the information available to the person making the hiring decision and the violation that took place. These claims are not likely to succeed unless the person who violated your rights engaged in similar behavior before he was hired, and the supervisor knew or should have known about it.

3. Defenses That May Be Raised Against Your Claim

There are several ways that the people you are suing might be able to defend themselves against your Section 1983 lawsuit. For example, the defendants might claim that the facts in your complaint are false, or that your legal arguments are incorrect. You will not know how the defendants will choose to defend themselves until after you file your complaint. You do not need to respond to their defenses until after you receive either an answer or a motion to dismiss from the defendants.²⁰⁵ However, your lawsuit is more likely to succeed if you can write your complaint in a way that avoids some of the defenses that you think they might use.

The rest of this Part will explain some of the defenses that are most likely to come up in a Section 1983 lawsuit. Most of the following sections focus on the different kinds of immunities that are almost always an issue in Section 1983 suits. Immunities are rules that protect certain individuals or agencies from liability for their actions even when they may have done something wrong.

(a) Eleventh Amendment Immunity

In general, the Eleventh Amendment to the U.S. Constitution protects states and their agencies from being sued in federal court.²⁰⁶ This means that you cannot name the state itself as a defendant in your Section 1983 suit.²⁰⁷ You also cannot name the Department of Corrections or any other state government agency as a defendant.²⁰⁸ Eleventh Amendment immunity is also known as “sovereign immunity.”

highly likely to inflict the particular injury suffered by the plaintiff.”).

204. See Bd. of the Cty. Comm’rs v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 412, 117 S. Ct. 1382, 1392, 137 L. Ed. 2d 626, 644 (1997) (holding that municipal liability for inadequate screening requires a strong connection between the job applicant’s background and the specific harm he inflicted).

205. See Part C(9) of this Chapter, “What to Expect After Your Legal Papers Have Been Filed in Court,” for an explanation of an “answer” and a “motion to dismiss.”

206. Note, however, that these rules do not apply to claims brought under the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, 29 U.S.C. § 794, or some claims brought under the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), 42 U.S.C. §§ 12101–12213. See United States v. Georgia, 546 U.S. 151, 154, 159, 126 S. Ct. 877, 879, 882, 163 L. Ed. 2d 650, 656, 659 (2006) (holding that individuals may sue states under the ADA, which incorporates by reference the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, where the conduct alleged to violate the ADA also violates the Constitution). For more information on the rights of prisoners with disabilities, see Chapter 28 of the JLM, “Rights of Prisoners with Disabilities.” In addition, some states may allow you to sue the state or its agencies under certain state laws.

207. Alabama v. Pugh, 438 U.S. 781, 782, 98 S. Ct. 3057, 3057, 57 L. Ed. 2d 1114, 1116 (1978) (“[S]uit [alleging 8th Amendment violations in state prisons] against the State. . . is barred by the [11th] Amendment, unless [the State] has consented to the filing of such a suit.”); Will v. Mich. Dept. of State Police, 491 U.S. 58, 65–66, 109 S. Ct. 2304, 2310, 105 L. Ed. 2d 45, 55 (1989) (holding that a State is not liable to § 1983 suits that result in damages and noting that Congress did not intend for § 1983 to create an exception to the 11th Amendment). But you should note that a state does not automatically receive this immunity. The state still must affirmatively raise an 11th Amendment immunity defense; if they do not, they may waive the ability to raise the defense. Wis. Dept. of Corr. v. Schacht, 524 U.S. 381, 389, 118 S. Ct. 2047, 2052–2053, 141 L. Ed. 2d 364, 372 (1998) (“The [11th] Amendment, however, does not automatically destroy original jurisdiction. Rather, the [11th] Amendment grants the State a legal power to assert a sovereign immunity defense should it choose to do so. The State can waive the defense. Nor need a court raise the defect on its own. Unless the State raises the matter, a court can ignore it.”) (internal citations omitted).

208. Alabama v. Pugh, 438 U.S. 781, 782, 98 S. Ct. 3057, 3057, 57 L. Ed. 2d 1114, 1116 (1978) (“[S]uit

This same Eleventh Amendment immunity rule prevents you from suing a state official in his “official capacity” in federal court for money damages.²⁰⁹ This is considered the same thing as suing the state.²¹⁰ However, this immunity does not apply to suits for injunctive or *declaratory*²¹¹ relief against state officials sued in their official capacity. In other words, although you cannot sue the state itself for an injunction, you can sue a state official in his official capacity for an injunction.²¹² Fortunately for you, suing a state official in his official capacity for an injunction has the same effect as suing the state or a state agency for an injunction. When you sue state officials for injunctive relief, remember to sue them in their official capacity.²¹³

Eleventh Amendment immunity does not apply to suits for money damages against state officials sued in their individual capacities.²¹⁴ If you are seeking money damages and are suing state officials, you must sue them as an individual, and not in their official job capacity.

Eleventh Amendment immunity does not apply to any suits against county and city officials.²¹⁵ It should be noted, however, that state and county officials may claim one of the personal immunities discussed below. You should read the following Parts carefully so that you will be able to argue why the defendants in your suit are not immune from being sued.

(b) Absolute Immunity of Individuals

Certain types of individuals are absolutely (completely) immune from suit for all actions taken within the scope of their official duties. If an official is absolutely immune it means that he cannot be against the State and its Board of Corrections is barred by the [11th] Amendment. . . .”); see also Hale v. Arizona, 993 F.2d 1387, 1399 (9th Cir. 1993) (finding that a governmental agency in charge of the prison industry is “an arm of the state” and therefore protected by 11th Amendment immunity); Alden v. Maine, 527 U.S. 706, 747, 119 S. Ct. 2240, 2265, 44 L. Ed. 2d 636, 677 (1999) (asserting that private suits against states who do not waive their sovereign immunity must be rejected given that states’ sovereign immunity derives from the history of the Constitution and not just the Eleventh Amendment therefore such immunity cannot be revoked by Congress).

209. Arizonans for Official English v. Arizona, 520 U.S. 43, 69 n.24, 117 S. Ct. 1055, 1070 n.24, 137 L. Ed. 2d 170, 194 n.24 (1997) (“State officers in their official capacities, like States themselves, are not amenable to suit for damages under § 1983.”) (emphasis added).

210. Kentucky v. Graham, 473 U.S. 159, 169, 105 S. Ct. 3099, 3107, 87 L. Ed. 2d 114, 123–124 (1985) (noting that official capacity suits for money damages have the same effect as suing the state for money damages, and therefore both types of suits are barred).

211. Injunctive relief is an order by a court that the defendant must stop or correct the practices the plaintiff is challenging. Injunction, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019). Declaratory relief is a decision by a court that settles the rights or legal relations of the parties for the issue raised by the plaintiff. Declaratory Judgment, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

212. Verizon Md., Inc. v. Pub. Serv. Comm’n of Md., 535 U.S. 635, 645, 122 S. Ct. 1753, 1760, 152 L. Ed. 2d 871, 882 (2002) (allowing a plaintiff to seek injunctive relief against state commissioners sued in their official capacities); Kentucky v. Graham, 473 U.S. 159, 167 n.14, 105 S. Ct. 3099, 3106 n.14, 87 L. Ed. 2d 114, 122 n.14 (1985) (“[O]fficial-capacity actions for prospective [injunctive] relief are not treated as actions against the State.”).

213. Suits for injunctive relief against state officials in their official capacities are said to fall within the “Ex parte Young doctrine.” In Ex parte Young, the Supreme Court said that state officials can be sued in their official capacities for an injunction in federal court, even though the state itself cannot be sued. Ex parte Young, 209 U.S. 123, 155–156, 28 S. Ct. 441, 452, 52 L. Ed. 714 (1908).

214. See Hafer v. Melo, 502 U.S. 21, 30–31, 112 S. Ct. 358, 364–365, 116 L. Ed. 2d 301, 313 (1991) (holding that state officials, when sued in their individual capacities, are “persons” within the meaning of § 1983 and therefore are not immune under the 11th Amendment). Some states will actually pay any damages awarded against state officials sued in their individual capacities because of state “indemnification” laws. Even though the state will be paying damages, an indemnification law does not turn your lawsuit into a suit against the state that would be barred by the 11th Amendment. Port Auth. Trans-Hudson Corp. v. Feeney, 495 U.S. 299, 317 n.10, 110 S. Ct. 1868, 1879 n.10, 109 L. Ed. 2d 264, 279 n.10 (1990) (“Lower courts have uniformly held that States may not cloak their officers with a personal [11th] Amendment defense by promising, by statute, to indemnify them for damage awards imposed on them for actions taken in the course of their employment.”).

215. Monell v. Dept. of Soc. Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 690 n.54, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2035 n.54, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 635 n.54 (1978) (noting that the 11th Amendment does not prevent suits against local governments).

sued for money damages and sometimes cannot be sued for injunctive relief either. Legislators,²¹⁶ prosecutors,²¹⁷ witnesses,²¹⁸ and judges (including certain administrative judges)²¹⁹ are usually completely immune from liability for money damages under Section 1983 as long as they were acting within the scope of their official duties. You should be aware of these immunities when deciding whom to name as defendants in your lawsuit.

You usually will not be able to sue any of these individuals for violating your constitutional rights if their actions were within the scope of their official responsibilities. To figure out whether an action falls within the scope of an official's duties, courts look at the nature of the individual's responsibilities and not just the individual's title. For example, many officials with state or federal legislative responsibilities will be completely immune from suit even if they are not named legislators.²²⁰

216. See Bogan v. Scott-Harris, 523 U.S. 44, 49, 118 S. Ct. 966, 970, 140 L. Ed. 2d 79, 85 (1998) (“[S]tate and regional legislators are entitled to absolute immunity from liability under § 1983 for their legislative activities . . . Congress did not intend the general language of § 1983 to ‘impinge on [this immunity].’” (citations omitted)) (quoting Tenney v. Brandhove, 341 U.S. 367, 376, 71 S. Ct. 783, 788, 95 L. Ed. 1019, 1027 (1951)); Tenney v. Brandhove, 341 U.S. 367, 372, 71 S. Ct. 783, 786, 95 L. Ed. 1019, 1024–1025 (1951) (extending absolute legislative immunity to protect state legislators); Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U.S. 168, 202–204, 26 L. Ed. 377, 391–392 (1880) (interpreting the Speech and Debate Clause, U.S. Const. art. I, § 6, to provide absolute immunity to federal legislators when they perform activities typical of legislative sessions or activities related to House business).

217. See Burns v. Reed, 500 U.S. 478, 492, 111 S. Ct. 1934, 1942, 114 L. Ed. 2d 547, 562 (1991) (holding that a prosecutor's appearance in court in order to support an application for a search warrant and present evidence were protected by absolute immunity in a civil rights action brought by arrestee); Imbler v. Pachtman, 424 U.S. 409, 430–431, 96 S. Ct. 984, 995, 47 L. Ed. 2d 128, 143–144 (1976) (holding that a prosecutor was absolutely immune from suit even though he knowingly used perjured testimony, deliberately withheld exculpatory information, and failed to make full disclosure of all facts casting doubt upon the state's testimony). However, you should note that prosecutors may not have immunity for their conduct when they act as “administrator[s] or investigative officer[s].” Imbler v. Pachtman, 424 U.S. 409, 430–431, 96 S. Ct. 984, 995, 47 L. Ed. 2d 128, 143–144 (1976). The key factor is whether the prosecutor's actions were “closely associated with the judicial process.” Burns v. Reed, 500 U.S. 478, 495–496, 111 S. Ct. 1934, 1944–1945, 114 L. Ed. 2d 547, 564–565 (1991) (denying absolute immunity to a prosecutor for giving legal advice to police). Prosecutorial immunity is also limited to immunity from being sued for money damages. Prosecutors do not have immunity from being sued for injunctive relief. If a prosecutor violates your rights while acting within the scope of his official duties, you can sue him for injunctive relief. See Supreme Court of Va. v. Consumers Union of the U.S., Inc., 446 U.S. 719, 736, 100 S. Ct. 1967, 1977, 64 L. Ed. 2d 641, 656 (1980) (noting that prosecutors, though shielded by absolute immunity for damages liability, may be subject to § 1983 suits for injunctive relief).

218. See Briscoe v. LaHue, 460 U.S. 325, 345–346, 103 S. Ct. 1108, 1121, 75 L. Ed. 2d 96, 114 (1983) (holding that a police officer, when testifying in court, is acting as a witness and is therefore entitled to absolute immunity).

219. Before 1996, the Supreme Court had held that judicial immunity did not prohibit declaratory and injunctive relief against a judicial officer acting in his judicial capacity. See Pulliam v. Allen, 466 U.S. 522, 541–542, 104 S. Ct. 1970, 1981, 80 L. Ed. 2d 565, 579 (1984) (allowing an injunction against a state judge's practice of incarcerating persons awaiting trial for non-incarcerable offenses and stating that “judicial immunity is not a bar to prospective injunctive relief against a judicial officer acting in her judicial capacity”). However, in 1996, Congress amended Section 1983 by enacting Section 309(c) of the Federal Courts Improvement Act of 1996, which provided that “in any action brought against a judicial officer for an act or omission taken in such officer's judicial capacity, injunctive relief shall not be granted unless a declaratory decree was violated or declaratory relief was unavailable.” Pub. L. No. 104-317, § 309(c), 110 Stat. 3847, 3853 (1996) (codified at 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (2018)). The Senate report indicates that the amendment “restores the doctrine of judicial immunity to the status it occupied prior to [Pulliam]” because Pulliam had departed from “400 years of common law tradition and weakened judicial immunity protections.” S. Rep. No. 104-366, at 36 (1996), reprinted in 1996 U.S.C.C.A.N. 4202, 4216. Currently, therefore, judicial immunity prohibits injunctive relief from being granted against a judge acting in his official capacity, unless that judge violated a declaratory decree or declaratory relief is unavailable. While this amendment does not grant judges absolute immunity, it makes securing injunctive relief against a judicial officer extremely difficult.

220. See Supreme Court of Va. v. Consumers Union of the U.S., Inc., 446 U.S. 719, 734, 100 S. Ct. 1967, 1976, 64 L. Ed. 2d 641, 655 (1980) (holding that defendant judges were absolutely immune from suit challenging the state bar disciplinary rules at issue because they acted in a legislative capacity when they created those rules); see also Bogan v. Scott-Harris, 523 U.S. 44, 55, 118 S. Ct. 966, 973, 140 L. Ed. 2d 79, 89 (1998) (explaining that “[w]e have recognized that officials outside the legislative branch are entitled to legislative immunity when they

Similarly, officials who perform judicial functions within administrative agencies may be completely immune even though they are not technically judges.²²¹ According to the Supreme Court, prison officials on a prison disciplinary committee are not performing judicial functions.²²² This means that they are not completely immune from liability for violating your rights.

Keep in mind that no official is absolutely immune from being sued for money damages for actions outside the scope of his official duties. As described above, you must look at the nature of the official's actions, not just his title, to determine whether his actions are covered by absolute immunity. For example, a prosecutor is absolutely immune from suit only for actions taken within "the scope of his prosecutorial duties."²²³ Therefore, he has absolute immunity for actions related to starting and presenting the government's case against you. He does not, however, have absolute immunity for investigative or other actions that did not relate to his role as prosecutor.²²⁴ In Buckley v. Fitzsimmons, the Supreme Court held that a prosecutor did not have absolute immunity for making allegedly false statements to the media about the defendant because giving statements to the press was outside his role as a prosecutor.²²⁵ Absolute immunity also does not cover a prosecutor's investigative actions to establish probable cause to arrest a defendant because this work could be done by police officers or detectives, so it does not relate to his role of preparing for trial.²²⁶ On the other hand, interviewing witnesses and evaluating evidence to prepare for trial are within the prosecutor's role, so they are always covered by absolute immunity.²²⁷

Judges (including certain administrative judges)²²⁸ do not have absolute immunity from damages when they take actions that are not judicial in nature.²²⁹ They also do not have absolute immunity perform legislative functions"); Lake Country Estates v. Tahoe Reg'l Planning Agency, 440 U.S. 391, 405, 99 S. Ct. 1171, 1179, 59 L. Ed. 2d 401, 412–413 (1979) (holding that regional officials are entitled to absolute immunity where they were officially acting in a capacity comparable to that of state legislators); Baraka v. McGreevey, 481 F.3d 187, 195–197 (3d Cir. 2007) (finding a governor and committee chair protected by legislative immunity for advocating and signing a law abolishing position of state poet laureate).

221. See Butz v. Economou, 438 U.S. 478, 512–513, 98 S. Ct. 2894, 2914, 57 L. Ed. 2d 895, 920 (1978) (granting administrative judges of the Department of Agriculture absolute individual immunity for damages from wrongful initiation of administrative proceedings).

222. See Cleavinger v. Saxner, 474 U.S. 193, 206, 106 S. Ct. 496, 503, 88 L. Ed. 2d 507, 517–518 (1985) (declaring that prison officials on prison disciplinary committees have qualified immunity instead of absolute immunity).

223. Imbler v. Pachtman, 424 U.S. 409, 420–424, 96 S. Ct. 984, 990–992, 47 L. Ed. 2d 128, 137–140 (1976) ("[A] prosecutor enjoys absolute immunity from § 1983 suits for damages when he acts within the scope of his prosecutorial duties.").

224. See Zahrey v. Coffey, 221 F.3d 342, 346 (2d Cir. 2000) ("The nature of a prosecutor's immunity depends on the capacity in which the prosecutor acts at the time of the alleged misconduct. Actions taken as an advocate enjoy absolute immunity, while actions taken as an investigator enjoy only qualified immunity. This immunity law applies to Bivens actions as well as actions under section 1983.") (citations omitted).

225. Buckley v. Fitzsimmons, 509 U.S. 259, 277–278, 113 S. Ct. 2606, 2617–2618, 125 L. Ed. 2d 209, 228–229 (1993) (holding prosecutor's prejudicial out-of-court statements to the press were not within the scope of his duties and therefore not entitled to absolute immunity); see also Burns v. Reed, 500 U.S. 478, 496, 111 S. Ct. 1934, 1944–1945, 114 L. Ed. 2d 547, 565 (1991) (denying absolute immunity to a prosecutor for giving legal advice to police).

226. See Buckley v. Fitzsimmons, 509 U.S. 259, 273–274, 113 S. Ct. 2606, 2616, 125 L. Ed. 2d 209, 226 (1993) (holding that "[w]hen a prosecutor performs the investigative functions normally performed by a detective or police officer," he is not entitled to absolute immunity); Zahrey v. Coffey, 221 F.3d 342, 346–347 (2d Cir. 2000) (noting that a prosecutor accused of fabricating false evidence was entitled at most to a qualified immunity defense because the alleged misconduct occurred while he was acting in an investigative capacity).

227. See Imbler v. Pachtman, 424 U.S. 409, 430–431, 96 S. Ct. 984, 995, 47 L. Ed. 2d 128, 144 (1976) (holding a prosecutor absolutely immune for all actions performed "in initiating a prosecution and in presenting the State's case").

228. Butz v. Economou, 438 U.S. 478, 514, 98 S. Ct. 2894, 2915, 57 L. Ed. 2d 895, 920–921 (1978) ("We therefore hold that persons subject to these [administrative law] restraints and performing adjudicatory functions within a federal agency are entitled to absolute immunity from damages liability for their judicial acts").

229. See Forrester v. White, 484 U.S. 219, 228–229, 108 S. Ct. 538, 545, 98 L. Ed. 2d 555, 566 (1988) when they act with a “complete absence of all jurisdiction.”²³⁰ Judges act with the complete absence of jurisdiction when they make a ruling in cases that they have no authority to hear in the first place. For example, family court judges do not have authority to try felony cases. If they did hear such cases, they would be acting without jurisdiction and would not have immunity.²³¹ In contrast, if you think that a judge had the power to hear your case, but made a mistake that harmed you, you cannot sue the judge for money damages. Instead, you should try to appeal the judge’s ruling.

(c) Qualified Immunity of Individuals

Officials who are sued in their individual capacity and who are not completely immune from suit may still have a limited form of immunity, known as “qualified immunity.” State, city, and county officials at all levels may claim some type of qualified immunity.²³² However, private parties (people who are not government officials) who rely on state law or who act under color of state law usually cannot claim qualified immunity.²³³

Officials with “qualified immunity” will only have to pay money damages if “their conduct . . . violate[s] clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which a reasonable person would have known.”²³⁴ To claim qualified immunity, the official has to show either that it was objectively (holding that because “it [is] the nature of function performed, not the identity of the actor who performed it, that inform[s] our immunity analysis,” a judge who fired an employee because of her sex was not absolutely immune from suit); see also Leclerc v. Webb, 270 F. Supp. 2d 779, 793 (E.D. La. 2003) (“The Court is persuaded that the [Federal Courts Improvement Act of 1996] does not bar injunctive relief where a judicial officer acts in other capacities such as the enforcement capacity.”).

230. See Mireles v. Waco, 502 U.S. 9, 11–12, 112 S. Ct. 286, 287–288, 116 L. Ed. 2d 9, 14 (1991) (per curiam) (“[Judicial] immunity is overcome in only two sets of circumstances. First, a judge is not immune from liability for nonjudicial actions, i.e., actions not taken in the judge’s judicial capacity. Second, a judge is not immune for actions, though judicial in nature, taken in the complete absence of all jurisdiction.” (citations omitted)); Bradley v. Fisher, 80 U.S. 335, 351–352, 20 L. Ed. 646, 651 (1872) (noting that a judge does not have complete immunity when he acts in a situation where he knows that he has absolutely no jurisdiction over the subject matter of the lawsuit).

231. Stump v. Sparkman, 435 U.S. 349, 357 n.7, 98 S. Ct. 1099, 1105 n.7, 55 L. Ed. 2d 331, 339 n.7 (1978) (noting the difference between an act in excess of jurisdiction and one in the absence of jurisdiction: “[I]f a probate judge, with jurisdiction over only wills and estates, should try a criminal case, he would be acting in the clear absence of jurisdiction and would not be immune from liability for his action; on the other hand, if a judge of a criminal court should convict a defendant of a nonexistent crime, he would merely be acting in excess of his jurisdiction and would be immune.”).

232. See Procunier v. Navarette, 434 U.S. 555, 561–562, 98 S. Ct. 855, 859–860, 55 L. Ed. 2d 24, 30–31 (1978) (noting that the scope of qualified immunity varies depending on the “scope of discretion and responsibilities of the office and all the circumstances as they reasonably appeared at the time of the [official’s] action”), overruled in part on other grounds by Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 817, 102 S. Ct. 2727, 2738, 73 L. Ed. 2d 396, 410 (1982).

233. See Wyatt v. Cole, 504 U.S. 158, 168–169, 112 S. Ct. 1827, 1833–1834, 118 L. Ed. 2d 504, 515 (1992) (concluding that the rationales mandating qualified immunity for public officials are not applicable to private parties); Richardson v. McKnight, 521 U.S. 399, 412, 117 S. Ct. 2100, 2107, 138 L. Ed. 2d 540, 552 (1997) (holding that prison guards at a privatized prison, unlike prison guards who are employed by the government, were not entitled to qualified immunity where state law “reserves certain important discretionary tasks—those related to prison discipline, to parole, and to good time—for state officials”). But see Eagon ex rel. Eagon v. City of Elk City, 72 F.3d 1480, 1489–1490 (10th Cir. 1996) (holding that defendant, a private individual acting under the authority of the city but not a city official, was entitled to qualified immunity because she “was not ‘invoking state law in pursuit of private ends’” but was “performing a government function pursuant to a government request”; “a private individual who performs a government function pursuant to a state order or request is entitled to qualified immunity if a state official would have been entitled to such immunity had he performed the function himself” (quoting Warner v. Grand County, 57 F.3d 962, 966–967 (10th Cir. 1995))).

234. Harlow v. Fitzgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 818, 102 S. Ct. 2727, 2738, 73 L. Ed. 2d 396, 410 (1982). For examples of cases dealing with the issue of qualified immunity, see Anderson v. Creighton, 483 U.S. 635, 641, 107 S. Ct. 3034, 3040, 97 L. Ed. 2d 523, 531–532 (1987) (holding that since defendant could reasonably have believed that the search at issue was lawful, he should have been allowed to claim a defense of qualified immunity) and Oliveira v. Mayer, 23 F.3d 642, 648–649 (2d Cir. 1994) (holding that defendants should have been given the reasonable for the official to believe that the actions did not violate the law, or that the law was not clearly established at the time of the violation.²³⁵ In other words, prison officials sued in their individual capacity can have qualified immunity even if their conduct is found to be illegal. But this will only happen if the court finds that it was objectively reasonable for the official to believe the conduct was legal²³⁶ or that the law was unclear when the violation occurred.²³⁷

You do not have to allege in your complaint that the law that was violated was clearly established.²³⁸ The defendant is responsible for raising the qualified immunity defense.²³⁹ If the defendant fails to claim qualified immunity at the trial court level, the defendant may lose the right to raise that defense in later proceedings, such as appeals.²⁴⁰ opportunity to prove that it was reasonable for them to believe that they were not violating settled law and were therefore entitled to a qualified immunity defense).

235. See, e.g., Oliveira v. Mayer, 23 F.3d 642, 648 (2d Cir. 1994) (remanding, based on factual dispute related to whether a reasonable officer could believe that his conduct was lawful); Powell v. Ward, 643 F.2d 924, 934 n.13 (2d Cir. 1981) (stating that a defendant who “knew or should have known that her conduct violated a constitutional norm” was not entitled to immunity); Fiscus v. City of Roswell, 832 F. Supp. 1558, 1564 (N.D. Ga. 1993) (holding that a Supreme Court decision issued the same month as the alleged violation did not constitute clearly established law); Kaminsky v. Rosenblum, 737 F. Supp. 1309, 1319 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) (holding that qualified immunity did not apply because the law was objectively clear to prison doctors that their alleged conduct implicated the prisoner’s rights, where prison doctors were also actually aware of such law).

236. “Objectively reasonable” means that it does not matter whether the officer himself believed that the conduct was legal. Instead, the officer has to prove that a reasonable officer could have believed that the conduct was legal.

237. Whether the law is clear depends on the context of the facts of your case. For example, simply showing that the right to bodily privacy is clearly established is not enough to defeat an officer’s qualified immunity to your claim that by strip-searching you, he violated your substantive due process right to privacy. Instead, you would also have to show that at the time you were strip-searched, clearly established law (from the Supreme Court or a court in your circuit or district) stated that strip-searching in a context similar to what you experienced violated your right to bodily privacy. See Saucier v. Katz, 533 U.S. 194, 201, 121 S. Ct. 2151, 2156, 150 L. Ed. 2d 272, 281 (2001) (stating that the question of whether a law is clearly established “must be undertaken in light of the specific context of the case, not as a broad general proposition”), overruled on other grounds by Pearson v. Callahan, 555 U.S. 223, 236, 129 S. Ct. 808, 818, 172 L. Ed. 2d 565, 576 (2009) (holding that the two-step process mandated in Saucier for evaluating qualified immunity claims is not mandatory).

238. Thomas v. Independence Twp., 463 F.3d 285, 293 (3d Cir. 2006) (“[A] plaintiff has no obligation to plead a violation of clearly established law in order to avoid dismissal on qualified immunity grounds.”). However, if the defendant does raise a qualified immunity defense, the court may require you to allege additional facts so that it is able to decide the issue of qualified immunity. See Thomas v. Independence Twp., 463 F.3d 285, 302 (3d Cir. 2006) (directing the district court to order the plaintiff to provide a more definite statement and, based on the facts they allege, reconsider the qualified immunity issue).

239. See Gomez v. Toledo, 446 U.S. 635, 640, 100 S. Ct. 1920, 1924, 64 L. Ed. 2d 572, 577–578 (1980) (stating that the Supreme Court “has never indicated that qualified immunity is relevant to the existence of the plaintiff’s cause of action; instead [the Supreme Court] ha[s] described it as a defense available to the official in question”). Note that Mitchell v. Forsyth, 472 U.S. 511, 530, 105 S. Ct. 2806, 2817, 86 L. Ed. 2d 411, 427 (1985), allows defendants to immediately appeal a court’s decision to deny them qualified immunity, provided that the denial turns on an issue of law. These immediate appeals are called “interlocutory appeals.” If a defendant brings an immediate appeal of a denial of qualified immunity, you may attempt to oppose him by arguing to the appellate court that the issue turns on “disputed questions of fact” rather than questions of pure law. See Tierney v. Davidson, 133 F.3d 189, 194 (2d Cir. 1998) (“[A] district court’s denial of a claim of qualified immunity, to the extent that it turns on an issue of law, is an appealable ‘final decision’ within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. § 1291 notwithstanding the absence of a final judgment.”) (citation omitted); Kulwicki v. Dawson, 969 F.2d 1454, 1461 (3d Cir. 1992) (holding that an order denying qualified immunity is subject to interlocutory appeal). See also Feagley v. Waddill, 868 F.2d 1437, 1439–1442 (5th Cir. 1989) (holding that “if disputed factual issues material to immunity are present, the district court’s denial of summary judgment sought on the basis of immunity is not appealable”).

240. See Walsh v. Mellas, 837 F.2d 789, 799 n.5 (7th Cir. 1988) (holding that the qualified immunity defense was waived because it was not raised prior to the district court’s final decision).

Keep in mind that qualified immunity is not a defense to a claim for injunctive relief.²⁴¹ Even if an individual has qualified immunity, the court can order that individual to stop doing something that violates your rights. Qualified immunity is also not available as a defense for municipalities²⁴² or privately employed prison guards.²⁴³ Qualified immunity is usually (but not always) decided by the judge during summary judgment proceedings.²⁴⁴ Summary judgment is described in Part C(8) of this Chapter.

Figure 2 below should help you understand which defendants are completely or partially immune from suit in federal court, and what kind of relief you can request. You should note that state courts have different immunity rules. If you want to bring your lawsuit in state court (discussed below in Part D(2)), you should research your state's immunity rules.

Type of Defendant	Type of Immunity	Relief You Can Obtain
State or state agency	Eleventh Amendment (sovereign) immunity	None, unless state law authorizes such lawsuits
Any officials sued in their individual capacities	Qualified immunity	Declaratory judgment; Injunctive relief; or Money damages. Money damages are only available if a) the official does not raise the qualified immunity defense or b) he does raise the defense, but you can demonstrate that a reasonable person would have known his actions violated a clearly established right
State officials in their official capacities	Eleventh Amendment (sovereign) immunity from suit for money damages only	Declaratory judgment; Injunctive relief

241. See Davidson v. Scully, 148 F. Supp. 2d 249, 254 (S.D.N.Y. 2001); Project Release v. Prevost, 463 F. Supp. 1033, 1037 (E.D.N.Y. 1978) (finding that the Court could issue a declaratory judgment against officials despite their qualified immunity).

242. See Leatherman v. Tarrant Cty. Narcotics Intelligence & Coordination Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 166, 113 S. Ct. 1160, 1162, 122 L. Ed. 2d 517, 523 (1993) (“[U]nlike various government officials, municipalities do not enjoy immunity from suit—either absolute or qualified—under § 1983. In short, a municipality can be sued under § 1983, but it cannot be held liable unless a municipal policy or custom caused the constitutional injury [because there is no respondeat superior municipal liability under § 1983].”); Owen v. City of Independence, 445 U.S. 622, 638, 100 S. Ct. 1398, 1409, 63 L. Ed. 2d 673, 685–686 (1980) (holding that a municipality cannot use the defense of qualified immunity in a Section 1983 action by asserting that its employees acted in good faith); Cote v. Town of Millinocket, 901 F. Supp. 2d 200, 227 n.39 (D. Me. 2012) (conceding that “qualified immunity is not a concept applicable to a municipality”). But see City of Newport v. Fact Concerts, Inc., 453 U.S. 247, 271, 101 S. Ct. 2748, 2762, 69 L. Ed. 2d 616, 634–635 (1981) (deeming it “unwise” for punitive damages to be available against a municipality in a Section 1983 suit unless there is a compelling reason for them to be).

243. See Richardson v. McKnight, 521 U.S. 399, 412–413, 117 S. Ct. 2100, 2107–2108, 138 L. Ed. 2d 540, 552–553 (1997) (holding that private prison guards cannot use the defense of qualified immunity but acknowledging that the decision is narrow and not necessarily applicable to other contexts, such as cases that may involve a private individual “acting under close official supervision”); Holly v. Scott, 434 F.3d 287, 294 (4th Cir. 2006) (noting that the “distinction between public and private correctional facilities is critical”).

244. See Snyder v. Trepagnier, 142 F.3d 791, 799–800 (5th Cir. 1998) (noting that qualified immunity is ordinarily determined by the judge, but finding that there was no error in allowing the jury to decide the issue when there were facts in dispute relating to qualified immunity); Warren v. Dwyer, 906 F.2d 70, 76 (2d Cir. 1990) (“The better rule, we believe, is for the court to decide the issue of qualified immunity as a matter of law, preferably on a pretrial motion for summary judgment when possible. . . .”); Halcomb v. Wash. Metro. Area Transit Auth., 526 F. Supp. 2d 20, 22–23 (D.D.C. 2007) (noting that pretrial resolution of the qualified immunity defense may not always be practical due to factual disputes); see also Hunter v. Bryant, 502 U.S. 224, 227, 112 S. Ct. 534, 536, 116 L. Ed. 2d 589, 595 (1991) (“[W]e repeatedly have stressed the importance of resolving immunity questions at the earliest possible stage in litigation.”).

Type of Defendant	Type of Immunity	Relief You Can Obtain
Non-state (local or municipal) officials in their official capacities	None	Declaratory judgment; Injunctive relief; Money damages
Witnesses	Absolute immunity	None, unless you are alleging that the individual violated your rights at a time when he was not acting as a witness
Legislators and individuals authorized to perform legislative functions	Absolute immunity from any suit for actions performed within the scope of official legislative duties	None, unless you are alleging that the individual violated your rights while acting outside the scope of his official legislative duties
Prosecutors	Absolute immunity from suit for money damages only, for actions performed within the scope of official prosecutorial duties	Declaratory judgment; Injunctive relief
Judges (including certain administrative judges)	Absolute immunity from suit for money damages only, for actions performed within the scope of official judicial duties, unless acting without any jurisdiction over the case	Declaratory judgment; Injunctive relief, but only if a declaratory judgment has been violated or is not available
Municipalities	Immunity from punitive damages	Declaratory judgment; Injunctive relief; Money damages
Private parties acting under color of state law (such as prison guards at a privately-run prison)	Qualified immunity in some circumstances	Declaratory judgment; Injunctive relief; Money damages

Figure 2: Types of Immunity Available to and Types of Damages Available from Different Defendants

(d) Defenses Based on Required Procedure

The defendants could claim several defenses based on your alleged failure to follow certain procedural rules. First, the defendants may try to convince the court to dismiss your lawsuit by arguing that you have not met important procedural requirements. For example, the court can dismiss your case if you do not meet the filing deadline established by your state's "statute of limitations". See Part C(5) of this Chapter for an explanation of statutes of limitations. Be sure to look up your state's statute of limitations so you can easily avoid this defense by filing your lawsuit before the deadline. As you will see in Part C(5), there is no federal statute of limitation for Section 1983 claims. For this reason, it is very important that you look at the state statute of limitations for the injury that is most similar to your Section 1983 claim.

The defendants may also argue that your claim has already been resolved by an earlier court case or a prior administrative proceeding. If this argument applies to you, the court may refuse to hear your current lawsuit due to one or more of the legal doctrines of "res judicata," "collateral estoppel," and "preclusion."²⁴⁵ These doctrines forbid the re-litigation of specific claims or issues that have already been litigated in previous cases between the same parties. “Non-mutual” collateral estoppel can also be used in some cases where only one of the parties was involved in the prior lawsuit, if that party had a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue.²⁴⁶ In general, an issue will be barred by collateral estoppel if:

245. Allen v. McCurry, 449 U.S. 90, 101–104, 101 S. Ct. 411, 418–420, 66 L. Ed. 2d 308, 317–319 (1980) (holding that collateral estoppel applied to Section 1983 actions and included both civil and criminal state-court decisions); see Parklane Hosiery Co. v. Shore, 439 U.S. 322, 326 n.5, 99 S. Ct. 645, 649 n.5, 58 L. Ed. 2d 552, 559 n.5 (1979) ("Under the doctrine of res judicata, a judgment on the merits in a prior suit bars a second suit involving

- (1) The issue has been actually litigated;
- (2) The issue was subject of a final judgment; and
- (3) The issue was essential to that judgment.²⁴⁷

To avoid these defenses, you should carefully review any claims you have previously filed, and anything a court may have said about those claims, to ensure you are not making claims that have previously been raised in your current case. In general, a claim will be considered to have been “previously raised”—and therefore barred by res judicata—if:

- (1) There was a final judgment on the merits of the claim in the previous case,²⁴⁸
- (2) The ruling court in the previous case was a court of competent jurisdiction,²⁴⁹
- (3) The prior action involved the same parties as the present case, and
- (4) The prior case involved the same type of claim (cause of action).²⁵⁰

Finally, the defendants may argue that your complaint should be dismissed if you did not exhaust (use up) all administrative procedures available to you before filing. This is because under the Prison Litigation Reform Act, you must exhaust all administrative remedies (such as incarcerated person grievance procedures) that are available to you before bringing a suit. See Chapter 14 of the JLM for more information on the exhaustion requirement and Chapter 15 of the JLM for information on incarcerated person grievances. Remember to keep copies of everything that you or prison officials write in this process, so that if a defendant claims that you did not use all required administrative procedures, you will be able to prove that you did.²⁵¹ Note, however, that neither Section 1983 nor the

the same parties or their privies based on the same cause of action. Under the doctrine of collateral estoppel, on the other hand, the second action is upon a different cause of action and the judgment in the prior suit precludes relitigation of issues actually litigated and necessary to the outcome of the first action.”).

246. See Parklane Hosiery Co. v. Shore, 439 U.S. 322, 326, 99 S. Ct. 645, 649, 58 L. Ed. 2d 552, 559 (1979) (explaining that collateral estoppel and res judicata have the “dual purpose of protecting litigants from the burden of relitigating an identical issue with the same party or his privy and of promoting judicial economy by preventing needless litigation”).

247. See Bravo-Fernandez v. United States, 137 S. Ct. 352, 359, 196 L. Ed. 2d 242, 242 (2016); Ashe v. Swenson, 397 U.S. 436, 443, 90 S. Ct. 1189, 1194, 25 L. Ed. 2d 469, 475 (1970) (“‘Collateral estoppel’ is an awkward phrase, but it stands for an extremely important principle in our adversary system of justice. It means simply that when an issue of ultimate fact has once been determined by a valid and final judgment, that issue cannot again be litigated between the same parties in any future lawsuit.”); Lucky Brand Dungarees, Inc. v. Marcel Fashions Grp., Inc., No. 18-1086, 2020 WL 2477020, at *4 (U.S. May 14, 2020); see generally Jarosch v. Palmer, 436 Mass. 526, 530–531, 766 N.E.2d 482, 487–488 (2002) (detailing elements of collateral estoppel).

248. “On the merits” generally means that the previous lawsuit was decided on a motion for summary judgment or after a trial, or was dismissed with prejudice.

249. “Jurisdiction” is a word for a court’s power to hear and decide a case. If the court that heard your original case was not a court with power to hear that case, you can file the same case in another court.

250. See In re Teltronics Servs., Inc., 762 F.2d 185, 190–191 (2d Cir. 1985) (holding that the doctrine of res judicata “applies to preclude later litigation if the earlier decision was (1) a final judgment on the merits, (2) by a court of competent jurisdiction, (3) in a case involving the same parties or their privies, and (4) involving the same cause of action”); Comm’r of Internal Revenue v. Sunnen, 333 U.S. 591, 597, 68 S. Ct. 715, 719, 92 L. Ed. 898, 905 (1948) (holding that “when a court of competent jurisdiction has entered a final judgment on the merits of a cause of action,” res judicata bars future litigation between the parties or their privies as to any matter which was raised or might have been raised).

251. It is also a good idea to save all documents related to these procedures because if your complaints are ignored, the writings may be evidence of the prison officials’ indifference that can be used in your Section 1983 suit. Their responses might also admit things, like explanations for their behavior, which you can use later at trial.

PLRA requires you to exhaust all possible state court remedies before suing in federal court.²⁵² This means that you do not have to file a lawsuit in state court before filing one in federal court. Instead, you can go directly to federal court. You must only show that you went through the administrative procedural process.

4. Where to File

Once you have decided to bring your Section 1983 action in federal district court, you have to figure out which federal district court is the correct court.²⁵³ For example, New York is divided into four federal judicial districts; Northern, Eastern, Western, and Southern. Your Section 1983 suit must be filed in the same district where the harm occurred or in the district where any defendant lives, but only if all the defendants live in the same state.²⁵⁴ If the defendants do not all live in the same state, and there is a reason that you cannot file in the district where the harm occurred, then you can file in a judicial district where any defendant can be found.²⁵⁵ In most cases, this will mean that you have to file in the district where your prison is located. If you have been moved to another prison or have been released since the time you suffered the wrong, you must still file in the district where the harm occurred. Appendix I of the JLM contains the addresses of all federal district courts. Appendix I also outlines each New York state prison and the federal district they belong to.

Part of the decision process when figuring out where to file your complaint also involves making sure that the court has the power to hear your case. When filing in a court, you must make sure that the court has “personal jurisdiction” over these defendants (which means that the court you are suing in has power over these defendants).²⁵⁶ For federal courts, personal jurisdiction is governed by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedures that incorporate local state long-arm statutes.²⁵⁷ Long-Arm statutes are state laws that allow people in that state to sue people who live out-of-state in that state’s court, if certain requirements are met.²⁵⁸

If you are filing in the state where the defendants live or work, personal jurisdiction will be satisfied easily. In general, for personal jurisdiction to exist for an out-of-state defendant, the defendant must have made minimum contacts with the state and/or they purposefully availed themselves to that state (meaning they interacted with the state by choice to receive some benefit by being in that state).²⁵⁹ Along with proving minimum contacts and/or purposeful availment, you must

252. See Jenkins v. Morton, 148 F.3d 257, 259–260 (3d Cir. 1998) (holding that Congress, with the PLRA, “did not mandate that the prisoner must exhaust his administrative remedies and exhaust his right to judicial appellate review before bringing an action” and noting that the same is true of Section 1983 claims); see also Powe v. Ennis, 177 F.3d 393, 394 (5th Cir. 1999) (per curiam) (“A prisoner’s administrative remedies are deemed exhausted [under the PLRA] when a valid grievance has been filed and the state’s time for responding thereto has expired.”).

253. Visit <http://www.uscourts.gov/court-locator> (last visited June 10, 2020) for help in locating your local federal district court.

254. 28 U.S.C. § 1391(b) (describing requirements for where a plaintiff may bring a civil action in terms of appropriate “venue”).

255. 28 U.S.C. § 1391(b)(3) (stating that “if there is no district in which an action may otherwise be brought as provided in this section,” a civil action may be brought in “any judicial district in which any defendant is subject to the court’s personal jurisdiction”).

256. See Walden v. Fiore, 571 U.S. 277, 283–284, 134 S. Ct. 1115, 1121, 188 L. Ed. 2d 12, 19 (2014).

257. See FED. R. CIV. P. 4(k)(1)(A); FED. R. CIV. P. 4(k)(2); see also Walden v. Fiore, 571 U.S. 277, 283, 134 S. Ct. 1115, 1121, 188 L. Ed. 2d 12, 19 (2014).

258. See Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 473–474, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 2182–2183, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528, 541 (1985) (discussing constitutionality of long-arm statutes).

259. See J. McIntyre Mach., Ltd. v. Nicastro, 564 U.S. 873, 880–884, 131 S. Ct. 2780, 2787–2789, 180 L. Ed. 2d 765, 774–776 (2011). Note that there are different ways to prove that a defendant has made the necessary minimum contacts with a state but unless an accident occurred in that state, simply being in the state once or conducting business in the state once is generally not enough. See e.g. Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 253, 78 S. Ct. 1228, 1239–1240, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1283, 1297–1298 (1958) (describing what counts as purposeful availment); World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 286, 297, 100 S. Ct. 559, 567, 62 L. Ed. 2d 490, 501 (1980) (noting that when deciding personal jurisdiction, courts consider whether a defendant’s own conduct and show that it would be fair to allow that state court to have personal jurisdiction over the out-of-state defendant.²⁶⁰ When deciding if personal jurisdiction is fair, the judge will balance the burden the defendant will face versus the benefit you will receive by having to have the case in that court—while also considering if the jurisdiction you are seeking has a compelling reason to hear this case.²⁶¹ Ultimately, if you are not able to convince a Judge that their court has personal jurisdiction over your case, the case will be dismissed. This means you will need to refile in a more appropriate jurisdiction.

5. When to File

If you have been harmed, you do not have an unlimited amount of time to bring your lawsuit. There are strict deadlines for filing, and so you need to pay attention to the applicable statute of limitations. The statute of limitations is the amount of time you have after the harm occurs until your right to file a lawsuit expires forever. Because there is no federal statute of limitations for Section 1983 claims, this time period is governed by the state statute of limitations for the analogous personal injury suits in the state where the court is located.²⁶² This rule applies because the Supreme Court has found that the harms addressed by Section 1983 claims are similar to the harms addressed by tort claims for personal injuries.²⁶³

The statute of limitations for personal injury suits is the amount of time you will have to bring your Section 1983 suit. Even if your Section 1983 claim is based on intentional actions, the Supreme Court has explicitly said that the statute of limitations for your Section 1983 suit is not based off of the statute of limitations for the similar intentional tort that state, but instead the statute of limitations for personal injury suits within that state.²⁶⁴ For example, New York law says that personal injury suits have to be brought within three years from the date you suffered the wrong, while intentional torts suits for assault must be brought within one year from the date you suffered the connection with a state are enough that the defendant would anticipate being sued in that jurisdiction).

260. See Walden v. Fiore, 571 U.S. 277, 283, 134 S. Ct. 1115, 1121, 188 L. Ed. 2d 12, 19 (2014).

261. See Int'l Shoe Co. v. State of Wash., Office of Unemployment Comp. & Placement, 326 U.S. 310, 316–320, 66 S. Ct. 154, 158–160, 90 L. Ed. 95, 101–104 (1945).

262. See Wallace v. Kato, 549 U.S. 384, 387, 127 S. Ct. 1091, 1094, 166 L. Ed. 2d 973, 980 (2007) (holding that the statute of limitations for Section 1983 is determined by “the law of the State in which the cause of action arose” and that the statute of limitations “is that which the State provides for personal-injury torts”); Wilson v. Garcia, 471 U.S. 261, 280, 105 S. Ct. 1938, 1949, 85 L. Ed. 2d 254, 266 (1985) (holding that the statute of limitations for a Section 1983 claim is the same as for state tort actions for personal injuries), superseded by statute on other grounds, Judicial Improvements Act of 1990, Pub. L. No. 101-650, § 313(a), 104 Stat. 5089, 5114–5115 (codified as amended at 28 U.S.C. § 1658(a)). If your state has different statutes of limitations for different types of personal injury actions, courts will apply the state’s general or residual personal injury statute of limitations to your Section 1983 case. See Owens v. Okure, 488 U.S. 235, 249–250, 109 S. Ct. 573, 582, 102 L. Ed. 2d 594, 606 (1989) (“[W]here state law provides multiple statutes of limitations for personal injury actions, courts considering § 1983 claims should borrow the general or residual statute for personal injury actions.”). “General” statutes of limitations apply to all personal injury claims, but have some exceptions. “Residual” personal injury statutes of limitation are those that apply to types of personal injuries not specified elsewhere. Note that Congress has created a four-year “catch-all” statute of limitations applicable to “civil action[s] arising under an Act of Congress enacted after” December 1, 1990. 28 U.S.C. § 1658(a). This four-year statute of limitations applies to all claims “made possible by a post-1990 [congressional] enactment” that do not themselves contain a statute of limitations provision. Jones v. R.R. Donnelley & Sons Co., 541 U.S. 369, 382, 124 S. Ct. 1836, 1845, 158 L. Ed. 2d 645, 656 (2004). Do not be confused by this new four-year catch-all provision: Section 1983 was enacted before 1990 and has not been amended to make any claims possible after December 1, 1990, so courts still apply the statute of limitations established by state law.

263. City of Monterey v. Del Monte Dunes at Monterey, Ltd., 526 U.S. 687, 709, 119 S. Ct. 1624, 1638, 143 L. Ed. 2d 882, 904–905 (1999) (finding that “there can be no doubt that claims brought pursuant to [Section] 1983 sound in tort”).

264. See Owens v. Okure, 488 U.S. 235, 250–251, 109 S. Ct. 573, 582, 102 L. Ed. 2d 594, 606 (1989).

wrong.²⁶⁵ This means that in New York, you have three years to file a suit under Section 1983.²⁶⁶ You should look up the statute of limitations for personal injury suits in the state where you are filing your claim (you can usually find this information in the state code of statutes).

The statute of limitations period begins to run when the alleged harm occurred. The statute of limitations can sometimes be expanded if you could not reasonably have learned about the harm when it first occurred.²⁶⁷ For example, if the statute of limitations is three years, you have three years to file your case from the date that the injury occurred. However, if you were not reasonably able to discover the harm when it first occurred—e.g. because a surgical instrument was mistakenly left in your body and you learned about it only after it caused an infection much later—or if the injury that violated your rights continues over a period of time—for example, failure to treat a medical condition despite repeated requests for medical care—the statute of limitations may not start to run until the injury period ends. You should not assume, however, that the court will expand the statute of limitations and agree that you could not reasonably have discovered the injury at an earlier time or that your injury is continuing. Therefore, you should bring your lawsuit early enough so that all of the actions in your complaint occurred during the limitations period.

6. What to File

(a) Your Complaint

Your lawsuit begins when you file your “complaint.” Many districts provide model (template) complaint forms for Section 1983 actions. After you figure out in which district you have to file, write to the clerk of that district and ask for the model forms (in New York, you should write to the pro se clerk). If you cannot get the forms, make your own using the examples provided in Appendix A of this Chapter. You should also read the local rules of practice for the federal district court where you decide to file. You can get the local rules for a small fee from the court clerk and possibly through your prison law library.

There are several very important things that you must include in your complaint. If you miss some of these things your complaint may be dismissed (rejected), so you should make sure not to leave any of them out.

First, you must identify yourself as the “plaintiff” (the party who is bringing the suit). You also have to identify the “defendant(s)” (the party or parties you are suing).²⁶⁸ In addition, you need to 265. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 214(5) (McKinney 2019) (“The following actions must be commenced within three years: . . . an action to recover damages for a personal injury. . . .”); see Eagleston v. Guido, 41 F.3d 865, 871 (2d Cir. 1994) (finding that “[f]or [Section] 1983 actions arising in New York, the statute of limitations is three years”); Lawson v. Rochester City School Dist., 446 Fed. App’x 327, 328 (2d Cir. 2011) (noting that the statute of limitations for a §1983 claim arising in New York was still three years); see also Laboy v. Ontario Cty., 318 F. Supp. 3d 582, 587 (W.D.N.Y. 2018) (citing Lawson in regards to the statute of limitations being three years).

266. See Owens v. Okure, 488 U.S. 235, 235, 109 S. Ct. 573, 574, 102 L. Ed. 2d 594, 606 (1989) (holding that New York’s three-year statute of limitations for general personal injury suits is the statute of limitations that is applied to [Section] 1983 claims, because “where state law provides multiple statutes of limitations for personal injury actions, courts considering [Section] 1983 claims should borrow the State’s general or residual personal injury statute of limitation”).

267. Wallace v. Kato, 549 U.S. 384, 388, 127 S. Ct. 1091, 1095, 166 L. Ed. 2d 973, 980 (2007) (“[T]he accrual date of a [Section] 1983 cause of action is a question of federal law . . . governed by federal rules conforming in general to common-law tort principles. . . . [A]ccrual occurs when the plaintiff has ‘a complete and present cause of action, that is, when ‘the plaintiff can file suit and obtain relief.’” (citation omitted)); Hunt v. Bennett, 17 F.3d 1263, 1266 (10th Cir. 1994) (“Section 1983 claims accrue, for the purpose of the statute of limitations, when the plaintiff knows or has reason to know of the injury which is the basis of his action.” (quoting Johnson v. Johnson Cty. Comm’n Bd., 925 F.2d 1299, 1301 (10th Cir. 1991))); Singleton v. City of New York, 632 F.2d 185, 191 (2d Cir.1980) (holding the same); Bireline v. Seagondollar, 567 F.2d 260, 263 (4th Cir.1977) (holding the same).

268. You should name the defendants using their full, proper names. If you do not know a defendant’s full name, write down whatever identifying information you do know, such as his nickname, badge number, official position or duties, etc. Only defendants who have been adequately identified can be served with the summons and complaint. For more information on what you should do if you do not know a defendant’s name, see Part C(2)(a)

“state the grounds” for your complaint, which means you must specify the actions by the defendant(s) that violated your constitutional or other rights. When doing this, you must specifically state which of your constitutional or federal statutory rights were violated. You also must tell the court what laws give the court “subject matter jurisdiction” (the power to hear your suit). This means that if you are suing in federal court, you must state in your complaint that 28 U.S.C. § 1331²⁶⁹ and § 1343(a)(3)²⁷⁰ give the federal district courts jurisdiction over cases under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. You also have to tell the court the type of relief you are seeking—damages, injunctive relief, declaratory relief, or any combination of these. See Part C(1) of this Chapter for information on the types of relief and remedies that are available. As mentioned in Part C(5), you also have to explain why the court has personal jurisdiction over these defendants.

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure require you to make a “short and plain statement” of your claim in the complaint.²⁷¹ In your complaint, you should include a reasonably specific description of the incident or practice that is the basis for your claim. Give the court specific details such as names, dates, locations, and injuries suffered. Details help convince the court that you “state a claim for relief” and that your claim should not be dismissed. In particular, your complaint should explain how each person you name as a defendant was involved in the violation about which you are complaining. Being clear about the facts will allow the court to apply the law more accurately to your claim.

The Supreme Court has held that complaints must be “plausible” to avoid dismissal.²⁷² This means that you must include enough facts to describe what happened or is happening to you to allow a court to decide that the defendants you have named violated your rights. It is not enough just to state that the defendant(s) broke the law: you must give facts to support that conclusion. Thus, you can’t just say that “X violated my rights.” You must explain, with specifics details, how your rights were violated and how you know that it was the defendant who committed the violation. Even though courts generally look at pro se complaints (complaints by those who represent themselves without an attorney) somewhat less strict than complaints they receive from parties who have an attorney,²⁷³ your of this Chapter.

269. 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (“The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of all civil actions arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States.”). This means that they have original jurisdiction over Section 1983 actions, which are civil actions arising from a federal law.

270. 28 U.S.C. § 1343(a)(3) (“The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action authorized by law to be commenced by any person: . . . To redress the deprivation, under color of any State law, statute, ordinance, regulation, custom or usage, of any right, privilege or immunity secured by the Constitution of the United States or by any Act of Congress providing for equal rights of citizens or of all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States. . .”).

271. FED. R. CIV. P. 8(a) (“A pleading that states a claim for relief must contain (1) a short and plain statement of the grounds for the court’s jurisdiction. . . ; (2) a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief; and (3) a demand for the relief sought, which may include relief in the alternative or different types of relief.”).

272. See Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 677–680, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949–1950, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868, 883–885 (2009); Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570, 127 S. Ct. 1955, 1974, 167 L. Ed. 2d 929, 949 (2007). The Supreme Court laid out a two-step approach to determining whether a complaint should be dismissed for failure to state a claim. First, the factual and legal elements of a claim should be separated. The court must accept all of the complaint’s well-pleaded facts as true, but may disregard any legal conclusions. Second, the court must then determine whether the facts alleged in the complaint are sufficient to show that the plaintiff has a “plausible claim for relief.” In other words, a complaint must do more than allege the plaintiff’s entitlement to relief. A complaint has to “show” such an entitlement by providing sufficient facts to make its legal claims plausible.

273. See, e.g., Cohen v. Valentin, Civil No. 11-1942 (PGS), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 130300, at *8 (D.N.J. Nov. 9, 2011) (unpublished) (explaining that “the sufficiency of this pro se pleading must be construed liberally in favor of Plaintiff, even after Iqbal”) (be careful citing to unpublished cases as many jurisdictions do not allow you to cite to unpublished cases); see also Erickson v. Pardus, 551 U.S. 89, 94, 127 S. Ct. 2197, 2200, 167 L. Ed. 2d 1081, 1086 (2007) (per curiam) (reviewing a prisoner’s pro se civil rights complaint shortly after Twombly and holding that “[a] document filed pro se is ‘to be liberally construed’” (quoting Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 106, 97 S. Ct. 285, 292, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 261 (1976))).

complaint still must be plausible to survive dismissal.²⁷⁴ Therefore, a detailed account of the facts is important to make sure that your complaint is considered by the court.

(b) Including Supplemental State Claims in Your Complaint

You may want to add some supplemental state law claims to your federal claim. A state law claim is “supplemental” to a federal constitutional or statutory violation if it arises from the same core set of facts.²⁷⁵ A federal court will consider a supplemental state law claim if it is included in a complaint with a non-frivolous federal claim.²⁷⁶ For example, you could file a single complaint claiming that (1) prison officials violated your Eighth Amendment rights by failing to prevent another incarcerated person from assaulting you and (2) the officials were negligent under state tort law.²⁷⁷ For more information on state tort claims, see Chapter 17 of the JLM.

7. How to File Your Complaint

Each court has its own detailed procedures for filing a complaint. You should try to obtain a copy of the local Rules of the Court for the district where you are filing your lawsuit. You can get a copy of these rules in your prison’s law library or by writing to the clerk of the court and (sometimes) paying a small fee.

You can also ask the clerk of the district court for model Section 1983 forms and in forma pauperis papers (described below). Be sure to ask the clerk how many copies of each document you need to file. You may also need to submit a summons to the court clerk that will be issued to each defendant you are naming in the complaint. A summons is the document that orders the defendant to respond to or “answer” your complaint with their own legal papers. Appendix A-1 of this Chapter has a sample summons form.

You should file your complaint by mailing the complaint, your in forma pauperis papers, the summonses, and as many copies of those documents as the court requires all together in a sealed envelope to the clerk of the court for the federal district in which the wrongful act took place. The clerk will call for a United States Marshal to deliver a copy of the complaint and a summons to each defendant. The court clerk will return one copy of each paper to you marked “received by the clerk,” so that you will have a record of all papers that you have officially filed with the court. Although the amount of time it will take for you to receive this copy varies among courts, it should range from one to two weeks. Make sure to keep all of the documents that you receive from the court.²⁷⁸

An in forma pauperis declaration is a sworn statement in which you tell the court that you cannot afford the filing fee and other legal expenses. If the court approves your in forma pauperis declaration, you do not have to pay certain court expenses, including a fee and travel expenses (a mileage charge) for each summons delivered by the U.S. Marshal.²⁷⁹

274. See, e.g., Atherton v. D.C. Office of the Mayor, 567 F.3d 672, 681–682 (D.C. Cir. 2009) (noting liberal construction of pro se complaints but explaining that “even a pro se complainant must plead ‘factual matter’ that permits the court to infer ‘more than the mere possibility of misconduct’” (quoting Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 679, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1950, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868, 884 (2009))); see also Starr v. Baca, 652 F.3d 1202, 1215–1216 (9th Cir. 2011) (examining Twombly, Erickson, and Iqbal and finding two common principles: “[f]irst, to be entitled to the presumption of truth, allegations in a complaint or counterclaim may not simply recite the elements of a cause of action” and, “[s]econd, the factual allegations that are taken as true must plausibly suggest an entitlement to relief”).

275. 28 U.S.C. § 1367 (describing the requirements for a federal court to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over a state law claim).

276. 28 U.S.C. § 1367(a) (“[T]he district courts shall have supplemental jurisdiction over all other claims that are so related to claims in the action within such original jurisdiction that they form part of the same case or controversy under Article III of the United States Constitution.”).

277. For more information on state tort claims, see Chapter 17 of the JLM.

278. See John W. Witt et al., Section 1983 Litigation: Forms § 1 (2d ed. 2016 & Supp. 2020).

279. See, e.g., U.S. Dist. Ct., EDNY, In Forma Pauperis—Prisoner, available for download at <https://www.nyed.uscourts.gov/forms/forma-pauperis> (last visited June 11, 2020);); see also JOHN W. WITT ET AL., SECTION 1983 LITIGATION: FORMS § 7.02 (2d ed. 2016 & Supp. 2020) (providing sample Form 7-1 for “Application

In forma pauperis status does not relieve you from having to pay the filing fees associated with filing a complaint. These fees are no longer waived in the same manner that they were in the past.²⁸⁰ See Chapter 14 of the JLM to determine how you are required to pay the filing fees. If you cannot obtain a form for an in forma pauperis declaration from the clerk of the district court, use the form in Appendix A-5 of this Chapter as a model (fill in your answers to the questions) and file it with an in forma pauperis motion, an example of which is also contained in Appendix A-5.

If you wish the court to appoint an attorney for you, you should also make this request when filing to proceed in forma pauperis. See Appendix A-6 of this Chapter for a sample form to request an attorney. However, because you do not have a right to assigned counsel in Section 1983 proceedings, it will be entirely up to the court whether to grant this request.

To summarize, the following are the general steps required to file a complaint:

- (1) Determine the federal district court in which you must file. This is usually the court in the district where the harm took place. (See Appendix I of the JLM if you are in New York.)
- (2) Write to the clerk of that district court (the pro se clerk if there is one), and ask:
 - (a) For a model Section 1983 complaint form,
 - (b) For in forma pauperis papers,
 - (c) For the local rules of practice for that district,
 - (d) Whether you need a summons for each named defendant, and
 - (e) How many copies of each document (complaint, in forma pauperis declaration, and summons) you must file, then
- (3) Complete and mail to the clerk of the court:
 - (a) Your complaint and copies of the complaint, including any affidavits (use the sample complaints in Appendix A of this Chapter as a guide for drafting your complaint if the clerk does not send you model forms);
 - (b) In forma pauperis papers and copies (use the forms for an in forma pauperis motion and an in forma pauperis declaration found in Appendix A-5 of this Chapter if you cannot obtain model forms from the clerk of the district court); and
 - (c) Summonses (if necessary) and copies (see Appendix A-1 of this Chapter for a sample summons).

By mailing these documents to the clerk, you have filed your Section 1983 lawsuit. However, you must also follow-up to make sure that the papers have been properly served upon the defendants. Filing alone is not sufficient; your lawsuit will be dismissed if it is not served properly and on time.

8. What to Expect After Your Legal Papers Have Been Filed in Court

Once you file your complaint, your lawsuit has officially begun. It is your responsibility to make sure that your lawsuit continues to move forward. It is not enough to simply file your complaint and then wait for something to happen. Nothing will happen unless you stay involved.

After you file your complaint and serve the defendant(s), the defendant(s) must respond by filing an “answer.”²⁸¹ Defendants are supposed to file answers within twenty-one days of receiving the complaint,²⁸² but some defendants ask for extra time. The defendant’s answer usually denies that your allegations (claims) or statements of the facts are true.

to Proceed In Forma Pauperis”).

280. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(b) (outlining procedures for prisoner payment of filing fees).

281. For more information, see Chapter 6 of the JLM.

282. FED. R. CIV. P. 12(a)(1)(A)(i) (“A defendant must serve an answer: (i) within 21 days after being served with the summons and complaint. . .”).

Rather than filing an answer, the defendant may first file a motion to dismiss your complaint under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b).²⁸³ In the motion to dismiss, a defendant may argue that even if your allegations are true, they do not make out a legal claim that can be granted relief. Basically, the defendant may argue that your complaints are not violations of statutory or constitutional rights covered by Section 1983. The defendant may also argue that the court lacks subject matter over one or more of the claims in your complaint, that the venue (the place where you filed the lawsuit) is incorrect, or that the court lacks personal jurisdiction over one or more of the defendants. The court should give you the opportunity to amend (make changes to) your complaint if you left something important out of your original complaint. If the district court dismisses your complaint without letting you amend it first, you may have grounds for an appeal.²⁸⁴

If the defendant does not respond to your complaint at all, you can move (apply) for a “default judgment.” If the court grants you a default judgment, you win your case because the defendants did not answer. Although the court probably will not grant your motion for a default judgment, it may force the defendant to respond.

Another way a defendant might try to end your lawsuit is by filing for summary judgment under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56.²⁸⁵ In a summary judgment motion, the defendants argue that there is no real dispute over the facts, and they should win on the undisputed facts. For example, the defendants may claim that they are immune from suit for your claim.²⁸⁶ If the defendants make a summary judgment motion, you must show that there is a “genuine dispute as to material fact”²⁸⁷ that requires a trial in your lawsuit. To raise a genuine dispute as to material fact, you must provide factual support that would be admissible in evidence for each element of your claim against each defendant. For example, if you are suing supervisory officials, you must provide some evidence that the particular officials are responsible for what happened. Factual support can be your own affidavit or declaration, the affidavit or declaration of other people who witnessed the event, or relevant documents like letters from the defendant(s).²⁸⁸ If you need discovery (the opportunity to obtain more information) in order to defend against a summary judgment motion, you can ask to delay the motion, but you will have to explain to the court what discovery you want and why you think it would help. Since statements in response to a summary judgment motion must be sworn to, you cannot just rely on your complaint unless the complaint is verified. If a verified complaint does not address all the relevant issues, you will still need to support it with a declaration.²⁸⁹

283. FED. R. CIV. P. 12(b)(6) (“Every defense to a claim for relief in any pleading must be asserted in the responsive pleading if one is required. But a party may assert the following defenses by motion: . . . (6) failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. . .”).

284. See Platsky v. CIA, 953 F.2d 26, 29 (2d Cir. 1991) (holding that the pro se plaintiff whose claim was dismissed should be given an opportunity to amend his pleadings and refile his complaint). But see Woodard v. Hardenfelder, 845 F. Supp. 960, 969 (E.D.N.Y. 1994) (holding that “leave to file an amended complaint is only appropriate when, based on the plaintiff’s first complaint, it is conceivable that an amended complaint could state a cause of action for a violation of the plaintiff’s civil rights”). Taken together, these cases mean that you should be given a chance to amend your original complaint with additional facts that support your legal claim, unless the court determines that based upon what you wrote in your original complaint, there is no possible way that you can prove additional facts to strengthen your legal claim.

285. FED. R. CIV. P. 56(a) (“A party may move for summary judgment, identifying each claim or defense—or the part of each claim or defense—on which summary judgment is sought.”).

286. For more information on other possible defenses, see Part C(3) of this Chapter.

287. FED. R. CIV. P. 56(a) (“The court shall grant summary judgment if the movant shows that there is no genuine dispute as to any material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.”).

288. If you give the court documents, you must provide a proper “foundation” (explanation) for the documents so the court knows what the document is, when you received it, who gave it to you, etc. You must explain in an affidavit or declaration what the documents are (for example, that the document is the notice the lieutenant gave you that you were found guilty of a particular disciplinary offense, or that it is the grievance you filed and the decision you received, etc.).

289. See Chapter 6 of the JLM for explanations of documents such as affidavits and declarations.

The defendants in your lawsuit may try to stop your case by making it “moot.” A lawsuit is moot when it includes claims that no longer exist. Courts will not hear lawsuits that become moot. For example, if you ask for an injunction against certain bad prison conditions and the prison then improves the conditions, your lawsuit would be moot. Mootness is usually decided when the defendant files a summary judgment motion. To avoid having your claim dismissed because of mootness, you can request money damages for injuries you have already incurred—a damages claim is never moot.²⁹⁰ You can also ask the court to decide if the changes made by prison officials really solve the problem and are not just temporary.²⁹¹

If your suit is not dismissed, the next stage of the proceedings may be the “discovery” or investigation stage. Discovery is the process where each party requests information from the other party about the case. See Chapter 8 of the JLM for more information on discovery in a federal civil case. It is your responsibility, not the court’s, to keep your case moving. Once you have filed your complaint, you should begin discovery. This means sending discovery request to the defendants. Defendants often ignore discovery requests from pro se plaintiffs such as incarcerated people. If the defendants in your case do this, you should write a letter to the defendants, requesting a response “in a timely manner,” and stating that if you do not hear from them you will write to the judge. Most courts now have what are called “meet and confer” requirements. Under these requirements, you must try to settle any discovery disputes with the defendant before you ask the court for help. If you do not hear from the defendants after you write to them, or if you are unable to resolve a discovery dispute with them, you should write to the judge after a week or two.²⁹² Judges want cases to move quickly. If your discovery demands are proper, the judge should order the defendants to fulfill these demands or help you narrow the request so they may be met. See Appendix A of Chapter 8 of the JLM for examples of letters that you may send to defendants and judges.

If you receive discovery requests from the defendants, you should make sure to respond quickly and honestly. This is because you are required to follow the rules of the court when you file a lawsuit. In addition, if you ignore discovery requests or delay your response to them, you might hurt your case and make the judge less likely to believe you in the future.

If you are threatened or punished by prison officials for bringing your suit, you should tell the court or your attorney (if you have been assigned one) as soon as possible. You should also tell the court if your appointed attorney has not communicated with you.

If the court dismisses your suit, make sure that you understand the reasons for the dismissal. A lawsuit can be dismissed with or without prejudice. If the court dismissed your suit “without prejudice,” you can file your suit again.²⁹³ If your suit is dismissed “with prejudice,” you cannot re-file your complaint. Instead, you must appeal the court’s decision to dismiss your complaint before the deadline to appeal.

290. See City of Richmond v. J.A. Croson Co., 488 U.S. 469, 478 n.1, 109 S. Ct. 706, 713 n.1, 102 L. Ed. 2d 854, 872 n.1 (1989) (stating that the end of an affirmative action program did not make a challenge to the program moot because the plaintiff had asserted a claim for monetary damages).

291. See Weinstein v. Bradford, 423 U.S. 147, 148–149, 96 S. Ct. 347, 348–349, 46 L. Ed. 2d 350, 352–353 (1975) (holding that the release of the plaintiff prisoner on parole mooted his challenge to earlier parole board proceedings, but also noting that where an issue is so short-lived that it will not continue throughout the time it takes to litigate (“capable of repetition, yet evading review”), the issue will not be declared moot if there is a “reasonable expectation that the same complaining party would be subjected to the same action again”); see also Davis v. FEC, 554 U.S. 724, 735, 128 S. Ct. 2759, 2769, 171 L. Ed. 2d 737, 749 (2008) (noting that “the established exception to mootness for disputes capable of repetition, yet evading review . . . applies where ‘(1) the challenged action is in its duration too short to be fully litigated prior to cessation or expiration, and (2) there is a reasonable expectation that the same complaining party will be subject to the same action again.’”) (quoting FEC v. Wisconsin Right to Life, Inc., 551 U.S. 449, 462, 127 S. Ct. 2652, 2662, 168 L. Ed. 2d 329, 342 (2007)).

292. See Chapter 8 of the JLM, “Obtaining Information to Prepare Your Case: The Process of Discovery.”

293. For example, if you filed in the wrong district court, you may be allowed to re-file in the right court. Your suit could also be dismissed without prejudice because of a technical problem in your pleadings. If the statute of limitations has not ended, you may have the chance to fix your pleadings and re-file your complaint.

D. Alternate Ways to Bring Lawsuits

1. Filing Your Lawsuit as a Class Action

Section 1983 claims can also be brought as “class action” suits. A class action is a lawsuit brought on behalf of a group of people who experience the same harm or have the same complaint—in other words, all people in the group are “similarly situated.”²⁹⁴

Class actions are very complicated and can take years. It is also very difficult to bring a class action without an attorney. Losing a class action affects the rights of all class members, so having a good lawyer is very important. Courts will probably not “certify” (recognize) a case as a class action if you do not have a lawyer. If you believe that other incarcerated people like you are experiencing similar mistreatment, you should talk with a lawyer about whether bringing a class action would be appropriate.

A class action will only be recognized by the court if it meets all of the following conditions:

- (1) The “class” (group) of persons in a similar position must be too large for each person to bring his own lawsuit or even join individual lawsuits;
- (2) The prison officials must have acted or refused to act on grounds that apply to the entire class;
- (3) The personal claims of the main plaintiff(s) (the “class representative(s)”) must be typical of the other plaintiffs; and
- (4) The class representative(s) must fairly and adequately protect the rights of the other members of the class.²⁹⁵

Class actions are appropriate only if the wrong you suffered was also suffered by the other plaintiffs in the suit. All of you together will be considered a “class.” The class members do not need to know each other, but you must have a way to reasonably identify most of them, so they can be made aware of the suit (notice) and given an opportunity to decide whether to participate.²⁹⁶ Again, in order to have your class “certified”, you will probably need to get a lawyer or ask the court to appoint one, because class actions are very complicated.

If you decide to proceed on your own and feel that the case fits the requirements of a class action suit, you should name yourself and “all others similarly situated” as the plaintiffs (for example, “John Smith individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated”). In the complaint, you should include all the facts related to the wrongs done to you and also provide whatever information you have about similar treatment of other incarcerated people. The court will then decide, on the basis of the facts you provide, whether or not a class action would be proper. If the court allows the class action, it may

294. There are two main advantages offered by a class action. First, the suit will not become “moot” if one plaintiff is transferred or released (a suit is “moot” when the suit no longer applies to the person or persons who brought the suit). See U.S. Parole Comm’n v. Geraghty, 445 U.S. 388, 404, 100 S. Ct. 1202, 1212–1213, 63 L. Ed. 2d 479, 495 (1980) (holding that the resolution of the named plaintiff’s substantive claim does not necessarily moot all other issues in the case, even if class certification has been denied so far); Sosna v. Iowa, 419 U.S. 393, 401, 95 S. Ct. 553, 558, 42 L. Ed. 2d 532, 541 (1975) (holding that when a claim is no longer relevant for a named plaintiff in a class action suit, the claim may still be alive and not moot for the class of persons the named plaintiff has been certified to represent). But see Sze v. INS, 153 F.3d 1005, 1010 (9th Cir. 1998) (noting two exceptions to Sosna’s mootness doctrine: where, in a proposed class action, plaintiffs’ claims are “inherently transitory” and “there is a constantly changing putative class,” leaving the court no time to certify the class; and where “but for the ‘relation back’ of a later class certification, putative class members’ claims would be barred by the statute of limitations.” (quoting Wade v. Kirkland, 118 F.3d 667, 670 (9th Cir. 1997))), overruled in part on other grounds en banc by United States v. Hovsepian, 359 F.3d 1144, 1161 (9th Cir. 2004). The second advantage of bringing a class action is that, if you win, each member of the class can enforce the judgment or injunction on behalf of the other class members, which avoids separate enforcement actions. See, e.g., Daniels v. City of New York, 198 F.R.D. 409, 422 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (noting that a judgment in favor of class-action plaintiffs challenging New York’s stop and frisk policy would avoid the need to bring separate enforcement actions).

295. FED. R. CIV. P. 23(a).

296. FED. R. CIV. P. 23(c)(2).

appoint an attorney to represent the class. If the court does not recognize the class action, you will be allowed to amend your complaint and sue by yourself.

2. Using State Law and/or State Courts

There are certain advantages to suing in federal court, such as easier and more generous discovery rules and potentially higher damage awards. But you may want to file in state court if you have only state law claims or if there are other advantages to bringing your Section 1983 claim in a particular state court.

(a) Bringing Your Section 1983 Action in State Court

Even if you have a federal law claim, you may want to consider bringing your Section 1983 action in state court. The advantages and disadvantages of federal court compared with state court are different depending on the state. Some state courts might have more sympathetic judges, more favorable procedural rules, or fewer cases to hear than federal courts. State courts may, however, place restrictions on damages or the amount you can recover for attorney fees. State courts also have different immunity rules (restricting who you can and cannot sue) than federal courts, which might be helpful or harmful to your lawsuit depending on which state you are in and whom you want to sue. You should research the law and practices of your state to see if it has any of these advantages or disadvantages.

Bringing your Section 1983 action in state court will also avoid some, but not all of the restrictions of the PLRA. For example, the barriers in the PLRA for incarcerated people filing in forma pauperis (filing as a poor person in order to avoid paying many of the normal fees and costs) do not apply in state court (although, as mentioned above, many states have their own PLRA-like laws that may restrict in forma pauperis filing). Another advantage is that the requirement that you exhaust all of your administrative remedies before bringing your Section 1983 claim does apply in state court.

(b) Turning Your Federal Civil Rights Claim into a State Law Claim

By bringing a state claim (instead of a federal civil rights claim) in state court, you can avoid the Prison Litigation Reform Act (“PLRA”), since the PLRA only applies to claims under federal law.²⁹⁷ You can do this by converting your federal civil rights claim into a state tort claim or other state law claim.²⁹⁸ For example, a claim in federal court for “deliberate indifference to serious medical needs” in violation of the Eighth Amendment could instead be brought in state court as a tort action for medical malpractice. Or, if a disciplinary hearing denied you due process, you could file in state court for violation of the state regulations governing prison disciplinary proceedings.

In addition to avoiding the PLRA, you may have a better chance of winning if you file in state court because of the lower standard that you, as the plaintiff, will have to meet to prove your case. For example, a state court may find that you have a valid state medical malpractice tort claim even if you cannot show the prison officials were “deliberately indifferent” as required in a Section 1983 claim.²⁹⁹

297. See Kozlowski v. Coughlin, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19294, at *10–14 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 19, 2001) (unpublished) (explaining that Congress intended the PLRA to limit federal control in operation of the prison system, and that federal rights are limited to those created by federal law). You may want to avoid the PLRA because it is designed to make it harder for prisoners to take their claim to federal court. For example, the PLRA makes prisoners who file in forma pauperis (as a poor person) pay the full $350 filing fee (as well as an additional $450 if you wish to appeal the court’s decision). It will also give you a “strike” if you have a case dismissed as frivolous, malicious, or failing to state a valid legal claim. If you get three strikes, you will no longer be able to file claims in forma pauperis and will have to pay the full amount of court costs and fees. For more information on the PLRA, see Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act.”

298. For more information on state tort claims, see Chapter 17 of the JLM, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions.”

299. See Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 104–106, 97 S. Ct. 285, 291–292, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 260–261 (1976) (concluding that the “deliberate indifference” standard that must be met to prove a Section 1983 claim against a prison official for denial of medical care consists of “unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain” or conduct that is

However, many state statutes contain PLRA-like restrictions as well.³⁰⁰ You need to research the law in your own state before deciding to file a claim in state court.

Another possible advantage of bringing your claim in state court is that you may be able to enforce rights that are not granted under federal law. State constitutions may protect rights that are not recognized by the U.S. Constitution. This is because the U.S. Constitution protects a minimum level of individual rights and allows the states to provide greater rights for state citizens through their own constitutions, statutes, and rule-making authority.³⁰¹ Again, you will need to research your own state's constitution and statutes to find out whether you can sue for violations of any of those provisions. Please note that if you turn your claim into a state law claim, there may be statutes in the state (such as immunity statutes or statutes about jurisdiction) that can impact money damages. For more information on state tort claims, be sure to see Chapter 17 of the JLM.

E. Special Concerns for People Incarcerated in Federal Prisons

1. Bivens Actions

There is no statute similar to Section 1983 that clearly allows individuals to sue federal officials, rather than state officials, who violate federal rights while acting under color of federal law (acting in their official role as federal officials). However, the Supreme Court has held that, even without a specific statute, federal officials may be sued for damages and “injunctive relief” for violations of your constitutional rights.³⁰² These lawsuits are usually referred to as Bivens actions, named after the case “repugnant to the conscience of mankind,” and not merely the “inadvertent failure to provide adequate medical care” (quoting Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 173, 96 S. Ct. 2909, 2925, 49 L. Ed. 2d 859, 874 (1976) and Louisiana ex rel. Francis v. Resweber, 329 U.S. 459, 472, 67 S. Ct. 374, 380, 91 L. Ed. 422, 430 (1947))).

300. See, e.g., CAL. CIV. PROC. CODE §§ 391–391.7 (West 2004) (governing vexatious (troublesome) litigants in general, and preventing those litigants that a court has found to be troublesome from filing future lawsuits without the permission of a judge); FLA. STAT. ANN. § 57.085(6)–(7) (West 2004) (allowing a court to dismiss a prisoner's claim if it is frivolous, malicious, or harassing, and requiring that a prisoner who has litigated as an indigent [a person who has demonstrated that he is unable to pay court costs and fees] twice within the previous three years receive permission from a judge before going ahead with another suit), invalidated in part by Mitchell v. Moore, 786 So. 2d 521, 528 (Fla. 2001); GA. CODE ANN. §§ 42-12-1–42-12-9 (West 1996) (governing payment of certain court fees and costs by a prisoner, and requiring that any prisoner who has filed three or more actions that were later dismissed as frivolous or malicious be barred from filing any future actions unless the prisoner is under imminent danger of serious physical injury); TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM. CODE ANN. §§ 14.001–14.014 (West 1995) (requiring that prisoners exhaust their administrative remedies before filing a claim in state court and that the state court claim be filed within 31 days of when the prisoner receives a written decision from the administrative grievance system, allowing courts to dismiss claims that are frivolous or malicious, and governing costs and fees that the court may require a prisoner to pay).

301. See People v. Pavone, 26 N.Y.3d 629, 639, 47 N.E.3d 56, 64, 26 N.Y.S.3d 728, 736 (2015) (“This Court has previously, and repeatedly, applied the State Constitution . . . to define a broader scope of protection than that accorded by the Federal Constitution in cases concerning individual rights and liberties . . . Thus, our analysis of defendant's claim is grounded in our recognition of the greater expanse of our State Constitution.”) (internal quotations and citations omitted); State v. LaValle, 3 N.Y.3d 88, 129, 817 N.E.2d 341, 366, 783 N.Y.S.2d 485, 510 (2004) (“It bears reiterating here that on innumerable occasions this Court has given the State Constitution an independent construction, affording the rights and liberties of the citizens of this State even more protection than may be secured under the United States Constitution.”) (internal quotations omitted); Cooper v. Morin, 49 N.Y.2d 69, 79, 399 N.E.2d 1188, 1193, 424 N.Y.S.2d 168, 174 (1979) (“We have not hesitated when we concluded that the Federal Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court fell short of adequate protection for our citizens to rely upon the principle that that document defines the minimum level of individual rights and leaves the States free to provide greater rights for its citizens through its Constitution, statutes or rule-making authority.”) (internal citations omitted).

302. See Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388, 394, 91 S. Ct. 1999, 2003, 29 L. Ed. 2d 619, 625–626 (1971) (holding that plaintiff could sue federal agents directly through the 4th Amendment for violating their rights); see also Carlson v. Green, 446 U.S. 14, 18–20, 100 S. Ct. 1468, 1471–1472, 64 L. Ed. 2d 15, 23–24 (1980) (finding that the widow of deceased federal prisoner had a Bivens remedy directly under the 8th Amendment). But see FDIC v. Meyer, 510 U.S. 471, 486, 114 S. Ct. 996, 1006, 127 L. Ed. 2d 308, 323–324 (1994) (refusing to extend Bivens doctrine to suits against federal agencies).

where the Supreme Court ruled that the Fourth Amendment guarantees freedom from unreasonable “search and seizures” and creates a cause of action when this freedom is violated by a federal agent.

A Bivens action is the federal equivalent of a Section 1983 action. Therefore, most of the discussion of Section 1983 in Part B also applies to a federal Bivens action. Before continuing, you should review all of Part B. Appendix A of this Chapter provides sample Section 1983 complaints, which can also be used for Bivens actions. This Part explains the differences between Section 1983 suits and Bivens actions.

2. Exhaustion of Remedies

Before filing a Bivens suit against federal officials, you must exhaust (use up) any and all available administrative remedies, such as internal grievance procedures, regardless of whether you are suing for injunctive relief, declaratory relief, or money damages.³⁰³ See Chapter 14 of the JLM for more information.

3. History of Bivens Actions in the Supreme Court

Since the original case in 1971, the Supreme Court has only ever approved a Bivens action in two other cases.³⁰⁴ The first case, Davis v. Passman, was a Fifth Amendment gender-discrimination case, where a Congressman fired his administrative assistant because she was a woman.³⁰⁵ In that case, the Supreme Court held that she could sue for damages under a Bivens action because her right to Due Process under the Fifth Amendment was violated.³⁰⁶ The second case, Carlson v. Green, was an Eighth Amendment Cruel and Unusual Punishment case where a mother sued federal prison officials after her son died because the prison failed to properly treat his asthma.³⁰⁷ In Carlson, the Court held that the family was allowed to bring a Bivens action to get damages for the prison’s violation of the son’s Eighth Amendment rights.³⁰⁸

Besides these three cases, the Supreme Court has never approved of any awards of damages based on Bivens Actions. Recently, the Supreme Court has limited Bivens Actions to cases that are similar to one of these three cases.³⁰⁹ Due to this, who you can sue, and what you can write in your complaint, has been severely limited.

4. Whom You Can Sue

In bringing a Bivens action, you are generally limited to suing the federal official who violated your federal constitutional rights. When you sue for money damages (as opposed to a different type of remedy like declaratory relief), you can sue the federal official only in his individual capacity,³¹⁰ not in 303. See Booth v. Churner, 532 U.S. 731, 741, 121 S. Ct. 1819, 1825, 149 L. Ed. 2d 958, 966–967 (2001) (holding that the PLRA requires that all administrative remedies be exhausted before filing suit, regardless of the form of relief sought).

304. See Ziglar v. Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. 1843, 1854–1857, 198 L. Ed. 2d 290, 305–309 (2017) (explaining that the Supreme Court has only allowed plaintiffs to bring a Bivens remedy in two cases other than United States v. Bivens and listing cases where the Court refused to extend Bivens to other contexts).

305. Davis v. Passman, 442 U.S. 228, 99 S. Ct. 2264, 60 L. Ed. 2d 846 (1979).

306. Davis v. Passman, 442 U.S. 228, 248–249, 99 S. Ct. 2264, 2279, 60 L. Ed. 2d 846, 865 (1979).

307. Carlson v. Green, 446 U.S. 14, 100 S. Ct. 1468, 64 L. Ed. 2d 15 (1980).

308. Carlson v. Green, 446 U.S. 14, 18, 100 S. Ct. 1468, 1471, 64 L. Ed. 2d 15, 23 (1980).

309. See Hernandez v. Mesa, 140 S. Ct. 735, 742–734, 206 L. Ed. 2d 29, 40–42 (2020) (explaining that Bivens remedies are in tension with “the Constitution’s separation of legislative and judicial power”); Ziglar v. Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. 1843, 1855–1857, 198 L. Ed. 2d 290, 307–309 (2017) (describing Bivens, Davis, and Carlson as in tension with more recent case law and noting that it is a “disfavored judicial activity” to expand Bivens remedies to new contexts) (internal citation and quotation marks omitted).

310. To show that a federal official has acted in his individual capacity, it is generally necessary to show personal involvement. See, e.g., Volpe v. Nassau County, 915 F. Supp. 2d 284, 299 (E.D.N.Y. 2013) (noting that “the complaint [was] devoid of any reference to actions taken by [the defendant] in violation of the plaintiffs’ constitutional rights. . .”); Caidor v. Tryon, 11-CV-6379L, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 119539, at *6 (W.D.N.Y. Oct. 5, 2011) (unpublished) (noting that “to establish a Bivens claim, a plaintiff must allege facts showing that the individual defendants participated in the alleged constitutional violation.”); Goldberg v. Rocky Hill, 973 F.2d 70, his official capacity.³¹¹ This is because “official capacity” suits are considered to be the same as suits against the government, and the federal government has “sovereign immunity,” meaning that they cannot be sued.³¹² You also cannot bring a Bivens action against a federal agency³¹³ or a private corporation that contracts with the federal government to operate prison facilities.³¹⁴ In Corrections Services Corporation v. Malesko, the Supreme Court held that it would be unfair to allow Bivens suits against private corporations and not federal agencies. Violations by these private corporations, the Court said, are best handled through tort remedies available to incarcerated people.³¹⁵ It is not yet clear whether employees of private corporations contracting with the federal prisons may be sued under Bivens. While some courts have found that Malesko excluded only private entities and not private individuals from Bivens actions,³¹⁶ others have found that neither private entities nor their employees can be sued.³¹⁷

5. What You Can Complain About: Will a Court Hear your Bivens Action?

Since the Supreme Court’s decision in Ziglar, federal courts will only be allowed to hear your Bivens action if it is the same context as one of the three cases mentioned in part E(3). The Supreme Court has said that if your case is different in a meaningful way from the previous Bivens cases they decided, then the context is new and you cannot bring a Bivens action. For example, if your case is based on a violation of your First Amendment rights, that would be considered a new context and you could not bring a Bivens action. However, even if your case also involves a Fourth, Fifth, or Eighth 73 (2d Cir. 1992) (noting that “to establish personal liability in a [Section] 1983 action, it is enough to show that the official, acting under color of state law, caused the deprivation of a federal right.”).

311. See Tapia-Tapia v. Potter, 322 F.3d 742, 746 (1st Cir. 2003) (holding that the Postmaster General cannot be sued in his official capacity under Bivens); Affiliated Prof'l Home Health Care Agency v. Shalala, 164 F.3d 282, 286 (5th Cir. 1999) (noting that Bivens “provides a cause of action only against government officers in their individual capacities.”); Buford v. Runyon, 160 F.3d 1199, 1203 (8th Cir. 1998) (holding that a Bivens claim cannot be brought against a federal official in his official capacity); Randall v. United States, 95 F.3d 339, 345 (4th Cir. 1996) (noting that Bivens actions must be brought against federal officials individually); Robinson v. Overseas Military Sales Corp., 21 F.3d 502, 510 (2d Cir. 1994) (stating that a Bivens action “must be brought against the federal officers involved in their individual capacities.”).

312. See Robinson v. Overseas Military Sales Corp., 21 F.3d 502, 510 (2d Cir. 1994) (“Under the doctrine of sovereign immunity, an action for damages will not lie against the United States absent consent. Because an action against . . . federal officers in their official capacities is essentially a suit against the United States, such suits are also barred under the doctrine of sovereign immunity, unless such immunity is waived.”). See the discussion of state sovereign immunity under the 11th Amendment in Part C(3)(a) of this Chapter. The discussion generally applies to the federal government as well.

313. See FDIC v. Meyer, 510 U.S. 471, 486, 114 S. Ct. 996, 1006, 127 L. Ed. 2d 308, 323 (1994) (finding a damages remedy against federal agencies inappropriate and inconsistent with Bivens because of the “potentially enormous financial burden for the Federal Government”).

314. Corr. Servs. Corp. v. Malesko, 534 U.S. 61, 63, 122 S. Ct. 515, 517, 151 L. Ed. 2d 456, 461 (2001) (refusing to extend Bivens to allow recovery against a private company operating a halfway house under contract with the Federal Bureau of Prisons).

315. See Corr. Servs. Corp. v. Malesko, 534 U.S. 61, 72–73, 122 S. Ct. 515, 522, 151 L. Ed. 2d 456, 466–467 (2001) (“Nor are we confronted with a situation in which claimants . . . lack effective remedies. . . . For example, federal prisoners in private facilities enjoy a parallel tort remedy that is unavailable to prisoners housed in government facilities.”).

316. See Sarro v. Cornell Corr., Inc., 248 F. Supp. 2d 52, 58–61 (D.R.I. 2003) (finding private prison guards to be federal actors under Bivens because they are considered state actors within the meaning of § 1983 and act under the color of federal law). But see LaCedra v. Donald W. Wyatt Det. Facility, 334 F. Supp. 2d 114, 141 (D.R.I. 2004) (holding that no Bivens action can be brought against employees of a public corporation because they are not federal agents and expressly disagreeing with the district court ruling in Sarro).

317. See Holly v. Scott, 434 F.3d 287, 296 (4th Cir. 2006) (dismissing Bivens lawsuit brought by prisoner in a privately run federal prison against prison officials because he could seek relief under state law); Peoples v. CCA Det. Ctrs., 422 F.3d 1090, 1104–1105 (10th Cir. 2005) (finding Bivens actions are not available against private prison employees because other remedies, such as negligence actions, are available), vacated in part by an equally divided court en banc, 449 F.3d 1097 (10th Cir. 2006).

Amendment issue, it still might be considered a different context. For instance, if the rank of the officers you are suing is different from the officers in one the previous Bivens cases, that could be considered a meaningful difference.³¹⁸ Figure 3 below provides examples of Bivens actions that were denied because the context of each case was considered meaningfully different.

Case	Type of Law Suit
Bush v. Lucas , 462 U.S. 367, 390, 103 S. Ct. 2404, 2417, 76 L. Ed. 2d 648, 665 (1983)	First Amendment lawsuit against a federal employer
Chappell v. Wallace , 462 U.S. 296, 297, 305, 103 S. Ct. 2362, 2364, 2368, 76 L. Ed. 2d 586, 589, 594 (1983)	Race-discrimination lawsuit against military officers
United States v. Stanley , 483 U.S. 669, 684, 107 S. Ct. 3054, 3064, 97 L. Ed. 2d 550, 567 (1987)	Substantive due process lawsuit against military officers
Schweiker v. Chilicky , 487 U.S. 412, 414, 108 S. Ct. 2460, 2463, 101 L. Ed. 2d 370, 375 (1988)	Procedural due process lawsuit against Social Security officials
FDIC v. Meyer , 510 U.S. 471, 473–474, 114 S. Ct. 996, 999, 127 L. Ed. 2d 308, 315–316 (1994)	Wrongful Termination Suit against a Federal Agency
Minnecci v. Pollard , 565 U.S. 118, 120, 132 S. Ct. 617, 620, 181 L. Ed. 2d 606, 610 (2012)	Eighth Amendment Suit Against prison guards at a private prison.

Figure 3: Examples of Bivens actions that were denied.³¹⁹

Additionally, federal courts may refuse to hear Bivens complaints based on violations of the Fifth Amendment’s Due Process Clause³²⁰ that fall within the category of less serious harms (like removal of personal items).³²¹ For harms that are simple tort violations, you should sue using the Federal Tort Claims Act (“FTCA”),³²² rather than Bivens action. The FTCA is a statute that authorizes damages suits against the federal government for actions by federal employees who, within the scope of their employment, negligently or wrongfully inflict harm on people or their property.³²³ You begin a FTCA claim by submitting Form 95, “Claim for Damage, Injury, or Death,” and requesting money damages from the federal agency whose employee allegedly committed the harmful action.³²⁴ Many FTCA cases are resolved at the agency level through negotiation and eventual settlements. However, if your state FTCA claim is denied, you may file suit in federal court. But remember, the judge will dismiss your case if you go to federal court without exhausting the administrative remedy.³²⁵

318. See Ziglar v. Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. 1843, 1860, 198 L. Ed. 2d 290, 311–312 (2017).

319. See Ziglar v. Abbasi, 137 S. Ct. 1843, 1857, 198 L. Ed. 2d 290, 308–309 (2017).

320. The 5th and 14th Amendments to the Constitution each contain a Due Process Clause. The 5th Amendment’s clause applies to the federal government; the 14th Amendment’s applies to states.

321. See, e.g., Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 525–526, 533, 104 S. Ct. 3194, 3200, 3204, 82 L. Ed. 2d 393, 402–403, 407 (1984) (holding that the 4th Amendment’s prohibition on unreasonable searches and seizures did not apply to searches of prison cells or seizures of prisoner property, and that such seizures did not violate the 14th Amendment’s Due Process Clause if a remedy was available after the seizure); Daniels v. Williams, 474 U.S. 327, 328, 106 S. Ct. 662, 663, 88 L. Ed. 2d 662, 666 (1986) (holding that “the Due Process Clause is simply not implicated by a negligent act of an official causing unintended loss of or injury to life, liberty, or property.”).

322. Federal Tort Claims Act, 28 U.S.C. § 1346(b).

323. A person acts negligently when he fails to use the care that a reasonably prudent person would use in the same circumstance. Negligent, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019). A person acts wrongfully when he commits an act that will damage another person’s rights—even if that action is not a crime. Wrongful Conduct, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

324. You may obtain this form by writing to the clerk of the federal district court in which you plan to file your action. Form 95 is also available at http://www.justice.gov/civil/docs_forms/SF-95.pdf (last visited Aug. 22, 2020).

325. See Deutsch v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, 737 F. Supp. 261, 266 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) (holding that failure to file an administrative claim will bar a plaintiff from suing under the Federal Tort Claims Act).

6. What You Should File

If you are suing for injunctive relief and money damages in a Bivens action, you must serve (provide) a copy of the summons and complaint to: (1) the named defendants, (2) the U.S. Attorney for the district in which you bring your suit, and (3) the Attorney General of the United States in Washington, D.C.³²⁶ If you are suing in a Bivens action for only money damages, you need to serve the summons and complaint to: (1) the U.S. Attorney for the district in which you bring your suit, (2) the Attorney General of the United States in Washington D.C., and (3) the officer or employee being sued.³²⁷ You must serve these papers using either registered or certified mail.³²⁸

7. Where to File

If you are seeking injunctive (an order from the court to the person you sued to do something or to stop doing something) or declaratory (a court statement of your rights) relief, you may file your lawsuit in the federal district where any defendant lives, where the events complained of occurred or are occurring, or where you currently live.³²⁹ If, however, you are suing for money damages only, you must file suit in the federal district where all the defendants live or the district where your claim arose (where the events you are complaining about occurred).³³⁰ As mentioned in Part C(5), you will also need to show that the court you are filing your case in has personal jurisdiction (power to make a valid judgement) over these defendants. Always make sure that you show that the court has personal jurisdiction over your case, because your case will be dismissed if a Judge does not believe their court has personal jurisdiction over your case.

F. Conclusion

If your constitutional rights have been violated you may be able to obtain relief by suing state and local officials under 42 U.S.C. Section 1983 or suing federal officials through a Bivens action. Through these suits, you may receive monetary relief, injunctive relief, and/or declaratory judgment. In a Section 1983 claim against state and local officials you can sue officials in their official capacities as representatives of the state. However, when suing federal officials based on a Bivens action you may only sue the federal officials in their individual capacity. (Refer to Part E of this chapter to review the special requirements for filing Bivens actions.) Appendix A of this chapter provides helpful examples of forms for making your claim, such as a summons form, a sample temporary restraining order, and a sample full complaint. Remember to read Chapter 14 of the JLM on the Prison Litigation Reform Act before starting your Section 1983 claim.

326. FED. R. CIV. P. 4(i)(1).

327. FED. R. CIV. P. 4(i)(3).

328. FED. R. CIV. P. 4(i)(1). (3). You can send certified mail by bringing the correspondence to the mail room staff fully prepared for mailing with the appropriate stamps. You must pay for the cost of postage. To determine the price, you can review the postal chart(s). You may follow similar procedures for sending registered mail. There are many ways to try to find the addresses for those being served. One way is to send a letter to the last known address with "Return Service Requested. Do Not Forward." written on the envelope. The letter will be returned to you with the new address if there is a new address on file. Another way is to ask the post office if there is a forwarding address available for the individual you wish to serve. If you are able to use the internet, you may conduct a basic internet search to find the phone number or address of the individual, or call information for this data. Or, you may use social media to find this information.

329. 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e)(1) ("A civil action in which a defendant is an officer or employee of the United States . . . may, except as otherwise provided by law, be brought in any judicial district in which (A) a defendant resides, (B) a substantial part of the events or omissions giving rise to the claim occurred, or a substantial part of property that is the subject of the action is situated, or (C) the plaintiff resides if no real property is involved in the action.").

330. See Stafford v. Briggs, 444 U.S. 527, 544, 100 S. Ct. 774, 785, 63 L. Ed. 2d 1, 15 (1980) (finding that under 28 U.S.C. § 1391(b), "suits against private persons for money damages must be brought 'in the judicial district where all defendants reside, or in which the claim arose'").

APPENDIX A

Forms and Samples

This Appendix contains the following materials:

- A-1. Sample Summons Form
- A-2. Sample Section 1983 Complaint Form
- A-3. Form for an Affidavit
- A-4. Order to Show Cause and Temporary Restraining Order (“TRO”)
- A-5. In Forma Pauperis (“IFP”) Papers
 - a. Notice of Sample Motion to Proceed In Forma Pauperis
 - b. Declaration in Support of Request to Proceed In Forma Pauperis
- A-6. Application for Appointment of Counsel
- A-7. “Prisoner Authorization”
- A-8. Sample Language for Statement of Facts
- A-9. Sample Full Complaint

Remember, people incarcerated in federal prisons can also use the “Sample Section 1983 Complaint Form” for a Bivens action. Just cross out the reference to “42 U.S.C. § 1983” and replace it with “28 U.S.C. § 1331 (Bivens action).”

Parts B and C of this Chapter contain instructions on when and how to use each of the following forms. DO NOT USE THESE FORMS UNTIL YOU HAVE READ PARTS B AND C OF THIS CHAPTER.

You may obtain free model forms for Section 1983 complaints and supporting papers by writing to the clerk of the district court in which you plan to file your action. These model forms are designed to make your work less confusing, and will help the district court process your case. If for some reason you cannot obtain model forms, draft your own papers based on the samples in this section. The footnotes included with each sample form tell you how to fill in the necessary information. DO NOT TEAR ANY OF THESE FORMS OUT OF THE JLM.

If you are in New York and need to know the name or address of the court to which you should send these papers, consult Appendix I at the end of the JLM for the federal courts in New York and Appendix II for the state courts in New York.

For sample forms for state court In Forma Pauperis Motions and Declarations in Support of Request to Proceed In Forma Pauperis, see Appendix A of Chapter 9 of the JLM.

A-1. SAMPLE SUMMONS FORM³³¹

[This is based on the official form. You can get as many free copies as you need from the clerk of the U.S. district court for your district.]

United States District Court for the _____ ³³²

-----x
[Name(s) of the Incarcerated Person(s)])
[Who Are Bringing the Suit],) Plaintiffs,)
)
v.)
)
[Names and Titles of All the People])
[and Governments Whom]) [You Are Suing], individually and) in their official capacities,³³⁴) Defendants.)
-----x

Civil Action No. _____ ³³³

SUMMONS IN A CIVIL ACTION

To: [Defendant's name and address]

A lawsuit has been filed against you.

Within 21 days after service of this summons on you (not counting the day you received it) — or 60 days if you are the United States or a United States agency, or an officer or employee of the United States described in Fed. R. Civ. P. 12 (a)(2) or (3) — you must serve on the plaintiff an answer to the attached complaint or a motion under Rule 12 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The answer or motion must be served on the

331. See Admin. Office of the U.S. Courts, Form No. AO 440, Summons in a Civil Action, available at <http://www.uscourts.gov/forms/notice-lawsuit-summons-subpoena/summons-civil-action> (last visited Aug. 22, 2020) (providing official form); see also Self Representation, Resource Guide, NAT'L CTR. FOR STATE CTS., available at <https://www.ncsc.org/topics/access-and-fairness/self-representation/resource-guide> (last visited Aug. 22, 2020) (listing helpful resources and state court websites with some state court forms); Legal Forms, WASHLAW, available at <http://www.washlaw.edu/legalforms/#fedcts> (last visited Aug. 22, 2020) (providing links to federal court forms, state court forms, and form databases).

332. Name of the federal district where the prison in which the alleged offense occurred is located, for example, "Southern District of New York" or "District of Colorado."

333. Leave this blank. This entry will be filled in by the clerk of the court where you file the form.

334. See Part C(2) of this Chapter for information on whom to name as proper defendants.

plaintiff or plaintiff's attorney, whose name and address are:

335

If you fail to respond, judgment by default will be entered against you for the relief demanded in the complaint. You also must file your answer or motion with the court.

CLERK OF THE COURT

Date: _____
Signature of Clerk or Deputy Clerk

335. Your complete prison address.

A-2. SAMPLE SECTION 1983 COMPLAINT FORM³³⁶

In the United States District Court for the _____³³⁷

[Name(s) of the Incarcerated Person(s)]	X
	:
	:
Plaintiffs,	:
	:	Complaint
v.	:
	:
[Names and Titles of All the People and Governments Whom You Are Suing], individually and in their official capacities ³³⁹ ,	:	Civil Action No. _____ ³³⁸
	:
Defendants.	:	Jury Trial Demanded
	:
	X

I. Complaint

Plaintiff(s), [your name and the name of any other plaintiffs], pro se, for their complaint state as follows:

II. Parties, Jurisdiction and Venue

1. Plaintiff [your name] was confined³⁴⁰ in the [type of facility: municipal (city) jail, federal penitentiary, state correctional institution], located at [address of the facility] in the city of _____ in the state of _____ from [dates of confinement at that facility] to _____ of 20____. Plaintiff is currently confined at [your current address].
2. Plaintiff [your name] is, and was at all times mentioned herein, an adult citizen of the United States and a resident of the state of _____.
3. [If other incarcerated people are complaining, you should repeat paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 with their names and addresses].
4. Defendant [name of first defendant]³⁴¹ was at all relevant times herein mayor of the City of _____.³⁴²

336. John W. Witt et al., Section 1983 Litigation: Forms § 1.03 (2d ed. 2016 & Supp. 2020) (using sample complaint Forms 1-5 to 1-8 as a guide and source of sample language). See also U.S. Dist. Ct., EDNY, Civil Rights Complaint—Prisoner, _____ available at <https://img.nyed.uscourts.gov/files/forms/PRO%20SE%20CivilRightsCmpPrisoner120115.pdf> (last visited Jan. 28, 2019).

337. Name of the federal district where the prison in which the alleged offense occurred is located. For example, “Southern District of New York” or “District of Colorado.”

338. Leave this blank. This will be filled in by the clerk of the court where you file the form.

339. See Part C(2) of this Chapter for information on whom to name as proper defendants.

340. Add “as a pretrial detainee” if you had not yet gone to trial at the time of the incident about which you are complaining.

341. If you do not know the names of the defendants, you should refer to them as either John or Jane Doe. See Part C(2) of this Chapter for more information.

342. From paragraph 4 onward, use the descriptions and titles of defendants that are correct for your case.

5. Defendant [name of second defendant] was at all relevant times herein the commissioner of adult services for the City of ____, with responsibility for operating and maintaining detention, penal, and corrective institutions within the City of ____, including the city jail.³⁴³
6. Defendant [name of third defendant] is and was at all relevant times herein the warden or “superintendent” of the municipal prison for the City of _____. As Superintendent of the prison, Defendant manages its day-to-day operations and executes its policies.
7. Defendant [name of fourth defendant] is and was at all relevant times herein an employee of the prison.
8. Defendant _____ is employed as [job of defendant, such as prison guard, mayor, warden or doctor] at [name of prison or other place that this defendant works]. Defendant _____ is employed as [job of defendant, such as prison guard, mayor, warden or doctor] at [name of prison or other place that this defendant works].
9. Defendant City of ____ is and was at all relevant times herein a municipal corporation of the State of ____.
10. This action arises under and is brought pursuant to 42 U.S.C. Section 1983 to remedy the deprivation, under color of state law, of rights guaranteed by the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments³⁴⁴ to the United States Constitution. This Court has jurisdiction over this action pursuant to 28 U.S.C. Sections 1331 and 1343.
11. Plaintiff’s claims for injunctive relief are authorized by Rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.
12. This cause of action arose in the _____ District of _____.³⁴⁵ Therefore, venue is proper under 28 U.S.C. Section 1391(b).

III. Previous Lawsuits by Plaintiff

Use this paragraph if you have not filed any lawsuits relating to these facts before:

13. Plaintiff has filed no other lawsuits dealing with the same facts involved in this action or otherwise relating to his/her imprisonment.

Use these paragraphs if you have filed a lawsuit relating to these facts before:

14. Plaintiff has filed other lawsuits dealing with the same facts involved in this action or otherwise relating to his/her imprisonment.
15. [Describe the lawsuit in the space below. (If there is more than one lawsuit, describe the additional lawsuits on another piece of paper, using the same outline.)] The parties to the previous lawsuit were Plaintiffs [names of all of the plaintiffs in that lawsuit] and Defendants [names of all of the defendants in that lawsuit] in the [if federal court, name the district; if state court, name the county] Court, Docket Number __, under [name of judge to whom case was assigned]. The case was [disposition (outcome) of the cases: dismissed? appealed? still pending?]. The lawsuit was filed on ____, 20 __ and I learned of the outcome on ____, 20__.

343. Include the type of prison about which you are complaining, such as “federal penitentiary” or “state correctional institute.”

344. Use the name of the part of the Constitution or federal statute that protects your rights.

345. Fill in the name of the district and state where you are filing, for example, “Southern District of New York” or “District of Colorado.”

IV. Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies³⁴⁶

16. [Read Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,” to determine whether you need to include any description here of how you exhausted your administrative remedies and in what detail. It may depend on your jurisdiction.]

V. Statement of Claim

17. At all relevant times herein, defendants were “persons” for purposes of 42 U.S.C. Section 1983 and acted under color of law to deprive plaintiffs of their constitutional rights, as set forth more fully below.

VI. Statement of Facts

18. [State here fully but as briefly as possible the facts of your case. Describe how each defendant is involved. The facts should be in clear, chronological order, like you are telling a story. Try to start out each paragraph with the date of the events you are describing. Include also the names of other persons involved, dates, and places. Do not give any legal arguments or cite any cases or statutes.³⁴⁷ If you intend to allege a number of related claims, number and give each claim a separate paragraph. Use as much space as you need. Attach extra sheet(s) if necessary. See the examples of language given for each kind of violation in Appendix A-8. You should also look at the full sample complaint in Appendix A-9.]

VII. Prayer for Relief

[State briefly exactly what you want the court to do for you. Make no legal arguments. Cite no cases or statutes. Examples of relief you might want to include are:

19. Plaintiffs request an order declaring that the defendants have acted in violation of the United States Constitution.
 20. Plaintiffs request an injunction³⁴⁸ compelling defendants to provide or stop ____.

346. Whether you will need to include this section and what you will need to include in it varies greatly depending on where you are filing your lawsuit. For an explanation of how to indicate to the court that you exhausted your administrative remedies, see Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act.” Pay particular attention to whether the courts in your jurisdiction require you to plead and prove in your complaint that you exhausted the administrative grievance procedures available to you. Depending on where you are, you may be able to omit this section entirely. However, in some circuits, such as the 6th Circuit, you will need to include quite a bit of information in this section.

347. You should try to write the facts in such a way that they satisfy the appropriate legal standard. See Appendix A-9 of this Chapter for a full sample complaint.

348. An order from the court forcing the defendants to do or stop doing something.

21. Plaintiffs request $ ____ as compensatory damages.]

Signed this __day of _____, 20__.

[Name of Plaintiff]

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct.

PLAINTIFF'S NAME

DATE

A-3. FORM FOR AN AFFIDAVIT³⁴⁹

[This form is for plaintiffs, other incarcerated people, or anyone else who wants to make a sworn statement on behalf of plaintiffs.]

In the United States District Court for the _____³⁵⁰

-----	x
[Name of First Incarcerated Person in	:
Complaint ³⁵¹], et al.,	:
Plaintiffs,	:
	:	Affidavit
v.	:
	:
[Name of First Defendant in	:	Civil Action No. _____ ³⁵²
Complaint ³⁵³], et al.	:
Defendants.	:
-----	x

AFFIDAVIT OF [NAME OF PERSON MAKING STATEMENT]

I, [full name of incarcerated person or other person making the statement], being duly sworn according to the law depose and say [that I am the Plaintiff in the above entitled proceeding, if you or another plaintiff are making the statement].

[Write statement here. Use numbered paragraphs.]

All of the information I have submitted [in support of my request, Plaintiff's case, etc.] is true and correct.

Sign Here Before Notary Public

Sworn to before me this ____ day of _____, 20__.

[Print your name]

_____³⁵⁴
NOTARY PUBLIC

349. A sample affidavit can be found at <https://www.nycourts.gov/courts/nyc/smallclaims/forms/affidavitinsupport.pdf> (last visited Jan. 28, 2019).

350. Name of the federal district where the prison in which the alleged offense occurred is located, for example, "Southern District of New York" or "District of Colorado."

351. Your name.

352. Leave this blank.

353. The name of the first defendant against whom you are bringing suit.

354. Leave blank. You should have this affidavit notarized. The notary public will fill in the date here.

A-4. Order to Show Cause and Temporary Restraining Order (“TRO”)³⁵⁵

[Be sure to submit, along with this paper, an affidavit (Form A-3) stating how you will be hurt if you do not get temporary relief and how you tried to notify the defendants of your request for temporary relief.]

In the United States District Court for the _____³⁵⁶

-----	X
[Name of First Incarcerated Person in	:
Complaint], et al.,	:
Plaintiffs,	:
	:	Order to Show Cause for
v.	:	Preliminary Injunction and
	:	Temporary Restraining Order
[Name of First Defendant in	:
Complaint], et al.,	:	Civil Action No. ____
Defendants.	:
-----	X

Upon the complaint, supporting affidavits of plaintiffs sworn to the ____ day of ____, 20__, and the memorandum of law submitted herewith, it is:

ORDERED that the defendants [names of defendants against whom you need immediate court action] show cause in room ____ of the United States Courthouse, [address] on the ____ day of ____, 20__, at ____ o'clock,³⁵⁷ or as soon thereafter as counsel may be heard, why preliminary injunction should not issue pursuant to Rule 65(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure enjoining the defendants, their successors in office, agents and employees and all other persons acting in concert and participation with them, from [a precise statement of the actions you want the preliminary injunction to cover].

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that effective immediately, and pending the hearing and determination of this order to show cause, the defendants [names of defendants against whom you want temporary relief] and each of their officers, agents, employees, and all persons acting in concert or participation with them, are restrained from [statement of actions you want the preliminary injunction to cover].

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that personal service of a copy of this order and annexed affidavit upon the defendants or their counsel on or before [date], shall be deemed good and sufficient service thereof.

355. See, e.g., JOHN W. WITT ET AL., SECTION 1983 LITIGATION: FORMS § 4.02 (2d ed. 2016 & Supp. 2020) (using sample Form 4-2, “Temporary Relief Proceedings” as a guide and source of sample language); U.S. Dist. Ct., SDNY, Order to Show Cause for Preliminary Injunction and T.R.O., available at <http://www.nysd.uscourts.gov/file/forms/order-to-show-cause-for-preliminary-injunction-and-tro> (last visited Jan. 28, 2019).

356. Name of the federal district where the prison in which the alleged offense occurred is located, for example, “Southern District of New York” or “District of Colorado.”

357. Leave these blank. The court clerk will fill these in.

[leave this space blank for judge's signature]

Dated: [leave blank]

United States District Judge

A-5. IN FORMA PAUPERIS (“IFP”) PAPERS³⁵⁸

[You should ask for this form from the district court clerk where you will be filing your complaint. They will also send you the paperwork that is required by the Prison Litigation Reform Act (Form A-7, “Prisoner Authorization,” below) for you to fill out regarding your prison account. Each incarcerated plaintiff must fill out IFP and Prisoner Authorization forms.]

In the United States District Court
for the _____³⁵⁹

-----	X
[Name(s) of the Incarcerated Person(s)	:
Who Are Bringing the Suit],	:
Plaintiffs,	:
	:	Notice of Motion to Proceed
v.	:	In Forma Pauperis
	:
[Names and Titles of All the People	:	Civil Action No. _____ ³⁶⁰ and Other Entities Whom You Are	:
Suing],	:
Defendant.	:
-----	X

APPLICATION TO PROCEED IN DISTRICT COURT WITHOUT PREPAYING FEES OR COSTS

I am a plaintiff or petitioner in this case and declare that I am unable to pay the costs of these proceedings and that I am entitled to the relief requested.

In support of this application, I answer the following questions under penalty of perjury.

1. If incarcerated. I am being held at: _____
_____. [If you are employed there, or you have an account in the institution, write.] I have attached to this document a statement certified by the appropriate institutional officer showing all receipts, expenditures, and balances during the last six months for any institutional

358. See, e.g., U.S. Dist. Ct., EDNY, In Forma Pauperis—Prisoner, available for download at <https://www.nyed.uscourts.gov/forms/forma-pauperis> (last visited Jan. 28, 2019); see also JOHN W. WITT ET AL., SECTION 1983 LITIGATION: FORMS § 7.02 (2d ed. 2016 & Supp. 2020) (using sample Form 7-1, “Application to Proceed In Forma Pauperis,” as a guide and source of sample language).

359. Name of the federal district where the prison in which the alleged offense occurred is located, for example, “Southern District of New York” or “District of Colorado.”

360. Leave this blank. This entry will be filled in by the clerk of the court where you file the form.

account in my name. I am also submitting a similar statement from any other institution where I was incarcerated during the last six months.³⁶¹

2. If not incarcerated. If I am employed, my employer's name and address are: _____. My gross pay or wages are: $_____, and my take-home pay or wages are $_____ per [specify pay period] _____.

3. Other Income. In the past 12 months, I have received income from the following sources [check all that apply]:

(a) Business, profession, or form of self-employment	YES	NO
(b) Rent payments, interest, or dividends	YES	NO
(c) Pensions, annuities, or life insurance payments	YES	NO
(d) Disability or worker's compensation payments	YES	NO
(e) Gifts or inheritances	YES	NO
(f) Any other sources	YES	NO

If you answered "Yes" to any questions above, describe below or on separate pages each source of money and state the amount that you received and what you expect to receive in the future.

4. Amount of money that I have in cash or in a checking or savings account: $ _____

5. Any automobile, real estate, stock, bond, security, trust, jewelry, art work, or other financial instrument or thing of value that I own, including any item of value held in someone else's name [describe the property and its approximate value]:

6. Any housing, transportation, utilities, or loan payments, or other regular monthly expenses [describe and provide the amount of the monthly expense]:

7. Names (or, if under 18, initials only) of all persons who are dependent on me for support, my relationship with each person, and how much I contribute to their support:

8. Any debts or financial obligations [describe the amounts owed and to whom they are payable]:

Declaration: I declare under penalty of perjury that the above information is true and understand that a false statement may result in a dismissal of my claims.

Date: _____

Applicant's signature

Printed Name

361. The Prison Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA") requires you to submit a certified copy of your prison account statement showing your balance for the last six months along with this declaration. For more information on complying with the PLRA, see Chapter 14 of the JLM, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act."

A-6. APPLICATION FOR APPOINTMENT OF COUNSEL³⁶²

In the United States District Court
for the _____³⁶³

-----X [Name(s) of the Incarcerated Person(s) Who Are Bringing the Suit], Plaintiffs, v. [Names and Titles of All the People and Other Entities Whom You Are Suing], Defendant. -----X	: : : : : : : : : : :	Application for the Court to Request Counsel Civil Action No. _____³⁶⁴
---	--	--

(g) Name of applicant _____³⁶⁵

(h) [Explain why you feel you need a lawyer in this case.³⁶⁶]

(i) [Explain what steps you have taken to find an attorney and with what results. Use additional paper if necessary.]

(j) [If you need a lawyer who speaks in a language other than English, state what language you speak.]

(k) I understand that if a lawyer volunteers to represent me, and my lawyer learns that I can afford to pay for a lawyer, the lawyer may give this information to the Court.

(l) I understand that if my answers on my Application for the Court to Request Counsel are false, my case may be dismissed.

(m) I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct.

Dated: _____

[Your Signature]

362. See, e.g., U.S. Dist. Ct., EDNY, Application for Appointment of Counsel, available at <https://www.nyed.uscourts.gov/sites/default/files/forms/PRO SE Application for counsel.pdf> (last visited Jan. 28, 2019); JOHN W. WITT ET AL., SECTION 1983 LITIGATION: FORMS § 7.04 (2d ed. 2016 & Supp. 2020) (using sample Form 7-3, “Motion for Appointment of Counsel,” as a guide and source of sample language).

363. Name of the federal district where the prison in which the alleged offense occurred is located, for example, “Southern District of New York” or “District of Colorado.”

364. Leave this blank. This entry will be filled in by the clerk of the court where you file the form.

365. Your name.

366. For example, you do not know the law well, you do not have access to the law library, you have a disability, your case is very complicated, etc. Use additional paper or include an affidavit supporting your application if necessary. The most common reason incarcerated people need legal representation is that Section 1983 claims involve complex legal issues that are difficult for non-lawyers to understand and litigate effectively.

A-7. PRISONER AUTHORIZATION³⁶⁷

[This is the form that should be sent to you after you submit your complaint to the district court. If you do not receive it within two weeks of submitting your complaint, you should copy the information found here and send it to the court so that your complaint is not dismissed because you did not comply with the Prison Litigation Reform Act.]

Mailed to the Plaintiff by the Court on this date:

Case Name: _____ v. _____

Docket No: No. _____ Civ. _____ ()

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT THIS ACTION WILL BE DISMISSED UNLESS PLAINTIFF COMPLETES AND RETURNS THIS AUTHORIZATION FORM TO THIS COURT WITHIN FORTY-FIVE DAYS FROM THE DATE OF THIS NOTICE.

The Prison Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA" or "Act") amended the in forma pauperis statute (28 U.S.C. § 1915) and applies to your case. Under the PLRA, you are required to pay the full filing fee when bringing a civil action if you are currently incarcerated or detained in any facility. If you do not have sufficient funds in your prison account at the time your action is filed, the Court must assess and collect payments until the entire filing fee of $ _____³⁶⁸ has been paid, no matter what the outcome of the action.

SIGN AND DATE A COPY OF THE FOLLOWING AUTHORIZATION:

I, _____, request and authorize the agency holding me in custody to send to the Clerk of the United States District Court for the _____³⁶⁹ a certified copy of my prison account statement for the past six months. I further request and authorize the agency holding me in custody to calculate the amounts specified by 28 U.S.C. § 1915(b), to deduct those amounts from my prison trust fund account (or institutional equivalent), and to disburse those amounts to the United States District Court for the _____.³⁷⁰ This authorization shall apply to any agency into whose custody I may be transferred, and to any other district court to which my case may be transferred and by which my poor person application may be decided.

I UNDERSTAND THAT BY SIGNING AND RETURNING THIS NOTICE TO THE COURT, THE ENTIRE COURT FILING FEE OF $ _____³⁷¹ WILL BE PAID IN INSTALLMENTS BY AUTOMATIC DEDUCTIONS FROM MY PRISON TRUST FUND ACCOUNT EVEN IF MY CASE IS DISMISSED OR EVEN IF I VOLUNTARILY WITHDRAW THE CASE.

Signature of Plaintiff

367. See, e.g., U.S. Dist. Ct., SDNY, Prisoner Authorization, available at <http://www.nysd.uscourts.gov/file/forms/prisoner-authorization> (last visited Jan. 28, 2019).

368. Filing fees may differ depending upon the federal district court in which you file your claim.

369. Fill in the district in which the court is located, such as "Southern District of New York" or "District of Colorado."

370. Once again, fill in the federal district in which the court is located.

371. Fill in the fee charged by the district court in which your case is filed.

Date Signed

Prisoner I.D. Number: _____

Name of current facility: _____

A-8. SAMPLE LANGUAGE FOR STATEMENT OF FACTS

[The following paragraphs are examples of how to explain different types of complaints that you may want to bring.³⁷² DO NOT COPY ANY OF THESE because your facts will be different than the examples.]

INADEQUATE AND UNSANITARY HOUSING³⁷³

1. Numerous insects, rats, mice, and other vermin were in the prison throughout the period of plaintiffs' confinement from November 2002 until the time of this complaint.
2. An exterminator did visit the prison in March of 2005, but only the common areas and guard areas were sprayed. Individual cells were never sprayed. When the common areas were sprayed, roaches and other vermin simply moved into the individual cells. Once the fumes disappeared, the vermin returned unharmed to again infest the entire prison.
3. The exterminator wore a mask and gloves, but incarcerated people remained in their cells and were not given masks or protective clothing.
4. There was no ventilation to prevent incarcerated people from inhaling the dangerous fumes. Plaintiff and fellow incarcerated person [Plaintiff #2], as well as several others, suffered severe headaches and nausea after the extermination.
5. Inadequate lighting in the cells made reading for more than a few minutes at a time extremely difficult and nearly impossible. Requests for lamps or stronger light bulbs were denied on [insert date] by [name of person who denied the light bulb].

INADEQUATE VISITATION AND TELEPHONE ACCESS³⁷⁴

6. Plaintiff attempted to telephone his attorney beginning in March 2005 because he wished to tell him about new evidence in his case. On or about March 3, 2005, plaintiff asked [Defendant #1] to allow plaintiff to make a telephone call to his attorney. Defendant refused.
7. Plaintiff continued to request telephone access throughout the month of March. On April 1, 2005, he was given access to the telephone, but only after 7:30 p.m. Because his attorney works only during business hours, plaintiff was unable to contact him that day.
8. The refusal of the prison staff to allow plaintiff access to telephone contradicted stated prison policy regarding telephone use for incarcerated people in the general population posted in the cafeteria. Plaintiff was a part of the general population for the entire time that he could not access a telephone.
9. The official prison policy regarding telephone use is also insufficient for purposes of contact with incarcerated people's attorneys. While confined in the prison, each incarcerated person was allowed to make only one five-minute call during the week and one ten-minute call on the weekend. The weekday phone calls were restricted to the daytime one week and the evening the next. Each incarcerated person was allowed only one long-distance telephone call per month, even if that was the only way to contact that incarcerated person's attorney.
10. On January 17, 2006, plaintiff [Plaintiff #2] met with his attorney in the common area. Despite numerous requests by plaintiff [Plaintiff #2] and plaintiff's attorney for privacy, defendants [Defendants #2 and #4] refused to keep other incarcerated people away from plaintiff and his attorney. In addition, defendants [Defendants #2 and #4] were also observed listening to plaintiff and attorney's private conversation.

372. These fact patterns are based in large part upon examples taken from the sample complaints in JOHN W. WITT ET AL., SECTION 1983 LITIGATION: FORMS (2d ed. 2016 & Supp. 2020).

373. See JOHN W. WITT ET AL., SECTION 1983 LITIGATION: FORMS § 1.03 (2d ed. 2016 & Supp. 2020) (using language from sample Form 1-5, "Pretrial Detainee Complaint—Totality of Conditions," as an example).

374. See JOHN W. WITT ET AL., SECTION 1983 LITIGATION: FORMS § 1.03 (2d ed. 2016 & Supp. 2020) (using language from sample Form 1-5, "Pretrial Detainee Complaint—Totality of Conditions," as an example).

11. The short amount of time allotted for the calls and the complete lack of privacy markedly decreased the quality of discussions between incarcerated people and their attorneys. The only phone was located in the common area. It was not only difficult to have a conversation over the noise of the guards and other prisoners, but also nearly impossible to have a private conversation. On numerous occasions incarcerated people complained that the guards were listening to their phone conversations.
12. The prison's attorney visitation policy was overly restrictive during the period of plaintiffs' confinement. Incarcerated people were forced to talk with their lawyer either in the common area, where other incarcerated people and guards could overhear conversations, or in a meeting room observed by guards through two-way mirrors. Since attorneys often felt uncomfortable conversing openly in the common area, surrounded by other incarcerated people, meetings frequently occurred under the watchful eye of the prison guards.

INADEQUATE MEDICAL CARE³⁷⁵

SPECIFIC INSTANCE

13. On August 23, 2004, plaintiff injured his ankle and foot while playing basketball with other incarcerated people. At approximately 2:00 p.m., he asked [Defendant #1] to be allowed to attend sick call at the infirmary. [Defendant #1] denied plaintiff's request, stating that sick call was at 8:30 a.m. and that plaintiff would have to wait until the following morning. Plaintiff then returned to his cell, his injury untreated.
14. In the early afternoon of August 23, 2004, plaintiff, still in his cell, saw [Defendant #2] making his rounds on plaintiff's floor. Plaintiff told [Defendant #2] about his foot injury and asked to see the prison nurse. [Defendant #2] replied that in order to see the nurse, his pain would have to be an emergency. Otherwise, plaintiff would have to wait until the next day for sick call. Plaintiff immediately told him it was an emergency. However, [Defendant #2] said that he did not think it was an emergency because plaintiff was not bleeding and told plaintiff to wait for sick call. [Defendant #2] then left to continue his rounds.
15. Later in the afternoon of August 23, 2004, plaintiff was in severe pain from his foot and noticed that it had swelled and become discolored. He called [Defendant #4], the shift supervisor at the time. He responded to plaintiff's call and asked him what was wrong. Plaintiff told him about his symptoms and asked to see the prison nurse. Instead, [Defendant #4] went to get some Advil for plaintiff.
16. On the evening of August 23, 2004, [Defendant #3] gave two Advil pills to plaintiff. Plaintiff took the Advil and told [Defendant #3] that his pain was so bad that he could not stand or walk. [Defendant #3] responded that he could only follow [Defendant #4]'s orders, and told plaintiff that sick call was at 8:30 a.m.
17. On the morning of August 24, 2004, prison staff members found plaintiff in his bed. He was unable to move his foot. Plaintiff was finally seen for the first time by the prison's staff nurse, at which time plaintiff was moved to _____ County Hospital. At _____ County Hospital, plaintiff's foot was examined and operated on. Plaintiff remained hospitalized for the next five days as a result of the prison's unprofessional and inappropriate neglect of his injury.
18. Plaintiff [Plaintiff #2] experienced earaches in both ears for the entire month of November 2002, and was unable to obtain medical attention.
19. Plaintiff [Plaintiff #2] also suffered severe migraines from approximately December 2, 2005, through February 14, 2005, that were completely draining. He was denied timely medical care by the prison. When [Plaintiff #2] was finally taken to the hospital on February 14, 2005, he was

375. See JOHN W. WITT ET AL., SECTION 1983 LITIGATION: FORMS §§ 1.03 (2d ed. 2016 & Supp. 2020) (using language from sample Form 1-5, "Pretrial Detainee Complaint—Totality of Conditions," and sample Form 1-8, "Prisoner Complaint—Inadequate Medical Treatment," as an example); see also Chapter 23 of the JLM, "Your Right to Adequate Medical Care."

- diagnosed as suffering from cluster migraine headaches resulting from physical problems, namely, his ear infections.
20. Plaintiff [Plaintiff #3] suffered from severe neck pain as a result of a factory work accident prior to plaintiff's prison confinement. [Plaintiff #3] has been unable to get any medical attention for this physical ailment to date.
 21. Plaintiff [Plaintiff #4] had pieces of a broken knife lodged in his shoulder. While in the prison, the shards began causing him immense pain. Despite numerous complaints, [Plaintiff #4] has not received any medical attention to date.
 22. Plaintiff [Plaintiff #5] suffered from an open, infected sore four inches in diameter on his leg. Plaintiff [Plaintiff #5] showed this sore to defendants [Defendants #1 and #2] on January 12, 2005. Prison authorities did not provide him with treatment or medication until February 1, 2005.
 23. Plaintiff [Plaintiff #6] suffered severe migraine headaches resulting from stress and spiritual problems. He also had several stomach ulcers. He was unable to obtain adequate or timely medical care. Plaintiff reported these problems to defendant [Defendant #3] on December 1, December 15, and December 30, 2004. Defendant has not received any medical attention until the present time.
 24. Plaintiff [Plaintiff #5] suffered a head wound in a shootout a few years prior to his sentence in prison. When the wound became painful during [Plaintiff #5]'s stay at the prison, he asked defendants [Defendants #2 and #5] on January 25, 2005 for a medical exam. He did not receive any medical care until two months after his first request. As a consequence of the delay in treatment, [Plaintiff #5] underwent a complicated surgical procedure on April 15, 2005, and was hospitalized for two weeks.

IN GENERAL

25. In general, defendants showed deliberate indifference to the medical needs of incarcerated people, and particularly neglected those of the plaintiffs.
26. Medical care at the prison was inadequate and unprofessional. Medical records, vital in assessing a patient's potential for future sickness, were not used to assist diagnoses. Deficiencies were the norm, and plaintiffs were unable to obtain examinations or care upon request. Incarcerated people often had to submit grievances to receive medical care from a physician or hospital.
27. Sick call occurred only once each week, the screening process for determining whether a patient needed attention was inadequate, and in the meantime, plaintiffs would have to beg guards or other staff for basic medical attention.

INADEQUATE LAW LIBRARY AND FACILITIES³⁷⁶

28. Plaintiff [Plaintiff #1] filed a case in the district court on May 15, 2003, regarding injuries he received from a prison guard during a prison riot. Plaintiff's case was dismissed because he failed to use the Inmate Grievance Program prior to filing his case, as required by the Prison Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA").
29. Plaintiff was unable to file his lawsuit again because the statute of limitations in New York had passed by the time he received notice that his case had been dismissed.
30. Plaintiff did not know about the PLRA because the legal materials available to him in prison contained no cases or information regarding the state of the law after 1995.
31. The prison library was shockingly inadequate. The most recent case reporters in the library dated from 1994 and several volumes were missing, specifically all of the United States reporters from 1990 and 1992.

376. See JOHN W. WITT ET AL., SECTION 1983 LITIGATION: FORMS § 1.03 (2d ed. 2016 & Supp. 2020) (using language from Form 1-5, "Pretrial Detainee Complaint—Totality of Conditions," as an example).

32. Plaintiffs, relying on these reporters, suffered actual injury because they could have succeeded under a different claim if they had access to current statutory and case law.
33. The incarcerated people on each block were supposed to have access to the law library at least three times a week. However, they were regularly called only once a week or less. Five incarcerated people at a time were sent to the library for a period of ninety minutes, not enough time to adequately conduct research and prepare legal documents. No books were allowed to be checked out of the library. As a result, it was extremely difficult for incarcerated people to get more than a small amount of work done each time they went to the library.

INADEQUATE MAIL FACILITIES (CORRESPONDENCE)³⁷⁷

34. The mail processing system at the prison was extremely inadequate. Mail was frequently lost or misplaced.
35. Plaintiff [Plaintiff #2] prepared a petition for a writ of habeas corpus. Three weeks after giving it to prison authorities to be mailed, plaintiff discovered it at the bottom of a three-foot stack of undelivered mail. In addition, the envelope was battered and dirty.
36. Plaintiff [Plaintiff #3] notified the mail clerk that he was expecting a letter and photographs from his wife and children. Three months later Plaintiff [Plaintiff #3] received a torn envelope with no photographs. The envelope was marked “Received” with the date of two months before stamped on it. Plaintiff [Plaintiff #3] suffered extreme emotional harm and depression due to this lack of expected correspondence with his family.
37. In addition, the prison did not have any secure place for incoming or outgoing mail to protect against the mail being stolen or lost.

INADEQUATE OPPORTUNITY TO PRACTICE RELIGION³⁷⁸

38. Plaintiffs were not permitted to meet or practice their religion. Even though numerous grievances were filed and the majority of the prisoners were Muslim, the prison did not allow any Muslim services.
39. Despite the fact that plaintiffs’ religion forbids eating pork and foods cooked with pork fat, the prison offered no halal, vegetarian or alternative diet plan.

UNSAFE ENVIRONMENT³⁷⁹

40. From approximately April 2005 through December 2005 plaintiff was mercilessly beaten and savagely raped by defendant [Defendant #1] and other fellow incarcerated people whose names are unknown to plaintiffs.
41. As a result of these assaults, plaintiff [name] suffered [describe injuries such as: broken jaw, severe facial lacerations requiring stitches, anal bleeding, and severe anxiety]. Defendant [Defendant #2] knew about the injuries; despite plaintiff’s request for hospitalization, defendant [Defendant #2] denied plaintiff access to medical care.
42. [Specify other acts or omissions that defendants knowingly and negligently committed, which tended to cause the injuries received by plaintiff, such as: A number of prison guards knowingly and negligently opened the cell doors of _____ and allowed the intermingling of incarcerated people, and allowed different groups with known hostilities toward each other to intermingle in order to instigate violence. These guards were well aware of the severe danger to plaintiff. The prison guards failed to properly supervise the prison and provide for plaintiff's safety. They also purposely and recklessly failed to provide plaintiff with medical assistance, thereby depriving plaintiff of his civil rights, guaranteed by the Constitution and Laws of the United States and of the State of _____.].

377. See JOHN W. WITT ET AL., SECTION 1983 LITIGATION: FORMS § 1.03 (2d ed. 2016 & Supp. 2020) (using language from Form 1-5, “Pretrial Detainee Complaint–Totality of Conditions,” as an example).

378. See John W. Witt et al., Section 1983 Litigation: Forms § 1.03 (2d ed. 2016 & Supp. 2020) (using language from Form 1-5, “Pretrial Detainee Complaint–Totality of Conditions,” as an example).

379. See JOHN W. WITT ET AL., SECTION 1983 LITIGATION: FORMS § 1.03 (2d ed. 2016 & Supp. 2020) (using language from Form 1-7.1, “Complaint Against Prison Officials, Employees, and Fellow Prisoners for Beating and Rape of Prisoners” as an example).

43. Defendants [Defendants #2, #3, and #4]'s recklessness, failure to properly train and manage [prison guards or medical doctor] of the County of _____, State of _____, and failure to adequately supervise and protect plaintiffs from the acts complained of caused the deprivation of plaintiffs' rights.

A-9. SAMPLE FULL COMPLAINT

[The following is a sample full complaint. DO NOT COPY THIS as your facts will be different than this example. NOTE, you will want to DOUBLE SPACE the body of your complaint. This complaint is single-spaced to save space.]

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF STATE

-----	X
	:
Scott Martin,	:
	:
Plaintiff,	:	COMPLAINT
	:
v.	:	Jury Trial Demanded
	:
Captain Jack Williams,	:
Sergeant John Doe, Acting	:
Sergeant Joseph Franks,	:	No. 12345
Correctional Officer Steve Doe,	:
Dr. Stanley Thomas, Correctional	:
Officer Ronald C. Smith, and	:
Warden Justin A. Kent, individually	:
and in their official capacities.	:
	:
Defendants.	:
-----	X

PLAINTIFF'S SECOND AMENDED COMPLAINT

Plaintiff Scott Martin for his second amended complaint against defendants Captain Jack Williams, Sergeant John Doe, Acting Sergeant Joseph Franks, Correctional Officer Steve Doe, Dr. Stanley Thomas, Correctional Officer Ronald C. Smith, and Warden Justin A. Kent, alleges as follows:

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

1. This Court has jurisdiction over this action under 28 U.S.C. Sections 1331 and 1343(3) and (4). The matters in controversy arise under 42 U.S.C. Section 1983.
2. Venue properly lies in this District pursuant to 28 U.S.C. Section 1391(b)(2), because the events giving rise to this cause of action occurred at Plaineville Correctional Center ("Plaineville") in City, State, which is located within the Northern District of State.

PARTIES

3. Plaintiff Scott Martin is and was, at all times relevant hereto, an incarcerated person in the custody of the State Department of Corrections ("SDOC"). At the time of the events relevant hereto, Martin was incarcerated at Plaineville. Martin is currently incarcerated at the Smithville Correctional Center ("Smithville").
4. Defendant Jack Williams is an SDOC officer with the rank of Captain, who at all times relevant hereto was assigned to Plaineville.

5. Defendant Dr. Stanley Thomas was, at all times relevant hereto, a physician employed or retained by SDOC to provide medical services at Plaineville.

6. Defendant Sergeant John Doe is an SDOC officer with the rank of Sergeant, who at all times relevant hereto was assigned to Plaineville.

7. Defendant Acting Sergeant Joseph Franks was, at all times relevant hereto, a correctional officer at Plaineville, who at the time of the events described below was serving as an Acting Sergeant.

8. Defendant Officer Steve Doe was, at all times relevant hereto, a correctional officer at Plaineville.

9. Defendant Ronald C. Smith was, at all times relevant hereto, a correctional officer at Plaineville.

10. Defendant Justin A. Kent was, at all times relevant hereto, Warden of Plaineville. As Warden of the prison, Defendant manages its day-to-day operations and executes its policies.

PREVIOUS LAWSUITS BY PLAINTIFF

11. Plaintiff has filed no other lawsuits dealing with the same facts involved in this action or otherwise relating to his/her imprisonment.

EXHAUSTION OF ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDIES

[Read Chapter 14 of the JLM, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act."]

FACTS

12. On or about January 1, 2003, plaintiff was assigned to and resided in cell 1, Unit 1, at Plaineville with his cellmate, Mr. Joshua Nixon ("Nixon").

12. On several occasions prior to January 1, 2003, plaintiff informed defendant Williams that he feared for his personal health and safety due to serious conflicts he was having with Nixon, and plaintiff requested that one of them be transferred as soon as possible.

13. Prior to January 1, 2003, plaintiff wrote a letter to defendant Williams that again informed Williams of his fear for his personal health and safety due to the situation between plaintiff and Nixon and asked that plaintiff be transferred from the cell.

14. On January 1, 2003, Nixon also made a request to defendant Williams for a cell transfer due to conflicts between himself and plaintiff. Defendant Williams denied the request.

15. On January 1, 2003, plaintiff personally asked defendant Williams if he could be transferred from his cell because he feared for his personal health and safety due to conflicts between himself and Nixon. Defendant Williams refused plaintiff's request.

16. On January 1, 2003, Nixon asked Correctional Officer Washington whether he could be transferred from his cell to an adjoining cell occupied only by Charles Jones, because he and plaintiff were having serious problems living together. Officer Washington agreed to make such a transfer. However, without explanation, defendant Sergeant John Doe refused to permit Officer Washington to supervise the move.

17. Charles Jones also discussed with both Officer Washington and defendant Williams Nixon's request for a move into Jones's cell, and he notified Washington and Williams that he was not opposed to Nixon moving into his cell.

18. On January 1, 2003, the same day that plaintiff and Nixon repeatedly asked various correctional officers at Plaineville for a cell transfer, the two engaged in a verbal argument about the volume level of Nixon's radio. A few hours later, plaintiff was sleeping when he heard his cellmate making noise. Plaintiff awoke to see Nixon putting on his boots. After Nixon had put on his boots, he attacked plaintiff without provocation. Nixon struck plaintiff numerous times, causing injuries to his eyes, nose, mouth, and chest. Nixon also used various objects to strike plaintiff, including the radio and a property box. During the attack, Nixon stomped on plaintiff's bare feet with his heavy boots, causing injury to plaintiff's feet.

19. As Nixon beat him, plaintiff yelled for a "med tech" and summoned prison officials for assistance via a buzzer in his cell. When Acting Sergeant Franks and Correctional Officer Steve Doe arrived, they refused to open the cell door while plaintiff was being attacked. The two officers acknowledged to plaintiff that they saw that he was being attacked but failed to intervene until later.

20. Immediately following this assault, plaintiff was taken to the emergency room at Plaineville Hospital. Plaintiff suffered from cuts and lacerations on his body and his face, as well as multiple bruises and swelling on his face and body. Plaintiff was informed by medical personnel that a deep, 1.25 inch cut in his mouth required stitches. In addition, plaintiff was given an X-ray to determine whether or not his nose was broken, but the amount of blood in plaintiff's nose rendered the X-ray inconclusive.

21. Despite the severity of his injuries and the excruciating pain plaintiff suffered as a result of these injuries, only two Tylenol were administered to plaintiff after the attack. Plaintiff endured severe pain throughout the night from his extensive injuries. The next day, despite the serious pain, Dr. Thomas prescribed only Motrin for pain relief. Although plaintiff's pain was not alleviated, no stronger pain killer was administered.

22. Notwithstanding the opinion of other medical personnel that plaintiff required stitches, defendant Dr. Thomas refused to administer any stitches for the deep cut in plaintiff's mouth. He instead told a colleague that plaintiff was "a crybaby" and discharged him from any further care. Despite plaintiff's repeated requests, defendant Dr. Thomas refused to arrange for any follow-up care for his injuries.

23. At plaintiff's request, he was given a pass permitting him to return to the Hospital the following day for follow-up medical care, but he was never called to return to the Hospital. Plaintiff wrote to defendants Warden Kent and Dr. Thomas to tell them that he had not been taken back to the Hospital for follow-up treatment for his injuries and to request such treatment, but he never was sent back to the Hospital for follow-up care. The only further action any member of the prison staff took with respect to plaintiff's injuries was to advise plaintiff in the future to avoid going to sleep before resolving disagreements with a cellmate.

24. Following his visit to the emergency room, plaintiff continued to suffer from migraine headaches, dizziness, and general physical pain as a result of his injuries. He continued to bleed from the unstitched cut in his mouth for days afterwards, making it difficult or impossible to eat.

25. Soon after, plaintiff filed a grievance and a civil suit against the above-named defendants for their deliberate indifference to harm caused to him throughout the above-mentioned period.

26. After filing the civil suit, plaintiff was the target of harassment and retaliation from both defendant Williams and defendant Smith.

27. On January 14, 2004, plaintiff exited his cell and approached defendant Smith to ask him when lunch was being served. Defendant Smith stuck out his arm and threw plaintiff backwards, nearly causing him to fall. Plaintiff then approached defendant Williams, who witnessed the event, to ask him if he would let this act go without reprimand. Defendant Smith then threatened plaintiff by telling him that "next time, I will bust your head." To this, defendant Williams responded to plaintiff, "you know what you've got to do, take care of your business." On subsequent occasions, defendant Smith verbally harassed plaintiff for filing grievances and lawsuits.

28. Defendant Williams also harassed plaintiff in retaliation for grievances plaintiff had filed against Williams. For example, on February 1, 2004, during an alcohol "shake down," plaintiff and only two other prisoners were forced to submit to a strip search, even though plaintiff had never had an alcohol violation, nor had he ever failed any drug test administered by the prison.

29. Similarly, on March 12, 2004, defendant Williams loudly berated plaintiff from the gallery for accusing him of being a racist in one of the grievances plaintiff had filed against him. Defendant Williams then approached plaintiff's cell, opened the cell door, and told plaintiff that he does not harass prisoners and only tries to help and protect them. In doing so, Williams used the precise language that plaintiff had used in his grievance against Williams, thus emphasizing that he was acting in retaliation for the grievance.

COUNT ONE: BREACH OF DUTY TO PROTECT

31. Defendant Williams exercised deliberate indifference to plaintiff's health and safety by failing to protect him from a prison attack even though he had been informed of a threat to plaintiff's health and safety. Defendant Williams received repeated requests, oral and in writing, from both plaintiff and his cellmate, Nixon, for a cell transfer due to conflict between the two and refused to act upon them. Defendant Williams' deliberate indifference to plaintiff's health and safety was further demonstrated when he spoke to plaintiff the day after plaintiff had been attacked and laughed at plaintiff's injuries.

32. Defendant Acting Sergeant John Doe exercised deliberate indifference to plaintiff's health and safety by refusing, for no reason, to authorize a cell transfer of either plaintiff or Nixon to an available cell, when he knew that there were serious conflicts between plaintiff and Nixon and that plaintiff's health and safety were at risk.

33. Defendants Sergeant Franks and Correctional Officer Steve Doe exercised deliberate indifference to plaintiff's health and safety by failing immediately to protect plaintiff from an attack by his cellmate as soon as they knew it was occurring. Instead, these defendants merely acknowledged to plaintiff that they saw the attack and, despite seeing that plaintiff had suffered and was suffering serious injuries, the defendants failed to stop the attack immediately.

34. As a result of the deliberate indifference exercised by the aforementioned defendants, plaintiff suffered serious harm at the hands of his cellmate. Plaintiff sustained multiple physical injuries, including deep cuts in his mouth and upon his face, bruises upon his face and body, as well as migraine headaches and dizziness. Plaintiff also suffered extreme emotional distress from the incident.

COUNT TWO: FAILURE TO ADMINISTER ADEQUATE MEDICAL REMEDY

36. Defendant Dr. Thomas exercised deliberate indifference to plaintiff's health by failing to provide adequate medical care to him following the attack by Nixon. Defendant Dr. Thomas intentionally did not administer stitches to a deep cut in plaintiff's mouth and refused to fulfill any of plaintiff's requests for follow-up care. Instead, defendant Dr. Thomas mocked plaintiff in front of other medical personnel.

37. As a result of Dr. Thomas's deliberate indifference to plaintiff's condition, plaintiff suffered further pain and mental anguish. He continued to suffer from migraine headaches and general pain throughout his body, and Dr. Thomas refused to provide adequate pain medication for plaintiff. In addition, plaintiff was unable to eat properly for days after receiving care from defendant Dr. Thomas, because the unstitched cut in his mouth did not properly heal.

COUNT THREE: RETALIATORY TREATMENT FOR FILING SECTION 1983 CLAIM AND FOR FILING GRIEVANCES

39. Almost immediately after plaintiff filed grievances against him, defendant Williams repeatedly harassed and caused harm to plaintiff in retaliation for the grievances. Defendant Williams forced plaintiff to submit to a strip search, even though he had no reason to do so. Defendant Williams came on the gallery and loudly berated plaintiff for allegations he made in one of the grievances filed against Williams.

40. After plaintiff filed a civil rights action against defendant Williams, plaintiff suffered retaliation by defendants Williams and Smith. When plaintiff approached defendant Smith to speak with him, defendant Smith stuck his arm out straight and struck plaintiff, throwing him backward and nearly knocking him down. Defendant Williams looked on and failed to correct or chastise defendant Smith as a result of this battery, merely warning plaintiff that "you know what you've got to do, take care of your business."

41. A few months later, after plaintiff had filed a grievance against defendants Smith and Williams for the above incident, Officer Smith verbally harassed plaintiff in retaliation for plaintiff's filing of the grievance. Defendant Smith told plaintiff that he "was the type who liked to file grievances and that it didn't matter if [Plaintiff] filed a [lawsuit] because [Plaintiff] wasn't going to be getting any money and that nothing [was] going to be done."

42. These acts represent a pattern of events demonstrating intentional retaliation against plaintiff by defendants Williams and Smith for filing grievances and a civil rights action and have caused plaintiff further mental anguish as a result.

WHEREFORE, Plaintiff prays for judgment in his favor and damages in his favor against all defendants in an amount sufficient to compensate him for the pain and mental anguish suffered by him due to the deliberate indifference and intentional misconduct of defendants, but in no event less than $300,000, together with his attorneys' fees and costs, and such additional relief as the Court may deem just and proper.

Respectfully submitted,

Plaintiff Name, Plaintiff³⁸⁰

380. You must sign your name in ink on the line here.

CHAPTER 17

THE STATE'S DUTY TO PROTECT YOU AND YOUR PROPERTY: TORT ACTIONS*

A. Introduction

This Chapter explains your rights to protect your body and your property while you are in prison. If you believe someone has violated those rights, this chapter provides you with the steps you can take. Part B of this Chapter will introduce you to the general law of personal injury which is called tort law. Tort law includes injuries caused by excessive force, the failure of prison officials to protect you from other incarcerated people, improper or inappropriate medical care, and poorly maintained facilities. Part B also covers damage to your personal property. Part C of this Chapter will help you determine whom you can sue, where to sue, and what kind of relief you can get. It also explains how to complete your institution's internal grievance procedures (meaning, how to exhaust your administrative remedies) before filing a case in court. Part D provides you with step by step instructions for how to file your case, from filing the right papers to obtaining evidence and appealing a decision. Part D is very important because if you wait too long to file a claim or file it in the wrong place, you could lose the claim for good. Keep in mind that incarcerated people face additional hurdles in bringing lawsuits for injuries suffered in prison.

At the end of this Chapter there is an Appendix with examples of forms you may need to fill out and submit at various stages of the court process. DO NOT TEAR THESE FORMS OUT OF THE JLM, as the forms are intended to be samples only.

JLM, Chapter 24, "Your Right to be Free from Assault," gives more information about excessive force by correction officers and their failure to protect incarcerated people from assault. If you believe you have been assaulted in prison, Chapter 24 will explain your rights and what actions you can take.

Please note that this Chapter details the procedures under New York State law. Therefore, incarcerated people outside of New York state should use this Chapter to learn about the basic concepts of tort law, in addition to doing careful research about their own state's laws. Chapter 2 of the JLM, "Introduction to Legal Research," will help you perform this task.

B. Know Your Rights: Tort Actions

The law recognizes that, in general, people have a duty not to injure (to harm) each other and not to damage or destroy each other's property. When someone breaks that duty, it is called a tort.¹ A tort can be either intentional or negligent. An intentional tort is when one person hurts another person (or their property) on purpose. A negligent tort, on the other hand, is often the result of failing to take proper precautions to protect other people and their property. The person who commits a tort, whether intentionally or through negligence, is called a "tortfeasor."²

If you think that you have suffered a tort, you must decide whether it was an intentional or negligent tort. This difference determines what you will have to prove in order to win your case.

1. Intentional Torts

For most intentional torts, you must prove: 1) that the tortfeasor hurt you or damaged your property, and 2) that he intended to do so. These two elements are sometimes called the "results prong" and the "intent prong." Some examples of intentional torts include assault, false arrest, false

* This Chapter was revised by Jonathan Gant, based on previous versions by Alison Fischer, Sandy Santana, Mathew Strada, Elizabeth Galani, Vanessa Armstrong, Deirdre Bialo-Padin, and members of the 1977 Columbia Human Rights Law Review. Special thanks to Lanny E. Walter, Esq. of Walter, Thayer & Mishler, P.C. for his valuable comments.

1. Tort, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

2. Tortfeasor, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

imprisonment, intentional infliction of emotional distress, libel³ (false, defamatory claims in written or printed form), and slander⁴ (false, defamatory claims in spoken form). Intentional torts against property include trespass⁵ (wrongful entry onto another's property) and conversion (taking something that does not belong to you and acting like it is yours).⁶

2. Negligent Torts

The biggest difference between intentional torts and negligent torts is the mental state (thought process) of the person causing the injury. Unlike an intentional tortfeasor, a negligent tortfeasor does not intend to cause damage or injury. Instead, a negligent tortfeasor creates an unreasonably unsafe situation by doing something a reasonable person would not do, or by failing to take some precaution he should have taken. When this unreasonable behavior causes injury or destruction of property, we call it a negligent tort.

To prove a negligent tort, you must first show that the tortfeasor had a responsibility to keep you from being injured, which is called a “duty of care.” Second, you must show that the tortfeasor violated (or breached) this duty of care by acting negligently, or failing to do what a reasonable person would have done under the circumstances.⁷ Third, you must show that your injury was foreseeable, meaning that a reasonable person would have known that the tortfeasor's behavior could cause the type of injury that you suffered.

(a) Duty and Breach

To prove a negligent tort, you need to demonstrate that the tortfeasor owed you a duty of care. Whether or not someone owes you a duty of care depends on the particular situation and your relationship to that person. For example, a supervisor in a job owes you a duty of care to maintain a safe workplace, and you can therefore sue him if he fails to do so. A coworker, however, does not owe you that duty, and you could not sue him, even if he gave you a piece of defective equipment and you got injured using it.⁸ To decide whether or not the person responsible for your injuries owed you a duty of care, you can look at what other courts have said about similar situations. The cases mentioned in the footnotes of this Chapter are a good place to start your research.

As an incarcerated person, the state and its employees will owe you a duty of care in most situations. But to make sure that the state or a specific state employee owed you a duty of care in your case, you will have to look for cases or laws that apply to your specific situation.

There may also be laws in your state that define which duties people owe each other in certain situations and what counts as a breach of those duties. If a statute or regulation says that a certain type of behavior constitutes negligence, then that behavior is called “negligence per se.”⁹ All you would need to show is that the tortfeasor engaged in the behavior described in the statute, and that you suffered injury as a result.¹⁰ The statute or regulation that you cite must be at least somewhat designed to prevent the injury you suffered.¹¹

3. Libel, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

4. Slander, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

5. Trespass, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

6. Conversion, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

7. Negligence is defined as “[t]he failure to exercise the standard of care that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in a similar situation.” Negligence, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019). See also Negligence Tort, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019) (defining a negligent tort).

8. Burke v. Torres, 120 A.D.2d 283, 284–286, 509 N.Y.S.2d 11, 12–13 (1st Dept. 1986) (finding that worker's compensation in a negligence case in an employment context is only exclusively available under the Worker's Compensation Law, and the statute makes the negligent co-worker immune from suit).

9. Negligence, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

10. Dance v. Town of Southampton, 95 A.D.2d 442, 445, 467 N.Y.S.2d 203, 206 (2d Dept. 1983).

11. Kernan v. Am. Dredging Co., 355 U.S. 426, 432, 78 S. Ct. 394, 398, 2 L. Ed. 2d 382, 388 n.7 (1958) (stating the general tort doctrine where liability for violation of a statutory duty is imposed only where the injury is one in which the statute was designed to prevent).

(b) Reasonableness and Foreseeability

In court, ordinary words like “reasonable” and “foreseeable” have special legal meanings. You should look at cases with facts similar to yours to determine how courts would define those terms in your case.¹² As with a duty of care, certain written laws and statutes may define standards of reasonableness and foreseeability.

To determine whether your injury was foreseeable and whether the alleged tortfeasor acted responsibly, courts will examine the situation before you were injured. This is called an “ex ante perspective.” You must show that your injury was predictable even before you became injured; in other words, you cannot use the fact that you were injured to show that your injury was foreseeable.

(c) Checklist for General Tort Claims

Before filing a tort claim, make sure you can establish the following elements in your case:

- (1) In the case of an intentional tort:
 - (a) The person causing the injury meant to cause it, and
 - (b) The person causing the injury had no established right to do what he or she did.¹³
- (2) In the case of a negligent tort:
 - (a) The person causing the injury could have prevented the harm, and
 - (b) The person’s action or inaction directly and foreseeably caused your harm, and
 - (c) If the person causing the injury is a state or prison employee, he, in his official capacity, owed you a greater duty of care than you received.¹⁴
- (3) In both intentional and negligent torts, you must prove actual injury:
 - (a) It is not enough to show a prison official intended to harm you if you were not actually injured.
 - (b) You must show signs of injury to your body, or proof of loss or damage to your property. Medical records will be helpful in proving this element. While it is possible to show that emotional distress you have suffered is an actual injury, it is very difficult. You would have to show that the act that caused you to experience emotional distress was “extreme and outrageous.”¹⁵

3. Constitutional Torts

The violation of your constitutional rights is another type of tort. The state officers and employees you encounter have the same duty not to harm you and your property that other citizens have. However, because officers and employees are state actors, they also have a duty not to violate your federal or state constitutional rights. You should read JLM, Chapter 13, “Federal Habeas Corpus,” and Chapter 16, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law” if you believe your federal constitutional rights have been violated.

(a) Violation of State Constitutional Rights

12. See Smith v. Nassau Cty., 34 N.Y.2d 18, 23, 311 N.E.2d 489, 492, 355 N.Y.S.2d 349, 353 (1974) (stating that reasonable cause will vary according to the circumstances and exigencies of each particular case); Di Ponzio v. Riordan, 224 A.D.2d 139, 141, 645 N.Y.S.2d 368, 369 (4th Dept. 1996) (holding that the question whether defendants fulfilled their duty of reasonable care presents a question best left to the trier of fact).

13. See, e.g., N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 137(5) (McKinney 2014) (“No inmate . . . shall be subjected to degrading treatment, and no officer or other employee . . . shall inflict any blows . . . upon any inmate, unless in self-defense, or to suppress a revolt or insurrection.”) Thus, if a guard hits you and was not acting in self-defense, the guard would be acting outside the scope of his authority.

14. See, e.g., Kagan v. State, 221 A.D.2d 7, 11–12, 646 N.Y.S.2d 336, 339 (2d Dept. 1996) (finding the state liable for failure of prison employees to bring an incarcerated person to see nurse in a timely fashion, and of the nurse to refer the incarcerated person to a physician, when both actions were required by prison regulations).

15. See, e.g., Shenandoah v. Hill, 9 Misc. 3d 548, 553, 799 N.Y.S.2d 892, 896–897 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. Madison County 2005) (citing Howell v. New York Post Co., 81 N.Y.2d 115, 612 N.E. 699, 596 N.Y.S.2d 350 (1993)) (defining extreme and outrageous behavior as conduct “so outrageous of character, and so extreme in degree, as to go beyond all possible bounds of decency, and to be regarded as atrocious, and utterly intolerable in a civilized community”).

When the state government violates your rights under the state constitution, you may be able to sue the state for damages.¹⁶ Part C of this Chapter explains more about choosing the right court to file your claim. But if you wish to sue the State of New York, you must file your case in the New York Court of Claims.¹⁷ To prove a constitutional tort against the state, you must show that the state harmed you and that the state's actions violated specific rights listed in the state constitution. For example, you can sue the state government if the state discriminated against you because of your race or religion.¹⁸

The New York Court of Appeals¹⁹ established the right to bring claims for violations of the state constitution in the 1996 case Brown v. State.²⁰ However, Brown only addressed tort claims based on the equal protection clause and the search and seizure clause of the New York Constitution.²¹ The court did not decide whether individuals can sue for damages based on violations of other parts of the state constitution.²² So far, at least one New York court has allowed damages based on another part of the state constitution (the "cruel and unusual punishment" provision).²³

After Brown, New York courts have refused to award damages for state constitutional violations if other remedies are available.²⁴ This means that if you can bring a regular tort claim or a federal civil rights claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983,²⁵ New York courts will not allow you to bring a state constitutional tort claim. However, you can still sue the state in the Court of Claims for violations of ordinary tort law. Since it is usually easier to prove a simple tort law claim than a constitutional claim, your chance of success is also higher under tort law (intentional and negligent torts, as above).

16. Not all states permit civil suits based on violations of the state constitution, but New York does. See Brown v. State, 89 N.Y.2d 172, 188, 674 N.E.2d 1129, 1138–1139, 652 N.Y.S.2d 223, 232–233 (1996).

17. See Brown v. State, 89 N.Y.2d 172, 183, 674 N.E.2d 1129, 1136, 652 N.Y.S.2d 223, 230 (1996) ("[D]amage claims against the state based upon violations of the State Constitution come within the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims.").

18. N.Y. CONST. art. I, § 11: "No person shall be denied the equal protection of the laws of this state or any subdivision thereof. No person shall, because of race, color, creed, or religion, be subjected to any discrimination in his civil rights by any other person or by any firm, corporation, or institution, or by the state or any agency or subdivision of the state."

19. The New York Court of Appeals is the highest court in the State of New York. The intermediate court is the New York Appellate Division, and the trial level court is called the New York Supreme Court.

20. See Brown v. State, 89 N.Y.2d 172, 674 N.E.2d 1129, 652 N.Y.S.2d 223 (1996).

21. See Brown v. State, 89 N.Y.2d 172, 188, 674 N.E.2d 1129, 1138–1139, 652 N.Y.S.2d 223, 232–233 (1996) ("[W]e conclude that a cause of action to recover damages may be asserted against the state for violation of the Equal Protection and Search and Seizure Clauses of the State Constitution."); see also N.Y. CONST. art. I, § 11 (equal protection clause); N.Y. CONST. art. I, § 12 (search and seizure clause); Wahad v. FBI, 994 F. Supp. 237, 239 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (stating that Brown recognized a "narrow remedy" against the State of New York for violations of the equal protection and search and seizure guarantees of the New York State Constitution).

22. See Augat v. State, 244 A.D.2d 835, 837, 666 N.Y.S.2d 249, 251–252 (3d Dept. 1997) (stating that the availability of damages under New York's due process and freedom of association protections was "not specifically resolved in Brown").

23. See De La Rosa v. State, 173 Misc. 2d 1007, 1010–1011, 662 N.Y.S.2d 921, 924 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1997) (holding that a state's violation of the cruel and unusual punishment provision in Article I, § 5 of the New York Constitution can give rise to a civil rights cause of action under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, provided that injunctive and declaratory relief are inadequate and money damages would further the constitutional purpose).

24. See Bin Wahad v. FBI, 994 F. Supp. 237, 240 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (refusing to find a cause of action for violation of the State Due Process Clause because plaintiffs had alternative remedies under 42 U.S.C. § 1983); see also Augat v. New York, 244 A.D.2d 835, 837–838, 666 N.Y.S.2d 249, 251–252 (3d Dept. 1997) (holding that plaintiff's constitutional tort claims were related to existing common-law torts for which there were adequate remedies); Remley v. State, 174 Misc. 2d 523, 527–528, 665 N.Y.S.2d 1005, 1009 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1997) (refusing to find a private right of action for violations of the State Due Process Clause under Brown analysis because plaintiff had alternative remedies under State tort law).

25. See Chapter 16 of the JLM, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law," for more information on how to obtain relief for violations of federal law under 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

(b) Federal Constitutional Violations

If you want to recover damages for a violation of your rights under the U.S. Constitution, you must file a claim in either a federal district court or in the New York Supreme Court but not in the Court of Claims. See JLM, Chapter 16, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law,” for more information about using Section 1983 to bring a claim for violations of federal constitutional rights. Remember that the New York State Constitution has similar provisions to the U.S. Constitution, so you may be able to use the same facts to sue in the Court of Claims by alleging violations of the state constitution, as described above.

4. Examples of Common Tort Actions

This Section describes five torts that can happen in prison and the elements you must prove to win damages (compensation) for these torts. Excessive force and failure to protect you from other incarcerated people are two types of actions that are not included in this Chapter, because they are covered in JLM, Chapter 24, “Your Right to be Free from Assault.” You should read that Chapter if you have been assaulted by a corrections officer or if you feel that the prison failed to protect you from assault by another incarcerated person. While the footnotes for this Section include citations to relevant cases, you should use these cases only as a starting point for your research. If you use the cases cited here, you should read the full text of those cases.

This Chapter only includes cases from New York and some federal cases. While courts in states other than New York are not required to follow the decisions of cases in New York, the tort law of most states is very similar to New York's. For that reason, the case summaries in this Chapter should serve as a useful starting point for determining the types of claims that other states' courts will hear. However, you should make sure to research the law in your state so that you know which cases to cite in your lawsuit.

There are many torts that happen in prison that can form the basis of a lawsuit and the following are just a few examples of those. Look for cases with similar facts to your situation where the incarcerated person won, and use those cases to support your claim.

(a) Injuries Relating to Work and Work-Release Programs

Injuries sustained during the course of work within the prison or while on work release are considered work injuries. Tort actions under this category include the state's failure to provide reasonably safe equipment, as well as the state's failure to warn incarcerated people of specific dangers they might face when using the equipment.²⁶

For example, one court awarded damages to an incarcerated person who lost his fingers working in an on-site prison sawmill because his wood chipping machine was missing a safety guard.²⁷ The state violated its duty to maintain safe machinery since it failed to provide a safety guard for the machine. Similarly, another court awarded damages to an incarcerated person who was injured in the course of repair work when the scaffolding beneath him collapsed.²⁸

Just as the state has a duty to maintain a safe workplace, you too have a responsibility to take proper care of yourself while working in the prison or work-release program. If the court finds that your carelessness played a role in your injury, it can reduce your damages by the amount for which it

26. See Kandrach v. State, 188 A.D.2d 910, 913, 591 N.Y.S.2d 868, 871 (3d Dept. 1992) (finding that when a prisoner participates in a prison work program, the State has a duty to provide reasonably safe equipment and warn prisoners of any potential dangers).

27. Kandrach v. State, 188 A.D.2d 910, 912–915, 591 N.Y.S.2d 868, 870–872 (3d Dept. 1992) (“[W]hen the State, through its correctional authorities, directs a prison inmate to participate in a work program during incarceration, it owes the inmate a duty to provide reasonably safe machinery and equipment with which to work and adequate warnings and instructions for the safe operation of such machinery and equipment.”).

28. Shulenberg v. State, 35 Misc. 2d 751, 751–752, 231 N.Y.S.2d 816, 817 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1962) (finding that the State failed to provide an incarcerated person with a safe place to work where the individual fell while working on a scaffolding because one of the planks of the scaffolding broke).

believes you were responsible, or even prevent you from receiving damages altogether. This is called “comparative negligence” or “contributory negligence.”²⁹

For example, in the wood chipping case above, the court only awarded half of the total damages to the incarcerated person, because the incarcerated person should not have climbed onto the chipping machine in the first place.³⁰ In another case, the court reduced damages because the incarcerated person did not follow safety instructions.³¹ However, if you were ordered to do the dangerous act by a prison employee that caused your injury, courts may not reduce your damages under a contributory negligence theory.³² This is because courts know that incarcerated people can be punished for disobeying instructions.³³

Furthermore, if the court believes that you behaved recklessly in a work-related setting, it can refuse to award you damages at all. Recklessness in this context means ignoring a known or obvious risk.³⁴ Whether the court considers that you were reckless depends partially on how knowledgeable you were about the field or area in which you were working. For instance, one court denied an incarcerated person damages for injuries suffered after touching a live wiring because his previous electrical training made him aware that touching wires was dangerous.³⁵ By contrast, an incarcerated person who had received only minimal training was not held responsible for his own injuries.³⁶

Note that you may be unable to recover from the state for the work-release injuries that do not occur on prison grounds, especially if the state was not the owner or contractor at the work site.³⁷ Also, the state cannot be sued for recommending an incarcerated person for a work-release program if the

29. Contributory Negligence, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019). States that use a contributory negligence rule will not grant damages if the plaintiff was negligent in a way that contributed to his injury. Comparative Negligence, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019) Comparative negligence systems are less harsh and allow the plaintiff to recover partial damages even if he shared in responsibility for the accident. New York and several other states employ comparative negligence systems. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1411, 1413 (McKinney 2012); see, e.g., ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 12-2505 (LexisNexis 2019) (Arizona), FLA. STAT. ANN. § 768.81(2) (LexisNexis 2019) (Florida), LA. CIV. CODE ANN. art. 2323 (2019) (Louisiana), MISS. CODE ANN. § 11-7-15 (2019) (Mississippi), WASH. REV. CODE ANN. § 4.22.005 (LexisNexis 2019) (Washington).

30. Kandrach v. State, 188 A.D.2d 910, 914–915, 591 N.Y.S.2d 868, 872 (3d Dept. 1992).

31. Hicks v. State, 124 A.D.2d 949, 949–950, 509 N.Y.S.2d 152, 152–153 (3d Dept. 1986) (upholding trial court's decision to reduce an incarcerated person's damages award by half where the incarcerated person was contributorily negligent since he failed to follow safety instructions).

32. See Mariano v. State, 31 Misc. 2d 241, 244, 222 N.Y.S.2d 968, 971 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1961) (holding that an incarcerated person who injured his hand while doing assigned work could not be found to be contributorily negligent, because he was following prison orders). See also Lowe v. State, 194 A.D.2d 898, 899, 599 N.Y.S.2d 639, 641 (3d Dept. 1993) (noting that the penalties which can be imposed for not following orders in prison made an incarcerated person's dangerous behavior not unreasonable, since he was ordered to do it, and thus declining to find him contributorily negligent).

33. See Lowe v. State, 194 A.D.2d 898, 899, 599 N.Y.S.2d 639, 641 (3d Dept. 1993) (noting that the penalties which can be imposed for not following orders in prison made an incarcerated person's dangerous behavior not unreasonable, since he was ordered to do it, and thus declining to find him contributorily negligent).

34. Recklessness, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

35. Martinez v. State, 225 A.D.2d 877, 879, 639 N.Y.S.2d 145, 147 (3d Dept. 1996) (“The court also held that, even if claimant had not actually been qualified to perform this task, ‘there [was] virtually no question about the fact that he created the impression among State employees that he indeed was qualified’ and therefore, when asked to perform the electrical work, the State had every reason to believe that claimant was qualified to do so.”).

36. See Kandrach v. State, 188 A.D.2d 910, 910–911, 591 N.Y.S.2d 868, 869 (3d Dept. 1992) (upholding partial damages for an incarcerated person who had received only five minutes of training on how to operate a woodchipper, which the court found inadequate to fulfill the prison's “duty to provide sufficient warnings and instructions for the safe operation of such machinery and equipment.”).

37. See Gress v. State, 157 A.D.2d 479, 479, 549 N.Y.S.2d 666, 667 (1st Dept. 1990) (holding that an incarcerated person who fell from scaffolding while doing demolition work on a work release program did not have a claim against the State because the State was not the owner or contractor at the work site and the prisoner participating in the work release program was not a state employee but instead an employee of the private employer that he was placed with).

officers that made the recommendation had discretion (the authority) to do so under their job title.³⁸ Finally, the state has no duty to inspect possible work sites for work-release programs.³⁹

You may be able to determine whether the state is liable for your injury by researching New York State labor laws, which courts have found applicable to prison work.⁴⁰

(b) Medical Care Provided to Incarcerated People⁴¹

Claims relating to inadequate or inappropriate medical care are negligence claims. The state has a duty to provide incarcerated people with reasonable and adequate medical care in a timely manner.⁴² If you believe the state has violated this duty to you in a way that caused you actual harm, you may have a successful medical tort claim.

In order to pursue a tort claim for medical negligence, you will have to prove that the treatment the state gave you (or failed to give you) was not standard—that it was not within “accepted medical practice.”⁴³

Second, you will have to prove that the state’s action or inaction directly caused your injury and that the injury would not have happened otherwise. This is called “proximate cause.”⁴⁴ For example, even if you had to wait a long time for treatment, you would not be able to recover damages unless the waiting was what caused your injury or made it significantly worse.⁴⁵ In order to prove the cause of your injury, you will almost always need testimony from medical experts.⁴⁶ As with other negligence tort claims, you must also show that the injury you suffered was a foreseeable result of the improper treatment you received.⁴⁷

If you believe you have been injured due to improper or inadequate medical care, you can also seek damages under the theory of “ministerial neglect,” which means that when the state makes rules

38. See Santangelo v. State, 101 A.D.2d 20, 21, 474 N.Y.S.2d 995 (4th Dept. 1984) (“we hold that the actions of the Temporary Release Committee and the Superintendent were of a discretionary and quasi-judicial nature for which the State enjoys absolute immunity.”).

39. See Gress v. State, 157 A.D.2d 479, 479, 549 N.Y.S.2d 666, 667 (1st Dept. 1990) (“the State does not have any duty or obligation to inspect and ensure the safety of the possible jobsites for inmates in a temporary release program”).

40. See Callahan v. State, 19 A.D.2d 437, 438, 243 N.Y.S.2d 881, 882–883 (3d Dept. 1963) (holding that the Labor Law establishes a standard of care against which the state should be judged), aff’d, Callahan v. State, 14 N.Y.2d 665, 198 N.E.2d 903, 249 N.Y.S.2d 871 (1964).

41. For more information about inadequate medical care claims in federal court, see Chapter 23 of the JLM, “Your Right to Adequate Medical Care.”

42. See Kagan v. State, 221 A.D.2d 7, 11, 646 N.Y.S.2d 336, 339 (2d Dept. 1996) (citing Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 103, 97 S. Ct. 285, 290, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 259 (1976) (incarcerated people who rely on prison authorities to treat their medical needs have a fundamental right to reasonable and adequate medical care). Further, it is the state’s duty to give medical care “without undue delay”; when “delays in diagnosis and/or treatment [are] a proximate or aggravating cause of [a] claimed injury”, the State may be liable.” Kagan v. State, 221 A.D.2d 7, 11, 646 N.Y.S.2d 336, 339 (2d Dept. 1996).

43. See, e.g., Larkin v. State, 84 A.D.2d 438, 445–446, 446 N.Y.S.2d 818, 823 (4th Dept. 1982) (holding the state liable where a doctor failed to diagnose and treat an incarcerated person’s headaches, resulting in the incarcerated person’s death by aneurysm).

44. Cause, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

45. See, e.g., Brown v. State, 192 A.D.2d 936, 938, 939, 596 N.Y.S.2d 882, 884–885 (3d Dept. 1993) (refusing to award damages for delay in treatment to an incarcerated person who had to have his larynx (voice box) removed because it was determined that by the time he complained the larynx would have had to be removed anyway).

46. See Zi Guang v. State, 263 A.D.2d 745, 747, 695 N.Y.S.2d 142, 145 (3d Dept. 1999) (finding that an incarcerated person failed to establish medical malpractice by prison officials in part because the incarcerated person’s medical expert at trial “often . . . appeared unfamiliar with [the incarcerated person’s] medical records”); Duffen v. State, 245 A.D.2d 653, 654, 665 N.Y.S.2d 978, 980 (3d Dept. 1997) (dismissing an incarcerated person’s claim against the state because medical expert’s testimony was too speculative to prove causation).

47. See Levin v. State of N.Y., 32 A.D.3d 501, 502, 820 N.Y.S.2d 626, 628, 2006 NY Slip Op 6274, ¶ 2 (2d Dept. 2006) (stating that the state has a duty to provide for the health and care of incarcerated people, but the scope of that duty is limited to risks of harm that are reasonably foreseeable); Kagan v. State, 221 A.D.2d 7, 16–17, 646 N.Y.S.2d 336, 342–343 (2d Dept. 1996) (finding that an incarcerated person’s loss of hearing was foreseeable result of not treating the pain or bleeding in her ear).

describing its duty to provide medical care and then fails to follow those rules, it is liable for the resulting harm.⁴⁸ For example, if the prison has a formal process by which incarcerated people can see medical staff and fails to follow that process for you, then the prison may have automatically breached its duty to you.⁴⁹

The court may decide to eliminate or reduce damages if your actions or your failure to act contributed to your medical injury. For example, if you know that you have tuberculosis but do not tell prison officials of this fact, you might not receive damages if your condition goes untreated.⁵⁰ The court may also reduce any damages that you might receive if you failed to continue with the prescribed course of treatment after being released on bail.⁵¹

A court may also refuse to hold the state liable if your injuries were due to the negligence of a private physician not directly employed by the state.⁵² In this case, you may have to take legal action against the medical official or private hospital that treated you instead of the state. However, the state could potentially be held liable for the actions of a private physician if you reasonably believed the physician worked for the state and you had no reason to believe otherwise.⁵³

(c) Destruction or Loss of the Property of an Incarcerated Person

State employees have an obligation not to take, damage, or destroy your property without good cause⁵⁴ (a legally sufficient reason)—whether intentionally or through negligence. If they do, you may be able to sue the state in the Court of Claims.⁵⁵ Remember that before you can file a claim for damages in any court, you must first exhaust all of your prison's administrative remedies.⁵⁶ A full description of when you can access the courts and which courts you should use is in Part C below.

If your items were stolen from you, you may be able to hold the state responsible for failing to provide adequate security in the area from which your property was taken.⁵⁷ However, you also have a responsibility for securing your own belongings. If you fail to lock a footlocker or leave your valuables in an open space, the court may reduce your damages to the degree it thinks you were responsible, or

48. See Kagan v. State, 221 A.D.2d 7, 10–11, 646 N.Y.S.2d 336, 338–339 (2d Dept. 1996) (finding that there is “no governmental immunity for the negligent performance of . . . ministerial duties” and that “whenever delays in diagnosis and/or treatment are a proximate cause or aggravating cause of claimed injury, the State may be liable”); see also Ogle v. State, 191 A.D.2d 878, 881, 594 N.Y.S.2d 824, 826 (3d Dept. 1993) (stating that the State’s failure to administer a tuberculosis treatment consistent with its policies made it liable for damages when surgery was ultimately necessary).

49. See Kagan v. State, 221 A.D.2d 7, 11–12, 17, 646 N.Y.S.2d 336, 339, 343 (2d Dept. 1996) (finding negligence where, contrary to policy, prison officials failed to allow an incarcerated person to make appointment for next available screening, to make her medical records available to the screening nurse, and to properly enter her complaints into the record).

50. See Ogle v. State, 191 A.D.2d 878, 881, 594 N.Y.S.2d 824, 826 (3d Dept. 1993) (stating that it is “well established that culpable conduct, including the failure to reveal part of one’s medical history, may diminish a victim’s recovery in a medical malpractice case.”).

51. See Ogle v. State, 191 A.D.2d 878, 881, 594 N.Y.S.2d 824, 826 (3d Dept. 1993) (holding that the formerly incarcerated person contributed to the development of his Potts disease by failing to continue with the prescribed course of INH therapy while he was released on bail).

52. See Williams v. State, 164 Misc. 2d 783, 785, 626 N.Y.S.2d 659, 661 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1995) (holding that the state was not liable for the negligence of a private dentist not working for the state).

53. See Soltis v. State, 172 A.D.2d 919, 920, 568 N.Y.S.2d 470, 471–472 (3d Dept. 1991) (refusing to dismiss case against state where the incarcerated person could reasonably have believed that the private physician was a state employee).

54. Good Cause, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

55. See Tigner v. New York, 559 F.Supp. 25, 27 (W.D.N.Y. 1983), aff’d, Tigner v. New York, 742 F.2d 1432 (2d Cir. 1983) (holding that the Court of Claims provides a remedy for lost and damaged property claims that is sufficient to satisfy constitutional guarantees of due process).

56. See Part C below. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 10(9) (McKinney 2019) (also providing that such a claim must be filed within 120 days after the date in which the prison’s administrative remedies have been exhausted).

57. See Foy v. State, 182 A.D.2d 670, 671, 582 N.Y.S.2d 262, 263 (2d Dept. 1992) (holding that the state is not immune from liability in an incarcerated person’s claim for loss of personal property when the incarcerated person alleged that the state negligently failed to properly secure the area of his cell).

may prevent you from recovering damages at all.⁵⁸ If you believe that prison officials have intentionally taken or destroyed your property without authorization, refer to Part B(1) above (intentional torts). If you believe that your property was destroyed due to negligently maintained prison facilities, see Part B(4)(d) below.

(d) Negligently Maintained Prison Facilities

As with injuries in the workplace, the state is not responsible for preventing all injuries that could occur on its property.⁵⁹ The state is only responsible for maintaining facilities in a “reasonably safe condition.”⁶⁰ To determine what “reasonably safe” means, a court might consider how likely it was that an injury would occur, how serious that injury was likely to be, and how much it would have cost the state to prevent the injury.⁶¹

For example, a court refused to award damages to an incarcerated person who was injured in an icy exercise yard because prison staff had taken “reasonable precautions” to prevent such injuries. In this case, “reasonable precautions” meant checking the area daily and salting the yard when it was slippery.⁶² To receive money damages in that case, the incarcerated person would have had to show that the particular area of the track was abnormally dangerous, and that officials knew or should have known about the danger.⁶³

(e) False Arrest and False Imprisonment

False imprisonment applies to incarcerated people who are wrongfully held in special housing units or on keeplock.⁶⁴ For additional information on confinement to special housing units, refer to JLM, Chapter 18, “Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Proceedings.”

A plaintiff making a false arrest claim must prove four elements: (1) the defendant intended to confine the plaintiff; (2) the plaintiff was aware of the confinement; (3) the plaintiff did not consent to the confinement; and (4) the confinement was not authorized.⁶⁵ The elements for proving false imprisonment are basically the same as the elements for proving false arrest.⁶⁶

58. See Pollard v. State, 173 A.D.2d 906, 907–908, 569 N.Y.S.2d 770, 771 (3d Dept. 1991) (addressing the state’s contributory negligence defense, but deferring to findings of trial court that the incarcerated person had locked his locker and thus was not contributorily negligent).

59. See, e.g., Killeen v. State, 66 N.Y.2d 850, 851–852, 489 N.E.2d 245, 246, 498 N.Y.S.2d 358, 359 (1985) (holding that while the state “owes patients in its institutions a duty of reasonable care to protect them from injury, whatever the source,” that does not “render the state an insurer or require it to keep each patient under constant surveillance,” and finding the state not liable for injury that resulted when a patient in a state mental facility accidentally spilled hot water on himself (internal citation omitted)).

60. See Basso v. Miller, 40 N.Y.2d 233, 241, 352 N.E.2d 868, 872, 386 N.Y.S.2d 564, 568 (1976) (“A landowner must act as a reasonable man in maintaining his property in a reasonably safe condition in view of all the circumstances.”) (quoting Smith v. Arbaugh’s Rest., Inc., 469 F.2d 97, 100, 152 U.S. App. D.C. 86, 89 (D.C. Cir. 1972)).

61. Basso v. Miller, 40 N.Y.2d 233, 241, 352 N.E.2d 868, 872, 386 N.Y.S.2d 564, 568 (1976) (quoting Smith v. Arbaugh’s Rest., Inc., 469 F.2d 97, 100 (D.C. Cir. 1972)).

62. Condon v. State, 193 A.D.2d 874, 875, 597 N.Y.S.2d 531, 532 (3d Dept. 1993) (correction officer testified that area was checked daily and sand was applied if slippery or someone complained).

63. Condon v. State, 193 A.D.2d 874, 875, 597 N.Y.S.2d 531, 532 (3d Dept. 1993) (incarcerated person failed to show that the surface was abnormally dangerous or that the state should have had notice of a dangerous condition).

64. See, e.g., Gittens v. State, 132 Misc. 2d 399, 406–407, 504 N.Y.S.2d 969, 974 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1986) (finding that an incarcerated person held in keeplock nine days beyond the penalty imposed by a disciplinary hearing could sue the state for false imprisonment).

65. See Broughton v. State, 37 N.Y.2d 451, 456, 335 N.E.2d 310, 314, 373 N.Y.S.2d 87, 93 (1975) (listing the elements of proving a false arrest claim). Note that in some jurisdictions, the plaintiff does not need to show that he was aware of the confinement. See Scofield v. Critical Air Med., Inc., 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 915, 923–924, 45 Cal. App. 4th 990, 1003–1007 (Cal. Ct. App. 1996) (harm may result even if victim is not aware at the time of the imprisonment or its wrongfulness).

66. See Broughton v. State, 37 N.Y.2d 451, 455–456, 335 N.E.2d 310, 313–314, 373 N.Y.S.2d 87, 92–93 (1975).

The Court of Appeals has found that when prison employees discipline incarcerated people, and that discipline is allowed either by statute or by regulation, both the employees and the state have absolute immunity from lawsuits.⁶⁷ “Absolute immunity” in this case means that the employees or state will not be considered criminally guilty for their actions. The court also will not order them to pay damages for their actions. Because of absolute immunity, even if you are placed on keeplock or in administrative segregation for charges that are eventually dismissed, you may not be able to recover damages.⁶⁸

Keep in mind that a judge is not a “state officer” as defined by the Court of Claims Act, so you cannot sue in the Court of Claims for a faulty decision by a judge.⁶⁹ A judge may only be found personally responsible for a faulty decision if he did not have the authority to make that particular decision.⁷⁰

(f) Excessive Force and Failure to Protect

One of the most common tort lawsuits by incarcerated people are lawsuits claiming that corrections officers used excessive force against them or failed to protect them from other incarcerated people. Lawsuits to recover for excessive force and failure to protect are covered in detail in JLM, Chapter 24, “Your Right to be Free from Assault by Prison Guards and Other Incarcerated People.”

C. Protecting Your Rights

This section provides an overview of the ways that you can seek relief for your tort claim. It covers both administrative remedies available through the prison and remedies available through the courts.

1. Facility Grievance Procedures

(a) Exhaustion

If you are filing a claim for money damages based on loss or damage to your personal property, you cannot file in the Court of Claims until you have exhausted the prison’s own administrative remedies for personal property claims.⁷¹ “Exhausting administrative remedies” means that you must use all Department of Corrections and Community Supervision Services (DOCCS) internal procedures for compensating incarcerated people before suing in the Court of Claims.

If DOCCS agrees to repay you for your lost or damaged property, then you will not be able to file a lawsuit in the Court of Claims.⁷² If DOCCS does not grant your requests for repayment, you are allowed to file and serve your claim in the Court of Claims. You must file and serve your claim within 120 days of completing all internal procedures.⁷³ Part D of this chapter describes how to file a claim in the Court of Claims.

67. See Arteaga v. State, 72 N.Y.2d 212, 217–221, 527 N.E.2d 1194, 1197–1199, 532 N.Y.S.2d 57, 60–62 (1988) (finding that acts by employees in compliance with regulations constitute discretionary conduct for which the State has absolute immunity); see also Gittens v. State, 132 Misc. 2d 399, 403, 504 N.Y.S.2d 969, 972 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1986) (finding prison employee’s disciplinary confinement of an incarcerated person to be in compliance with applicable regulations and thus not false imprisonment).

68. See Arteaga v. State, 72 N.Y.2d 212, 220–221, 527 N.E.2d 1194, 1198–1199, 532 N.Y.S.2d 57, 61–62 (1988) (finding the state and prison officers not liable for confinement of incarcerated people even though charges against the people who were incarcerated were later dismissed); see also Gittens v. State, 132 Misc. 2d 399, 403 n.5, 504 N.Y.S.2d 969, 972 n.5 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1986) (“[R]egardless of a disposition ultimately favorable to the inmate, [confinement during the period when the charges are pending] does not constitute an actionable deprivation.”).

69. See Murph v. State, 98 Misc. 2d 324, 326, 413 N.Y.S.2d 854, 856 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1979) (“it follows inescapably from this analysis that the State of New York can never be liable for the acts of its Judges”).

70. See Koepp v. City of Hudson, 276 A.D. 443, 446, 95 N.Y.S.2d 700, 703 (App. Div. 1950) (“when a judge acts he must be clothed with jurisdiction, and acting without this he is but an individual, falsely assuming an authority he does not possess.”).

71. N.Y. Ct. Cl. ACT § 10(9) (McKinney Supp. 2011).

72. In order to preserve your claim, it may be necessary to begin the filing process even though your DOCCS procedures are not yet completed.

73. N.Y. Ct. Cl. ACT § 10(9) (McKinney Supp. 2011). But note that, as a person who is incarcerated, you cannot use the late deadline extension available to other Court of Claims claimants. McCann v. State, 194 Misc.

(b) Administrative Remedies

DOCCS may pay you if (1) another incarcerated person has damaged or destroyed your personal property or (2) an employee of DOCCS has damaged or destroyed your personal property. According to Directive #2733, money awards are limited to $350 if another incarcerated person caused the loss of property and $5000 if a DOCCS employee is responsible for the loss or damage. You should ask prison officials for a copy of Directive #2733, which includes sample forms for applying for reimbursement.⁷⁴

2. Pursuing a Remedy in Court

(a) Choosing a Court

Where you file your lawsuit depends on the circumstances of your case, whom you want to sue, and what kind of remedy you are seeking. Generally, the Court of Claims hears lawsuits against the state, including people acting as representatives of the state, such as prison employees. The New York State Supreme Court hears lawsuits against people acting as individuals. If you want to sue individuals for violating your federal constitutional rights, you would sue in federal court.

(b) Filing in the Court of Claims

If you want to sue the State of New York (if, for example, you are a incarcerated person in a state prison and you believe the state's employees have harmed you), you must sue in the New York Court of Claims.⁷⁵ In fact, the State of New York, and certain public authorities, are the only defendants you can name in a suit before the Court of Claims.⁷⁶ If a state guard or other employee has harmed you in the course of his employment, you may sue the state for damages in the Court of Claims.⁷⁷

As long as the employee was acting in his official capacity (meaning that his actions were part of the responsibilities of his job), you may not sue him personally.⁷⁸ If the employee's actions (or lack of 2d 340, 341, 754 N.Y.S.2d 819, 820 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 2002) (even if delay was excusable, the plain language of the Court of Claims Act § 10(9) prohibited late filings by prisoners).

74. N.Y. STATE FIN. LAW § 8(12), (12-a) (McKinney 2010); State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 2733, Inmate Personal Property Claim III(B)(2) (2015) available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/2733.pdf> (last visited June 5, 2020) (establishing that (1) heads of state departments are authorized to pay out of a cash advance account up to $250 at their own discretion through facility grievance procedures; (2) payments over $250 must be submitted to the State comptroller; (3) payments over $1000 must be approved by the State Attorney General; and (4) payments from internal grievance procedures cannot exceed $5000).

75. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 9(2) (McKinney Supp. 2010) (giving the Court of Claims jurisdiction to hear cases against the state for damages).

76. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 9(2) (McKinney Supp. 2010); New York State Unified Court System, Court of Claims: Frequently Asked Questions, <http://www.nycourts.gov/courts/nyscourtofclaims/faq.shtml#who> (last visited Jan. 31, 2017) ("The Court of Claims has jurisdiction over the State of New York as well as certain authorities that are sued under their own name.").

77. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 24(2) (McKinney 2014) ("Any claim for damages arising out of any act done or the failure to perform any act within the scope of the employment and in the discharge of the duties of any officer or employee of the [D]epartment [of Correctional Services] shall be brought and maintained in the court of claims as a claim against the state."). Note that if you seek a remedy other than money damages, such as injunctive relief, you do not have to sue in the Court of Claims. Furthermore, the above requirement does not apply to § 1983 actions, which may be filed in any court of general jurisdiction. Haywood v. Drown, 556 U.S. 729, 733, 129 S. Ct. 2108, 2113, 173 L.Ed.2d 920 (2009).

78. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 24 (McKinney 2014). The test for whether an employee can be held personally liable, or whether the State must instead be sued for the employee's tortious acts, is "whether the act was done while the [employee] was doing [the State's] work, no matter how irregularly, or with what disregard of instructions." See Riviello v. Waldron, 47 N.Y.2d 297, 302, 391 N.E.2d 1278, 1281, 418 N.Y.S.2d 300, 302 (1979) (considering employee to be within the scope of his employment so long as he is discharging his duties, "no matter how irregularly, or with what disregard of instructions") (quoting Jones v. Weigand, 134 A.D. 644, 645, 119 N.Y.S. 441, 443 (2d Dept. 1909)). However, this test is complicated. An employee is not personally liable for an act simply because he was not ordered to do that act. Rather, you may be able to find liability against New York State instead action) are discretionary, which means they have a choice to act, they cannot be sued even if they have bad intentions.⁷⁹ If, however, an employee does something to you that is clearly outside of his responsibilities as an employee (for example, a criminal act unrelated to any part of the employee's duty), you may then sue that individual in the New York Supreme Court (New York's general trial court) or in federal court under Section 1983.⁸⁰ Remember that in federal prisons, officials are employed by the federal government rather than the state; you cannot bring a suit against a state for the actions of federal employees.⁸¹

Although there are some exceptions that will be discussed below, the Court of Claims can generally only award money damages. It cannot prevent the prison from using punishment that violates your constitutional rights, or fix unconstitutional conditions in the prison. In order to ask for general changes to the conditions in your prison, you must file either a Section 1983 proceeding or an Article 78 claim.⁸²

You also cannot bring a lawsuit in the Court of Claims to challenge your sentence or any decision made by prison or parole officials regarding your status. These complaints must be made under New York Civil Practice Law Article 78 (proceedings against body or officer) or Article 70 (state habeas corpus), or New York Criminal Procedure Law Article 440 (post-judgment motions).⁸³ You may, of the individual employee if the tort can be explained as a necessary step to the employee's ordered task or responsibility. In deciding whether an employee's conduct falls within the definition of "employment," the New York Court of Appeals has listed the following factors for consideration:

- (1) The time, place, and occasion of the act;
- (2) The history of the relationship between employer and employee in actual practice;
- (3) Whether the act is one commonly done by such an employee;
- (4) The extent of the departure from normal methods of performance; and
- (5) Whether the employer could have "reasonably anticipated" the act.

Riviello v. Waldron, 47 N.Y.2d 297, 303, 391 N.E.2d 1278, 1281, 418 N.Y.S.2d 300, 303 (1979). The Court of Appeals of New York has applied these factors liberally in a range of situations. See, e.g., Riviello v. Waldron, 47 N.Y.2d 297, 302, 391 N.E.2d 1278, 1281, 418 N.Y.S.2d 300, 302 (1979) (considering employee to be within the scope of his employment so long as he is discharging his duties, "no matter how irregularly, or with what disregard of instructions."); Cepeda v. Coughlin, 128 A.D.2d 995, 996, 513 N.Y.S.2d 528, 530 (3d Dept. 1987) (finding that corrections officers' use of force when supervising movement of people who were incarcerated was within the scope of their employment), appeal denied, Cepeda v. Coughlin, 70 N.Y.2d 602, 512 N.E.2d 550, 518 N.Y.S.2d 1024 (1987). While these cases do not establish a clear point at which a state employee becomes personally liable, it is clear that the level of violence or disregard must be very high to satisfy the test. Courts have determined that custody and control of incarcerated people and the maintenance of safety and security in prisons are the main responsibilities of prison employees. Cepeda v. Coughlin, 128 A.D.2d 995, 997, 513 N.Y.S.2d 528, 530 (3d Dept. 1987). A New York Supreme Court has held that "it is entirely foreseeable that correction officers will be called upon to quell disturbances and subdue violence among inmates." Mathis v. State, 140 Misc. 2d 333, 340, 531 N.Y.S.2d 680, 684 (Sup. Ct. Albany County 1988). But see Sharrow v. State, 216 A.D.2d 844, 846, 628 N.Y.S.2d 878, 880 (3d Dept. 1995) (finding that no justification existed for correction officers to use force after they had already quelled a disturbance among people who were incarcerated because, at this point, the use of force was counter to the goal of maintaining order and discipline in the facility). The Court of Appeals of New York has found that even some intentional torts can be considered within the scope of an employee's job if they were foreseeable. Riviello v. Waldron, 47 N.Y.2d 297, 304, 391 N.E.2d 1278, 1282, 418 N.Y.S.2d 300, 304 (1979). This means that even if a prison employee means to harm or injure you, if the employee can prove that situations in the past led the employee to think that the act was necessary to keep control, the employee will not be found personally liable.

79. See Tango v. Tulevech, 61 N.Y.2d 34, 40, 459 N.E.2d 182, 185, 471 N.Y.S.2d 73, 76 (1983) ("when official action involves the exercise of discretion, the officer is not liable for the injurious consequences of that action even if resulting from negligence or malice").

80. For a discussion of how to sue state officials in federal court, see JLM, Chapter 16, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1982 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law."

81. See Chapter 16 of the JLM, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law," for more information on how to sue federal prison officials if you are a federal prisoner.

82. See JLM Chapter 22, "How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules," for a discussion of Article 78 proceedings. For more information on injunctive relief in the Court of Claims, see Part C(2)(c)(i) of this Chapter.

83. See JLM Chapter 20, "Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your however, challenge your conviction under the Court of Claims Act § 8-b, which allows a lawsuit for damages if the prosecutor used “improper means” to conviction you.⁸⁴ But, to win this suit, you must prove one of the following conditions by clear and convincing evidence:

- (1) that you have served all or any part of your sentence resulting from your felony or misdemeanor conviction(s);⁸⁵
- (2) that you have been pardoned of the crime;⁸⁶ or
- (3) that the judgment of conviction against you has been reversed or vacated and the document that accuses you of a crime has been dismissed.⁸⁷

You must also prove that you did not commit the charged acts or that your acts did not amount to a felony or misdemeanor,⁸⁸ and that you did not cause your conviction by your own conduct.⁸⁹

(i) Filing in the New York State Supreme Court

You can sue an individual state employee (for example, a prison employee) in the New York Supreme Court (the trial court) only if that employee (1) owes you a duty as an individual, and (2) was not acting in an official capacity in the exercise of governmental functions. If the employee does not owe you a duty as an individual or was acting in his official capacity when he injured you, you will have to sue the state in the Court of Claims.⁹⁰ You cannot sue the State of New York for money damages in the New York Supreme Court; as discussed above, those suits must be brought in the Court of Claims. However, if you are suing the state in order to receive something other than money damages, such as injunctive relief (a court order requiring the state to take or not take some particular action), you may sue in the New York Supreme Court.

(ii) Filing in Federal Court

If you want to sue an individual state employee for violating your federal constitutional rights, federal court is the correct place to file a lawsuit. In federal court, you may receive money damages and injunctive relief. For a full discussion of how to file a claim in federal court against a state employee for the violation of your federal rights, see Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law.”

(c) Pursuing Your Case in the Court of Claims

(i) Types of Relief

If you prove that you were the victim of a tort, whether intentional or negligent, the court will order the tortfeasor (the person responsible) to compensate you for the loss you suffered, most likely by paying you a sum of money. Such a court-ordered payment is called “damages.”⁹¹ A court may award you three kinds of damages: compensatory, punitive, and nominal.⁹²

Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence,” and Chapter 21, “State Habeas Corpus: Florida, New York, and Michigan,” for more information. In brief, you may challenge your sentence using Article 440, decisions made by prison officials using Article 78, and decisions made by parole officers using Article 78 or state habeas corpus.

84. See N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 8-b(3)(b)(ii)(A) (McKinney 2019). § 8-b(3)(b)(ii)(A) states that a violation of N.Y. Crim. Proc. § 440.10(1)(b) (McKinney 2005) gives rise to a claim for damages. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. § 440.10(1)(b) (McKinney 2005) provides that a court can vacate a conviction if “the judgment was procured by duress, misrepresentation or fraud on the part of the court or a prosecutor or a person acting for or in behalf of a court or a prosecutor.”

85. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 8-b(5)(a) (McKinney 2019).

86. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 8-b(5)(b)(i) (McKinney 2019).

87. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 8-b(5)(b)(ii) (McKinney 2019).

88. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 8-b(5)(c) (McKinney 2019).

89. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 8-b(5)(d) (McKinney 2019).

90. See Morell v. Balasubramanian, 70 N.Y.2d 297, 300, 514 N.E.2d 1101, 1102, 520 N.Y.S.2d 530, 531 (1987) (deeming “actions against State officers acting in their official capacity in the exercise of governmental functions” to be essentially “claims against the State, and, therefore, arguable only in the Court of Claims”).

91. Damages, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

92. See JLM, Chapter 16, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law,” for “Compensatory damages,” the most common form of damages, attempt to pay you the exact amount of your loss. For example, the court might order payments that are enough to replace your personal items that were destroyed (such as a watch), or to pay you the money you spent on medical bills after an injury.⁹³ The court can also order payments to make up for your pain and suffering,⁹⁴ which can include the time after the injury during which you are still suffering.

“Punitive damages” are court-ordered payments on top of the amount that would repay you for the loss or injury suffered. These extra damages are usually awarded when the tort was accompanied by violence, force, hatred, fraud, or vicious and evil actions on the part of the wrongdoer. Punitive damages are meant to punish the wrongdoer, rather than to compensate the injured party.⁹⁵ It is important to note that the Court of Claims will not order the state to award you punitive damages.⁹⁶

Nominal damages are very small amounts of money awarded by courts in order to recognize that a right has been violated, even if there is no big loss or injury requiring compensation.⁹⁷ The Court may also order nominal damages if it does find a real injury, but the evidence does not show what amount would be enough to compensate for that injury.

Aside from these money awards, the Court of Claims may force people or organizations to perform or stop performing specific acts. This is called an injunction.⁹⁸ The Court of Claims can only issue an injunction if an injunction is allowed by law or if it is part of a judgment to pay money awards.⁹⁹ Otherwise, if you are seeking an injunction, you must bring your suit in the New York Supreme Court or in federal court. As a result, you cannot bring a suit in the Court of Claims asking for general changes to the conditions in your prison because the Court of Claims cannot order the state to correct those conditions.¹⁰⁰

(ii) Settlements in the Court of Claims

There is no limit to the amount of money damages the Court of Claims may award. However, the court must approve the amount.¹⁰¹ It is also possible to settle your claim against the state out of court. When the state offers you a settlement, it is not always agreeing that it did something wrong, but is offering to pay you some amount of money instead of going to trial. When you reach a settlement with the state, you give up your right to ask the court for more damages. By contrast, if you go to trial and are given damages that you think are too low, you may then appeal to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of New York requesting more damages.

more information on damages.

93. Calabrese v. Allright New York Parking, Inc. 93 A.D.2d 973, 461 N.Y.S.2d 612 (4th Dept. 1983) (affirming the lower court’s decision in calculating compensatory damages to consider whether or not the plaintiff had provoked the defendant).

94. Discretionary Damages, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019) (defining “discretionary damages” as damages “such as mental anguish or pain and suffering”).

95. Punitive Damages, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019). See Zurich Ins. Co. v. Shearson Lehman Hutton, Inc., 84 N.Y.2d 309, 316, 618 N.Y.S.2d 609 (1994).

96. Sharapata v. Town of Islip, 56 N.Y.2d 332, 334, 437 N.E.2d 1104, 1105, 452 N.Y.S.2d 347, 348 (1982) (“The waiver of sovereign immunity effected by section 8 of the Court of Claims Act does not permit punitive damages to be assessed against the State or its political subdivisions”).

97. Nominal Damages, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019). See Buchwald v. Waldron 183 A.D.2d 1080, 1081, 583 N.Y.S.2d 682 (1992).

98. For more discussion of injunctive relief, see JLM, Chapter 16, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law.”

99. See Doe v. State, 86 Misc. 2d 639, 641, 383 N.Y.S.2d 172, 174 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1976); see also N.Y. Ct. CL. ACT § 9, Notes of Decisions, n.7 (McKinney 1989 & Supp. 2006).

100. To request an injunction either (1) to prevent forms of punishment which violate your constitutional rights, or (2) to fix unconstitutional conditions in the prison, you must bring another kind of lawsuit. This lawsuit must either be in a §1983 proceeding or an Article 78 proceeding. See JLM, Chapter 16, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law.”

101. N.Y. Ct. CL. ACT § 20-a (McKinney Supp. 2010) (stating that settlements must be approved by the court); see also N.Y. Ct. CL. ACT § 20(6-a) (McKinney Supp. 2010) (“in any case where a judgment . . . is to be paid to an inmate . . . the comptroller shall give written notice, if required pursuant to subdivision two of [§ 632-a] of the executive law, to the office of victim services. . .”).

(iii) Filing Time Limits

If you want to file a claim because a state employee's negligent or intentional act physically injured your body, you have ninety days from the time of the injury or loss¹⁰² to either (1) file your claim, or (2) serve a Notice of Intention to File a Claim with the Attorney General.¹⁰³ To "serve" a legal document means to deliver it to the party you are suing. If you do not do either of these things, you may not be allowed to file at all.¹⁰⁴ Whether you are filing a claim or serving a Notice of Intention, the document must be received within the 90-day deadline. Part C(2)(c)(v) below explains how to make sure your document has been received within the deadline. These time limits exist even if you are proceeding with other administrative remedies required by your institution.

You must file a Notice of Intention to alert the state of your claim so it has a chance to respond to your complaint or prepare for its defense. See Appendix A-1 of this Chapter for a sample "Notice of Intention" form. If you are asking the court for permission to file a late claim, you need to tell the court why your late filing has not prevented the state from getting its defense ready.

Filing a Notice of Intention is not the same as beginning a lawsuit; it only gives you the right to file a lawsuit against the State in the future. Once you serve a Notice of Intention to File a Claim with the Attorney General, you have two years to file a claim for a negligent or unintentional tort, and one year to file a claim for an intentional tort.¹⁰⁵ These time limits start counting at the moment your claim "accrues" (when the injury is complete enough for the amount of damages to be determined).¹⁰⁶

If you are filing a claim for damage or loss of your personal property, the process is a little different. The time limit for filing is not ninety days after the injury (after the property is stolen), but 120 days after you have gone through all institutional administrative remedies. Within this 120-day period you must file the claim itself—NOT a Notice of Intention.¹⁰⁷

102. For more information on the time of injury or loss and the discovery of injury or loss, see N.Y. Ct. CL. ACT § 10 (McKinney Supp. 2012). Note that if you are assaulted by a corrections officer, for example, but the full extent of the injuries does not become apparent immediately, the 90 days begin when the assault happens, not when the injuries become apparent. The court has been very hesitant to extend a filing deadline to 90 days from the point at which an injury was realized. Augat v. State, 244 A.D.2d 835, 836, 666 N.Y.S.2d 249, 251 (3d Dept. 1997), appeal denied, Augat v. State, 91 N.Y.2d 814, 698 N.E.2d 956, 676 N.Y.S.2d 127 (1998). Therefore, you should be very careful not to delay filing.

103. N.Y. Ct. CL. ACT § 10(3) (McKinney Supp. 2012). See Appendix A-1 of this Chapter for a sample Notice of Intention.

104. The claim itself should state the time and place where such claim arose, the nature of the claim, the damage or injuries claimed to have been sustained, and the total sum claimed. In your Notice of Intention to File a Claim, you should state the same matters, except that you do not have to state the items of damage or the total sum claimed. N.Y. Ct. CL. ACT § 11 (McKinney 2019). Therefore, you do not have to know the extent and severity of your injuries in order to file a Notice of Intention. Atterbury v. State, 26 Misc. 2d 422, 424, 210 N.Y.S.2d 460, 463 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1961) (explaining that claimant could have filed a notice of intention prior to being referred to a specialist because neither the severity of the injuries nor the sum claimed must be included in the notice and visiting a physician in the first instance shows she knew she had some injuries).

105. N.Y. Ct. CL. ACT § 10(3) (McKinney 2019).

106. N.Y. Ct. CL. ACT § 10(3) (McKinney 2019). See also Bronxville Palmer, Ltd. v. State, 36 A.D.2d 647, 647–648, 318 N.Y.S.2d 412, 413 (3d Dept. 1971) (holding that, "where a continuing injury or other circumstance prevents an evaluation of damages at the time of the occurrence of the wrong, the time for filing a claim does not begin to run until such an evaluation can be made."); see also Mahoney v. Temp. Comm'n of Investigation of N.Y., 165 A.D.2d 233, 240–241, 565 N.Y.S.2d 870, 874–875 (3d Dept. 1991) (holding that causes of action were not limited to conduct that occurred within 90-day period before filing because the violations were ongoing and interrelated and evaluation of damages could not be made within that period).

107. N.Y. Ct. CL. ACT § 10(9) (McKinney 2019); see also Wright v. State, 195 Misc. 2d 597, 598, 760 N.Y.S.2d 634, 635 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 2003) ("claims for property losses by inmates are no longer measured from the date of loss, but rather within a 120-day period commencing upon exhaustion of institutional remedies." [internal citation omitted]), appeal dismissed, Wright v. State, 11 A.D.3d 1000, 782 N.Y.S.2d 209 (4th Dept. 2004).

Courts are very strict about the time limits on filing a claim and serving the Notice of Intention to File a Claim.¹⁰⁸ The Court of Claims will not allow late filing of claims related to loss of property.¹⁰⁹ However, there are some situations in which the Court may permit late claims.¹¹⁰ Section 10(6) of the New York Court of Claims Act lists factors that the Court may consider when deciding whether to allow a late filing. The Court does not need to find that each of these factors is satisfied in order to allow you to file your claim late.¹¹¹ The factors listed are:

- (1) Whether there are any excuses for the delay in filing;
- (2) Whether the state knew about the facts of the claim;
- (3) Whether the state had a chance to investigate the situations of the claim;
- (4) Whether the claim appears to be meritorious;¹¹²
- (5) Whether the failure to file a timely claim or Notice of Intention resulted in substantial prejudice to the state, meaning whether late filing significantly hurts the state's defense;
- (6) Whether the person has any other available remedy; and
- (7) Any other relevant factors.¹¹³

The court can choose to allow you to file your claim late if you have a good reason for the delay, even if you haven't satisfied any of the factors.¹¹⁴ For the first factor, some courts will excuse a delay that was caused by the claimant's (the person filing the lawsuit) treatment for physical or mental disabilities that result from the injuries alleged in the lawsuit.¹¹⁵ In addition, Section 10(5) of the New

108. See Conquest v. State, 58 Misc. 2d 121, 121, 294 N.Y.S.2d 892, 893 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1968) (holding that, where notice of intention to file claim was filed on the 92nd day after claim arose, the claim itself was not filed within statutory period and court did not have jurisdiction to hear the case). But see Killeen v. State, 12 Misc. 2d 89, 92, 174 N.Y.S.2d 1000, 1002–1003 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1958) (excusing minor lateness per N.Y. Ct. Cl. ACT § 10(5), where there was a slight error in attorney's computation of time, the state was not prejudiced, and the claimant moved for permission to file late).

109. See Roberts v. State, 11 A.D.3d 1000, 1001, 783 N.Y.S.2d 190, 191–192 (4th Dept. 2004) (holding that, because § 10(6) of the Court of Claims Act only allows a court discretion to permit the late claims mentioned in §§ 10(1)–(4), and loss of property claims are addressed § 10(9), the court may not allow late claims for loss of property). But see Wright v. State, 195 Misc. 2d 597, 602, 760 N.Y.S.2d 634, 638 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 2003) (holding that it was within the spirit of the Court of Claims Act to allow the court discretion over late claims for loss of property). A subsequent Court of Claims case disagreed with Wright and read the 90-day time limit strictly. Murray v. State, 5 Misc. 3d 398, 403–404, 781 N.Y.S.2d 724, 728–729 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 2004) (strictly adhering to the 90-day filing period and dismissing § 10(9) claim that was filed late).

110. N.Y. Ct. Cl. ACT § 10(6) (McKinney 2019); see also Gavigan v. State, 176 A.D.2d 1117, 1119, 575 N.Y.S.2d 217, 218 (3d Dept. 1991) (upholding Court of Claims' broad discretion under N.Y. Ct. Cl. ACT § 10(6) to grant permission to file a late Notice of Claim where an employee of the State Office of General Services knew of an accident and, therefore, the state could not be said to have been prejudiced by the lateness). But see Jerrett v. State, 166 A.D.2d 907, 907, 560 N.Y.S.2d 568, 568 (4th Dept. 1990) (holding that Court of Claims abused its discretion in granting motion to serve a late claim where there was no valid excuse for claimant's delay in filing the claim, the state did not have timely notice of the essential facts constituting the claim nor the opportunity to investigate the circumstances underlying the claim, and the three other factors in N.Y. Ct. Cl. ACT § 10(6) did not weigh heavily in claimant's favor).

111. See Butler v. State, 81 A.D.2d 834, 834, 438 N.Y.S.2d 834, 834 (2d Dept. 1981) (explaining that there is no requirement that claimant comply with all six requirements of §10(6) for the Court of Claims to grant permission to file a late notice).

112. Meritorious, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019) (defining "meritorious" as "worthy of legal victory; having enough legal value to prevail in a dispute").

113. N.Y. Ct. Cl. ACT § 10(6) (McKinney 2019).

114. See De Olden v. State, 91 A.D.2d 1057, 458 N.Y.S.2d 666, 666 (2d Dept. 1983) (acknowledging a reasonable excuse for delay in filing a claim where the claimant's extensive physical therapy and extreme psychological trauma after amputation of his leg seriously affected his ability to function after being discharged from the hospital); Schweickert v. State, 64 A.D.2d 1026, 1026–1027, 409 N.Y.S.2d 308, 309 (4th Dept. 1978) (holding that the amendment to the Court of Claims Act contained in §10(6), which grounds and lengthens the time limits for allowing late claims, makes the failure to show a reasonable excuse for the delay no longer fatal to a claim for late filing); Cole v. State, 64 A.D.2d 1023, 1024, 409 N.Y.S.2d 306, 307–308 (4th Dept. 1978) (finding excuse to be reasonable when claimant was completely immobilized by his injuries and heavily medicated).

115. See De Olden v. State, 91 A.D.2d 1057, 458 N.Y.S.2d 666, 666 (2d Dept. 1983) (acknowledging a reasonable excuse for delay in filing a claim where the claimant's extensive physical therapy and extreme

York Court of Claims Act allows late filing where the claimant has a legal disability, such as insanity or infancy (childhood).¹¹⁶ In these situations, the claim must be made within two years after the disability is no longer an issue (although, as explained below in this Section, you will not get to use all of this two-year extension because of the statute of limitations on injury claims).¹¹⁷ Being in prison is not itself a legal disability. Incarceration and lack of knowledge of the filing requirements of the New York Court of Claims Act do not excuse you if you file late. However, since incarcerated people have a right to hire counsel and the right to sue the state, if you are not given a chance to contact a lawyer or are not allowed in the prison's law library to learn your rights, you may have an excuse for filing late.¹¹⁸

In addition, if you filed a Notice of Intention within the time limit but then failed to file the claim on time, you may apply to the court for permission to treat the Notice of Intention as a claim.¹¹⁹ The court may approve your application to treat the Notice of Intention as a claim if:

- (1) The application meets certain time limits in article two of the Civil Practice Law and Rules;
- (2) The Notice of Intention was served and filed on time, and has enough facts to make up a claim; and
- (3) Granting the application would not prejudice the state, meaning it would not damage the state's legal rights or ability to defend itself.¹²⁰

The Court of Claims will not allow you to file a negligence tort claim more than three years after an injury,¹²¹ or more than one year after the injury in the case of an intentional tort claim (for example, assault and battery).¹²² Furthermore, even if the Court of Claims has the power to allow late claims in some cases, it cannot violate the New York "statutes of limitations" (meaning, time limits for certain types of claims) for the claims you are filing. For example, the statute of limitations for personal injury actions is three years after the incident.¹²³ The statute of limitations for medical malpractice claims is two years and six months.¹²⁴ psychological trauma after amputation of his leg seriously affected his ability to function after being discharged from the hospital); see also Cole v. State, 64 A.D.2d 1023, 1024, 409 N.Y.S.2d 306, 307–308 (4th Dept. 1978) (finding excuse to be reasonable when claimant was completely immobilized by his injuries and heavily medicated).

116. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 10(5) (McKinney 2019).

117. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 10(5) (McKinney 2019); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 208 (McKinney 2003); see Vitello v. State, 66 Misc. 2d 582, 585, 321 N.Y.S.2d 787, 790 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1971) ("Infancy, along with incompetency, habitual drunkenness, and the like, are legal disabilities (internal citations omitted).") For an application of insanity to the tolling of statutes of limitations, see McCarthy v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 78 A.D.2d 849, 849, 432 N.Y.S.2d 722, 722–723 (2d Dept. 1980) (finding plaintiff's claim to be time-barred because plaintiff's college attendance and participation in athletic activities showed that he was not suffering from a temporary mental incapacity which prevented him from understanding or protecting his legal rights), aff'd, McCarthy v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 55 N.Y.2d 543, 450 N.Y.S.2d 457, 435 N.E.2d 1072 (1982).

118. See Plate v. State, 92 Misc. 2d 1033, 1037–1042, 402 N.Y.S.2d 126, 128–131 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1978) (stating that denial of claimant's access to attorney and the law library for a substantial part of the 90-day period could constitute an excuse for not filing on time).

119. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 10(8)(a) (McKinney 2019). Section 10(8)(a) provides a claimant who timely serves and files a Notice of Intention, but who fails to timely serve or file a claim, may apply for permission to treat the Notice of Intention as a claim. See Wright v. State, 195 Misc. 2d 597, 602–603, 760 N.Y.S.2d 634, 638 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 2003) (clarifying debate in previous cases over § 10(8)(a) and affirming that courts do have the discretion to treat a Notice of Intention as a claim). But see Murray v. State, 5 Misc. 3d 398, 401–402, 781 N.Y.S.2d 724, 726–727 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 2004) (construing subdivision literally, as opposed to more broadly, thus implying there should be no discretion to treat Notice of Intention as a claim).

120. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 10(8)(a) (McKinney 2019); Prejudice is defined as "[d]amage or detriment to one's legal rights or claims." Prejudice, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

121. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 214 (McKinney 2019).

122. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 215(3) (McKinney 2019). In addition, property claims have shorter deadlines for filing—they must be filed within 120 days of the administrative decision on the claim (that is, after the Directive #2377 decision). N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 10(9) (McKinney 2019).

123. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 214 (McKinney 2019).

124. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 214-a (McKinney 2019).

(iv) Filing Fees

All individuals must pay a fifty-dollar filing fee whenever they bring a claim in the New York State Court of Claims.¹²⁵ If you cannot afford the fee, you can ask the court to reduce or waive it. However, if a court waives your fee, that amount (even if it was reduced by the court first) will be held against you later as an outstanding payment obligation to the state, and will be collected by your institution from you.¹²⁶ Incarcerated people follow the same steps as everyone else to ask for reduced or excused filing fees.¹²⁷

To get the reduced filing fee, you must submit an affidavit to the court explaining why you cannot afford the full filing fee.¹²⁸ You should include in your affidavit detailed information about your financial situation, including the amount of money in your prison account, any income you receive from a prison job or work release program, and any property you own.¹²⁹ Tell the court if you are unable to work because you are physically or mentally ill, or because you are living in protective custody due to personal danger. In addition, you must write whether any other person has an interest in the money award you may win (for example, if a lawyer is representing you in return for a percentage of any money awarded). You should also list any financial obligations you have, especially court-ordered obligations such as child support or restitution.¹³⁰ If your case has already begun, you will have to tell the State, including the county attorney, that you have filed this motion.¹³¹

See Appendix A-5 for a sample affidavit requesting a reduced filing fee. If the court denies your request for the reduced filing fee, it will let you know. You will then have 120 days to pay the full fee or else your case will be dismissed.¹³²

If you win your case, the court will refund any filing fee that you paid.¹³³

(v) Where and How to File

If you are filing a Notice of Intention, you must “serve” the Attorney General with the Notice of Intention (meaning, giving personally or sending to the Attorney General by certified mail with return receipt requested).¹³⁴ This is very important—if your case goes to trial, you must show that the Notice of Intention was served on the Attorney General. You do not need to file your Notice of Intention in the Court of Claims.

Your claim, by contrast, must be filed at the office of the Clerk of the Court of Claims in Albany.¹³⁵ You must also serve your claim to the State of New York by serving the Attorney General. After you serve the Attorney General, you must file proof of service with the Clerk of the Court of Claims within ten days. You can do this by filing an Affidavit of Service describing the service.¹³⁶ Filing is accomplished by delivering the necessary papers to:

Clerk of the Court of Claims
P.O. Box 7344
Capitol Station
Albany, New York 12224

125. The fee requirements can be found in N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 11-a (1) (McKinney 2019).

126. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 1101(f)(2) (McKinney 2012).

127. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 1101(d), (f) (McKinney 2012).

128. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 1101(d) (McKinney 2012).

129. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 1101(a) (McKinney 2012).

130. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 1101(a) (McKinney 2012).

131. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 1101(c) (McKinney 2012).

132. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 1101(d) (McKinney 2012).

133. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 11-a (2) (McKinney 2019) (“The court shall award to a prevailing claimant as a taxable disbursement the actual amount of any fee paid to file the claim.”).

134. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 11(a)(i) (McKinney 2019).

135. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 11(a)(i) (McKinney 2019).

136. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. TIT. 22, § 206.5(a) (2019). “Service” means you have delivered copies of the legal complaint to the person or government entity you are suing. In the Court of Claims, service is accomplished by sending a copy of the claim to the State Attorney General.

When you file the original claim, you must also file two copies of each document with the Clerk's office. One copy of each must also be served on the Attorney General. The address is:

Office of the Attorney General
Department of Law
Capitol Building
Albany, New York 12224

Keep at least one copy of each document related to your suit for your own records. There are sample claim and notice forms in Appendix A at the end of this Chapter.

When filing your papers with the court clerk's office and the Attorney General, you can either personally deliver the papers or send them by certified mail with return receipt requested.¹³⁷ "Return receipt requested" means that the postal service will mail you a receipt to prove that the documents were delivered. Do not lose this receipt, because it is the only way to prove that you completed service. If you do not receive a return receipt from both the Court of Claims and the Attorney General's Office within a period of time, you should send a follow-up letter to one or both of these offices asking if they have received your claim.¹³⁸

Service on the state is not complete until both the clerk's office and the Attorney General's Office have received your papers either personally or by certified mail, with return receipt requested.¹³⁹ Remember, mailing your papers is NOT the same as filing them. You must mail your papers early so that they are received within the time limits mentioned earlier. Allow enough time for delays in the mail. Do not forget: your claim may be dismissed if you fail to serve the state in the manner and time the law requires.¹⁴⁰

(vi) What Documents to File

In Appendix A of this Chapter, you will find sample copies of papers that you may need to file, including sample claims and Notices of Intention.

Your claim must be clearly typed or printed on 8½-by-11 inch paper. You should include:

- (1) Your name and address;
- (2) Where the incident happened;
- (3) When the incident happened;
- (4) The way in which New York State (through its employees' actions) negligently or intentionally caused your injury;
- (5) A description of the incident (include the names of the individuals responsible, if you know);
- (6) A detailed description of your injuries that resulted from this incident;
- (7) The date and place you served your Notice of Intention to File a Claim (if you served a Notice of Intention);
- (8) A statement that you are filing this claim within the time limits in the Court of Claims Act; and

137. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 11(a)(i) (McKinney 2019).

138. The Court of Claims sends a letter of acknowledgment once a claim has been received. The Attorney General's Office does not. Therefore, if your claim was served in person, make sure that you get an affidavit that the claim was served. If the claim was sent Return Receipt Requested, keep the green card.

139. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 11(a) (McKinney 2019); see also Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. State, 92 Misc. 2d 249, 252–253, 400 N.Y.S.2d 469, 471 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1977) (dismissing claim that was mailed 88 days after accident but not received by the Court of Claims clerk until the 93rd day).

140. See Mingues v. State, 146 Misc. 2d 412, 413, 550 N.Y.S.2d 802, 803 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1990) (dismissing claim when notice of intention and claim were sent by regular mail). But see Colon v. State, 146 Misc. 2d 1034, 1035–1036, 553 N.Y.S.2d 979, 980–981 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1990) (holding that the court can choose to allow a claim to proceed even if the claimant did not use the proper method of service required by § 11 of the Court of Claims Act).

(9) A list of the damages you are claiming.¹⁴¹

If you are filing a claim initially, rather than filing a Notice of Intention to File a Claim, you do not need to include step (7), and step (8) should state that your claim is being filed within the ninety-day statutory limit. At the bottom of your claim form, you must include and sign a verification, which states that all of the information included in your claim is true.¹⁴² You must sign this verification in the presence of a notary public, who then must sign his name. The prison librarian may be a notary public or may be able to direct you to the person who provides that service within the prison.

If you are filing a motion for permission to file a late claim, your motion should describe the facts that will convince the Court of Claims that it should permit you to file late and, among other things, that the State will not be substantially prejudiced by the delay, which means that the State will not have a harder time defending itself because you filed late.¹⁴³

See Figure 1, below, to determine how many copies you need to file of each document.

	Clerk of Court	N.Y. Attorney General	Self	Total number of Copies You Will Need
Notice of Intention to File Claim	0 copies	1 copy	1 copy	2 copies
Claim and Any Supporting Affidavits	1 original and 2 copies	1 copy	1 copy	1 original and 4 copies
Motion for Permission to File Late Claim	1 original and 2 copies	1 copy	1 copy	1 original and 4 copies
Affidavit in Support of Reduction of Fees	1 original and 2 copies	1 copy	1 copy	1 original and 4 copies

Figure 1: Copies needed when filing notices, claims, motions, or affidavits.

(vii) How to Obtain Help from a Lawyer

Since a tort claim filed against New York State is not a criminal action, you do not have the right to be assigned a lawyer. While the court may, at its discretion, require an attorney to represent poor people without charge, it is not likely to do so.¹⁴⁴

It is often difficult to find a lawyer who will take your case. If it seems likely that you will win a large amount of money from the State, you may be able to find a private attorney to represent you on a contingency fee basis, which means the attorney only charges you if you win the case. If you win, the attorney takes his fee (usually a percentage of the money you won), and any additional costs of representing you, from your money award. You may be able to find the phone number of an attorney through the New York State Bar Association. If you cannot find a lawyer, you can file the claim yourself (pro se) in the Court of Claims and even appeal its decision to the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court.

141. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT §11(b) (McKinney 2019) (“The claim shall state the time when and place where such claim arose, the nature of the same, [that a negligent or intentional action by a state employee has injured you or your property], and the items of damage or injuries claimed to have been sustained and . . . the total sum claimed.”).

142. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT §11(b) (McKinney 2019); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3020, 3021 (McKinney 2010). For a sample Verification, see Appendix A-2 of this Chapter.

143. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT §10(6) (McKinney 2019).

144. See Stephens v. State, 93 Misc. 2d 273, 274, 404 N.Y.S.2d 536, 537 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1978) (refusing to assign counsel in an incarcerated person’s civil case unless at some point in the future, the state of New York decides to start paying for them); see also Menin v. Menin, 79 Misc. 2d 285, 293, 359 N.Y.S.2d 721, 729 (Sup. Ct. Westchester County 1974) (refusing to assign counsel to represent a poor person who was incarcerated in a civil case for damages from State for injuries allegedly received during confinement because there was no way to pay the attorney and attorneys are not required to accept free cases), aff’d mem., Menin v. Menin, 48 A.D.2d 904, 372 N.Y.S.2d 985 (2d Dept. 1975).

(viii) Examinations Before Trial: Obtaining Testimony from Witnesses

Like other civil cases, you are allowed to carry out some forms of pretrial discovery. Chapter 8 of the JLM, “Obtaining Information to Prepare Your Case: The Process of Discovery,” discusses the processes of discovery for federal and New York State trials. Chapter 8 will help you decide if you need to take discovery in your case. Discovery may include any of the following ways of obtaining evidence to support your claim before trial: interviewing witnesses, requesting documents, and demanding physical and mental examinations.¹⁴⁵ The state must follow the same discovery rules as individuals.¹⁴⁶

You must pay any fees and expenses required in obtaining testimony that is taken on commission (for example, if an expert requires payment to testify).¹⁴⁷ Poor person status does not permit you to avoid paying these costs.

(ix) Reopening Trial Before Decision

If you discover new evidence that benefits you after you have closed your case in the Court of Claims but before the court has made a decision, you can submit a Notice of Motion to Reopen a Claim. Use a Notice of Motion to Reopen a Claim only if you have discovered important and relevant evidence that could make a difference in the court's decision.

(x) Appeal from a Judgment

You can appeal the court's decision because you think they were wrong about the law, the facts, or both. You can also appeal if the amount awarded was too high or low. When you make an appeal, the Appellate Division may affirm, reverse, or modify the judgment; dismiss the appeal; grant a new trial; or send the case back to a lower court for further proceedings.¹⁴⁸

Once the Court of Claims makes a decision in your original case, that decision will be entered with the Clerk of the Court of Claims, and then the Attorney General will serve you with a notice that the judgment has been entered. *You must file a Notice of Appeal within thirty days of the date that the Attorney General mails you the notice that your judgment has been entered.*¹⁴⁹ Because you may not be receiving mail timely in prison, be sure to check the date on the envelope when you receive the notice.

You must serve both the Attorney General and the Clerk of the Court of Claims with a written Notice of Appeal. The Notice of Appeal should briefly state your reasons for appealing.¹⁵⁰ You must obtain a Notice of Appeal form available at the Court of Claims or on the Court of Claims' official website. The Notice of Appeal form typically contains:

- (1) The name of the case and index or docket number, as written at the top of all the court papers;
- (2) Your name;
- (3) The order or judgment you are appealing;
- (4) The date of the order or judgment;
- (5) The name of the court that made the order and entered the judgment; and
- (6) The name of the court that you are appealing to.

You can serve the Notice of Appeal to the Attorney General by mail. Then the person who served the papers must fill out an Affidavit of Service. Note that you can serve the papers yourself only if the Judge has granted you permission to do so. Otherwise, anyone above 18 years old can serve the papers on your behalf. However, the person serving the papers is not allowed to serve more than five papers each year. Then, the Notice of Appeal and the Affidavit of Service must be filed with the court by serving the Clerk of the Court of Claims. There is a court fee to file a Notice of Appeal. The fee is

145. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3102(a) (McKinney 2018).

146. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3102(f) (McKinney 2018).

147. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 18 (McKinney 2019).

148. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 24 (McKinney 2019).

149. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 25 (McKinney 2019).

150. N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 25 (McKinney 2019). See Appendix A-10 for a sample Notice of Appeal.

different for different courts, so you should check with the clerk to see what the fee is. If you can't pay the court fees, you can ask the court for a fee waiver. You should ask the clerk for a fee waiver form.¹⁵¹

You will need a transcript of your trial in the Court of Claims. If you were allowed to go through the case as a poor person, you may have a right to a free copy of this transcript.¹⁵² If you have not filed for permission as a poor person, you may wish to apply for the status as a poor person at this point. For information on the procedure for applying for status as a poor person, see Part C(2)(b)(iv) above.

(xi) Final Process

If you win at trial, you will be paid the amount of the judgment, unless either you or the state appeals. The Comptroller of the State of New York will mail you a check once you submit the following:

- (1) A copy of the judgment certified by the Clerk of the Court of Claims;
- (2) A certificate from the Attorney General stating that the state has not and will not take an appeal from the judgment; and
- (3) A release signed by your attorney (if you have one) that he has given up any fee for services provided to you.¹⁵³

Note that this is only a waiver of attorney's fees in the eyes of New York State, which makes it more like a formality. In reality, the state will make out the check to both you and your attorney and will probably mail it to your attorney's office. You and your attorney will most likely have already decided what percentage of any award the attorney will keep. Typically, attorneys will take the costs of trying your case from the total award, then keep one-third of what remains. Thus, you will receive two-thirds of the damages awarded to you, minus expenses.

D. Checklist for Filing with the Court of Claims

1. Does your claim include violations of your constitutional rights?

(a) If Yes

If yes, you may bring suit in federal district court under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 or in State Supreme Court. See JLM, Chapter 16, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law." Remember that you may also file New York State constitutional claims with the Court of Claims. New York's state constitution protects many of the same rights as the Bill of Rights.

(b) If No

If no, then you may sue under the state statute that allows for claims such as yours; in New York, you may bring suit against the state in the Court of Claims.

Note: You must use the Department of Correctional Services' internal procedure to address issues with loss/damage to property, which allows for incarcerated person compensation before bringing your claim to the Court of Claims. See Part C(1) of this Chapter.

Note: If you wish to sue the federal government for a tort, and none of your constitutional rights have been violated, you must sue under the Federal Tort Claims Act.¹⁵⁴

Note: The Court of Claims has no jurisdiction over lawsuits involving county, town, city or village governments, agencies or employees. These governmental bodies, such as Rikers Island Jail, are all distinct from the State, and litigation against them is governed by provisions of the General Municipal law.

151. You can also find forms for the New York Court of Claims, including the form for a fee waiver, on the Court of Claims' website, NEW YORK STATE COURT OF CLAIMS, available at <https://www.nycourts.gov/COURTS/nyscourtofclaims/forms.shtml> (last visited Feb. 11, 2020).

152. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1102(b) (McKinney 2012).

153. N.Y. Ct. CL. ACT § 20(6) (McKinney 2019).

154. Federal Tort Claims Act provisions are found in 28 U.S.C. §§ 1291, 1346, 1402, 2401, 2402, 2411, 2412, 2671–80 (2012).

2. If you are bringing a suit in the New York Court of Claims:

(a) File a claim or Notice of Intention

Be sure to serve a claim or Notice of Intention to File a Claim with return receipt requested to the Attorney General's Office within ninety days of the accident or injury. If you are serving a claim instead of a Notice of Intention, it must be filed within ninety days of the accident or injury at the clerk's office in Albany. You can serve the Notice of Intention even if you are not certain that you will end up filing the claim. That way, you may still have the chance to file a claim later if you decide to do so. Remember: the papers must be received within ninety days.

(b) File the original document and two copies of each document

For every document you include in your claim, file the original document and two copies of each with the clerk's office when you file your claim. Be sure to:

- (1) Include all required information in your claim,
- (2) Serve one copy of each document on the Attorney General,
- (3) Keep one copy of every document for your own records,
- (4) File proof of service on the Attorney General (the representative of the defendant, the State) at the clerk's office in Albany within ten days of such service, and
- (5) Include a notarized verification with your claim.

3. If you are appealing a judgment:

Serve both the Attorney General and the Clerk of the Court of Claims with a written Notice of Appeal. The Notice should include the basic reason for your appeal, and must be filed within 30 days of when you receive notice that a judgment was entered in your case.

E. Conclusion

You should think about several things before you bring a tort claim. First, you should find out what kind of tort claim you want to bring and whether you can prove that you have had an actual injury. If you feel confident that you have a strong claim, check to see whether you must go through other procedures in prison before you think about the court in which you will file a claim and the kind of award you will seek. Meet all deadlines for filing documents (especially the strict ninety-day time window for filing your claim or Notice of Intention with the Court of Claims), make sure you file the right documents in the right places, and pay the proper fees. Review the checklists provided in this Chapter and the sample documents in the Appendix when filing your tort claims. Last but not least, always hold on to photocopies of all the documents you file.

APPENDIX A

SAMPLE TORT CLAIM AND SUPPORTING PAPERS

This Appendix contains the following materials:

- A-1. Sample Notice of Intention to File a Tort Claim A-2.
Sample Verification
- A-3. Sample Assault and Battery Tort Claim A-4.
Sample Negligence Tort Claim
- A-5. Sample Affidavit in Support of Application for a Reduction of Fees
- A-6. Sample Affidavit in Support of Motion for Permission to File a Late Claim A-7.
Affidavit of Service
- A-8. Sample Demand for Bill of Particulars A-9.
Sample Claimant's Bill of Particulars A-10.
Sample Notice of Appeal

Parts A, B, and C of this Chapter tell you how to use each of these papers. Do not use these forms until you have read this entire Chapter.

These papers are examples of the types of documents that you must file in the Court of Claims for various purposes. You should use the basic form of these papers where appropriate, but you must be careful to substitute the information that applies to your case for the general information in these samples. When these sample forms give details on a particular event, make sure you substitute your own details.

There are endnotes following the sample documents, which give you instructions on how to fill in the necessary information. These are only samples. DO NOT TEAR THESE FORMS OUT OF THE JLM. Many of the following forms can also be found in the New York Consolidated Laws Service Vol. 43 (1987). In addition, the form for applying for a reduction of filing fees can be obtained from the Chief Clerk's Office in Albany.

A-1. Sample Notice of Intention to File a Tort Claim

State of New York Court of Claims

_____X

:

_____i

:

:

:

:

- against -

:

:

The State of New York

:

:

_____X

Notice of Intention to File ClaimTO THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK:PLEASE TAKE NOTICE, that the undersigned _____, ⁱⁱ intends to file a claim against the State of New York, pursuant to Sections 10 and 11 of the Court of Claims Act.

The post office address of the claimant herein is: _____

_____ⁱⁱⁱ.

For the time being I am representing myself.

The time when and the place where such claim arose and the nature of my claim are as follows:

_____^{iv}._____
Claimant, pro se^vDated: _____^{vi}

A-2. Sample Verification

STATE OF NEW YORK)
)ss:
COUNTY OF _____^{vii})
_____,^{viii} being duly sworn, says:

I am the claimant above named; I have read the foregoing claim^{ix} against the State of New York and know its contents; the same is true to my knowledge, except as to the matter therein stated to be alleged on information and belief, and as to those matters, I believe it to be true.

_____^x
Claimant

Sworn to before me this _____ day of _____, 20____.

Notary Public^{xi}

A-3. Sample Assault and Battery Tort Claim^{xii}

State of New York Court of Claims

_____X
:
_____xiii. :
:
:
:
- against - : Claim No. _____xiv
:
:
The State of New York. :
_____X

Claimant, _____, ^{xv} appearing pro se, complaining of defendant, the State of New York, alleges the following:

1. The post office address of the claimant herein is _____.^{xvi}
2. This claim is for assault and battery of the State committed by its employee _____^{xvii} for injuring the claimant while acting within the scope of his/her employment and in the discharge of his/her duties, on _____^{xviii} at _____^{xix}
3. [On September 10, 1999, at approximately 6:00pm, Correction Officer Smith at XYZ Correctional Facility told the claimant [name] to leave the day room where claimant was mopping the floor.
4. Claimant responded that he had been told to remain there by another officer, whose name he could not remember.
5. Correction Officer Smith then told claimant to leave immediately or he would receive an infraction.
6. Claimant, pursuant to Correction Officer Smith's order, began to leave when, without just cause or provocation, the defendant Correction Officer Smith willfully and maliciously grabbed the mop from claimant and hit him across the chest and head with the handle, causing the claimant to sustain serious injury.
7. The actions of Correction Officer Smith were intentional and unwarranted.^{xx}
8. As a result of this assault and battery, claimant was hospitalized for two weeks and received 26 stitches on his chest and head.
9. As a result of this incident, claimant suffered severe physical and mental pain and anguish.
10. Claimant's hearing has been permanently impaired as a result of a blow on the head by Correction Officer Smith.]

11. The particulars of claimant's damages are as follows.^{xxi}

a) Medical expenses^{xxii}

b) Lost earnings^{xxiii}

[Claimant having been a musician prior to his incarceration, claimant having anticipated returning to that profession upon his release, claimant's hearing having been impaired as a result of this incident so as to render him unable to be gainfully employed as a musician, claimant seeks $ in damages for lost potential earnings.]

c) Pain and suffering^{xxiv}

 d) Mental anguish^{xxv}

 e) Permanent disability

 12. Attached hereto as part of the claim is a sketch of the place of the above-described incident.^{xxvi}

13. Notice of intention to file this claim was served in the Office of the Clerk of the Court of Claims, on the ____ day of _____, 20____, and in the office of the Attorney General on the ____ day of 20____.^{xxvii}

14. This claim is filed within years after the claim accrued, as required by law.^{xxviii}

15. This action is filed pursuant to Sections 10 and 11 of the Court of Claims Act.

WHEREFORE, claimant respectfully requests judgment against the defendant in the sum of _____ dollars ($____).^{xxix}

 xxx

Claimant, pro se

Dated: _____^{xxxxi}

A-4. Sample Negligence Tort Claim^{xxxii}

State of New York Court of Claims

	X
	:
^{xxxiii}	:
	:	Claim No. ^{xxxiv}
	:
- against -	:
	:
	:
The State of New York.	:
	X

Claimant, _____, ^{xxxv} appearing pro se, complaining of defendant, the State of New York, alleges the following:

1. The post office address of the claimant herein is _____, ^{xxxvi}
2. This claim is for negligence of the State [for failure to adequately maintain the ceiling of the day room of] ^{xxxvii} _____ ^{xxxviii} on the ____ day of _____, 20_, so as to cause serious injury to the claimant, _____, ^{xxxix}
3. It was the duty of the defendant State of New York [to maintain in a safe and proper condition the ceilings and walls in the correctional facilities of the State of New York, and more particularly the ceiling in the day room on Tier 3^{xl} at XYZ Correctional Facility.^{xli}
4. On and prior to the 5th day of May, 2000, the defendant disregarded its duty by negligently and carelessly permitting the ceiling at Tier 3 at XYZ Correctional Facility to be improperly and dangerously maintained in an unsafe condition in that the plaster had disintegrated so that large portions had become loosened and not properly held in place.
5. On the 5th day of May, 2000, at approximately 1:00pm, claimant [name] was sitting in the day room of Tier 3 at XYZ Correctional Facility reading a newspaper when a large portion of plaster fell from the ceiling striking claimant on the head, shoulder, arm, and leg and causing him to sustain serious injuries.
6. On the 5th day of May, 2000, and for three months prior, the defendant had actual knowledge and notice of the defective and dangerous condition of the ceiling of the day room as claimant had filed a grievance requesting the repair of the ceiling with the Superintendent of XYZ Correctional Facility on February 5, 2000.^{xlii}
7. As a result of this incident, claimant received a broken arm, a broken leg, and injuries to the shoulder and head, including recurring headaches.
8. As a result of this incident, claimant suffered severe physical and mental pain and anguish.
9. As a result of this incident, claimant has suffered permanent disabilities including chronic headaches, lameness, and the loss of the full use of his arm.]^{xliii}
10. Attached hereto as part of the claim is a sketch of the place of the above-described incident. ^{xliv}
11. The particulars of claimant's damages are as follows: ^{xlv}
 - a) Medical expenses ^{xlvi}

b) Lost earnings ^{xlvii}

[Claimant was a carpenter prior to his incarceration and anticipated returning to that profession upon his release. As a result of this incident, Claimant lost the full use of his arm and is now unable to be gainfully employed as a carpenter. Consequently, Claimant seeks $ ____ in damages for lost potential earnings.]

c) Pain and suffering^{xlvi}

 _____.

d) Mental anguish^{xli}

 _____.

e) Permanent disability

 _____.

12. Notice of intention to file this claim was served in the Office of the Clerk of the Court of Claims, on the ____ day of _____, 20____, and in the office of the Attorney General on the ____ day of 20____.¹

13. This claim is filed within years after the claim accrued, as required by law.^{li}

14. This action is filed pursuant to Sections 10 and 11 of the Court of Claims Act.

WHEREFORE, claimant respectfully requests judgment against the defendant in the sum of _____ dollars ($____).^{lii}

 lii

Claimant, pro se

Dated: _____^{liv}

A-5. Sample Affidavit in Support of Application for a Reduction of Fees

State of New York Court of Claims

_____X

:

_____lv

:

DIN No._____,^{lvi}

:

Application Pursuant to N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101(f)

:

- against -

:

Claim No._____^{lvii}

:

The State of New York,

:

_____X

STATE OF NEW YORK

COUNTY OF _____^{lviii}

I, _____,^{lix} being duly sworn, hereby declare as follows:

1) I am the claimant in the above-entitled proceeding, I am a prisoner in a [federal, state, or local] correctional facility, _____,^{lx} and I submit this affidavit in support of my application for a reduction of the filing fee pursuant to C.P.L.R. 1101(f).

2) During the past six months:^{lxi}

☐ I was not incarcerated at any other correctional facility.

☐ I was incarcerated at the following correctional facilities in addition to the one in which I _____ am _____ currently _____ incarcerated:

3) I currently receive income from the following sources, exclusive of correctional facility wages:

4) I own the following valuable property (other than miscellaneous personal property):^{lxii}

Property: _____ Value: _____

5) I have no savings, property, assets, or income other than as set forth herein.

6) I am unable to pay the filing fee necessary to prosecute this proceeding.

7) No other person able to pay the filing fee has a beneficial interest in the result of this proceeding.

8) The facts of my case are described in my claim and other papers filed with the court.

9) I have made no prior request for this relief in this case.

_____^{lxiii}

Sworn to before me this _____ day of _____, 20____.

Notary Public^{lxiv}

AUTHORIZATION^{lxv}

I, _____,^{lxvi} inmate number _____,^{lxvii} request and authorize the agency holding me in custody to send to the Clerk of the Court of Claims certified copies of my correctional facility trust fund account statements (or the institutional equivalent) for the past six months.

In the event that my application for poor person status in the above-captioned case is granted by the Court, I further request and authorize the agency holding me in custody to deduct the filing fee (or other outstanding obligation reported by the Court pursuant to N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101(f)(2)) from my correctional facility trust fund account (or the institutional equivalent) and to disburse those amounts as instructed by the Court of Claims. This authorization is furnished in connection with the above entitled case and shall apply to any agency into whose custody I may be transferred.

I UNDERSTAND THAT THE FULL AMOUNT OF THE OUTSTANDING OBLIGATION REFERRED TO HEREIN WILL BE PAID BY AUTOMATIC DEDUCTION FROM MY CORRECTIONAL FACILITY TRUST FUND ACCOUNT EVEN IF MY CASE IS DISMISSED.

lxviii

lxix

A-6. Sample Affidavit in Support of Motion for Permission to File a Late Claim^{lxx}

State of New York Court of Claims^{lxxi}

_____	X	:
		:
_____	lxxii	:
		:
- against -		:	Motion For Permission To
		:	File A Late Claim
		:
		:	Claim No. _____
		:	lxxiii
		:
The State of New York		:
_____	X

TO THE CLERK OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS: TO THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK:

The undersigned claimant, _____, ^{lxxiv} hereby deposes and swears under penalty of perjury that the following is true.

Claimant requests the permission of the Court to file the attached claim against the State of New York, pursuant to the provisions of Section 10(6) of the Court of Claims Act for filing late claims. In support of my motion for permission to file this claim, I respectfully submit that:

1. The incident underlying this claim occurred on _____.^{lxxv} Under the provisions of Article Two of the Civil Practice Law and Rules, I would not be barred from asserting a like claim against a citizen of the State.

2. The delay in filing this claim is excusable because: [I am not a lawyer and I had no access to professional legal counsel or to the prison law library during the statutory period for filing because of the illness caused by the incident underlying this claim.]^{lxxvi}

3. The State had notice of the essential facts constituting the claim in that medical personnel in the prison dispensary were aware of my illness during my stay in the prison dispensary, and the State also had opportunity to investigate the cause of this illness, which is the subject of this claim, by simply questioning the guards and other persons who were present in the machine shop at the time of my injury.]^{lxxvii}

4. I have no other available remedy for the injury and suffering I sustained because of the State's negligence.

lxxviii

Claimant, pro se

Dated: _____, 20____^{lxxix}

A-7. Affidavit of Service^{lxxx}

State of New York Court of Claims

_____X

:

_____lxxxi

:

:

- against -

:

Affidavit of Service

:

:

Claim No. _____lxxxii

:

The State of New York

:

_____X

STATE OF NEW YORK

COUNTY OF _____lxxxiii

_____,^{lxxxiv} being duly sworn, deposes and says:I am over the age of 18 and reside at _____^{lxxxv}.On _____^{lxxxvi} I served the within _____^{lxxxvii} upon the Attorney General of the State of New York by certified mailNo. _____^{lxxxviii}, return receipt requested at the following address:Department of Law Capitol Building Albany, NY 12224,said address being the address designated by the Attorney General for that purpose, by depositing a true copy of the within in a postpaid properly addressed wrapper in an official depository under the exclusive care and custody of the United States Postal Service within the State of New York._____
lxxxix

Claimant, pro se

Sworn to before me this _____ day of _____, 20____.

Notary Public^{xc}

A-8. Sample Demand for Bill of Particulars^{xcii}

State of New York Court of Claims

_____	X
	:
_____, ^{xcii}	:
	:	Demand for
	:	Bill of Particulars
- against -	:
	:	Claim No. _____ ^{xciii}
	:
The State of New York,	:
	:
_____	X

SIR:

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that you are hereby required to serve upon the defendants within 30 days after service of a copy of this notice, a verified bill of particulars, setting forth in detail:

- (a) The date and time of the occurrence.
- (b) The exact location of the occurrence.
- (c) A general statement of the acts or omissions constituting the negligence claimed.
- (d) Whether actual or constructive notice is claimed.^{xciv}
- (e) If actual notice is claimed, the name of the person served with notice.
- (f) Statement of the injuries and description of any that are claimed to be permanent.
- (g) Length of time confined to bed and to house.
- (h) Length of time incapacitated from employment, and the nature of such employment.
- (i) Total amounts claimed as special damages for (1) physicians' services and medical supplies; (2) loss of earnings, with name and address of the employer; (3) hospital expenses, with names of hospitals; (4) nurses' services.
- (j) Address and maiden name of claimant (if applicable).
- (k) List of statutes, ordinances, rules, and regulations that were allegedly violated by defendant.

Hon. _____^{xcv}
 Attorney General of the State of New York
 Department of Law
 Albany, NY 12224

By: _____^{xcvi}
 Assistant Attorney General

A-9. Sample Claimant's Bill of Particulars^{xcvii}

State of New York Court of Claims

_____X
 :
 _____, ^{xcviii} :
 :
 :
 - against - :
 :
 :
 The State of New York, :
 :
 _____X

Bill of Particulars

Claim No. _____ ^{xcix}

Claimant, pursuant to the demand of the defendant, submits the following for his/her bill of particulars:

1. The occurrence took place on [May 5, 2000 at approximately 1:00 p.m.].
2. The occurrence took place in the [day room of Tier 3 at XYZ Correctional Facility].
3. The negligence of the defendants consisted of those acts alleged in paragraphs [4, 5, and 6] of the claim; specifically, [the failure to maintain in a safe and proper condition the ceilings and walls of the day room of Tier 3 at XYZ Correctional Facility].
4. Actual notice claimed.
5. Actual notice was given by the filing of a grievance with the Superintendent of [XYZ Correctional Facility requesting the repair of the ceiling on February 5, 2000].
6. As a result of this incident claimant received [a broken arm, a broken leg, injuries to the shoulder and head, including recurring headaches, and severe physical and mental pain and anguish]. Permanent disabilities include [chronic headaches, lameness, and the loss of full use of the arm].
7. Claimant was confined in the hospital for three weeks, in the prison infirmary for ten weeks and was bedridden for an additional five months.
8. Claimant lost employment wages [as law library clerk within the prison of $0.75 an hour for eight months]. Claimant's injuries also render him unable to be gainfully employed [as a construction worker] (his employment prior to incarceration) upon his release from prison, which will be no later than [May, 2004, the date of release based upon the serving of the maximum sentence].
9. Special damages for:
 - (a) physicians' services and medical supplies—not applicable;^c
 - (b) loss of earnings—not applicable except as set forth in paragraph 8;
 - (c) hospital expenses—not applicable;
 - (d) nurses' services—not applicable.
10. Claimant's address currently is: _____ ^{ci}
11. Claimant claims that defendant violated _____ ^{cii}

ciii

Claimant, pro se

Hon. _____ ^{cv}
 Attorney General of the State of New York
 Department of Law
 Albany, NY 12224

A-10. Sample Notice of Appeal^{cv i}

State of New York Court of Claims

_____	X
	:
_____ ^{cvii}	:
	:
	:
- against -	:	Notice of Appeal
	:
	:	Claim No. _____ ^{cvi i i i}
The State of New York	:
	:
_____	X

SIRS:

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE, that the undersigned _____, ^{cix} hereby appeals to the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court in and for the ___ ^{cx} Department, from a judgment entered in the above entitled action in favor of the above named defendant, the State of New York, against the above named claimant _____, ^{cx i} entered in the office of the Clerk of the County of _____ ^{cxii} on the ___ day of _____, 20 _____, ^{cxiii} and this appeal is taken from each and every part of said judgment as well as the whole thereof.

Dated: _____ ^{cxiv}
 _____ ^{cxv}

 Claimant, pro se

To: _____ ^{cxvi}
 Clerk of the County of _____ ^{cxvii}

Hon. _____ ^{cxviii}
 Attorney General of the State of New York Department of Law
 Albany, New York 12224

Fill in the forms shown in Appendix A as follows:

-
- i. Your name.
 - ii. Your name.
 - iii. Your complete address.
 - iv. Give clear, detailed information about the basis for your complaint: who did what, where, and when. Include the date of the incident and the facility in which it occurred.
 - v. Your signature.
 - vi. The date on which you sign the notice and your address. Attach a Verification. See Appendix A2 for a sample Verification.
 - vii. The name of the county in which you signed the affidavit.
 - viii. Your name.
 - ix. Your tort claim. See Appendices A-3 and A-4 for sample tort claims.
 - x. Your signature. Sign this only in the presence of a notary public, as the next footnote explains.
 - xi. This is where the notary public notarizes the Verification by signing it and fixing his or her official seal to it. If you have difficulty obtaining the services of a notary public, you should have another incarcerated person witness your signature and cross out "Notary Public." (But only do this if it is impossible for you to find a notary public.) If another incarcerated person is your witness, you should add the following paragraph at the bottom of the certification:

I declare that I have not been able to have this [insert claim, or Notice of Intent to file a claim, etc.] notarized according to law because [explain here your efforts to get the claim, etc. notarized]. I therefore declare under penalty of perjury that all of the statements made in this [claim, or Notice of Intent, etc.] are true of my own knowledge, and I pray leave of the Court to allow this [claim, or Notice of Intent, etc.] to be filed without notarization.

(Your signature)

xii. This form is adapted from "Using the Court of Claims: A Guide for New York State Prisoners," a manual by the Prisoners' Rights Project of The Legal Aid Society. Assault and battery are intentional torts, in other words torts that were committed purposefully and not by accident. In a claim for assault and battery, as in all claims for intentional torts, you must allege the following:

- (1) The facts of the assault and battery (the intentional tort). You should not simply say that assault and battery was committed by the defendant; rather, you should give the basic facts of what happened. However, remember that not only must you be able to prove all of the allegations set forth in your claim at trial, but that any inconsistencies between the allegations set forth in your claim and the proof you present at trial will make it more difficult for you to win at trial.
- (2) Intent. You must state that the defendant's actions were not accidental but rather were intentional.
- (3) Injury. You must indicate that you were injured as a result of the defendant's - actions. You also must include a description of the injuries you received.

- (4) That the person who injured you was working for the State of New York and injured you while acting within the scope of his/her employment and in the discharge of his/her duties.
 - (5) That you served the claim or the Notice of Intention to File a Claim upon the Attorney General within 90 days of the incident about which you are complaining.
 - (6) That your claim is filed pursuant to §§ 10 and 11 of the Court of Claims Act.
- xiii. Your name.
 - xiv. Leave this blank. This will be filled in by the clerk of the Court of Claims.
 - xv. Your name.
 - xvi. Your prison address, including the name of your prison and the county where it is located.
 - xvii. Name of the state official who is responsible for your injury.
 - xviii. Insert the date (day, month, and year) when your injury or property damage occurred.

xviii. Insert the name of the correctional facility where your injury or property damage occurred.

xix. Describe in detail how your injury happened, including names and dates. Each point should be in its own paragraph with its own number.

xx. You should only include the following factors that apply to your case for determining damages.

xxi. If applicable, list the medical expenses you have had to pay for or that you can show a high probability of having to pay for in the future. You cannot obtain damages for any money spent on your care while in prison because the State pays those bills. However, in seeking damages, you might consider such factors as the long-term effects of your injury after your release, including whether there is a high probability that you may require hospitalization, specialist care, or the purchase and maintenance of medical or therapeutic equipment such as, in this sample claim, the cost and maintenance of a hearing aid.

xxii. List below any current or future lost earnings.

xxiii. You should be specific in detailing the location, length, and severity of the pain and suffering you have experienced.

xxiv. Examples of factors that demonstrate mental anguish are nightmares, loss of sleep, heightened anxiety, and depression.

xxv. This paragraph is optional.

xxvi. Include the day, the month, and the year when you filed the Notice of Intention with the Clerk for the Court of Claims and the Attorney General, respectively. Do not include this paragraph if you did not serve a Notice of Intention.

xxvii. Paragraphs 13 and 14 will depend upon whether you served a Notice of Intention to File Claim. N.Y. Ct. Cl. Act § 10 (McKinney Supp. 2012). If you did not serve a Notice of Intention, do not include paragraph 13. Paragraph 14 should now read: "13. This claim is filed within ninety days after the claim accrued as required by law." If you are filing a late motion, add: "I am filing this motion pursuant to the late motion that the Court of Claims granted on [date]."

xxviii. Insert total amount of money you are claiming as damages.

xxix. Your signature.

xxx. The date on which you sign the petition. Also write your mailing address in this space and attach at the end of your claim a Verification exactly like the one illustrated at Appendix A-2.

xxxi. This form is adapted from "Using the Court of Claims: A Guide for New York State Prisoners," a manual by the Prisoners' Rights Project of The Legal Aid Society. An action for personal injury due to negligence, unlike assault and battery, does not require that you plead or prove intent. However, you must show that your injuries were foreseeable—that your injuries were a likely result of the defendant's action or failure to act. You must also show that the negligence of the State employee's actions or failure to act when under a duty to do so was the major cause of the accident. Also, where appropriate, you should plead that the defendant knew or should have known of the defective condition causing the accident.

xxxii. Your name.

xxxiii. Insert claim number.

xxxiv. Your name.

xxxv. Your prison address, including the name of your prison and the county where it is located.

xxxvi. Insert the type of the negligence tort you are claiming. For example, you may claim failure to protect, negligent destruction of property, or inadequate medical care. These claims may be stated as follows:

Sample Failure to Protect Claim:

This claim is for negligence of the State for the failure of its employee [insert name of the state/prison official responsible for not protecting you] to protect claimant from the reasonably foreseeable assault by [insert the incarcerated person's name who attacked you] while acting within the scope of his/her employment and in the discharge of his/her duties, on [insert the date when the attack occurred], at [insert the name of the facility where the attack occurred], so as to cause serious injury to the claimant, [insert your name].

Sample Destruction of Property Claim:

This claim is for negligence of the State committed by its employee [insert the name of the state or prison official responsible for the damage to your property, if known] for the destruction of claimant's property while acting within the scope of his/her employment and in the discharge of his/her duties, on [insert the date when the destruction of your property occurred, if known], at [insert the name of the facility where the destruction of your property occurred].

Sample Inadequate Medical Care Claim:

This claim is for negligence of the State committed by its employee for failure of its employee [insert name of the state/prison official responsible for not treating you] to provide adequate medical care following accepted medical standards on [insert the date when you requested medical care that you did not receive or the date when you received inappropriate medical care] while acting within the scope of his/her employment and in the discharge of his/her duties, on [insert the date when the denial of medical care occurred], at [insert the name of the facility where the denial of medical care occurred], so as to cause serious injury to the claimant, [insert your name].

xxxvii. Insert the name of the facility where the injury occurred.

xxxviii. Insert your name.

xl. Insert the duty of reasonable care that the State has violated. Examples of duty of care include: medical care following accepted professional standards, protection from reasonably foreseeable attacks by corrections officers or other incarcerated people, and other dangers that a reasonable official knew or should have known about. If the duty that an official owes you is defined by a statute or regulation, you may be able to make a claim of negligence per se.

xli. Insert the name of the facility where your injury occurred.

xl.ii. In the preceding paragraphs you should describe in detail how your injury happened, including names and dates. Each point should be in its own paragraph with its own number.

xl.iii. In the preceding paragraphs you should describe your injury in detail. Each point should be in its own paragraph with its own number.

xl.iv. This paragraph is optional.

xl.v. You should only include the following factors that apply to your case for determining damages.

xl.vi. If applicable, list below the medical expenses you have had to pay for or those you can show a high probability of having to pay for in the future. You cannot obtain damages for the money spent on your care while you were incarcerated, as the State has assumed this cost. However, in seeking damages, you might consider such factors as the long-term effects of your injury after your release, including whether there is a high probability that you may require hospitalization, specialist care, or the purchase and maintenance of therapeutic devices.

xl.vii. List below any current or future lost earnings.

xl.viii. You should be specific in detailing the location, length, and severity of the pain and suffering you have experienced.

xl.ix. Examples of factors that demonstrate mental anguish are nightmares, loss of sleep, heightened anxiety, and depression.

l. Include the day, the month, and the year when you filed the Notice of Intention with the Clerk for the Court of Claims and the Attorney General, respectively. Do not include this paragraph if you did not serve a Notice of Intention.

li. Paragraphs 12 and 13 will depend upon whether you served a Notice of Intention to File Claim.

N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 10 (McKinney Supp. 2012). If you did not serve a Notice of Intention, do not include paragraph 12. Paragraph 13 should now read: "12. This claim is filed within ninety days after the claim accrued as required by law." If you are filing a late motion, add: "I am filing this motion pursuant to the late motion which the Court of Claims granted on (date)."

lii. Insert total amount of money you are claiming as damages. liii. Your signature.

liv. The date on which you sign the petition. Also write your mailing address in this space and attach a Verification at the end of your claim, illustrated at Appendix A-2.

lv. Your name.

lvi. Your inmate number.

lvii. Insert claim number.

lviii. The name of the county in which you signed the affidavit. lix. Your name.

lx. Name and address of your correctional facility. lxi. Check one of the boxes below.

lxii. If you do not own any property of value, write "NONE." Otherwise, list each item of property and how much it is worth in the spaces below.

lxiii. Your signature. [Note: Do not sign this until you are in front of a notary public.]

lxiv. This is where the notary public notarizes the verification by signing it and fixing his or her official seal to it. If you have difficulty obtaining the services of a notary public, you should have another incarcerated person witness your signature and cross out "Notary Public." (Use this technique only as a last resort.) If another incarcerated person is your witness, you should add the following paragraph at the bottom of the certification:

I declare that I have not been able to have this application notarized according to law because [explain here your efforts to get the claim, etc. notarized]. I therefore declare under penalty of perjury that all of the statements made in this application are true of my own knowledge, and I pray leave of the Court to allow this application to be filed without notarization.

(Your signature)

lxv. By signing this section, you give permission for your facility to send the Court copies of your trust fund account statement. You also authorize the facility to withdraw the filing fee from your account and to send it to the Court. The entire filing fee will be withdrawn automatically from your account even if your case is dismissed.

lxvi. Your name.

lxvii. Your inmate number.

lxviii. Your signature.

lxix. Your name.

lxx. When submitting this form, you will also need to include a Notice of Motion form. See N.Y. Ct. Rules § 206.8, which includes a copy of the form.

lxxi. When filing this motion you must attach the proposed claim itself so the court knows what the motion refers to. The court will not consider this copy of your claim as being filed, however. After you receive permission to file a late claim, you must send your claim to the court along with the order granting you permission to file a late claim.

lxxii. Your name.

lxxiii. Insert claim number.

-
- lxxiv. Your name.
- lxxv. The date on which the actions upon which you are basing your claim occurred.
- lxxvi. These are only sample reasons; do not copy them unless they apply to you. The reasons you give here for your failure to file your claim in a timely manner must be persuasive. See Part C(1)(b) of the Chapter for a list of factors that the court considers in ruling on your application for permission to file a late claim.
- lxxvii. These are examples of the types of justification that you must offer to the court to persuade it to grant your application; do not copy them unless they apply to you.
- lxxviii. Your signature.
- lxxix. The date and your address.
- lxxx. You must complete this form and submit it to the court within 10 days after serving your Notice of Intention to File a Tort Claim or Claim on the Attorney General. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 22, § 206.5. This form is adapted from “Using the Court of Claims: A Guide for New York State Prisoners,” a manual by the Prisoners’ Rights Project of The Legal Aid Society.
- lxxxi. Your name.
- lxxxii. Insert claim number.
- lxxxiii. Insert the name of the county in which you signed the affidavit.
- lxxxiv. Your name.
- lxxxv. Insert the name and address of the correctional facility where you are incarcerated.
- lxxxvi. Insert the date on which you mailed the Notice of Intention or Claim to the Attorney General.
- lxxxvii. Insert either “Notice of Intention to file a Claim” if you filed a Notice of Intention, or “Claim” if you filed a Claim.
- lxxxviii. Include the tracking number from the green “return receipt requested” card.
- lxxxix. Your signature. [Note: Do not sign until you are in front of the notary public.]
- xc. This is where the notary public notarizes the verification by signing it and fixing his or her official seal to it. If you have difficulty obtaining the services of a notary public, you should have another incarcerated person witness your signature and delete “Notary Public.” (Use this technique only as a last resort.) If another incarcerated person is your witness, you should add the following paragraph at the bottom of the certification:

I declare that I have not been able to have this affidavit of service notarized according to law because [explain here your efforts to get the claim, etc. notarized]. I therefore declare under penalty of perjury that all of the statements made in this affidavit of service are true of my own knowledge, and I pray leave of the Court to allow this affidavit of service to be filed without notarization.

(Your signature)

xc. If you do not answer or object to a demand for a Bill of Particulars within 30 days after receiving it, the Court may stop you (preclude you) from introducing evidence at trial of the facts asked for in the demand. See N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3042, 3126 (McKinney Supp. 2004). This form is adapted from "Using the Court of Claims: A Guide for New York State Prisoners," a manual by the Prisoners' Rights Project of The Legal Aid Society. This is a sample of a demand that the State may serve on you. Appendix A-9 is a sample response.

xcii. Your name.

xciii. Insert claim number.

xciv. This means whether you claim the defendant actually knew of the condition that caused your injury ("actual notice") or just that they should have known ("constructive notice").

xcv. The name of the New York State Attorney General.

xcvi. The name of the New York State Assistant Attorney General.

xcvii. This form is adapted from "Using the Court of Claims: A Guide for New York State Prisoners," a manual by the Prisoners' Rights Project of The Legal Aid Society. This is not a form you will prepare, but is a form that can be served on you by the State. This response to the Request for a Bill of Particulars (see Appendix A-9) is loosely based upon the facts set forth in the Sample Tort Claim in Appendix A4 personal injury due to negligence. Please refer to this Claim to see how closely the Bill of Particulars follows it.

xcviii. Your name.

xcix. Insert claim number.

c. This is because DOCS typically pays for medical expenses (unless you request, and pay for, a private doctor).

ci. Your address.

cii. Insert statutes, ordinances, rules, or regulations the state officials violated.

ciii. Your signature.

civ. Your address.

cv. The name of the New York State Attorney General.

cvi. If you would like to appeal the decision of the Court of Claims to the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court, you must file a Notice of Appeal within 30 days after the judgment. See N.Y. CT. CL. ACT § 24 (McKinney 1989). This form is adapted from "Using the Court of Claims: A Guide for New York State Prisoners," a manual by the Prisoners' Rights Project of The Legal Aid Society.

cvii. Your name.

cviii. Insert the claim number.

cix. Your name.

cx. The Appellate Division is divided into four departments. Each department has a fixed geographic jurisdiction hearing cases from specific counties. You can determine which department your appeal should be taken to by checking the list of counties served by each Appellate Division, which can be found in Appendix II of the JLM.

cxi. Your name.

cxii. The county in which your case was heard.

- cxiii. Insert the date the judgment was filed in the Clerk's office.
- cxiv. The date on which you sign the notice.
- cxv. Your signature.
- cxvi. Insert the name of the Clerk (if known) in whose office the judgment was filed.
- cxvii. The county in which your case was heard.
- cxviii. The name of the New York State Attorney General.

CHAPTER 18

YOUR RIGHTS AT PRISON DISCIPLINARY PROCEEDINGS*

A. Introduction

This Chapter is meant to help incarcerated people who are facing disciplinary action for breaking prison rules. It talks about what disciplinary proceedings must include under federal law, especially New York State disciplinary proceedings. If you are in prison outside New York, you should look up the rules and regulations for disciplinary proceedings in your state before you get ready for your defense.¹

This Chapter starts with your constitutional rights during prison disciplinary proceedings. Part B explains “due process of law” in disciplinary proceedings. Part C explains due process in prisons by talking about the U.S. Supreme Court case Sandin v. Conner. Part D explains your rights in disciplinary proceedings. Part E explains disciplinary proceedings in New York State and what prison officials must do before putting you in disciplinary segregation. Finally, Part F explains what officials in New York State must do before putting you in administrative segregation, as well as what federal prisons must do.

Prison officials have power to punish incarcerated people who break the law or who break prison rules and regulations. They also have power to put incarcerated people in administrative segregation if they threaten prison safety and security. Prison officials have a lot of discretion in disciplinary and administrative matters, and courts will usually agree with the officials’ decisions. However, there are limits to what they can do. To protect you from unfair abuses of power, federal and state laws make officials follow procedural requirements (guidelines) when they punish you or put you in administrative segregation. If officials do not follow these guidelines, and you suffer “atypical and significant hardship” because of that (more on this below), you can claim that your rights under the Due Process Clause of the U.S. Constitution have been violated.

This Chapter describes rights related to how you are confined. To protect these rights, you must first use your institution’s administrative grievance procedure. Chapter 15 of the JLM has more on inmate grievance procedures. If using the prisoner grievance procedures did not work, you can bring an action under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (in some cases) or file a tort action in state court. If you are in New York, you can bring a tort action in the Court of Claims, or file an Article 78 petition in state court. You can find more information on these types of cases in JLM Chapter 5, “Choosing a Court and Lawsuit,” JLM Chapter 14, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,” JLM Chapter 16, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law,” JLM Chapter 17, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions,” and JLM Chapter 22, “How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules.” If you decide to bring a claim in federal court, read Chapter 14 of the JLM on the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA). If you do not follow PLRA requirements, you could lose your good-time credit and you would have to pay the full filing fee for future claims in federal court.

B. Definition of “Due Process”

The Constitution’s Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments keep the government from taking your life, liberty, or property without “due process of law.” The Fifth Amendment limits the power of the federal government, which includes federal prison officials. The Fourteenth Amendment limits the power of state prison officials the same way. Both federal and state courts have authority to review the actions

* This Chapter was written by Miranda Berge based in part on previous versions by Rachel Wilgoren, Marjorie A. Adams, Jennifer L. Hurt, Ivan A. Sacks, and James A. Skarzynski. Special thanks to Kenneth Stephens of The Legal Aid Society, Prisoners’ Rights Project for his assistance in the revision of this Chapter.

1. See Chapter 2 of the JLM, “Introduction to Legal Research,” for information on how to conduct legal research in prison.

of prison officials to make sure they followed due process requirements.² Therefore, the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment keeps the government from treating you unfairly. It gives you two kinds of rights: substantive and procedural. Substantive rights include basic rights to “life, liberty, and property,” and the specific guarantees in the Bill of Rights, like freedom of speech and religion. Substantive due process means the government must treat people with “fundamental fairness.”³ The government cannot interfere with these rights unless it is absolutely necessary for a more important public need.

If the government restricts your substantive rights, procedural due process means they must follow certain procedures (rules). Procedural rights include the right to know about a hearing before it happens (advance notice) and the opportunity to be heard. The government must follow different rules in different cases. Courts decide which rules to follow by comparing your interests to the government’s interests.

C. Due Process in Prison

Due process means something different in prison than outside prison. The Constitution only gives you a right to due process when the government tries to take away your “life, liberty, or property.” So a court must decide that you have a “liberty interest” at stake before it considers the required “due process” in your disciplinary hearing.⁴ In other words, Fourteenth Amendment due process requirements only apply when prison officials try to take away this recognized interest.

The Supreme Court’s decision in *Sandin v. Conner*⁵ changed the law. During the 1960s and ‘70s, the Supreme Court had extended constitutional rights to incarcerated people without limiting them. Sadly, the Conner decision changed things by limiting when incarcerated people may petition the courts for these constitutional rights. Sandin v. Conner is important because it sets the minimum standard that all other federal and state courts must follow. Setting the minimum standard means that states can give incarcerated people more rights than those in Sandin v. Conner, but they cannot give fewer.

In Sandin v. Conner, an incarcerated person in Hawaii had a disciplinary proceeding because he used “abusive or obscene language” when trying to stop prison employees from strip searching him.⁶ The prison disciplinary committee did not let the incarcerated person present witnesses at the hearing, stating that all witnesses were unavailable.⁷ They sentenced him to a thirty-day disciplinary segregation in the Special Holding Unit (SHU)⁸ and he sought administrative review of the decision. Administrators later dropped the charge, deciding there was no proof.⁹ In the meantime, however, he filed a Section 1983 claim, arguing that his civil rights had been violated.

According to the Supreme Court, even if you have a major, negative change in your confinement, this does not necessarily hurt a liberty interest protected by due process rights (rights dealing with

2. Article III of the Constitution grants federal courts jurisdiction to hear cases “arising under this Constitution.” State courts have “concurrent jurisdiction,” which means that they are as able as federal courts to decide cases involving the U.S. Constitution. U.S. CONST. art. III.

3. Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U.S. 103, 112, 55 S. Ct. 340, 342, 79 L. Ed. 791, 794 (1935) (“[I]n safeguarding the liberty of the citizen against deprivation through the action of the state, [due process] embodies the fundamental conceptions of justice which lie at the base of our civil and political institutions.”).

4. This “liberty interest” refers to the liberty described in the 5th and 14th Amendments. Individuals cannot be deprived of liberty (including being imprisoned) without due process of law.

5. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 484, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 430 (1995) (holding that due process liberty interests created by prison regulations will generally be limited to freedom from restraints that impose an atypical and significant hardship on the incarcerated person in relation to the ordinary incidents of prison life).

6. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 475, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2296, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 424 (1995).

7. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 475, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2296, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 424 (1995).

8. Please note that the SHU acronym is used throughout this chapter to describe different names for solitary confinement units.

9. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 476, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2296, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 425 (1995).

fairness of procedures).¹⁰ If the new conditions are “within the normal limits or range of custody which the conviction has authorized the State to impose,” the Due Process Clause will not apply.¹¹ However, you could still use the Due Process Clause in certain circumstances. The Supreme Court has held that if states try to avoid a certain type of confinement, that can create a protected liberty interest. For that to work in your state, your state must have made a law or regulation that makes prison officials follow certain procedures before changing your prison conditions.¹²

Even then, laws that avoid types of confinement create a protected liberty interest. In Conner, the Supreme Court held that such laws and regulations only invoke the Due Process Clause when the new conditions impose “atypical [uncommon] and significant [major] hardship” compared to normal life in prison.¹³ To determine this, a court will generally compare ordinary prison conditions with a fact-based analysis of the length and extent of your hardship. In Conner, the Supreme Court decided that, “[b]ased on a comparison between inmates inside and outside disciplinary segregation, the state’s actions in placing him there for thirty days did not work a major disruption in his environment.”¹⁴ The court concluded that his thirty-day disciplinary segregation was not the “atypical, significant deprivation [(hardship)]” where a state may have created a liberty interest.¹⁵ Because he did not have a protected liberty interest, the prison officials leading the disciplinary proceeding did not have to follow the constitutional due process requirements or state regulations about disciplinary procedures.

In sum, if you wish to make a claim that your due process rights were violated by a problem with the procedures that confined you in the SHU, you must show that:

- (1) The confinement was an “atypical and significant hardship” compared with the conditions experienced in the general population; and
- (2) The state, through language in a statute, created a protected liberty interest by avoiding that form of confinement.

Unfortunately, the Court’s opinion in Conner sets a very high bar for showing that the prison’s procedures actually violated your right to due process, and you can usually only make this claim after confinement. However, even if you cannot prove a due process violation with the Conner standard, there are other options. You may still use other protections against state actions that unfairly make your confinement worse. You may either:

- (1) Use internal prison grievance procedures¹⁶ and state judicial review (review by state courts under state laws or state constitutional protections) where available; or
- (2) Make a claim under the Eighth Amendment of the Constitution, which protects against cruel and unusual punishment.¹⁷

Since the Supreme Court decided Conner, different courts around the country have applied the Conner test differently when deciding what makes an “atypical and significant hardship” protected by state regulation. This Chapter looks at when courts (especially in New York) have said regulations are

10. Meachum v. Fano, 427 U.S. 215, 225, 96 S. Ct. 2532, 2538, 49 L. Ed. 2d 451, 459 (1976) (holding that the transfer of an incarcerated person to another prison with harsher conditions does not necessarily violate a liberty interest protected by the Due Process Clause of the 14th Amendment).

11. Meachum v. Fano, 427 U.S. 215, 225, 96 S. Ct. 2532, 2538, 49 L. Ed. 2d 451, 459 (1976); see also Montanye v. Haymes, 427 U.S. 236, 242–243, 96 S. Ct. 2543, 2547, 49 L. Ed. 2d 466, 471–472 (1976) (holding that no Due Process Clause liberty interest is infringed when an incarcerated person is transferred from one prison to another within the State, unless there is some right or expectation that can be derived from state law that an incarcerated person will not be transferred except for misbehavior or upon the occurrence of other “specified events”).

12. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 483–484, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 429–430 (1995) (citing Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1974)).

13. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 484, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 430 (1995).

14. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 486, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2301, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 431 (1995).

15. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 486, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2301, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 431 (1995).

16. See Chapter 15 of the JLM, “Inmate Grievance Procedures,” for more information.

17. See Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law,” for more information.

mandatory (and therefore create a liberty interest) and how they applied Conner to disciplinary and administrative segregation, transfers, good-time credits, and work release programs.

The rest of this Part will look at which prison practices make an “atypical and significant hardship.” Remember that this only matters if the state has a statute creating a protected liberty interest.

1. Disciplinary and Administrative Segregation

Prison officials in New York may put an incarcerated person in a Segregated Housing/Holding Unit (SHU)¹⁸ for a set period of time if they find that the incarcerated person broke a rule.¹⁹ Before the superintendent’s hearing and during investigation, the incarcerated person may be placed in administrative segregation.²⁰ Prison officials may also hold an incarcerated person in administrative segregation in a SHU if the individual threatens the safety or security of the prison.²¹ Disciplinary segregation, or segregation for the purpose of punishment, must be based on a finding—after a formal hearing—that the individual violated the New York State Department of Corrections and Community Supervision (DOCCS) Standards of Prisoner Behaviors.²² However, administrative segregation is based on a decision after an informal hearing that a incarcerated person’s presence in the general prison population threatens prison safety and security. Disciplinary segregation takes place for a set time period. In contrast, administrative segregation is not considered punishment and can continue until the superintendent finds that the threat is over.²³ For more on the procedural requirements for disciplinary and administrative segregation in New York prisons, see Parts E and F of this Chapter.

Courts in New York State and the Second Circuit look at both disciplinary and administrative detention proceedings under the Conner test above. The court reviews complaints against both kinds of segregation to decide if:

- (1) There are procedures explicitly required of prison officials, and
- (2) An “atypical and significant hardship” exists.²⁴

This Section will first help you figure out if the procedures that put you in disciplinary or administrative detention met requirement (1). Then, it will look at how courts judge an incarcerated person’s confinement in the SHU under requirement (2). This Section focuses specifically on the law for courts in the Second Circuit (federal courts in New York, Vermont, and Connecticut). Analysis by courts in other jurisdictions may be different. Unfortunately, some courts outside of the Second Circuit have held that no liberty interests may arise from administrative detention.²⁵ If you live

18. Subsequent uses of “SHU” will refer to how it is used in New York.

19. See N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, §§ 254.7(a)(1)(v), 301.2(a) (2019).

20. See N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 301.4(d)(2) or 301.4(d)(3) (2019).

21. See N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 301.4(b) (2019).

22. See N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, §§ 254.7(a)(1), 301.2(a) (2019).

23. See N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 301.4(e) (2019).

24. See, e.g., Wilkinson v. Austin, 545 U.S. 209, 210, 125 S. Ct. 2284, 2387 (2005) (quoting Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 486, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2301, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 431 (1995)) (“Such an interest may arise from state policies or regulations, subject to the important limitations set forth in Sandin, which requires a determination whether [Ohio State Penitentiary] assignment ‘imposes atypical and significant hardship on the inmate in relation to the ordinary incidents of prison life.’”); see also Palmer v. Richards, 364 F.3d 60, 66 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding that the conditions of the incarcerated person’s confinement in the SHU, coupled with the duration of time in the SHU, might constitute “atypical and significant hardship”).

25. See Crowder v. True, 74 F.3d 812, 815 (7th Cir. 1996) (holding administrative detention does not give rise to a protected liberty interest); Moore v. Ham, No. 92-3305, 1993 U.S. App. LEXIS 826, at *5 (10th Cir. Jan. 13, 1993) (unpublished) (quoting Frazier v. Dubois, 922 F.2d 560, 562 (10th Cir. 1990)) (“If ‘segregation is non-punitive in nature and is done for administrative or supervisory reasons, the inmate has no due process rights prior to administrative confinement unless prison regulations provide him with a liberty interest.”); Awalt v. Whalen, 809 F. Supp. 414, 416 (E.D. Va. 1992) (holding regulations providing for staff procedures and time frames, but not mandating release upon a hearing and specific findings, do not create a liberty interest in release from administrative detention). But see Muhammad v. Carlson, 845 F.2d 175, 177 (8th Cir. 1988) (explaining that a outside the area of the Second Circuit (the Second Circuit includes New York, Vermont, and Connecticut), you should look up how courts in your area interpret your prison's rules and if they consider administrative detention a protected liberty interest. See Chapter 2 of the JLM, "Introduction to Legal Research," for more information on how to look up your area's law.

(a) The State-Created Liberty Interest Requirement

Even if your segregation was "atypical and significant," courts will not find a due process violation if you cannot show you had a constitutional or state-created liberty interest in avoiding the segregation. The Second Circuit and New York district courts hold that New York state regulations for disciplinary confinement²⁶ and administrative segregation²⁷ give incarcerated people a liberty interest that protects them from certain prison conditions and that the Due Process Clause of the U.S. Constitution protects these rights. The Second Circuit finds that an incarcerated person only has a federal due process claim if, upon careful analysis, specific state statutes and regulations create protected liberty interests. Where these interests have been created, the prison must also regularly uphold these protected interests.²⁸ It is important to remember that courts outside of New York State do not always find that state statutes and regulations create a liberty interest that protects incarcerated people from disciplinary and administrative segregation.

(b) The "Atypical and Significant Hardship" Requirement

In determining whether your confinement in the SHU involves a protected liberty interest, a court will analyze disciplinary segregation the same way it analyzes administrative segregation. The court looks at whether the facts of your confinement in a segregated facility reach an "atypical and significant hardship . . . in relation to the ordinary incidents of prison life."²⁹ A court will look at the liberty interest may be created by prison regulations if those regulations impose substantive criteria limiting or guiding prison officials' discretion); Maclean v. Secor, 876 F. Supp. 695, 701–702 (E.D. Pa. 1995) (holding regulations limiting prison officials' discretion in administrative detention decisions created a liberty interest).

26. See, e.g., Nicholas v. Tucker, No. 95 Civ. 9705, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 749, at *19 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 27, 2000) (unpublished) (finding New York State regulations grant incarcerated people a protected liberty interest in freedom from disciplinary confinement); Wright v. Miller, 973 F. Supp. 390, 395 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (finding a state-created liberty interest in being free from disciplinary confinement); Gonzalez v. Coughlin, 969 F. Supp. 256, 257–258 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (holding state regulations on disciplinary segregation create a liberty interest in freedom from disciplinary confinement).

27. See, e.g., Wright v. Smith, 21 F. 3d 496, 500 (2d Cir. 1994) (holding that New York State regulation providing for mandatory reevaluation of administration segregation after an incarcerated person has been in the SHU for 14 days created a liberty interest). Gonzalez v. Coughlin, 969 F. Supp. 256, 257–258 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (concluding that New York State rules regarding administrative confinement create a liberty interest).

28. See Houston v. Cotter, 7 F. Supp. 3d 283, 295 (E.D.N.Y. 2014) (noting that "[s]tate statutes and regulations also confer liberty interests on prisoners"); Sealey v. Giltner, 197 F.3d 578, 583–584 (2d Cir. 1999) (explaining that "New York has established substantial factual predicates for many instances of administrative confinement" which create a protected liberty interest); Welch v. Bartlett, 196 F.3d 389, 392 (2d Cir. 1999) (stating that an incarcerated person who brings a due process claim premised upon a state law liberty interest, has the burden to establish that the law does, in fact, create such a liberty interest). The Second Circuit's method of analysis is based on the Supreme Court's opinion in Hewitt v. Helms, 459 U.S. 460, 103 S. Ct. 864, 74 L. Ed. 2d 675 (1983), which held that because of Pennsylvania statutes setting forth procedures for placing incarcerated people in administrative confinement, incarcerated people had a liberty interest in remaining in the general prison population. Later, however, the Supreme Court explicitly rejected the Helms analysis as the primary means of determining the existence of a due process claim, finding that state regulations for administrative or disciplinary segregation did not themselves create a liberty interest—rather, incarcerated people needed to additionally show "atypical and significant hardship" arising from the segregation. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 483–484, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2299–2300, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 430 (1995). Despite the Supreme Court's ruling in Sandin, the Second Circuit held that, in combination with Sandin's "atypical and significant hardship" test, the procedure established by the Second Circuit in Sealey and Welch is still an appropriate way to determine whether a legitimate due process claim is present.

29. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 484, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 430 (1995).

facts of your confinement in its analysis.³⁰ There is no clear way to decide if a given SHU confinement is an “atypical and significant hardship,” but courts will look at two main things in their analysis: (1) the length of your confinement and (2) the difference between your segregation conditions and normal prison conditions.³¹ The court will look at both factors “since especially harsh conditions endured for a brief interval and somewhat harsh conditions endured for a prolonged interval might both be atypical.”³²

(i) Actual Length of Your Confinement

If you are filing a claim within the Second Circuit, the length of your confinement is the actual time that you were detained in the SHU. A prison official may only be responsible for violating your due process rights during this period. Therefore, when you file your claim, you will state how long you actually spent in detention (not how long you could have spent).³³ You should count the total number of days that you spent in the SHU before, during, and after the disciplinary or administrative hearing.³⁴ If they move you from one SHU directly to another SHU in a different prison facility, count the total number of days that you were detained in both facilities. Your transfer does not restart the duration of confinement for the court.³⁵

Courts have not strictly defined specifically what makes an “atypical and significant” period of SHU confinement, but the Second Circuit has indicated general rules for such claims. The Second Circuit recently suggested that SHU confinement of approximately 305 days or more probably involves a protected liberty interest.³⁶ Periods of less than 305 days but more than 101 days may involve a protected liberty interest.³⁷ Whether your confinement involves a protected liberty interest heavily

30. Miller v. Selsky, 111 F.3d 7, 9 (2d Cir. 1997) (holding that Conner did not create a blanket rule and that “courts must examine the circumstances of a confinement to determine whether that confinement affected a liberty interest”).

31. See Ruggiero v. Prack, 168 F. Supp. 3d 495, 519 (W.D.N.Y. 2016) (listing factors the court may consider to determine atypical and significant hardship as: “(1) the duration of the deprivation; (2) the extent of the deprivation; (3) the availability of other out of cell activities; (4) the opportunity for in-cell exercise; and (5) the justification for the deprivation”); Davis v. Barrett, 576 F.3d 129, 133 (2d Cir. 2009) (citing Palmer v. Richards, 364 F.3d 60, 64 (2d Cir. 2004)) (“Factors relevant to determining whether the plaintiff endured an ‘atypical and significant hardship’ include ‘the extent to which the conditions of the disciplinary segregation differ from other routine prison conditions’ and ‘the duration of the disciplinary segregation imposed compared to discretionary confinement.’”).

32. See Samuels v. Fischer, 168 F. Supp. 3d 625, 642 (S.D.N.Y. 2016) (citing Sealey v. Giltner, 197 F.3d 578, 586 (2d Cir. 1999)) (holding that a sentence of 30 months in SHU prevents a court from granting a motion to dismiss for failure to state a due process claim).

33. See Paul v. Selsky, No. 02-CV-6347-CJS, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 90939, at *18 (W.D.N.Y. Jun. 29, 2012) (unpublished) (“In assessing atypicality under Conner, a court must look to the ‘actual punishment’ imposed.” (citing Scott v. Albury, 156 F.3d 283, 287 (2d Cir. 1998))).

34. See Nieves v. Prack, 172 F. Supp. 3d 647, 651–652 (W.D.N.Y. 2016) (discussing ranges of days in SHU that could implicate due process rights and holding that 90–101 days can be within the range of typical SHU confinement).

35. See Fludd v. Fischer, 568 F. App’x 70, 73 (2d Cir. 2014) (unpublished) (noting that, “[f]or the purpose of establishing a liberty interest, a district court should consider the entire ‘sustained period of confinement.’” (citing Giano v. Selsky, 238 F.3d 223, 226 (2d Cir. 2001)); see also Sims v. Artuz, 230 F.3d 14, 23–24 (2d Cir. 2000) (suggesting that “some or all” of a series of separate SHU sentences “should be aggregated for purposes of the Conner inquiry” when they are imposed within a period of days or hours of each other and add up to a sustained period of confinement)).

36. See Colon v. Howard, 215 F.3d 227, 231 (2d Cir. 2000) (holding that confinement in a SHU for 305 days under “normal conditions” is a departure from standard prison life, which warrants due process protection under Conner).

37. See Gonzalez v. Hasty, 802 F.3d 112, 223 (2d Cir. 2015) (declaring that “[a] period of confinement under typical SHU conditions lasting longer than 305 days . . . triggers a protected liberty interest, whereas a period of confinement lasting between 101 and 305 days may trigger a protected liberty interest, depending on the specific conditions of confinement.”); see also Palmer v. Richards, 364 F.3d 60, 64–65 (2d Cir. 2004) (“Instead, our cases depends on the extent of your deprivation (discussed more in Part C(1)(b)(ii) below).³⁸ Confinement for less than 101 days probably does not involve a Conner liberty interest unless you experienced unusually severe conditions in the SHU.³⁹ Finally, confinement under typical SHU conditions for less than thirty days will probably not result in a successful due process claim.⁴⁰

In addition to weighing the length of your confinement and the extent of your deprivation, courts also look at how often incarcerated people endure similar periods of non-disciplinary SHU confinement to decide if a particular period of segregation is “atypical.” In other words, courts may compare your period of confinement with “periods of comparable deprivation typically endured by other prisoners in the ordinary course of prison administration” for non-disciplinary reasons.⁴¹ establish the following guidelines for use by district courts in determining whether a prisoner's liberty interest was infringed. Where the plaintiff was confined for an intermediate duration—between 101 and 305 days—‘development of a detailed record’ of the conditions of the confinement relative to ordinary prison conditions is required.” (citing Colon v. Howard, 215 F.3d 227, 232 (2d Cir. 2000)).

38. See Davis v. Barrett, 576 F.3d 129, 133 (2d Cir. 2009) (explaining that when courts determine the extent of deprivation, they will look at “the extent to which the conditions of the disciplinary segregation differ from other routine prison conditions’ and ‘the duration of the disciplinary segregation imposed compared to discretionary confinement.’” (citing Palmer v. Richards, 364 F.3d 60, 64 (2d Cir. 2004)); see also Houston v. Cotter, 7 F. Supp. 3d 283, 296 (E.D.N.Y. 2014) (“When an inmate is placed in conditions more restrictive than those in the general prison population, whether through protective segregation like suicide watch or discretionary administrative segregation, his liberty is affected only if the more restrictive conditions are particularly harsh compared to ordinary prison life or if he remains subject to those conditions for a significantly long time.”) (citing Earl v. Racine Cnty. Jail, 718 F.3d 689, 691 (7th Cir. 2013)); Beckford v. Portuondo, 151 F. Supp. 2d 204, 219 (N.D.N.Y. 2001) (holding plaintiff's confinement, which lasted less than a week, was not sufficiently atypical to implicate a protected liberty interest, even though it included restrictions on his diet and water and placement behind a cell shield); Jones v. Kelly, 937 F. Supp. 200, 202–203 (W.D.N.Y. 1996) (concluding that 191 days in segregated confinement did not impose an atypical and significant hardship, but that “[t]he length of SHU confinement is not necessarily dispositive of whether a liberty interest is implicated.”); Carter v. Carriero, 905 F. Supp. 99, 104 (W.D.N.Y. 1995) (finding that 270 days in a SHU did not violate a protected liberty interest, because the nature of the deprivation did not impose “atypical and significant hardship on the inmate in relation to the ordinary incidents of prison life.”).

39. See Ortiz v. McBride, 380 F.3d 649, 654 (2d Cir. 2009) (“under abnormal or unusual SHU conditions, periods of confinement of less than 101 days may implicate a liberty interest.”); see also Sealey v. Giltner, 197 F.3d 578, 589–590 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding that 101 days of confinement under standard SHU conditions did not constitute an “atypical and significant” deprivation under Sandin). But see Holmes v. Grant, 03 Civ. 3426 (RJH) (RLE), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15743, at *59 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 31, 2006) (unpublished) (recognizing that the facility's 24-hour solitary confinement policy during a 13-day stay in SHU could be considered an atypical deprivation); Colon v. Howard, 215 F.3d 227, 232 n.5 (2d Cir. 2000) (noting that confinement for periods of 101 days or less “could be shown on a record more fully developed than the one in Sealey to constitute an atypical and severe hardship under Sandin.”); Welch v. Bartlett, 196 F.3d 389, 394 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding 90 days of confinement in a SHU may be “atypical and significant” if the deprivation that the prison suffered “was more serious than typically endured by prisoners as an ordinary incident of prison life.”).

40. See, e.g., Houston v. Cotter, 7 F. Supp. 3d 283, 298 (E.D.N.Y. 2014) (“Absent a detailed factual record, courts typically affirm dismissals of due process claims where the period of time spent in SHU was short—e.g., thirty days—and there was no indication of unusual conditions”); Benton v. Keane, 921 F. Supp. 1078, 1079 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (noting that thirty days of confinement does not implicate liberty interest); Hendricks v. Centanni, No. 92 Civ. 5353, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1662, at *8–9 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 16, 1996) (unpublished) (noting that thirty days of confinement does not implicate liberty interest); Martin v. Mitchell, No. 92–CV–716, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19006, at *9 (N.D.N.Y. Nov. 24, 1995) (unpublished) (noting that thirty days of confinement does not implicate liberty interest).

41. Scott v. Coughlin, 78 F. Supp. 2d 299, 307 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (citing Welch v. Bartlett, 196 F.3d 389, 394 (2d Cir. 1999)) (noting that “[a]long with duration, the Court must examine the frequency with which inmates are confined to the SHU in the ordinary course of the prison administration.”); see also Colon v. Howard, 215 F.3d 227, 231 (2d Cir. 2000) (holding that 305 days in SHU confinement is atypical under Conner, because the government could not show that a 305-day confinement was comparable with that “typically endured by other prisoners in the ordinary course of prison administration.”) (citing Welch v. Bartlett, 196 F.3d 389, 394 (2d Cir. 1999)); Brooks v. DiFasi, 112 F.3d 46, 49 (2d Cir. 1997) (holding that, while New York prison regulations allow

(ii) Extent of the Deprivation Compared to “Ordinary Incidents of Prison Life”

Courts will compare how much hardship you suffered in disciplinary or administrative segregation to the “ordinary incidents of prison life.”⁴² The Supreme Court says that, under Conner, an incarcerated person in disciplinary or administrative segregation does not have a due process claim if other incarcerated people have about the same hardship under ordinary prison administration.⁴³ There is some dispute in the courts about the meaning of “ordinary incidents of prison life.”⁴⁴ Courts will let you compare what you experienced in the SHU to what the general population experiences at your prison.⁴⁵ Thus, to be an “atypical and substantial deprivation,” your hardships in the SHU must be “substantially more grave” than what you would ordinarily experience in the general prison population.⁴⁶

Like the length of your confinement, courts have no strict rule for what makes your deprivations in SHU “substantially grave” enough to be “atypical and significant.” Rather, the court will look at many different factors to decide whether your deprivation violates the Due Process Clause. For example, in a case from the Western District of New York, Giano v. Kelly, the court noted significant differences between conditions in the SHU and in the general population, including:

- (1) Significantly greater isolation;
- (2) No organized, meaningful activity, such as job assignments, vocational training, or classroom instruction; and for lengthy administrative confinement, these regulations do not necessarily mean that lengthy disciplinary confinement is compatible with due process, and that after Conner, “a court must examine the specific circumstances of the punishment.”)

42. See Wilkinson v. Austin, 545 U.S. 209, 223, 125 S. Ct. 2384, 2394, 162 L. Ed. 2d 174, 190 (2005) (“After Sandin, it is clear that the touchstone of the inquiry into the existence of a protected, state-created liberty interest in avoiding restrictive conditions of confinement is not the language of regulations regarding those conditions but the nature of those conditions themselves ‘in relation to the ordinary incidents of prison life.’” (citing Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 484, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 430 (1995))).

43. Wilkinson v. Austin, 545 U.S. 209, 222–223, 125 S. Ct. 2384, 2394, 162 L. Ed. 2d 174, 190 (2005) (citing the standard of “atypical and significant hardship on the inmate in relation to the ordinary incidents of prison life” outlined in Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 483–484, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 430 (1995)).

44. See Sealey v. Giltner, 197 F.3d 578, 588–589 (2d Cir. 1999) (noting unresolved questions about: (1) whether the “ordinary incidents of prison life” requirement asks courts to compare SHU conditions to the conditions within administrative confinement or to the conditions within the general population, and (2) whether the “ordinary incidents of prison life” requirement asks courts to compare SHU conditions to those conditions within the particular prison, to prison conditions across the state, or to prison conditions nationwide).

45. See Ortiz v. McBride, 380 F.3d 649, 655 (2d Cir. 2009) (recognizing that an incarcerated person could successfully prove a due process violation if he “could establish conditions in SHU ‘far inferior’ to those prevailing in the prison in general.”) (citing Palmer v. Richards, 364 F.3d 60, 66 (2d Cir. 2004)); See also, e.g., Sealey v. Giltner, 197 F.3d 578, 589 (2d Cir. 1999) (finding on appeal that the incarcerated person’s trial evidence was sufficient when he only compared the conditions of his SHU confinement to the conditions among the general population within his particular prison); Welch v. Bartlett, 196 F.3d 389, 394 (2d Cir. 1999) (comparing the conditions of an incarcerated person’s SHU segregation to the deprivation that other incarcerated people endure in the ordinary course of prison administration); Giano v. Kelly, No. 89-CV-727(C), 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9138, at *17 (W.D.N.Y. May 16, 2000) (unpublished) (comparing the conditions that the incarcerated person faced in administrative segregation to the typical conditions that the prison’s general population endured).

46. Welch v. Bartlett, 196 F.3d 389, 392 (2d Cir. 1999) (finding that, after Conner, an incarcerated person who experiences a deprivation under mandatory state regulations does not have a federal due process claim if other incarcerated people in the prison’s general population typically experience approximately the same deprivation in the ordinary administration of the prison); see also Frazier v. Coughlin, 81 F.3d 313, 317–318 (2d Cir. 1996) (holding that when an incarcerated person was confined in the SHU for 12 days while awaiting the disposition of disciplinary proceedings, his due process rights were not violated, despite the fact that he was denied certain privileges, because the conditions of his confinement were not prohibited by law).

- (3) No social and recreational activity, such as drug and alcohol counseling, religious services, group meals, or group exercise.⁴⁷

The Giano court also found more distinctions. Incarcerated people in SHU were confined to their cells for twenty-three hours per day. They only had one hour of daily exercise in a separate, slightly larger cell with no equipment. Plus, people in SHU only got two showers per week, one non-legal visit per week, and no telephone calls (except in an emergency or with permission).⁴⁸ Finally, the individual's cell was ten feet by ten feet, often dirty, and usually dark, with covered windows to prevent eye contact with other incarcerated people.⁴⁹

Even if incarcerated people in the general population sometimes experience similar deprivations, you could still have a due process claim.⁵⁰ The Giano court said that, while people incarcerated in the general population under “lock-down” have conditions similar to those in the SHU, the duration and extent of SHU “inactivity or cell confinement, long-term isolation and idleness are far less typical outside of SHU.”⁵¹ This analysis, which looks at the manner of your confinement and how long you spend in the SHU, seems typical of recent Second Circuit cases.⁵²

Remember that the length of time you are in administrative or disciplinary segregation is one of two factors the court will look at when comparing your detention to the ordinary incidents of prison life. Thus, if you claim that your due process rights were violated when you were confined in administrative or disciplinary segregation for less than 305 days, you should present any and all available evidence of SHU conditions, any evidence of psychological effects of prolonged confinement in isolated conditions, and the exact number of times you were placed in SHU confinements of different lengths of time.⁵³

47. Giano v. Kelly, No. 89-CV-727(C), 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9138, at *18–20 (W.D.N.Y. May 16, 2000) (unpublished).

48. Giano v. Kelly, No. 89-CV-727(C), 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9138, at *18–20 (W.D.N.Y. May 16, 2000) (unpublished).

49. Giano v. Kelly, No. 89-CV-727(C), 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9138, at *18–21 (W.D.N.Y. May 16, 2000) (unpublished).

50. Giano v. Kelly, No. 89-CV-727(C), 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9138, at *24–25 (W.D.N.Y. May 16, 2000) (unpublished).

51. Giano v. Kelly, No. 89-CV-727(C), 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9138, at *21 (W.D.N.Y. May 16, 2000) (unpublished).

52. See, e.g., Gonzalez v. Hasty, 802 F.3d 212, 223 (2d Cir. 2015) (“A period of confinement under typical SHU conditions lasting longer than 305 days . . . triggers a protected liberty interest, whereas a period of confinement lasting between 101 and 305 days may trigger a protected liberty interest, depending on the specific conditions of confinement.”); J.S. v. T’Kach, 714 F.3d 99, 106 (2d Cir. 2013) (recognizing that “[i]n the absence of factual findings to the contrary, confinement of 188 days is a significant enough hardship to trigger Conner.”); Palmer v. Richards, 364 F.3d 60, 64–66 (2d Cir. 2004) (articulating duration guidelines and noting that dismissal of a due process claim is appropriate only when an incarcerated person spent fewer than 30 days in SHU); LaBounty v. Kinkhabwala, 2 F. App’x 197, 201 (2d Cir. 2001) (unpublished) (instructing the district court to compare both the specific conditions of the incarcerated person’s disciplinary segregation and the duration to the conditions of other categories of confinement); Vaughan v. Erno, 8 F. App’x 145, 146 (2d Cir. 2001) (unpublished) (finding no due process violation where the incarcerated person did not allege any adverse conditions of the confinement other than its duration); Sealey v. Giltner, 197 F.3d 578, 589–590 (2d Cir. 1999) (finding that plaintiff’s 101-day confinement in the SHU did not impair a protected liberty interest since the duration and conditions of the confinement did not meet the Conner atypicality standard); Welch v. Bartlett, 196 F.3d 389, 394 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding that the relevant comparison concerning duration is between the period of deprivation endured by the plaintiff and periods of similar deprivation typically endured by other incarcerated people in ordinary prison administration); Nicholas v. Tucker, 95 Civ. 9705, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 749, at *13–14 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 27, 2000) (unpublished) (holding that in determining whether a confinement constitutes an atypical and significant hardship, courts should consider the effect of the segregation on the length of the plaintiff’s prison confinement, the extent to which conditions differ from other prison conditions, and the duration of the disciplinary confinement compared to the potential duration of discretionary confinement).

53. See, e.g., Colon v. Howard, 215 F.3d 227, 232 (2d Cir. 1999) (recommending to the district courts that this information would be helpful in evaluating on appeal whether segregation is atypical and significant); see

In addition to your own words, you should also get and submit other evidence about your detention conditions. This evidence should be independent. For example, if you complained of unsanitary conditions or other unmet medical needs, you should try to get records of these complaints.⁵⁴

2. Transfers

You can get due process analysis when you move to a different prison. The Supreme Court says you do not have a protected liberty interest in staying at a certain prison.⁵⁵ But you might have a claim if the move was because you exercised your constitutional rights such as exercising your right to free speech.⁵⁶

You do not have a protected liberty interest in staying in a certain prison even if the new prison has a different security level.⁵⁷ For example, an optional transfer from a minimum security prison to a medium security prison is not considered worse than the “ordinary disruptions of prison life.”⁵⁸ Also, moves from the general population to maximum security can be “within the normal limits or range of also Taylor v. Rodriguez, 238 F.3d 188, 195 (2d Cir. 2001) (reinforcing the finding in Colon that a “fully developed record” along with the length of confinement would be helpful in determining atypicality); Sealey v. Giltner, 197 F.3d 578, 589 (2d Cir. 1999) (noting evidence of “conditions of administrative confinement at other New York prisons, as well as the frequency and duration of confinements imposing significant hardships, might well be relevant to [an incarcerated person’s] liberty claim”); Edwards v. Mejia, No. 11 Civ. 9134 (ALC), 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37006, at *6–7 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 15, 2013) (unpublished) (finding claim of difficulty breathing because of adequate air ventilation and physical and psychological anguish was sufficient to plead atypical and significant hardship); Brown v. Doe, No. 13 CIV. 8409 (ER), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 152925, at *16–17 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 28, 2014) (unpublished) (finding complaint deficient because, although plaintiff claimed he was unable to sleep, he did not point to a specific condition of confinement that caused emotional harm).

54. See Davis v. Barrett, 576 F.3d 129 (2d Cir. 2009) (rejecting the district court’s determination that Plaintiff’s claim of unhygienic conditions was insufficient because of lack of evidence of complaints); Wheeler v. Butler, 209 F. App’x 14, 16 (2d Cir. 2006) (unpublished) (finding that plaintiff’s denied requests for his hearing aids while in SHU were relevant to determination of whether he was subjected to atypical conditions).

55. See Meachum v. Fano, 427 U.S. 215, 224–225, 96 S. Ct. 2532, 2538–2539, 49 L. Ed. 2d 451, 459–460 (1976) (holding that the “Due Process Clause [does not] in and of itself protect a duly convicted prisoner against transfer from one institution to another within the state prison system,” such that a transfer within a state is within the normal range of custody), rehearing denied, Meachum v. Fano, 429 U.S. 873, 97 S. Ct. 191, 50 L. Ed. 2d 155 (1976); Olim v. Wakinekona, 461 U.S. 238, 247, 103 S. Ct. 1741, 1746, 75 L. Ed. 2d 813, 821 (1983) (transfer for confinement in another state is within the normal range of custody). But see Vitek v. Jones, 445 U.S. 480, 493–494, 100 S. Ct. 1254, 1264, 63 L. Ed. 2d 552, 555–556 (1980) (finding that transfer to a mental hospital is not within the normal range of custody).

56. See Merriweather v. Coughlin, 879 F.2d 1037, 1046 (2d Cir. 1989) (holding that a jury could reasonably conclude that incarcerated people were transferred solely because they exercised their 1st Amendment rights, and thus had a valid claim, where the incarcerated people were transferred after critiquing the prison administration); Hill v. Laird, No. 06-CV-0126 (JS) (ARL), 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 43994, at *22 (E.D.N.Y. Mar. 31, 2014) (unpublished) (citing authority).

57. See Meachum v. Fano, 427 U.S. 215, 224–225, 96 S. Ct. 2532, 2538–39, 49 L. Ed. 2d 451, 459–460 (1976) rehearing denied, Meachum v. Fano, 429 U.S. 873, 97 S. Ct. 191, 50 L. Ed. 2d 155 (1976); Moorman v. Thalacker, 83 F.3d 970, 973 (8th Cir. 1996) (holding that discretionary transfer of incarcerated person from minimum to medium security prison, as a result of disciplinary action, was not a disruption exceeding ordinary incidents of prison life and, thus, did not implicate a due process liberty interest); Keenan v. Hall, 83 F.3d 1083, 1089, 96 Cal. Daily Op. Service 3261, 96 Daily Journal DAR 5331 (9th Cir. 1996) (noting the standard for determining whether an incarcerated person had a protected liberty interest in prison transfer depends on whether conditions at the facility to which the individual an incarcerated person was transferred imposed significant and atypical hardship).

58. See Moorman v. Thalacker, 83 F.3d 970, 973 (8th Cir. 1996) (“[S]uch assignments are discretionary, so long as they are not done for prohibited or invidious reasons.”).

custody which the conviction" allows. This is true even when maximum security conditions are much worse.⁵⁹ How often you move between prisons does not matter.⁶⁰

The courts use this same reasoning for deportation. You do not have a protected liberty interest in moving to a prison in your home country. This is true even if conditions in the United States are worse than in your home country.⁶¹

3. Good-Time Credits

Having good-time credits does not always mean that you have a constitutionally protected liberty interest.⁶² You can only claim a liberty interest if your state has created one.⁶³ For example, in one case, a Nevada law let incarcerated people get good-time credits "unless the inmate ha[d] committed serious misbehavior."⁶⁴ The court found that this law offered a "right of 'real substance'" by giving good-time credits. The court said that this created a liberty interest under the due process analysis.⁶⁵ Finding that if an incarcerated person was found guilty of "serious misbehavior" that individual would lose good-time credits. This means that Nevada prisons must tell incarcerated people the charges against them. The prisons must also give them a chance to be heard. Both things must happen before they find that an incarcerated person is guilty of "serious misbehavior."⁶⁶

The chance to earn good-time credits is not a protected liberty interest by itself.⁶⁷ For example, in one case, the incarcerated person was put in administrative segregation.⁶⁸ This meant that the incarcerated person could not receive more good-time credits that would have helped him get parole. The court still found no liberty interest. Instead, the court said that the "loss of opportunity to earn

59. Meachum v. Fano, 427 U.S. 215, 225, 96 S. Ct. 2532, 2538–2539, 49 L. Ed. 2d 451, 459 (1976) (concluding transfer to prison with more severe rules does not in itself signify a 14th Amendment liberty interest violation) rehearing denied, Meachum v. Fano, 429 U.S. 873, 97 S. Ct. 191, 50 L. Ed. 2d 155 (1976).

60. See Maguire v. Coughlin, 901 F. Supp. 101, 106 (N.D.N.Y. 1995) (asserting that a transfer of an incarcerated between four different correctional facilities in the span of three weeks did not implicate a protected liberty interest).

61. See Wong v. Warden, FCI Raybrook, 999 F. Supp. 287, 290 (N.D.N.Y. 1998), aff'd, Wong v. Warden, FCI Raybrook, 171 F.3d 148 (2d Cir. 1999) (stating that an incarcerated alien did not have a liberty interest in being transferred to his home country, unless the denial of transfer was discriminatory based on race or national origin); Meachum v. Fano, 427 U.S. 215, 224, 96 S. Ct. 2532, 2538, 49 L. Ed. 2d 451, 459 (1976) ("The initial decision to assign the convict to a particular institution is not subject to audit under the Due Process Clause, although the degree of confinement in one prison may be quite different from that in another."); see also Marshall v. Reno, 915 F. Supp. 426, 431–432 (D.D.C. 1996) (finding no due process claim where Canadian plaintiff was not transferred to Canadian prison according to his sentencing judge's recommendation, because the Bureau of Prisons determines prison locations and the Attorney General determines whether to transfer inmates pursuant to treaty).

62. See Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 557–559, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2975–2976, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 951–953 (1974) (holding actual restoration of good-time credits could not be handled in a civil rights suit—habeas corpus was the proper remedy—but declaratory judgment regarding good-time withdrawal procedures, as a predicate to a damage award, was not barred).

63. See Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 557–559, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2975–2976, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 951–953 (1974); Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 483–484, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 429 (1995) (stating that "we recognize that States may under certain circumstances create liberty interests which are protected by the Due Process Clause" in reference to Wolff); see also Leacock v. DuBois, 937 F. Supp. 81, 83–84 (D. Mass. 1996) (holding an incarcerated person may not be divested of a state-created right to good-time credit without a minimum of due process, including written notice of claimed violations, qualified right to call witnesses and present evidence, and written statement of fact-finders as to evidence relied upon and reasons for action).

64. Reynolds v. Wolff, 916 F. Supp. 1018, 1023 (D. Nev. 1996).

65. Reynolds v. Wolff, 916 F. Supp. 1018, 1023 (D. Nev. 1996). District courts in New York are divided about whether the loss of good time credits implicates a protected liberty interest under the due process clause. See Duamutef v. O'Keefe, No. 94-CV-470, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22055, at *12–14 (N.D.N.Y. Jan. 30, 1996) (unpublished) (citing cases).

66. See Reynolds v. Wolff, 916 F. Supp. 1018, 1023 (D. Nev. 1996).

67. See Luken v. Scott, 71 F.3d 192, 193 (5th Cir. 1995).

68. Luken v. Scott, 71 F.3d 192, 193 (5th Cir. 1995).

good-time credits . . . [is a] consequence[] of prison administrative decisions [that] do not create constitutionally protected liberty interests.”⁶⁹ In another case, losing a prison job did not automatically involve a liberty interest. This was true even though the incarcerated person could no longer automatically get good-time credits through that job.⁷⁰

The Supreme Court case of Edwards v. Balisok is very important for claims about losing good-time credits.⁷¹ According to that case, you must have a disciplinary hearing about good-time credit issues reversed in state court before you can bring a federal Section 1983 claim about the results (not the procedures) of the hearing.⁷² This standard is applied in a variety of ways. The Second Circuit only applies it to good-time credit cases.⁷³ The Seventh Circuit and some district courts have read the case differently. They read it as requiring an administrative or court reversal in all disciplinary or administrative segregation cases before an incarcerated person can sue for damages.⁷⁴ See JLM Chapter 35, “Getting Out Early: Conditional & Early Release,” for more information about good-time credits.

4. Work Release Programs

The Supreme Court has held that an incarcerated person had a liberty interest in his pre-parole release program. This was because the program was very similar to parole.⁷⁵ The standard is similar for work release programs.⁷⁶ Courts consider whether your program gives you “substantial freedom.” They also consider whether you have been “released from incarceration.”⁷⁷ You have “substantial freedom” if your work release program is more like release from prison. The court will probably not find that you have a liberty interest if your situation is still like institutional life.⁷⁸

69. Luken v. Scott, 71 F.3d 192, 193 (5th Cir. 1995) (alterations in original).

70. Bulger v. U.S. Bureau of Prisons, 65 F.3d 48, 50 (5th Cir. 1995); see also Rivera v. Coughlin, No. 92 CIV 3404 (DLC), 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 560, at *17–19 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 22, 1996) (unpublished) (holding no protected liberty interest existed where loss of good-time credit under New York regulations was a recommendation and, therefore, only tentative).

71. Edwards v. Balisok, 520 U.S. 641, 117 S. Ct. 1584, 137 L. Ed. 2d 906 (1997).

72. Edwards v. Balisok, 520 U.S. 641, 647–648, 117 S. Ct. 1584, 1588–1589, 137 L. Ed. 2d 906, 914–915 (1997);

73. See Jackson v. Johnson, 15 F. Supp. 2d 341, 360 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (holding that were an incarcerated person had not lost good-time credits and was not otherwise challenging the fact or duration of his confinement, he could use a Section 1983 suit rather than habeas corpus to make a due process challenge to a disciplinary hearing); see also Brown v. Plaut, 131 F.3d 163, 166 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (finding that a former incarcerated person who brought a Section 1983 action seeking damages for being placed in administrative segregation without due process was not required to raise the claim via writ of habeas corpus).

74. See Stone-Bey v. Barnes, 120 F.3d 718, 722 (7th Cir. 1997) (holding that incarcerated person’s Section 1983 claim that disciplinary segregation violated due process was barred because disciplinary judgment had not been overturned and claim would necessarily imply its invalidity).

75. See Young v. Harper, 520 U.S. 143, 152–153, 137 L. Ed. 2d 270, 280, 117 S. Ct. 1148, 1154 (1997) (finding that the Oklahoma “pre-parole conditional supervision program” was sufficiently like parole to invoke the procedural protections outlined in Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484, 92 S. Ct. 2593 (1972)); see also White v. Steuben County, No. 1:11-CV-019, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 110404, at *23 (N.D. Ind. Sept. 27, 2011) (unpublished) (stating that “the Supreme Court has found protected liberty interests inherent in the Due Process Clause after an inmate is released from institutional confinement”).

76. See Young Ah Kim v. Hurston, 182 F.3d 113, 118 (2d Cir. 1999) (finding final phase of work release, where plaintiff lived at home, worked at a job, and reported to prison was “virtually indistinguishable from either traditional parole or the Oklahoma program considered in Young”); Nelson v. Skrobecki, No. 4:14CV3010, 2014 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83481, at *7–8 (D. Neb. June 18, 2014) (unpublished) (citing cases that found a liberty interest in revocation of conditional release programs).

77. Callender v. Sioux City Residential Treatment Facility, 88 F.3d 666, 668 (8th Cir. 1996) (stating that the Due Process Clause gives rise to a liberty interest when the incarcerated person is given substantial freedom and that the trigger is if the incarcerated person has been “release[d] from incarceration”).

78. See Young Ah Kim v. Hurston, 182 F.3d 113, 118 (2d Cir. 1999) (finding that work release where plaintiff lived at home was “virtually indistinguishable” from parole); Callender v. Sioux City Residential

The key factor for a court determining whether you have been “release[d] from institutional life altogether” is where you live.⁷⁹ In one case, the court found that a work release program participant had a protected liberty interest because he no longer lived in an institution.⁸⁰ However, in another case the court found no inherent liberty interest in staying in a work release program.⁸¹ In that case, the participant was on “5” and “2” status (spent five nights a week at home and two at the institution).⁸² The court found that the incarcerated person did enjoy some liberty while in the program.⁸³ However, he had not been fully released from institutional life, and so did not have a liberty interest according to the court.⁸⁴ In a different case, the participant in the pre-parole program lived in his home at all times, and the Supreme Court found that this situation was enough to be considered “released from institutional life altogether.”⁸⁵ Courts also consider any other restrictions that the program puts on your life.⁸⁶

Treatment Facility, 88 F.3d 666, 668 (8th Cir. 1996) (finding the work release program in question “did not provide the sort of substantial freedom that gives rise to a liberty interest” because it “was more analogous to institutional life than it was to probation or parole”); see also Bock v. Gold, 408 F. App’x 461, 463–464 (2d Cir. 2011) (conditional release did not clearly establish liberty interest because of restraints on plaintiff’s ability to be with family and friends); Gonzalez-Fuentes v. Molina, 607 F.3d 864, 887–888, 890 (1st Cir. 2010) (finding conditional release created liberty interest where plaintiffs had to remain at home unless at a job or school and had to wear an electronic tracking device).

79. Weller v. Lawson, 75 F. Supp. 2d 927, 934 (N.D. Ind. 1999) (quoting Harper v. Young, 64 F.3d 563 (10th Cir. 1995) (finding that “the dispositive characteristic that marks the point at which the Due Process Clause itself implies a liberty interest. . . is the fact of release from incarceration.”); see Haley v. Kintock Group, 587 F. App’x 1, 3 (3d Cir. 2014) (unpublished) (finding parolee’s release to halfway home did not create protected liberty interest because “the conditions of parole [] determine the liberty interest”).

80. Edwards v. Lockhart, 908 F.2d 299, 302 (8th Cir. 1990); see also U.S. v. Stephenson, 928 F.2d 728, 732 (6th Cir. 1991) (finding an inherent liberty interest in continued placement in supervised release program allowing convicts to live in society); Young Ah Kim v. Hurston, 182 F.3d 113, 118, (2d Cir. N.Y. 1999) (finding that the defendant had a liberty interest in continued placement in a work release program, the loss of which “imposed a sufficiently serious hardship to require compliance with at least minimal procedural due process,” because the defendant worked, lived at home, and regularly reported to a facility).

81. Roucchio v. Coughlin, 923 F. Supp. 360, 370 (E.D.N.Y. 1996).

82. Roucchio v. Coughlin, 923 F. Supp. 360, 369 (E.D.N.Y. 1996) (acknowledging that the defendant held a full-time job, lived at home with his mother, and reported twice a week to the institution to sleep over and meet with his counselor).

83. Roucchio v. Coughlin, 923 F. Supp. 360, 375 (E.D.N.Y. 1996).

84. Roucchio v. Coughlin, 923 F. Supp. 360, 369 (E.D.N.Y. 1996) (quoting Whitehorn v. Harrelson, 758 F.2d 1416, 1421 (11th Cir. 1985)).

85. Young v. Harper, 520 U.S. 143, 148–149, 137 L. Ed. 2d 270, 278, 117 S. Ct. 1148, 1152 (1997) (finding that pre-parolee’s life was similar to a parolee’s and therefore he had a protected liberty interest in remaining on pre-parole).

86. White v. Steuben County, No. 1:11-CV-019, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 110404, at *25, (N.D. Ind. Sept. 27, 2011) (unpublished); see Haley v. Kintock Group, 587 F. App’x 1, 3–4 (3d Cir. 2014) (unpublished) (noting that parolee had to remain at halfway house unless he received permission to leave, had to stand count several times a day, had curfew, was monitored, and could not see friends and family without visitation privileges); Gonzalez-Fuentes v. Molina, 607 F.3d 864, 887–888 (1st Cir. 2010) (considering restrictions placed on incarcerated people on conditional release, including wearing unremovable electronic tracking anklet and submitting list of restrictions on alcohol and substance abuse).

You do not have a state-created right to be put in a work release program.⁸⁷ However, you might have a state-created interest once you are put in a work release program.⁸⁸ In some states, removal from a work release program is considered an “atypical and significant hardship” under the Conner analysis.⁸⁹ New York is one state that creates this liberty interest.⁹⁰ In New York, the following process must be followed before you can be removed from temporary work release:⁹¹

- (1) Written notice must be given to you of your removal and the alleged violation of the program’s rules or conditions,
- (2) A statement of the actual reason for consideration of your removal from work release,
- (3) A report or summary of the evidence against you,
- (4) An opportunity to be heard and to present evidence,
- (5) Advance notice of a temporary release committee hearing,

87. See Roucchio v. Coughlin, 923 F. Supp. 360, 371 n.3 (E.D.N.Y. 1996) (stating that “a New York prisoner has no state-created liberty interest in the initial determination” about participation in a work release program); see also Greenholtz v. Prisoners of Nebraska Penal and Correctional Complex, 442 U.S. 1, 9, 99 S. Ct. 2100, 2105, 60 L. Ed. 2d 668, 676 (1979) (“There is a crucial distinction between being deprived of a liberty one has. . .and being denied a conditional liberty that one desires.”); Lee v. Governor of the State of N.Y., 87 F.3d 55, 58 (2d Cir. 1996) (holding that since incarcerated people had not previously participated in work release program, new rules rendering him ineligible for such programs did not impose an “atypical and significant hardship[,]” and therefore did not give rise to a liberty interest); Whitehorn v. Harrelson, 758 F.2d 1416, 1422 (11th Cir. 1985) (stating that the determination of initial placement in work release program, and removal of incarcerated person from such program, present different inquiries).

88. See Roucchio v. Coughlin, 923 F. Supp. 360, 368–377 (E.D.N.Y. 1996) (finding that there was no liberty interest under the due process clause, but that there was a state-created liberty interest in work release program); see also Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 486, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2301, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 431 (1995) (finding that the focus should be on the nature of the deprivation and whether the disciplinary action is the “type of atypical, significant deprivation in which a State might conceivably create a liberty interest”); Hamilton v. Peters, 919 F. Supp. 1168, 1172 (N.D. Ill. 1996) (stating that under Conner, courts should “look to the nature of the deprivation suffered by an incarcerated person, not to the language of prison regulations, to determine if a liberty interest exists”).

89. See Roucchio v. Coughlin, 923 F. Supp. 360, 374–375 (E.D.N.Y. 1996) (finding that where an incarcerated person was removed from a work release program after 15 months, the “revocation of [his] conditional freedom” gave rise to a liberty interest, even though there was no liberty interest that was created by the Constitution itself). But see Dominique v. Weld, 73 F.3d 1156, 1160 (1st Cir. 1996) (finding no liberty interest implicated when an prisoner was removed from the work release program in which he participated for almost four years and that although his “return from the quasi-freedom of work release to the regimentation of life within four walls” may have been a significant deprivation, it was not atypical, because his confinement was an “ordinary incident of prison life”); Asquith v. Volunteers of Am., 1 F. Supp. 2d 405, 418 (D.N.J. 1998) (finding that there was no state-created liberty interest in a work release program under Conner because removal is not an atypical hardship, and because the New Jersey law isn’t written in a way that gives an incarcerated person the right not to be removed); Hamilton v. Peters, 919 F. Supp. 1168, 1172 (N.D. Ill. 1996) (finding no liberty interest under Conner when incarcerated person was removed from work release in a disciplinary transfer).

90. Quartararo v. Catterson, 917 F. Supp. 919, 940 (E.D.N.Y. 1996) (affirming the “continued vitality of Tracy v. Salamack in light of Conner”); Friedl v. City of New York, 210 F.3d 79, 84 (2d Cir. 2000) (stating that incarcerated people on work release have a liberty interest in continued participation in such programs, that under Conner, the Due Process Clause protects incarcerated people against “atypical and significant” deprivation of liberty, and that therefore incarcerated people are entitled to procedural due process before they are removed from work release); Tracy v. Salamack, 572 F.2d 393, 396 (2d Cir. 1978) (holding that in the State of New York, an incarcerated person can’t be removed from a work release program without an individualized due process hearing). In Anderson v. Recore, 317 F.3d 194 (2d Cir. 2003), the Second Circuit concluded that the Supreme Court in Conner implicitly affirmed Tracy v. Salamack, 572 F.2d 393 (2d Cir. 1978) by affirming the validity of Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484 (1972) and Meachum v. Fano, 427 U.S. 215, 96 S. Ct. 2532, 49 L. Ed. 2d 451 (1976), because Tracy explicitly rests upon Morrissey and Meachum. But see Duffy v. Selsky, No. 95 CIV 0474 (LBS), 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10069, at *40–41 (S.D.N.Y. Jul. 18, 1996) (unpublished) (holding no liberty interest in admission to the Temporary Release Program).

91. See Anderson v. Recore, 446 F.3d 324, 329 (2d Cir. 2006) (stating that “an inmate’s significant liberty interest in continuing in a temporary release program requires a pre-deprivation hearing that includes protections similar to those set forth in Morrissey”).

- (6) The right to confront and cross-examine witnesses testifying against you,
- (7) A TRC (temporary release committee) composed of neutral decision makers, and
- (8) A post-hearing written account of the actual reason for removal and a summary of the evidence supporting that reason.⁹²
- (9) Additionally, removal from a temporary work release program does not meet due process requirements “unless the findings of the [temporary release committee] are supported by some evidence in the record.”⁹³

You should remember if you have been removed from temporary work release and any of these steps were not followed. You may have a valid claim that you were deprived of your liberty interest in staying in the program without due process if not all of these steps are followed.⁹⁴

5. Parole

The mere opportunity to obtain parole does not necessarily grant you a liberty interest in obtaining parole.⁹⁵ However, you may have a state-created interest even if you don't have a liberty interest. If a state statute creates an “expectation of parole,” then it also creates a liberty interest in getting parole.⁹⁶ This varies from state to state and depends on the language in the statute.⁹⁷ If a parole law uses “mandatory language,” then it might create a liberty interest. For example, if the statute says that the 92. Tracy v. Salamack, 572 F.2d 393, 396–397 (2d Cir. 1978) (defining the circumstances under which removal would be proper after a due process hearing).

93. See Anderson v. Recore, 446 F.3d 324, 328–329 (2d Cir. 2006) (citing Friedl v. City of New York, 210 F.3d 79, 84–85 (2d Cir. 2000) and Young Ah Kim v. Hurston, 182 F.3d 113, 118 (2d Cir. 1999)).

94. Friedl v. City of New York, 210 F.3d 79, 85 (2d Cir. 2000) (quoting Superintendent, Mass. Corr. Inst. v. Hill, 472 U.S. 445, 454, 105 S. Ct. 2768, 2773, 86 L. Ed. 2d 356, 364 (1985)).

95. See Bd. of Pardons v. Allen, 482 U.S. 369, 373, 107 S. Ct. 2415, 2418, 96 L. Ed. 2d 303, 309–310 (1987) (citing Greenholtz v. Prisoners of Neb. Penal and Corr. Complex, 442 U.S. 1, 11, 99 S. Ct. 2100, 2106, 60 L. Ed. 2d 668, 677–678 (1979)) (stating that “the presence of a parole system by itself does not give rise to a constitutionally protected liberty interest in parole release.”); see also Bowser v. Vose, 968 F.2d 105, 106 (1st Cir. 1992) (holding that there is no liberty interest in continuing to participate in furlough).

96. See Bd. of Pardons v. Allen, 482 U.S. 369, 376–378, 107 S. Ct. 2415, 2420–2421, 96 L. Ed. 2d 303, 311–313 (1987) (finding the Montana statute, which includes mandatory language, “creates a liberty interest in parole release”). This remains true even under Conner. See Wilson v. Kelkhoff, 86 F.3d 1438, 1446 n.9 (7th Cir. 1996) (“It appears that the Court [in Conner] intended to leave undisturbed the cases holding that a protectable liberty interest exists in parole statutes that create an ‘expectancy of release.’”); Ellis v. Dist. of Columbia, 84 F.3d 1413, 1417–1418 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (noting that Conner did not overrule Greenholtz v. Prisoners of Neb. Penal and Corr. Complex or Board of Pardons v. Allen, and holding that liberty interest in parole stems from state parole statutes); Robles v. Dennison, 745 F. Supp. 2d 244, 261 (W.D.N.Y. 2010) (“Although there is no constitutional right to parole, a state may create a liberty interest in parole by means of its statutes and regulations governing the parole decision-making process.”).

97. See, e.g., Robles v. Dennison, 745 F. Supp. 2d 244, 263–265, 271–274 (W.D.N.Y. 2010) (analyzing the language of New York's prior parole statute and New York's current parole statute to determine whether a protectable liberty interest remained); Watson v. DiSabato, 933 F. Supp. 390, 394 (D.N.J. 1996) (holding that New Jersey's parole statute creates a sufficient expectation of parole eligibility to give rise to a liberty interest); Watley v. Robertson, No. 10-3726 (SDW), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 116910, at *19 (D.N.J. Oct. 6, 2011) (unpublished) (holding the same); Crump v. Lafler, 657 F.3d 393, 401–404, (6th Cir. 2011) (comparing Michigan's parole statute with the statutes at issue in Allen and Greenholtz to determine whether the Michigan statute creates protectable liberty interest); Haggard v. Curry, 631 F.3d 931, 936 (9th Cir. 2010) (noting that California's parole law creates a protectable liberty interest which encompasses California's requirement that parole decisions be supported by a “some evidence” standard); Thompson v. Veach, 501 F.3d 832, 836–837 (7th Cir. 2007) (stating that the District of Columbia's parole statute does not create a protectable liberty interest); Harper v. Young, 64 F.3d 563, 564–565 (10th Cir. 1995), aff'd, Young v. Harper, 520 U.S. 143, 117 S. Ct. 1148, 137 L. Ed. 2d 270 (1997) (declining to address whether a state-created liberty interest remained in Oklahoma parole revocation proceedings after Conner, but holding that “program participation is sufficiently similar to parole or probation to merit protection by the Due Process Clause itself.”).

parole board “shall” release an incarcerated person on parole “unless” certain conditions aren’t met, the statute creates an expectation of parole. Therefore, the statute creates your liberty interest.⁹⁸

Generally, confinement in administrative or disciplinary segregation that affects your parole opportunities does not create a protected liberty interest under Conner.⁹⁹ Therefore, even if your release date has been postponed because you have spent time in segregation, you still do not have a liberty interest at stake when you are initially charged with a violation.

Once you obtain parole, you do have certain rights if your parole is being revoked.¹⁰⁰ In Morrissey, the Supreme Court outlined the procedural rights that you have before your parole can be revoked.¹⁰¹ When you are first arrested or charged with a violation, you have a right to a preliminary hearing.¹⁰² The purpose of the hearing is to make sure there are facts that support the alleged violation.¹⁰³ This hearing should be conducted near where you were arrested or where the violation took place, and as soon after your arrest or violation as possible.¹⁰⁴ The hearing should be held by someone who is not directly involved in your case.¹⁰⁵ You should receive notification of the preliminary hearing before it takes place, including information about why the hearing is happening and the allegations against

98. See Bd. of Pardons v. Allen, 482 U.S. 369, 377–378, 107 S. Ct. 2415, 96 L. Ed. 2d 303 (1987) (finding that “the Montana statute. . . uses mandatory language (‘shall’) to ‘creat[e] a presumption that parole release will be granted’ when the designated findings are made.” (quoting Greenholtz v. Prisoners of Neb. Penal and Corr. Complex, 442 U.S. 1, 12, 99 S. Ct. 2100, 2106, 60 L. Ed. 2d 668, 678 (1979)); Wilson v. Kelkhoff, 86 F.3d 1438, 1447 n.9 (7th Cir. 1996) (“It appears that the Court intended to leave undisturbed the cases holding that a protectable liberty interest exists in parole statutes that create an ‘expectancy of relief.’”); Crump v. Lafler, 657 F.3d 393, 399 (6th Cir. 2011) (asking whether there is mandatory language “that creates a presumption of release” in the statutes, regulations, or policy statements of prison or parole officials); Moor v. Palmer, 603 F.3d 658, 661–662 (9th Cir. 2010) (stating that a statute creates a protectable liberty interest as long as the statute has mandatory language and limits discretion of parole decision-makers, and that Nevada’s statute does not: “Nevada’s statutory parole scheme, however, expressly disclaims any intent to create a liberty interest. SEE NEV. REV. STAT. § 213.10705 (legislative declaration that “the release or continuation of a person on parole or probation is an act of grace of the State. . . and it is not intended that the establishment of standards relating thereto create any such right or interest in liberty or property. . . .”). The statute does not use mandatory language; instead, it provides that “the Board may release on parole a prisoner who is otherwise eligible for parole” and lists factors to be considered in exercising that discretion. NEV. REV. STAT. § 213.1099(1), (2) (emphasis added). Moor v. Palmer, 603 F.3d 658, 661–662 (9th Cir. 2010)).

99. See Meachum v. Fano, 427 U.S. 215, 229 n.8, 96 S. Ct. 2532, 2540 n.8, 49 L. Ed. 2d 451, 462 n.8 (1976) (noting that a possible effect on a parole decision does not create a liberty interest); Haff v. Cooke, 923 F. Supp. 1104, 1119 (E.D. Wis. 1996) (citing Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 486–487, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2301–2302, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 431–432 (1995)) (noting that a disciplinary violation that may “later affect a parole decision [does] not implicate a liberty interest because a prisoner’s disciplinary record [is] only one of many criteria used to determine parole.”); Newell v. Unknown Borgen, No. 2:14-cv-172, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12171, at *6–7 (W.D. Mich. Feb. 3, 2015) (unpublished) (stating that administrative segregation generally does not implicate a protected liberty interest because it is not an atypical and significant hardship); Labat v. Williams, No. 08-4041 SECTION “N”(4), 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 83260, at *64–69 (E.D. La. Jul. 8, 2010) (unpublished) (finding that an incarcerated person’s placement in segregation that caused delay in pursuing parole opportunities did not violate a liberty interest).

100. See Green v. McCall, 822 F.2d 284, 289–290 (2d Cir. 1987) (stating that even parole grantees who have not yet been paroled have a protectable liberty interest).

101. See Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 485–488, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 2602–2604, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484, 496–498 (1972) (holding that minimum due process requirements for parole revocation include a preliminary hearing to determine probable cause “as promptly as convenient after arrest,” as well as revocation hearing).

102. Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 484, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 2602, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484, 496 (1972).

103. Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 484, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 2602, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484, 496 (1972).

104. Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 485, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 2602, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484, 496 (1972) (noting the need for timeliness and proximity so that “information is fresh and sources are available.”).

105. Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 485–486, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 2602–2603, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484, 497 (1972) (stating that due process requires someone other than the supervising parole officer or caseworker, such as a judicial officer or independent officer appointed by the State).

you.¹⁰⁶ You can present information and question anyone testifying against you at the hearing. After the preliminary hearing, there will be a parole revocation hearing.¹⁰⁷ You have the right to:

- (1) a parole hearing reasonably soon after your arrest;
- (2) receive written notice of the claims against you;
- (3) receive information about the evidence against you;
- (4) speak at your hearing and present witnesses and evidence;
- (5) question witnesses testifying against you (unless the hearing officer specifically finds that there is good cause (a good reason) for not allowing this);
- (6) a “neutral and detached” hearing body, such as a traditional parole board; and
- (7) a written statement by the fact finders explaining the evidence against you and the reasons for revoking parole.¹⁰⁸

You may have a claim if you are a parolee and there is a violation of any of the seven rights or procedures listed above. You may also have a claim if you are an incarcerated person granted parole but not yet on parole. Depending on your state’s parole statute, you may also have a liberty interest in obtaining parole.

D. Incarcerated Person’s Basic Rights in Disciplinary Procedures

In Wolff v. McDonnell,¹⁰⁹ the Supreme Court described how prison disciplinary procedures should be conducted in order to comply with constitutional Due Process requirements. If you have been placed in administrative segregation, this Part may not apply to you. Go to Part F of this chapter to learn more about your rights if you have been placed in administrative segregation. This Part applies if you have been deprived of a recognized liberty interest, such as a loss of good-time credits or something else very severe. This Part explains the Wolff due process rights you can use to defend yourself at your disciplinary proceeding or to challenge your punishment on appeal in court.¹¹⁰ First, you need to establish that a disciplinary action was an atypical and significant hardship affecting a protected liberty interest. In other words, the court needs to find that you have due process rights. Then, the court asks “whether the deprivation of that liberty interest occurred without due process of law,”¹¹¹ or whether the required processes were followed by the institution. If your punishment isn’t severe enough to give you a due process right, you may have other options. Your prison regulations may state that certain disciplinary procedures must be followed. Prison officials must follow their own rules.¹¹² So, even if you can’t fight the outcome in federal court, you may still be able to file an administrative appeal within the prison system. Either way, you will have a better chance at success if you know what

106. Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 486–487, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 2603, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484, 497–498 (1972).

107. Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 485–488, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 2602–2604, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484, 496–499 (1972).

108. Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 488–489, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 2603–2604, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484, 498–499 (1972).

109. See Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1974).

110. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 557, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2975, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 951 (1974) (finding that once the State created the right to good-time credits and recognized that taking away good-time credits can only be done based on major misconduct, the incarcerated person’s interest in good-time credits “has real substance and is sufficiently embraced within Fourteenth Amendment ‘liberty’ to entitle him to those minimum procedures appropriate under the circumstances and required by the Due Process Clause to insure that the state-created right is not arbitrarily abrogated.”).

111. Sealey v. Giltner, 116 F.3d 47, 51–52 (2d Cir. 1997) (quoting Bedoya v. Coughlin, 91 F.3d 349, 351–352 (2d Cir. 1996)) (finding that the plaintiff must be given opportunity to develop facts relevant to establishing a liberty interest because the plaintiff had no notice that the lower court intended to consider dismissal of his complaint based on the absence of a liberty interest).

112. See Uzzell v. Scully, 893 F. Supp. 259, 263 n.10 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (finding that though an incarcerated person’s treatment did not amount to a deprivation of his right to due process, the incarcerated person remained free to raise a claim of procedural error on the ground that the State failed to adhere to its own rule requiring an incarcerated person to be given 24-hour notice of charges filed against him that resulted in his administrative segregation).

procedures the officials in your prison must follow. That way, you can take advantage of the procedures at your disciplinary hearing.

1. The Prison Must Publish Rules Governing Your Conduct

You have a basic right not to be punished for an act that your prison rules do not prohibit (unless you break the law). For example, in Richardson v. Coughlin,¹¹³ prison officials disciplined an incarcerated person for circulating a petition without permission. The incarcerated person won the case because the prison rules didn't require incarcerated people to get permission before handing out petitions.¹¹⁴ Therefore, it was unfair to punish the incarcerated person for an activity that he reasonably believed the prison allowed. The Supreme Court described this principle of fairness in Grayned v. City of Rockford,¹¹⁵ stating that "because we assume that [a] man is free to steer between lawful and unlawful conduct, we insist that laws give the person of ordinary intelligence a reasonable opportunity to know what is prohibited, so that he may act accordingly."¹¹⁶ In other words, you need to be given a fair chance to follow the rules and should only be punished for breaking those rules or for breaking the law.

You also have a right not to be punished based on a vague (unclear) regulation.¹¹⁷ For example, a federal court in Ohio struck down as unconstitutionally vague a regulation that prohibited "objectionable" conduct between an incarcerated person and his visitor.¹¹⁸ The word "objectionable" was considered vague because it can mean different things to different people. A regulation can also be found vague when applied to your particular case. In Rios v. Lane,¹¹⁹ the court found a regulation prohibiting "engaging or pressuring others to engage in gang activities" unconstitutionally vague when 113. Richardson v. Coughlin, 763 F. Supp. 1228 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) (holding that because an incarcerated person's punishment was based on the violation of a non-existent rule, prison officials deprived him of due process of law).

114. Richardson v. Coughlin, 763 F. Supp. 1228, 1235 (S.D.N.Y. 1991). For more examples, see Wallace v. Nash, 311 F.3d 140, 143–145 (2d Cir. 2002) (finding that an incarcerated person had a valid claim that he was improperly disciplined because the cited prohibition was for possession of a weapon and he was punished for use of a pool cue as a weapon); Coffman v. Trickey, 884 F.2d 1057, 1060–1061 (8th Cir. 1989) (finding an incarcerated person's due process rights were violated where he was punished for an unspecified prison rule); Hayes v. Fla. Dept. of Children & Families, No. 4:10cv541-MP/CAS, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 95698, at *13–15 (N.D. Fla. May 11, 2012) (unpublished) (citing authority holding that incarcerated people must have notice of prison rules before being punished for violating those rules).

115. Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 121, 92 S. Ct. 2294, 2306, 33 L. Ed. 2d 222, 235 (1972) (holding that an anti-noise ordinance was not unconstitutionally vague or overbroad).

116. Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 108, 92 S. Ct. 2294, 2298–2299, 33 L. Ed. 2d 222, 227 (1972) (concluding that an anti-noise ordinance was not impermissibly vague because it was written specifically for its context, enabling the impact of prohibited disturbances to be easily measured; however, an anti-picketing ordinance was found unconstitutional on equal protection grounds).

117. See Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 108–109, 92 S. Ct. 2294, 2298–2299, 33 L. Ed. 2d 222, 227–228 (1972) (stating that a regulation is void for vagueness if it is not clear what it prohibits. That vagueness is a violation of due process).

118. See Taylor v. Perini, 413 F. Supp. 189, 233–234 (N.D. Ohio 1976) (finding that a rule barring a visitor from further visits due to "objectionable" conduct between the incarcerated person and the visitor was too vague to justify such severe sanctions); see also Jenkins v. Werger, 564 F. Supp. 806, 807 (D. Wyo. 1983) (invalidating a rule against "unruly or disorderly" conduct for vagueness); Laaman v. Helgemoe, 437 F. Supp. 269, 321–322 (D.N.H. 1977) (invalidating a prison rule forbidding "poor conduct" for vagueness, because it didn't inform incarcerated people of what conduct was prohibited). But see El-Amin v. Tirey, 817 F. Supp. 694, 701–703 (W.D. Tenn. 1993) (holding that while due process requires certain minimum standards of specificity in prison regulations, it does not require the same degree of specificity that is required in criminal laws or in statutes that apply outside of prison), aff'd, El-Amin v. Tirey, 35 F.3d 565 (6th Cir. 1994) (unpublished).

119. Rios v. Lane, 812 F.2d 1032, 1037–1039 (7th Cir. 1987); see also Adams v. Gunnell, 729 F.2d 362, 368–370 (5th Cir. 1984) (finding a regulation that prohibited "conduct which disrupts the orderly running of the institution" was unconstitutionally vague when used to punish an incarcerated person for writing and circulating a petition).

it was applied to an incarcerated person who allegedly shared information about Spanish-language political radio stations. In other words, a regulation that is clear when you read it may be considered vague in your particular situation if it is used to punish you for an activity that is typically considered lawful.

No matter what, you are presumed (assumed) to have knowledge of the penal law (criminal statutes). Therefore, you cannot claim that your rights have been violated just because you aren't given copies of your state's penal law.¹²⁰ As one court stated, "the law presumes that everyone knows the law, and ignorance of the law is not an excuse for its violation."¹²¹ You are also presumed to know statewide prison rules of misbehavior if you have previously served time in another prison in New York and were provided with a copy of the statewide rules at that time.¹²²

Unlike the presumption of knowledge about the penal law, you must be given an opportunity to learn the rules of your prison. Although you cannot be punished for violating a prison regulation that is temporarily posted on a bulletin board,¹²³ you can be punished if the regulation is posted permanently.¹²⁴ New York law requires that you be given a personal copy of the prison rules.¹²⁵ Some prisons also require you to affirm in writing that you received the prison disciplinary handbook.¹²⁶ All regulations must be printed in both English and Spanish,¹²⁷ and the possible punishments for each type of violation must be clearly noted.¹²⁸

If you do not have a copy of your prison's regulations, ask prison officials to give you one. If you do not understand English, or if you read Spanish better than English, ask for a copy of the regulations in Spanish.¹²⁹ If you are brought before a prison disciplinary board, remember that you usually cannot be punished for violating a rule that is not published in the prison regulations. You also can't be punished if you have not been given a copy of the regulations at some point.

120. See McFadden v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2298 (2015) (holding that in a drug prosecution, "The knowledge requirement may also be met by showing that the defendant knew the identity of the substance he possessed. Take, for example, a defendant who knows he is distributing heroin but does not know that heroin is listed on the schedules, 21 C.F.R. §1308.11 (2014). Because ignorance of the law is typically no defense to criminal prosecution . . . this defendant would also be guilty of knowingly distributing 'a controlled substance' (internal citations omitted)." McFadden v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 2298, 2304, 192 L.Ed.2d 260, 269 (2015). See also Bryan v. United States, 524 U.S. 184 (1998) (holding that except for a limited number of exceptionally complex statutes, a statute's willfulness requirement "does not carve out an exception to the traditional rule that ignorance of the law is no excuse; knowledge that the conduct is unlawful is all that is required." Bryan v. United States, 524 U.S. 184, 196, 118 S. Ct. 1939, 1947, 141 L.Ed.2d 197, 208 (1998)).

121. McRae v. State, 157 S.E.2d 646, 648, 116 Ga. App. 407, 410 (Ga. Ct. App. 1967).

122. See Johnson v. Coughlin, 205 A.D.2d 537, 539, 613 N.Y.S.2d 192, 193 (2d Dept. 1994) (holding that an incarcerated person's due process rights were not violated by officials' failure to provide him with a "inmate rule book" in a timely manner where the individual had previously been incarcerated and received various manuals governing conduct of people incarcerated at another facility).

123. See Taylor v. Perini, 413 F. Supp. 189, 235 (N.D. Ohio 1976) (finding that an "inmate manual" did not adequately inform incarcerated people of prohibited conduct since the temporary posting of regulations on a bulletin board did not constitute fair notice).

124. See Forbes v. Trigg, 976 F.2d 308, 314–315 (7th Cir. 1992) (finding that an incarcerated person had fair notice of a prison rule requiring urine tests since the posting of the rule was not temporary).

125. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 138(2) (McKinney 2014).

126. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7002.9(d) (1989).

127. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 138(1) (McKinney 2014); see also Burgos v. Kuhlmann, 137 Misc. 2d 1039, 1040–1041, 523 N.Y.S.2d 367, 368 (Sup. Ct. Sullivan County 1987) (holding that disciplinary charges must be dismissed and the incarcerated person's record cleared on the ground that the Spanish-speaking incarcerated person did not have meaningful notice of prison rules where he was only provided with the English version of the rules).

128. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 138(3) (McKinney 2014).

129. If you are incarcerated outside New York, the prison may not be required to provide you with a copy of the prison regulations. Copies may also be available in Spanish. Research the rules and regulations of your state to see if this is the case where you are incarcerated. See Chapter 2 of the JLM, "Introduction to Legal Research," for information on conducting legal research.

2. Written Notice Requirement

Under Wolff v. McDonnell, the Supreme Court held that you have the right to receive notice of (know about) the charges against you at least twenty-four hours before your disciplinary hearing is scheduled to begin.¹³⁰ An oral (spoken) explanation of the charges is not enough.¹³¹ The charges must be in writing, and they must be clear enough to allow you to prepare your defense.¹³² One court has found that an incarcerated person was denied due process because, although he was given notice of his charges twenty-four hours in advance, he was only allowed to review the actual written charges five hours before his hearing.¹³³ With only five hours to study the twelve charges against him, the incarcerated person had to rely mainly on his memory to gather evidence and prepare his defense. This put him at a huge disadvantage.¹³⁴ The purpose of the twenty-four-hour notice requirement is to give you a fair chance to prepare your defense by informing you of the specific nature of the charges.¹³⁵

New York law gives you even more rights than you have under Wolff. In New York, you still have the right to receive written notice of your charges at least twenty-four hours before the hearing.¹³⁶ Unlike Wolff, which does not require that the notice include any particular information,¹³⁷ New York law says that the notice has to contain the date, time, place, and nature of the charge (including information about what you did and what rule you violated).¹³⁸ If more than one incarcerated person was involved in the incident, the specific role played by each incarcerated person must be included.¹³⁹

130. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 564, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2979, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 956 (1974).

131. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 564, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2979, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 955–956 (1974).

132. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 564, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2979, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 955–956 (1974); see also Spellmon-Bey v. Lynaugh, 778 F. Supp. 338, 341–342 (E.D. Tex. 1991) (holding that notice was inadequate where the charged was given in writing, but the specific acts that gave rise to the charge were unclear and consequently it was impossible to prepare an adequate defense as he did not know what conduct gave rise to the charge).

133. See Benitez v. Wolff, 985 F.2d 662, 665 (2d Cir. 1993) (“Although Wolff v. McDonnell did not state expressly that the inmate must be allowed to retain for 24 hours the written notice given him, we think this requirement is fairly inferred from the requirements that there be advance notice, that it be in writing, and that it be given to the inmate at least 24 hours in advance.”).

134. Benitez v. Wolff, 985 F.2d 662, 665 (2d Cir. 1993).

135. See Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 564, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2978, 41 L. Ed. 2d 955, 955 (1974) (holding that advance written notice “of the charges against him” is required by due process but failing to state what content or details or required for notice to satisfy due process and that “[p]art of the function of notice is to give the charged party a chance to marshal the facts in his defense and to clarify what the charges are, in fact.”); see also McKinnon v. Patterson, 568 F.2d 930, 940 n.11 (2d Cir. 1977), cert. denied, Patterson v. McKinnon, 434 U.S. 1087, 98 S.Ct. 1282, 55 L.Ed.2d 792 (1978) (explaining that the notice requirement requires “inform[ing] the inmate of what he allegedly has done so that he can prepare a defense, if he chooses, to the specific charges set forth, based on whatever evidence he can muster, given the limited time available and the lack of an opportunity to interview or call witnesses.”); Hameed v. Mann, 849 F. Supp. 169, 172 (N.D.N.Y. 1994) (holding that notice received by an incarcerated person prior to disciplinary hearing was sufficient, but acknowledging that “a notice lacking the required specifics which fail to apprise the accused party of the charges brought against him must be found to be unconstitutional because then, the accused party cannot adequately prepare a defense”).

136. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.6(a) (2017).

137. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 563–565, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2978–2979, 41 L. Ed. 2d 955, 956 (1974) (holding that advance written notice “of the charges against him” is required by due process, but failing to state what content or details are required for said notice to satisfy due process). Some federal courts have created certain minimum standards. For example, in Spellmon-Bey v. Lynaugh, the court held that notice must contain at least a description of the specific acts upon which the charges are based, as well as the times that these acts allegedly occurred, unless it is an exceptional situation where the threat to prison security interests outweighs the incarcerated person’s interests. Spellmon-Bey v. Lynaugh, 778 F. Supp. 338, 342–343 (E.D. Tex. 1991).

138. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251–3.1(c) (2017).

139. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251–3.1(c) (2017); see also Howard v. Coughlin, 190 A.D.2d 1090, 1090, 593 N.Y.S.2d 707, 708–709 (4th Dept. 1993) (finding notice insufficient when it provided the wrong date for when the alleged misconduct occurred); McCleary v. LeFevre, 98 A.D.2d 866, 868, 470 N.Y.S.2d 841, 843–844 (3d Dept. 1983) (finding notice was insufficient when it failed to inform incarcerated people of facts upon which charges were based). But see Vogelsang v. Coombe, 105 A.D.2d 913, 914, 482 N.Y.S.2d 348, 350 (3d Dept. 1984),

If you do not speak English, you have the right to translations of the notice of the charges and statements of evidence.¹⁴⁰ You are also entitled to have a translator present at your disciplinary hearing.¹⁴¹ If you are deaf or hard of hearing, you have similar rights.¹⁴²

Prison staff should bring you a copy of the written charges or “ticket.” Since you may not know exactly when the proceedings will be held, you should start preparing your defense right away. This process is outlined below.

3. “Substitute Counsel” (Employee Assistant)

In Baxter v. Palmigiano, the Supreme Court held that incarcerated people do not have a right to counsel at disciplinary proceedings.¹⁴³ The Wolff Court did, however, recognize two circumstances in which you are entitled to (have a right to have) a “counsel-substitute.” Your “counsel-substitute” can either be a prison employee (“employee assistant”) or a fellow incarcerated person who assists you in the preparation of your case. You are entitled (have the right) to a counsel-substitute if you are illiterate (have difficulty reading and writing)¹⁴⁴ or if your case is really complicated, although the Court did not define what “complicated” means.¹⁴⁵ Therefore, it is unclear how complicated the facts involved must be before you can demand help from an employee assistant. If you face some clear personal barrier to preparing your defense (for example: illiteracy, language, mental illness, or restrictive confinement), you should tell prison officials about it. These barriers will make your claim for assistance stronger.

When you receive notice of the charges against you, you will be given a list of employees who serve as employee assistants.¹⁴⁶ You are entitled to choose an employee assistant from the list, but you might not get your first choice. If you are given someone whom you do not want as an employee assistant, tell that person that you object to (or disagree with) the assignment. If you are still not happy with your employee assistant at the time of your hearing, tell the hearing officer that you object. It is important to realize that if you do not pick an employee assistant from the available list, you may waive (give up) the right to any assistance.¹⁴⁷

The New York law is broader than the Wolff standard. New York regulations specifically guarantee an employee assistant for certain incarcerated people, including:

- (1) Non-English-speaking incarcerated people;
- (2) Illiterate incarcerated people;

aff’d, Vogelsang v. Coombe, 66 N.Y.2d 835, 489 N.E.2d 251, 489 N.Y.S.2d 364 (1985) (holding notice to be sufficient where the written notice referred to the disciplinary problem in question as the “incident” but also contained references to a “readily identifiable” event: a four-day riot, rules violations, and incarcerated person’s offensive conduct).

140. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.2 (2017); see also Reyes v. Henderson, 121 Misc. 2d 970, 971–972, 469 N.Y.S.2d 520, 521 (Sup. Ct. Albany County 1983) (holding that a Spanish-speaking incarcerated person was denied procedural due process where he was given notice of the charges against him in English only).

141. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.2 (2017).

142. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.2 (2017).

143. See Baxter v. Palmigiano, 425 U.S. 308, 315, 96 S. Ct. 1551, 1556–1567, 47 L. Ed. 2d 810, 819–820 (1976) (“We see no reason to alter our conclusion so recently made in Wolff that inmates do not have a right to either retained or appointed counsel in disciplinary hearings.”) (internal citations omitted).

144. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 570, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2982, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 959 (1974).

145. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 570, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2982, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 959 (1974) (stating that all incarcerated people should be provided with assistance when “the complexity of the issue makes it unlikely that the [incarcerated person] will be able to collect and present the evidence necessary for an adequate comprehension of the case”).

146. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251-4.1(a) (2017); see also Jones v. Coughlin, 112 Misc. 2d 232, 234, 446 N.Y.S.2d 849, 850–851 (Sup. Ct. Albany County 1982) (finding that an incarcerated person’s due process rights were violated when prison designated employee assistant other than one incarcerated person had selected, despite incarcerated person’s oral and written objections).

147. See Walker v. Coughlin, 202 A.D.2d 1034, 1034, 609 N.Y.S.2d 471, 471 (4th Dept. 1994) (holding that incarcerated person waived his right to employee assistant by refusing to sign employee assistant selection form).

- (3) Incarcerated people who are deaf or hard of hearing (who may be provided with sign language interpreters);
- (4) Incarcerated people who are charged with drug use as a result of urinalysis tests; and
- (5) Incarcerated people confined to a special housing unit (SHU) while waiting for a superintendent's hearing.¹⁴⁸

In the case of non-English speaking incarcerated people, a court held that an incarcerated person who spoke only Spanish had the right to meet with a Spanish-speaking assistant at least twenty-four hours before his disciplinary hearing.¹⁴⁹ In the case of segregated incarcerated people, a court ruled that an incarcerated person who cannot adequately prepare his defense because of his segregation or transfer has a due process right to assistance.¹⁵⁰ In these situations, correction officers must perform the investigatory tasks that the incarcerated person would perform if he was able to do it himself.¹⁵¹ However, be aware that assistants are only required to answer questions you specifically ask, and to perform tasks you specifically request.¹⁵² Finally, if you are entitled to an assistant, New York law says that your hearing can take place twenty-four hours after your first meeting with that assistant.¹⁵³

The employee assistant should help you prepare for your hearing by explaining the charges to you, interviewing witnesses, and helping you obtain documentary evidence or written statements.¹⁵⁴ However, do not expect the employee assistant to do anything that you do not specifically ask him or her to do.¹⁵⁵ You must ask for assistance. If you do not actively make a request, you waive or lose your right to assistance. For example, in Newman v. Coughlin, the incarcerated person made a general request for assistance from the law library staff, but did not specifically request that the employee assistant help him prepare his case.¹⁵⁶ As a result, the incarcerated person was responsible for his own lack of representation.

The assistant does not need to act as your advocate in the way a lawyer would, or even be present at your hearing.¹⁵⁷ However, due process does require that your assigned assistant act as your surrogate and carry out basic and reasonable requests in good faith.¹⁵⁸ For example, one court held

148. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251-4.1(a) (2017).

149. Rivera v. Smith, 110 A.D.2d 1043, 1043-1044, 489 N.Y.S.2d 131, 131 (4th Dept. 1985). But see Valles v. Smith, 116 A.D.2d 1002, 1002-1003, 498 N.Y.S.2d 623, 624 (4th Dept. 1986), rev'd on other grounds sub nom. Davidson v. Smith, 69 N.Y.2d 677, 504 N.E.2d 380, 512 N.Y.S.2d 13 (1986) (finding that a Spanish-speaking incarcerated person was not entitled to have employee assistant translate for him at disciplinary proceeding because translation assistance from a Spanish-speaking incarcerated person was enough).

150. See Eng v. Coughlin, 858 F.2d 889, 891 (2d Cir. 1988) (holding that an incarcerated person segregated from the general prison population has a due process right of assistance in preparing a defense).

151. See Eng v. Coughlin, 858 F.2d 889, 898 (2d Cir. 1988) (describing the role of the employee assistant as corresponding to "those actions that an inmate facing disciplinary charges can undertake himself" when not separated from others).

152. See Serrano v. Coughlin, 152 A.D.2d 790, 792-793, 543 N.Y.S.2d 571, 573 (3d Dept. 1989) (holding that incarcerated person was not denied meaningful employee assistance when he did not specify the documents he wanted produced).

153. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.6(a) (2017).

154. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251-4.2 (2017).

155. See Horne v. Coughlin, 155 F.3d 26, 29, 31 (2d Cir. 1998), amended by Horne v. Coughlin, 191 F.3d 244 (2d Cir. 1999). In Horne, an incarcerated person with an intellectual disability was sentenced to six months in the SHU and six months recommended loss of good time. The incarcerated person argued that his employee assistant should not have merely followed his instructions but should also have developed a defense strategy. The court disagreed, saying that the assistant was not required to do anything besides follow the specific instructions of the incarcerated person, because a counsel substitute acts as a surrogate for the incarcerated person, not as an attorney.

156. Newman v. Coughlin, 110 A.D.2d 981, 981, 488 N.Y.S.2d 273, 274 (3d Dept. 1985).

157. See Gunn v. Ward, 71 A.D.2d 856, 856, 419 N.Y.S.2d 182, 183 (2d Dept. 1979), affirmed, Gunn v. Ward, 52 N.Y.2d 1017, 420 N.E.2d 100, 438 N.Y.S.2d 302 (1981) (holding failure of employee assistant to appear at superintendent's proceeding violates neither New York law nor a incarcerated person's right to due process).

158. See Silva v. Casey, 992 F.2d 20, 22 (2d Cir. 1993) (discussing the duties of employee assistants and that an employee assistant's refusal to collect necessary and available evidence violated the incarcerated person's due process rights.¹⁵⁹ Another court held that an employee assistant, who did not report back to the incarcerated person with the results of his investigation and witness interviews, deprived the incarcerated person of his right to defend himself.¹⁶⁰

You may or may not want to give your employee assistant "your side of the story." The advantage is that it might help the employee assistant find good witnesses, as described in the next Section. However, one disadvantage is that if the story you tell your employee assistant is different from the testimony you give at your hearing, it may make you look untruthful and give prison officials an excuse to discredit your testimony.

4. Witnesses

In Wolff v. McDonnell, the Supreme Court stated the limits of your constitutional right to call witnesses during disciplinary hearings.¹⁶¹ The Court pointed out that an incarcerated person in a disciplinary proceeding "should be allowed to call witnesses and present documentary evidence in his defense when permitting him to do so will not be unduly hazardous to institutional safety or correctional goals."¹⁶² In other words, you can call witnesses unless prison officials decide that allowing you to do so would have a bad impact on the safety of the prison or their ability to operate the prison. Prison officials do not have to allow every witness you ask for to testify at your disciplinary hearing; they can decide whether a potential witness can testify or not.¹⁶³ This generally means that the official can choose not to call witnesses whose testimony they believe would not be important (immaterial)¹⁶⁴ or repetitive and unnecessary (unduly redundant).¹⁶⁵

An incarcerated person's right to call witnesses (to have them testify) at disciplinary hearings was made clear in a 1980 court case, Powell v. Ward (also known as Powell II).¹⁶⁶ Before that case, a prison rule had said that witnesses could not be present to testify at a disciplinary hearing. In the Powell case, the court said that "witnesses must be allowed to be present at disciplinary proceedings, unless the appropriate officials determine that [their presence] would jeopardize institutional safety or holding that assistant had no obligation to go beyond bounds of incarcerated person's specific instructions in interviewing incarcerated people and gathering evidence). See also Kelemen v. Coughlin, 100 A.D.2d 732, 732–733, 473 N.Y.S.2d 618, 619 (4th Dept. 1984) (finding that assistant's failure to investigate incarcerated person's reasonable factual claim violates due process); Hilton v. Dalsheim, 81 A.D.2d 887, 887–888, 439 N.Y.S.2d 157, 158 (2d. Dept. 1981) (finding that assistant's failure to interview witnesses as requested by incarcerated person violates the incarcerated person's rights under New York law).

159. See Giano v. Sullivan, 709 F. Supp. 1209, 1215 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) (holding that the incarcerated person was denied his constitutional right to assistance in a disciplinary hearing when the employee assistant refused to obtain documentary evidence for the incarcerated person, and the hearing officer then proceeded with the hearing despite the incarcerated person's protest that he was not prepared).

160. See Brooks v. Scully, 132 Misc. 2d 517, 519, 504 N.Y.S.2d 387, 389 (Sup. Ct. Dutchess County 1986) (holding that the failure of the employee assistant to inform the incarcerated person of investigation results and interviews with witnesses deprived the incarcerated person of meaningful and effective assistance in preparation for a disciplinary hearing).

161. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 566–567, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2979–2980, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 956–957 (1974).

162. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 566, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2979, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 956 (1974).

163. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 566, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2980, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 956–957 (1974) (A prison official may exercise his "discretion to keep the hearing within reasonable limits").

164. See Dawkins v. Gonyea, 646 F.Supp.2d 594, 611 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) (finding hearing officers are not required to call witnesses whose testimony is not necessary) (quoting Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 566, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2980, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 956–597 (1974)).

165. See Russell v. Selsky, 35 F.3d 55, 59 (2d Cir. 1994) (finding that disciplinary hearing officer did not violate any of the incarcerated person's rights in excluding certain witness testimony as "cumulative" (redundant), where the officer had already heard substantially identical testimony from earlier witnesses).

166. Powell v. Ward, 487 F. Supp. 917 (S.D.N.Y. 1980), affirmed and modified, Powell v. Ward, 643 F.2d 924 (2d Cir. 1981).

correctional goals.”¹⁶⁷ This means that witnesses have to be allowed at disciplinary hearings unless officials decide there is a safety concern or a concern that prison goals would be harmed because of a witness being present. If a witness is not going to be allowed at a disciplinary hearing, you must be told the reason why they will not be allowed to appear.¹⁶⁸ If the court decides that a witness will not be allowed, that witness may be interviewed and tape-recorded without you being there for the interview.¹⁶⁹ The tape or a transcript of the interview must be available for you to have before the hearing or at the hearing, unless the hearing officer decides that the same concerns exist that there would be if the witness appeared.¹⁷⁰

Under New York rules, when you receive a notice before your disciplinary hearing, it has to tell you that you have the right to call witnesses.¹⁷¹ If you want to request a witness you should tell your employee assistant or hearing officer before the hearing or during the hearing.¹⁷² You have the right to ask your employee assistant to interview your witnesses while your claim is being investigated.¹⁷³ If you are not present during the interview, you have the right to get a tape or transcript of the interview.¹⁷⁴ If you are not given a tape or transcript, you have the right to be told before the hearing why it was denied.¹⁷⁵

If you are an incarcerated person in New York State and you are not allowed to call a witness for a disciplinary hearing, you should receive a written statement from the hearing officer that explains why.¹⁷⁶ This statement should tell you the specific reason, which is either a safety concern or a concern that prison goals could be harmed.¹⁷⁷ Courts have said that simply telling you that, “[it] does not meet with Security Procedure or Correctional goals for you to be present during those interviews” is not a proper explanation.¹⁷⁸ But it might be unclear what counts as a proper explanation. You could be told that a witness’ testimony is “redundant” (meaning it repeats evidence available from other sources).¹⁷⁹ On one hand, there are limits that stop a prison official from saying that all witness testimony is

167. Powell v. Ward, 487 F. Supp. 917, 929 (S.D.N.Y. 1980).

168. Powell v. Ward, 487 F. Supp. 917, 929 (S.D.N.Y. 1980). But see Ponte v. Real, 471 U.S. 491, 492, 105 S. Ct. 2192, 2193–2194, 85 L. Ed. 2d 553, 556 (1985) (stating that although due process requires that prison officials state their reasons for refusing to call witnesses, such reasons do not have to be in writing or made part of the administrative record).

169. Powell v. Ward, 487 F. Supp. 917, 929 (S.D.N.Y. 1980).

170. Powell v. Ward, 487 F. Supp. 917, 929 (S.D.N.Y. 1980).

171. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251-3.1(d)(2) (2017).

172. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.5(c) (2017); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.5(c) (2017).

173. See Burke v. Coughlin, 97 A.D.2d 862, 863, 469 N.Y.S.2d 240, 242 (3d Dept. 1983) (stating that New York State regulations give incarcerated people the right to have a chosen employee interview any witnesses requested in investigating the incarcerated person’s reasonable factual claims and submit a written report including witness statements).

174. See Burke v. Coughlin, 97 A.D.2d 862, 863, 469 N.Y.S.2d 240, 242 (3d Dept. 1983).

175. See Burke v. Coughlin, 97 A.D.2d 862, 863, 469 N.Y.S.2d 240, 242 (3d Dept. 1983) (stating that the constitutional right of due process requires an incarcerated person to either be present when a witness is interviewed, to be provided a tape or transcript of the interview, or to be given an explanation of the denial).

176. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.5(a) (2017), N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.5(a) (2017); see Moye v. Selsky, 826 F. Supp. 712, 716–717 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) (explaining that prison officials may have to give incarcerated people an explanation for exclusion of witnesses from disciplinary hearing).

177. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. Tit. 7, § 253.5(a) (2017), N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.5(a) (2017); see Moye v. Selsky, 826 F. Supp. 712, 716–717 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) (explaining that prison officials may have to give incarcerated people an explanation for exclusion of witnesses from disciplinary hearing).

178. See People ex rel. Selcov v. Coughlin, 98 A.D.2d 733, 735, 469 N.Y.S.2d 148, 151 (2d Dept. 1983) (internal quotations omitted) (holding that without evidence that incarcerated person’s presence would create any threat to prison security or correctional goals, incarcerated person’s due process rights were violated when hearing officer did not allow incarcerated person to be present when officer interviewed witnesses).

179. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.5(a) (2017), N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. Tit. 7, § 254.5(a) (2017).

repetitive.¹⁸⁰ But on the other hand, courts do not require the explanations why testimony is redundant to be very detailed. Instead, the court “must accord due deference to the decision of the [prison] administrator.”¹⁸¹ This means that the court must take the prison administrator’s decision seriously. The court will still uphold the refusal to allow a witness even if the witness could have provided testimony that is helpful to you.¹⁸² If the reason prison officials are denying your witness is for security concerns, courts will tend to find that acceptable.¹⁸³

5. Confronting and Cross-Examining Witnesses

You generally have the right to call witnesses whose testimony is beneficial to you. However, the Supreme Court has stated that you do not have a constitutional right to confront and cross-examine the other side’s witnesses. This means that you might not be able to ask them questions. The Supreme Court explained that the right to ask questions of the other side’s witnesses would create “considerable potential for havoc [or problems] inside prison walls.”¹⁸⁴ The Supreme Court was worried that that confronting and cross-examining the other side’s witnesses could lead to a security concern inside prison. One court suggested that this security concern could be retaliation (trying to get revenge) against adverse witnesses (witnesses against you) and informants (people testifying unfavorably or against you).¹⁸⁵ The same court also suggested that confronting and cross-examining opposing witnesses could be a cause for “potential for breakdown in authority.”¹⁸⁶ Because of the importance of keeping the prison safe, the courts tell us that your right to confront and cross-examine opposing witnesses is not as strong as your right to call your own witnesses. The decision of whether or not to 180. See Fox v. Coughlin, 893 F.2d 475, 477–478 (2d Cir. 1990) (holding that officials did not deprive an incarcerated person of clearly established statutory or constitutional rights where they called only some of the witnesses he requested, but emphasizing that, failing to provide an incarcerated person assistance in interviewing requested witnesses without a valid reason may in the future provide a sufficient basis for a viable Section 1983 action); Wong v. Coughlin, 137 A.D.2d 272, 273–274, 529 N.Y.S.2d 45, 46 (3d Dept. 1988) (removing disciplinary violation from incarcerated person’s record where hearing officer’s basis for refusing to allow officer who had prepared misbehavior report to testify was based only on guessing or predicting that his testimony would be redundant); Fox v. Dalsheim, 112 A.D.2d 368, 369, 491 N.Y.S.2d 820, 821 (2d Dept. 1985) (holding that hearing officer abused his discretion when he refused to call two witnesses requested by an incarcerated person due to “redundancy of the testimony” based on prediction that the two witnesses’ testimony would only repeat what was in misbehavior report. The court said that “[a]lthough the revised superintendent’s hearing rules and regulations. . . permit exclusion of a witness’s testimony when it is redundant or immaterial, this provision does not afford the hearing officer the unlimited right to exclude testimony relevant to an inmate’s defense.”).

181. Zamakshari v. Dvoskin, 899 F. Supp. 1097, 1107 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (internal quotations omitted) (“The Supreme Court and the Second Circuit have repeatedly concluded that in determining whether a prison disciplinary committee properly excluded a witness from a hearing, a reviewing court must accord due deference to the decision of the [prison] administrator.”).

182. Zamakshari v. Dvoskin, 899 F. Supp. 1097, 1107 (S.D.N.Y. 1995).

183. See, e.g., Laureano v. Kuhlmann, 75 N.Y.2d 141, 146, 550 N.E.2d 437, 439–440, 551 N.Y.S.2d 184, 186–187 (1990) (upholding denial of right to call witness where hearing officer informed incarcerated person that victim of assault feared retaliation and officer showed incarcerated person form where witness indicated desire not to testify); Cortez v. Coughlin, 67 N.Y.2d 907, 909, 492 N.E.2d 1225, 1225, 501 N.Y.S.2d 809, 809 (1986) (upholding exclusion of incarcerated person from his disciplinary hearing during witness testimony on basis of institutional safety and disciplinary reports documenting violent behavior when incarcerated person was allowed to listen to taped testimony instead).

184. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 567, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2980, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 957 (1974).

185. Smith v. Farley, 858 F. Supp. 806, 816–819, 822 (N.D. Ind. 1994) (finding violation of incarcerated person’s due process rights where incarcerated person was denied admittance of letter that could potentially clear his name without valid security concerns being provided for denial) (citing Young v. Kann, 926 F.2d 1396, 1400–1402 (3d Cir. 1991)), aff’d, Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 562, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2978, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 954 (1974).

186. Smith v. Farley, 858 F. Supp. 806, 819 (N.D. Ind. 1994) (quoting Young v. Kann, 926 F.2d 1396, 1400 (3d Cir. 1991)).

allow you to confront and cross-examine witnesses is left up to the prison officials.¹⁸⁷ Prison officers are not required to give you a written report explaining why you are not allowed to confront your accusers or to cross-examine witnesses.¹⁸⁸

In New York, courts have stated that incarcerated people do not have the right to be present when opposing witnesses testify (when the witness is called by the Hearing Officer).¹⁸⁹ However, prison officials do have to give you some objective evidence (evidence that is not biased) that supports their decision to not allow you to attend the interviewing of witnesses.¹⁹⁰ They may also be required to give you a tape or transcript of the testimony, if doing so does not create a safety concern. In one example from a New York court case, a disciplinary ruling was dismissed because the state would not provide the incarcerated person with a tape or transcript of a witness' testimony, and the state also did not give a reason why.¹⁹¹ A hearing officer is also not allowed to consider information that is confidential (secret), and that the incarcerated person does not know, without giving some reason for keeping the information confidential.¹⁹²

Although there are limits to your questioning of opposing witnesses, you can always ask the hearing officer to question adverse witnesses for you. You should be aware that prison officials are not required to guarantee that informants are telling the absolute truth. Prison officials are only required to judge the reliability of confidential informants (to try to tell if the information is accurate) in situations where this right (to have the reliability of the informants examined) has been established.¹⁹³ If your version of the event is different from the witness' version, point this difference out to the hearing officer and comment on the evidence presented at the hearing.

187. See Sanchez v. Roth, 891 F. Supp. 452, 456–458 (N.D. Ill. 1995) (After affirming that the right to call witness is limited, subject to the discretion of prison officials, and considerations of safety, but that the discretion of officials is not unlimited and the decision cannot be arbitrary, the court held that where a incarcerated person did not follow proper procedure for requesting witnesses, prison officials' refusal to allow witnesses to testify at disciplinary proceeding was a valid excuse and did not violate incarcerated person's due process rights).

188. See Ponte v. Real, 471 U.S. 491, 496–497, 105 S. Ct. 2192, 2195–2196, 85 L. Ed. 2d 553, 557 (1985) (establishing that prison officials can state the reason for denying an incarcerated person's witness request either in the administrative record or later in court testimony when there is a dispute over the refusal to call a witness). But see Scarpa v. Ponte, 638 F. Supp. 1019, 1023 n.4 (D. Mass. 1986) (distinguishing Ponte v. Real because in that case, prison officials failing to provide reasons in administrative record had an explanation related to safety or correctional goals, in contrast to the clear absence of threat to prison security in Scarpa v. Ponte).

189. See Graham v. N.Y. State Dept. of Corr. Servs., 178 A.D.2d 870, 870, 577 N.Y.S.2d 728, 729 (3d Dept. 1991) (holding that an incarcerated person did not have right to be present during testimony of witness called by Hearing Officer because "the right to be present applies only when an inmate calls a witness"); Honoret v. Coughlin, 160 A.D.2d 1093, 1094, 533 N.Y.S.2d 573, 575 (3d Dept. 1990) (dismissing incarcerated person's claim that his due process rights were violated when he was not allowed to be present at testimony of witness called by Hearing Officer because "[o]nly when an inmate calls a witness on his behalf does he have any right to be present").

190. See Burnell v. Smith, 122 Misc. 2d 342, 347, 471 N.Y.S.2d 493, 497 (Sup. Ct. Wyoming County 1984) (removing disciplinary violation from incarcerated person's record where no substantive reason was given for refusal to allow incarcerated person to be present during witness' testimony).

191. Matter of Martin v. Coughlin, 139 A.D.2d 650, 651, 526 N.Y.S.2d 1018, 1018 (2d Dept. 1988).

192. See Boyd v. Coughlin, 105 A.D.2d 532, 533, 481 N.Y.S.2d 769, 770 (3d Dept. 1984) (holding that "it is fundamental that the hearing officer must, at the time of the hearing, inform the inmate that he will consider certain information which will remain confidential and articulate some reason for keeping the information confidential"); see also Freeman v. Coughlin, 138 A.D.2d 824, 825–826, 525 N.Y.S.2d 744, 745 (3d Dept. 1988) (applying the Boyd rule to find the hearing officer's decision to keep information confidential without informing the incarcerated person was not a harmless error, resulting in a new hearing for the incarcerated person). But see Laureano v. Kuhlman, 75 N.Y.2d 141, 147, 550 N.E.2d 437, 440, 551 N.Y.S.2d 184, 187 (N.Y. 1990) ("[A] disciplinary determination cannot stand when a denial of the inmate's request to call a witness, or to be present when his witness testifies, is wholly unexplained, but will not be set aside if the record discloses the basis for the denial.").

193. See Gomez v. Kaplan, 964 F. Supp. 830, 835 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (finding that because the informant did not have qualified immunity, the hearing officer violated the incarcerated person's rights by not judging the informant's reliability).

6. “Impartial” Hearing Officer

According to Wolff v. McDonnell, you have the right to have an unbiased hearing officer conduct your disciplinary proceeding.¹⁹⁴ The hearing officer does not have to meet the very high standard of impartiality that applies to judges.¹⁹⁵ However, the officer cannot be so biased against you that they create a “hazard of arbitrary decisionmaking . . . violative of due process.”¹⁹⁶ To prove that the hearing officer is biased against you, you must provide “evidence that the [hearing officer] has actually prejudged the case or [had a] direct personal involvement in the underlying charge.”¹⁹⁷ For example, one court found proof that a hearing officer was possibly biased when the hearing officer refused to look at the evidence in support of the incarcerated person’s claim.¹⁹⁸ The court explained that “where a hearing officer indicates on the record that, without considering the evidence, he finds a prisoner’s factual defense inconceivable, we cannot conclude that the prisoner had a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue.”¹⁹⁹ In another case, the court dismissed a disciplinary hearing decision because what the hearing officer did (saying “Okay now. You have to convince me that you’re not guilty”) suggested that he was biased against the incarcerated person.²⁰⁰

The New York regulations touch on the issue of impartiality, but they do not guarantee that you will have an impartial hearing officer. There are different rules for disciplinary hearings and for superintendent hearings. An officer of the rank of lieutenant or above may preside over a disciplinary hearing.²⁰¹ In a disciplinary hearing, the regulations do not allow the hearing officer to be someone who has (1) participated in the investigation; or (2) prepared or ordered the preparation of the misbehavior report.²⁰² Generally, a superintendent’s hearing will be conducted by the superintendent, deputy superintendent, captain, or commissioner’s hearing officer. In superintendent hearings, the regulations do not allow the use of a hearing officer who: (1) actually witnessed the event; (2) was directly involved in the incident; (3) is a review officer who reviewed the misbehavior report; or (4) has 194. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 592, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2992, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 972 (1974) (Marshall, J. concurring in part and dissenting in part); Sira v. Morton, 380 F.3d 57, 69 (2d Cir. 2004) (citing Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 563–567, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1974)).

195. Moore v. Selsky, 900 F. Supp. 670, 676 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (finding that a hearing officer may be allowed to have a biased view that a scientific test for evidence is reliable, so long as the hearing officer would be willing to consider whether he may be mistaken in his view impartially); Sloane v. Borawski, 64 F. Supp.3d 473, 487 (W.D.N.Y. 2014) (“A hearing officer may satisfy the standard of impartiality if there is some evidence in the record to support the findings of the hearing.”) (internal quotations omitted); Allen v. Cuomo, 100 F.3d 253, 259 (2d Cir. 1996) (“The degree of impartiality required of prison officials does not rise to the level of that required of judges generally. It is well recognized that prison disciplinary hearing officers are not held to the same standard of neutrality as adjudicators in other contexts.”).

196. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 571, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2982, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 959–960 (1974).

197. Wade v. Farley, 869 F. Supp. 1365, 1376 (N.D. Ind. 1994) (citing Underwood v. Chrans, No. 90 C 6713, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 12616, at *10 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 20, 1992) (unpublished)) (holding that although hearing officer had been involved in incarcerated person’s previous disciplinary proceeding, he was impartial with respect to the present proceeding); see, e.g., Francis v. Coughlin, 891 F.2d 43, 46 (2d Cir. 1989) (noting that a prison disciplinary hearing in which the result is arbitrarily and adversely predetermined violates an incarcerated person’s right to due process); Washington v. Afify, 968 F. Supp.2d 532, 542 (W.D.N.Y. 2013) (allegations that a hearing officer called the incarcerated person a “little monkey” and that there was “more retaliation on the way” is sufficient to support a finding of bias in a motion to dismiss).

198. See Colon v. Coughlin, 58 F.3d 865, 871 (2d Cir. 1995) (holding that where a hearing officer “indicates on the record that, without considering the evidence, he finds a prisoner’s factual defense inconceivable,” the incarcerated person did not have “a full and fair opportunity to litigate the issue”).

199. Colon v. Coughlin, 58 F.3d 865, 871 (2d Cir. 1995).

200. Tumminia v. Kuhlmann, 139 Misc. 2d 394, 397, 527 N.Y.S.2d 673, 675 (Sup. Ct. Sullivan County 1988).

201. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.1(A) (2018).

202. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.1(B) (2018).

investigated the incident.²⁰³ Note that the superintendent may permit other correctional facility employees to act as hearing officers in a superintendent's or disciplinary hearing.²⁰⁴

If you think your hearing officer might be biased, you should consider making an objection. You should also consider objecting if your hearing officer is closely connected to prison security or is known to have a strong dislike for incarcerated people. Remember that it is usually to your advantage to make any possible objections at your hearing so that you create a strong "record" for future appeals.

7. "Use" Immunity

Most violations of prison regulations are punished only through disciplinary proceedings within the prison. But sometimes a violation of a prison rule will also be a violation of a criminal law. To take an extreme example, stabbing a guard is certainly a severe violation of prison regulations. More importantly, it is also a criminal offense for which an incarcerated person can be tried and convicted in court.

A situation like the one described above raises special problems. You might want to testify at the disciplinary proceeding in order to avoid a potentially severe punishment. On the other hand, you may worry that something you say at your hearing could get you in trouble in a later criminal trial.

To avoid this problem, incarcerated people often seek "use" immunity in disciplinary hearings. "Use" immunity does not protect you from prosecution, but it prevents any statements you make at your disciplinary hearing from being used against you in the criminal case.²⁰⁵ Immunity in criminal proceedings comes from the U.S. Constitution's Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination.²⁰⁶ An individual accused of a crime has the right to remain silent.²⁰⁷ When the state demands that you testify, the state must grant "use" immunity.²⁰⁸ If you choose not to testify in your disciplinary hearing and your silence is used as evidence of your guilt, you must also be granted "use" immunity.²⁰⁹ If that was not the case, the state would be punishing you for exercising your Fifth Amendment right.

The Supreme Court faced this problem in Baxter v. Palmigiano,²¹⁰ which involved an incarcerated person facing disciplinary action for violations of prison regulations that were also crimes under state law. The Baxter Court held that while an incarcerated person's silence can be considered evidence of guilt in a disciplinary proceeding,²¹¹ silence alone is not enough. Other evidence must be produced in order to establish guilt.²¹²

If an incarcerated person chooses to testify in cases where he is not required or compelled to testify, according to Baxter, anything he says at the disciplinary hearings can be used against him in criminal proceedings later.²¹³ Therefore, an incarcerated person does not have a constitutional right to

203. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.1 (2018). See Part E of this Chapter for an explanation of "superintendent's," "disciplinary," and "violation" hearings, which are the three types of hearings in New York State.

204. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.1(A) (2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.1 (2018).

205. See 18 U.S.C. § 6002 (granting immunity from the use of compelled testimony and evidence derived from it); Kastigar v. U.S. 406 U.S. 441, 452–453, 92 S. Ct. 1653, 1661, 32 L. Ed. 2d 212, 221 (1972) (holding that immunity from use and derivative use follows the scope of the privilege against self-incrimination).

206. U.S. CONST. amend. V.

207. U.S. CONST. amend. V.; see also Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 86 S.Ct. 1602, 16 L.Ed. 294 (1966) (holding that individuals being taken into custody must be informed of their right to remain silent or else their privilege against self-incrimination would be violated)

208. 18 U.S.C. § 6002.

209. See 18 U.S.C. § 6002.

210. Baxter v. Palmigiano, 425 U.S. 308, 96 S. Ct. 1551, 47 L. Ed. 2d 810 (1976).

211. Baxter v. Palmigiano, 425 U.S. 308, 317–318, 96 S. Ct. 1551, 1557–1558, 47 L. Ed. 2d 810, 821 (1976).

212. Baxter v. Palmigiano, 425 U.S. 308, 317–318, 96 S. Ct. 1551, 1557–1558, 47 L. Ed. 2d 810, 821 (1976).

213. Baxter v. Palmigiano, 425 U.S. 308, 316, 96, S. Ct. 1551, 1557, 47 L. Ed. 2d 810, 820 (1976); see Fantone v. Latini, 780 F.3d 184, 192 (3d Cir. 2015) ("[A]n inmate does have [the right to remain silent] when the alleged prison misconduct include[s] criminal acts").

immunity in those cases. When the incarcerated person must testify, however, “use” immunity must be granted to protect his Fifth Amendment right to remain silent.²¹⁴ In reality, it is unlikely that after Baxter, prison officials will make an incarcerated person testify since: (1) unfavorable inferences, or conclusions, may be drawn from an incarcerated person’s silence; and (2) the problem of whether to grant immunity can be avoided if the official does not compel testimony.²¹⁵

New York state currently grants incarcerated persons “use” immunity at all disciplinary proceedings.²¹⁶ The City of New York requires that at the start of a disciplinary proceeding, incarcerated people be informed of their right to remain silent.²¹⁷ You have the right to “use” immunity even if criminal charges have not been filed against you. You must be told of your right in the following language: “You are hereby advised that no statement made by you in response to the charge, or information derived therefrom may be used against you in a criminal proceeding.”²¹⁸ This warning will appear in the notice of charges, which must be given to you at least twenty-four hours before the proceeding. Because the legal interaction between disciplinary proceedings and criminal trials is so complicated, you should consult with your criminal attorney, if you have one, before you make any formal or informal statements in regard to the events in question.

8. The Ruling and the Requirement of a Written Record

At the end of the hearing, the hearing officer may, at his discretion, do one of several things: he may affirm all the charges, he may dismiss all the charges, or he may affirm some charges and dismiss others.²¹⁹ The only requirement is that some evidence supports the hearing officer’s final decision. This standard is very low. It does not require the hearing officer to produce “substantial evidence” or a “preponderance of evidence” against you. Generally, if any evidence exists at all, the court will uphold the hearing officer’s conclusion. Also, the fact finder (here, the hearing officer) is not required to make a decision only using the evidence presented at the hearing. In Baxter v. Palmigiano, the Supreme Court explained that, in the unique prison environment, facts that may not come to light until after the formal hearing should not be excluded in determining what happened, since they may help officials understand the incident.²²⁰ The Court also clarified that the fact finder must provide a written statement of the evidence that he relied on and of the reasons why the disciplinary action was taken.²²¹

Often, the only or primary evidence against an incarcerated person is the misbehavior report itself. New York’s regulations require that misbehavior reports present a detailed written account of the alleged incident. Therefore, the report alone may provide enough evidence to support a disciplinary ruling.²²² However, in one case, the reports that were used as evidence merely restated that all of the

214. Baxter v. Palmigiano, 425 U.S. 308, 316, 96 S. Ct. 1551, 1557, 47 L. Ed. 2d 810, 820 (1976). “Use” immunity must be granted where a defendant is forced to give up his right to remain silent, but immunity need not be granted where no right to remain silent exists. If you are incarcerated outside of New York, you should research your state’s rules and regulations governing disciplinary proceedings to find out whether you can get some form of immunity at your disciplinary proceeding. See Chapter 2 of the JLM, “Introduction to Legal Research,” for more information on how to conduct legal research.

215. Baxter v. Palmigiano, 425 U.S. 308, 318–20, 96 S. Ct. 1551, 1558–1559, 47 L. Ed. 2d 810, 821 (1976).

216. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251-3.1(D)(1) (2018).

217. City of New York, Department of Corrections, Directive No. 6500R-E, Inmate Disciplinary Due Process (III)(D)(10)(b) (2016) (as revised Jan. 23, 2016), available at <https://www1.nyc.gov/assets/doc/downloads/directives/6500R-E.pdf> (last visited Nov. 23, 2020).

218. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251-3.1(D)(1) (2018).

219. Superintendent, Mass. Corr. Inst. v. Hill, 472 U.S. 445, 455–456, 105 S. Ct. 2768, 2774, 86 L. Ed. 2d 356, 365 (1985) (stating that due process requirements are satisfied if there is evidence in the record that could support the board’s conclusion in order to prove that the prison disciplinary board’s decision was justified).

220. Baxter v. Palmigiano, 425 U.S. 308, 322 n.5, 96 S. Ct. 1551, 1560 n.5, 47 L. Ed. 2d 810, 824 n.5 (1976).

221. Baxter v. Palmigiano, 425 U.S. 308, 322 n.5, 96 S. Ct. 1551, 1560 n.5, 47 L. Ed. 2d 810, 824 n.5 (1976).

222. See Tuitt v. Martuscello, 106 A.D.3d 1355, 1356, 965 N.Y.S.2d 669, 670 (3d Dept. 2013) (holding that the “detailed misbehavior report provides substantial evidence supporting the determination of guilt.”); Walker v. Bezio, 96 A.D.3d 1268, 1268, 946 N.Y.S.2d 905, 906 (3d Dept. 2012) (same); James v. Strack, 214 A.D.2d 674, incarcerated people in the mess hall were part of a disturbance, without describing their specific misbehavior. The evidence was found to be insufficient to support a disciplinary finding against the incarcerated persons.²²³

With certain exceptions, Wolff v. McDonnell guarantees your constitutional right to receive, from the hearing officer, a written statement of the evidence being used against you and a statement of the reasons for the decision.²²⁴ This requirement prevents the hearing officer from simply stating that you were found guilty of a particular offense without providing enough detail. The hearing record must include reasons for the decision, copies of any reports relied on, and summaries of any interviews conducted.²²⁵ In addition, New York regulations provide that you must receive the written statement as soon as possible, and no later than twenty-four hours after the end of the hearing.²²⁶

Constitutional and New York standards allow the hearing officer to exclude (keep out) pieces of evidence from the written statement that, if presented, would threaten “personal or institutional safety.” For example, in Laureano v. Kuhlmann, New York’s highest court ruled that a hearing officer does not have to disclose to the incarcerated person the details of a confidential informant’s testimony or circumstances that might reveal the informant’s identity.²²⁷ Instead, the officer may provide a summary of essential points of the testimony.²²⁸ If evidence has been excluded, the written statement you receive informing you of the decision must disclose this fact.²²⁹

The written statement and the tape recording of the hearing will be important parts of your disciplinary hearing “record.” This record is very important because the court will examine it if you seek judicial review of an unfavorable disciplinary hearing decision in state or federal court.²³⁰

E. New York Disciplinary Proceedings and Appeal Procedures

1. Types of Disciplinary Proceedings

New York regulations create a three-tier (level) hearing system for disciplinary actions that is based on how severe (bad) the offense is.²³¹ Violation hearings, which are used for minor offenses, make 675, 625 N.Y.S.2d 265, 266 (2d Dept. 1995) (holding that the misbehavior report was “sufficiently detailed, relevant and probative to constitute substantial evidence supporting the Hearing Officer’s finding of guilt”); Nelson v. Coughlin, 209 A.D.2d 621, 621, 619 N.Y.S.2d 298, 299 (2d Dept. 1994) (holding that the misbehavior report provided sufficient evidence that the incarcerated person violated rule prohibiting incarcerated people from making or possessing alcoholic beverages and that officials were not required to chemically test beverage for presence of alcohol).

223. See Bryant v. Coughlin, 77 N.Y.2d 642, 649–650, 572 N.E.2d 23, 26–27, 569 N.Y.S.2d 582, 585–586 (1991) (concluding that misbehavior reports, which did not specify the particulars of the incarcerated person’s misconduct and only alleged a mass incident, were insufficient).

224. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 564, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2979, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 956 (1974).

225. See McQueen v. Vincent, 53 A.D.2d 630, 631, 384 N.Y.S.2d 475, 476–477 (2d Dept. 1976) (remanding case to determine whether due process requirements were met in light of incomplete hearing record); see also Tolliver v. Fischer, 125 A.D.3d 1023, 1023–1024, 2 N.Y.S.3d 694, 695 (3d Dept. 2015) (granting incarcerated person’s petition due to an out of order transcript, portions of missing witness questionings, and a cut off petitioner statement); People ex rel. Lloyd v. Smith, 115 A.D.2d 254, 255, 496 N.Y.S.2d 716, 717 (4th Dept. 1985) (holding that failure to include superintendent’s proceeding minutes in the record made adequate review impossible, resulting in remand for review of minutes).

226. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.7(a)(5) (2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.7(a)(5) (2018).

227. Laureano v. Kuhlmann, 75 N.Y.2d 141, 148, 550 N.E.2d 437, 441, 551 N.Y.S.2d 184, 188 (1990); see also Moye v. Fischer, 93 A.D.3d 1006, 1007, 940 N.Y.S.2d 356, 357 (3d Dept. 2012) (overturning an incarcerated person’s disciplinary conviction because no reasons had been given for his witnesses’ refusal to testify).

228. Laureano v. Kuhlmann, 75 N.Y.2d 141, 148, 550 N.E.2d 437, 441, 551 N.Y.S.2d 184, 188 (1990); see also Moye v. Fischer, 93 A.D.3d 1006, 1007, 940 N.Y.S.2d 356, 357 (3d Dept. 2012).

229. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 565, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2979, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 956 (1974).

230. See, e.g., Roseboro v. Gillespie, 791 F. Supp.2d 353, 366 (S.D.N.Y. 2011).

231. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 270.3(a) (2018).

up the first tier.²³² Disciplinary hearings, which are used for serious offenses, make up the second tier.²³³ Finally, superintendent's hearings, which are for the most serious offenses, make up the third tier.²³⁴ The nature of the offense of which you are accused determines both the type of hearing that you face and the type of punishment you can receive.

Sandin v. Conner drastically affected New York's three-tier system. Under that case, incarcerated people are entitled to due process only when the punishment they receive constitutes an "atypical and significant hardship. . . in relation to the ordinary incidents of prison life."²³⁵ In other words, if the court does not think the punishment you are given is especially, or unusually, severe, there is no requirement to hold a hearing beforehand. Whether a punishment is severe is based on the specific facts of your case.²³⁶ The punishments imposed after violation and disciplinary hearings, such as loss of privileges and placement in disciplinary segregation, do not satisfy Conner's "atypical and significant hardship" test. Only more severe punishments imposed after superintendent's hearings, such as loss of good-time credits or segregated confinement for lengthy periods, can trigger due process protection under Conner.²³⁷

Accordingly, New York is not constitutionally required to conduct violation and disciplinary hearings at all under Conner. The regulations, however, still provide for all three types of hearings, and prison officials are required to follow their own rules.²³⁸ For example, if a prison official decided to revoke your visiting privileges or to place you in a SHU for no reason without giving you a hearing, you could file an appeal within the prison system. In a case like this, however, you could not seek relief in federal court. This is because, according to Conner, you no longer have a constitutional right to be free from all arbitrary and unfair punishment; you only have a right to be free from "atypical and significant" punishment.²³⁹ It is still unclear whether you could appeal your case successfully in a New York state court.²⁴⁰ New York must follow the minimum due process rules set out in Conner. This means it has to comply with due process of law before it can subject an incarcerated person to an "atypical and significant hardship," but otherwise does not have to even give incarcerated people

232. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 270.3(a)(1) (2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 252 (2018).

233. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 270.3(a)(2) (2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253 (2018).

234. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 270.3(a)(3) (2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254 (2018).

235. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 484, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed 2d 418, 430 (1995).

236. Miller v. Selsky, 111 F.3d 7, 9 (2d Cir. 1997) ("Conner did not create a per se blanket rule that disciplinary confinement may never implicate a liberty interest."); Davis v. Barrett, 576 F.3d 129, 134 (2d Cir. 2009) ("[T]he decision in Conner entailed careful examination of the actual conditions of the challenged punishment compared with ordinary prison conditions. [The] court must examine the specific circumstances of the punishment.") (quoting Brooks v. DiFasi, 112 F.3d 46, 49 (2d Cir. 1997); Lee v. Coughlin, 26 F. Supp. 2d 615, 635 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (arguing Conner "did not say that segregated confinement could never constitute an atypical and significant hardship").

237. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 484, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed 2d 418, 430 (1995).

238. See Uzzell v. Scully, 893 F. Supp. 259, 263 n.10 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (stating that, because prison officials must adhere to their own rules, incarcerated people may administratively challenge their keeplock confinement by raising procedural error claims).

239. See Kalican v. Dzurenda, 583 F. App'x 21, 22 (2d Cir. 2014) (unpublished) ("Grievance procedures, which are creatures of state law, are not interests independently protected by the Constitution because the failure to investigate a grievance does not increase an incarcerated person's sentence or impose an 'atypical and significant hardship.'"); Cliff v. De Celle, 260 A.D.2d 812, 814, 687 N.Y.S.2d 834, 835 (3d Dept. 1999), app. denied, Cliff v. De Celle, 93 N.Y.2d 814, 719 N.E.2d 922, 697 N.Y.S.2d 561 (1999) (holding that because the maximum penalty that could be imposed would be loss of privileges and/or confinement of no longer than 30 days, the punishment is not "atypical" or "significant").

240. See, e.g., Edwards v. Mejia, No. 11 Civ. 9134(ALC), 2013 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37006, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. March 15, 2013) (unpublished) ("Confiscation of property based on his guilty disposition does not constitute a constitutional violation or suffice to state a liberty interest.").

violation or disciplinary hearings if the particular prison's rules do not call for it.²⁴¹ New York can choose to give incarcerated people more rights than federal law requires, but it cannot provide fewer rights. Therefore, when reviewing the rest of this Section, keep in mind that if prison officials violate these rules, the federal courts will not be able to remedy the situation unless your case involves a severe punishment that violates a right protected by federal law, such as revocation of good-time credits or some similarly severe punishment.

Under New York's regulations, both disciplinary and superintendent's hearings may result in loss of one or more specified privileges for a specific period of time.²⁴² Where the incarcerated person has been involved in improper conduct related to correspondence or visiting privileges with a particular person, a superintendent's hearing may result in loss of those privileges with that person.²⁴³ Disciplinary hearings may not result in loss of correspondence privileges and cannot lead to the loss of visiting privileges for more than thirty days.²⁴⁴ Both types of hearings may result in confinement in your cell (keeplock) or in a SHU, but disciplinary hearings may only result in such confinement for up to thirty days.²⁴⁵ Restitution (the payment of money) may be required for loss or intentional damage to property at both hearings.²⁴⁶ A superintendent's hearing may result in a restricted diet²⁴⁷ and loss of a specific period of good time.²⁴⁸ Both types of hearings may allow for a delay before any penalty is imposed.²⁴⁹

The punishments that violation officers may impose after violation hearings are less severe than the punishments listed above. If the violation officer finds you guilty of committing an offense, he can order any two of the following penalties to be served within a thirteen-day period:²⁵⁰

- (1) Loss of all or part of recreation (for example, game room, day room, television, movies, yard, gym, special events) for up to thirteen days;²⁵¹
- (2) Loss of at most two of the following privileges: one commissary purchase (excluding items related to your health and sanitary needs), withholding of radio for up to thirteen days, withholding of packages for up to thirteen days (excluding perishables that cannot be returned);²⁵²

241. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 483–484, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed 2d 418, 430 (1995).

242. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.7(a)(1)(ii) (2018) (period specified for loss of privileges as a result of disciplinary hearings is “up to 30 days”); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.7(a)(1) (2018).

243. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.7(a)(1)(ii)–(iii) (2018).

244. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.7(a)(1)(ii) (2018). New York procedures for the suspension of visitation rights are contained within a consent decree issued in Kozlowski v. Coughlin, 539 F. Supp. 852 (S.D.N.Y. 1982), den. of modif. aff'd, Kozlowski v. Coughlin, 871 F.2d 241 (2d Cir. 1989).

245. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.7(a)(1)(iii) (2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.7(a)(1)(iii)(d)(v) (2018).

246. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.7(a)(1)(iv) (2018) (stating that, at disciplinary hearings, restitution is limited to $100) N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.7(a)(1)(iii)(d)(vii) (2018).

247. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.7(a)(1)(iii)(d)(vi) (2018). The diet must at all times contain a “sufficient quantity of wholesome and nutritious food.” N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 304.2(e) (2018). It is possible that at some point, the diet provided may be so unhealthy as to amount to “cruel and unusual punishment” in violation of the 8th Amendment. See, e.g., Phelps v. Kapnolas, 308 F.3d 180, 186 (2d Cir. 2002) (“As suggested by our prior opinion, the alleged treatment—that prison officials deprived Phelps of a nutritionally adequate diet for fourteen straight days—is not as a matter of law insufficiently serious to meet the objective requirement. By alleging that prison officials knew that the diet was inadequate and likely to inflict pain and suffering, Phelps has also sufficiently pleaded the subjective element.”) (citation omitted). For a discussion of the 8th Amendment, see JLM Chapter 16, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law.”

248. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.7(a)(1)(iii)(d)(ix) (2018).

249. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.7(a)(4) (2018); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.7(a)(4) (2018). The specified time period for suspensions is up to 180 days from a superintendent's hearing and up to 90 days from a disciplinary hearing.

250. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 252.5(a) (2018).

251. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 252.5(a)(1) (2018).

252. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 252.5(a)(2) (2018).

- (3) Requiring one work task per day, other than a regular work assignment, for a maximum of seven days (excluding Sundays and public holidays), to be performed on your housing unit or other designated area (must be not more than eight hours per day including the regular work assignment); and²⁵³
- (4) Counsel and/or reprimand.²⁵⁴

The violation officer may choose to suspend these punishments for thirteen days.²⁵⁵

A review officer can order any one of the three types of hearings to be held (violation, disciplinary, or superintendent's hearings). The choice will depend on the seriousness of the reported offense.²⁵⁶ If a guard, or any other prison employee, believes that you have committed a violation that creates a "danger to life, health, security or property," he must file a formal report of your conduct (commonly referred to by incarcerated people as a "ticket") "as soon as practicable" (possible) with the review officer.²⁵⁷ The staff person who observed the alleged violation (or who got the facts) must report in writing the nature, date, time, and place of its occurrence.²⁵⁸ Minor infractions or other violations "that do not involve danger to life, health, security or property" do not need to be reported.²⁵⁹ The misbehavior report becomes the basis for the review of an officer's choice of the type of hearing to be held.

An officer will place you in a SHU if he believes you present an "immediate threat to the safety, security or order of the facility or [a]n immediate danger to other persons or to property."²⁶⁰ You cannot be confined to your cell or elsewhere for more than seven days without a hearing, unless a delay is authorized by the commissioner.²⁶¹ Such a hearing must be completed within fourteen days after the misbehavior report is written, or within seven days if the hearing is a violation hearing, unless a delay is authorized.²⁶² If you are placed in keeplock or a SHU solely because of the charges against you, your hearing must begin within seven days of being confined, unless special circumstances exist.²⁶³ An officer may also confine you to your cell or room for your own protection, but can do so for only seventy-two hours and, within that time period, you must be transferred to another housing unit, scheduled for transfer to another facility, released from confinement, or placed in protective custody.²⁶⁴

The validity of the rules stated above is questionable in light of Sandin v. Conner.²⁶⁵ A federal court in New York has suggested that Conner calls into question New York regulations that grant incarcerated people liberty interests in remaining free from administrative and disciplinary segregation.²⁶⁶ As a result, in federal court you will not be able to argue successfully that you have a constitutionally protected right to remain free from administrative and disciplinary segregation. However, you may still be able to assert such rights under New York regulations within the prison system or in New York state court.

253. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 252.5(a)(3) (2018).

254. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 252.5(a)(4) (2018).

255. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 252.5(a) (2018).

256. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251-2.2(b) (2018).

257. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251-3.1(a) (2018).

258. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251-3.1(b)–(c) (2018).

259. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251-1.5(a) (2018).

260. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251-1.6(a) (2018).

261. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, §§ 251-5.1(a)–(c) (2018).

262. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251-5.1(b)–(c) (2018).

263. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251-5.1(a) (2018).

264. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251-1.6(b) (2018).

265. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 487, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2302, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 431–432 (1995) (holding that there was no liberty interest in remaining free from disciplinary segregation).

266. See Rodriguez v. Phillips, 66 F.3d 470, 479–481 (2d Cir. 1995) (holding that prison officials' belief that the incarcerated person's three-day administrative confinement, without opportunity to be heard, did not violate the incarcerated person's 14th Amendment due process rights was reasonable).

2. Important Exceptions at Violation Hearings

At violation hearings, you are not entitled to all of the rights you have at disciplinary or superintendent's hearings. For example, you must receive written notice about a disciplinary or superintendent's hearing, but not for violation hearings. Therefore, you may not have enough time to prepare your defense.

However, once the misbehavior report is written against you, the violation hearing must be held within seven days.²⁶⁷ The regulations grant you the right to be present at your violation hearing.²⁶⁸ This right gives you a chance to defend yourself by explaining your version of the events to the violation officer, presenting documentary evidence (for example, a time card showing your presence at your work-station rather than at the scene of the alleged incident), or submitting a written statement on your own behalf.²⁶⁹ You do not, however, have the right to call witnesses at violation hearings,²⁷⁰ which might make it difficult for you to prove your version of the events. If you believe you have been accused of an offense you did not commit, request the violation officer to investigate further before issuing a decision.

The differences among the three types of disciplinary proceedings can be confusing. To simplify matters, the differences in the rights you have are illustrated in Figure I:

Disciplinary/Superintendent's Hearing	Violation Hearing
Right to a written notice of proceeding at least twenty-four hours before the hearing. ²⁷¹	Right to a copy of the misbehavior report at the hearing. ²⁷²
Right to a hearing that must be completed within fourteen days after report, unless authorized by the commissioner. ²⁷³	Right to a hearing that must be completed within seven days of the writing of the misbehavior report. ²⁷⁴
Limited right to substitute counsel. ²⁷⁵	No right to substitute counsel.
Limited right to appear before the hearing officer. ²⁷⁶	Limited right to appear before the violation officer. ²⁷⁷

267. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251-5.1(c) (2018).

268. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 252.3(a)(2) (2018).

269. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 252.3(a)(3) (2018).

270. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 252.3(a)(3) (2018).

271. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.6(a) (2018) (rule governing disciplinary hearings); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.6(a)(1) (2018) (rule governing superintendent hearings); see also Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 564, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2979, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 956 (1974) (holding that notice is required for hearings where rights are at stake such as a disciplinary-action hearings or superintendent hearings).

272. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 252.3(a)(1) (2018).

273. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251-5.1(b) (2018).

274. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251-5.1(c) (2018).

275. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.4 (2018) (rule governing disciplinary hearings); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.4 (2018) (rule governing superintendent hearings); see also Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 566–570, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2979–2982, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 956–959 (1974) (holding that incarcerated people do not have a right to an attorney but can collect documents and have a fellow incarcerated person assist them when they are illiterate or unlikely to understand the charges against them so long as these rights will not create a “risk of reprisal or undermine authority”).

276. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.6(b) (2018) (rule governing disciplinary hearings); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.6(a)(2) (2018) (rule governing superintendent hearings).

277. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7 § 252.3(a)(2) (2018).

Disciplinary/Superintendent's Hearing	Violation Hearing
Limited right to call witnesses. ²⁷⁸	No right to call witnesses. ²⁷⁹
Right to “use” immunity. (Statements you make in response to a charge of misbehavior cannot be used against you in criminal proceedings.) ²⁸⁰	Right to “use” immunity. (Statements you make in response to a charge of misbehavior cannot be used against you in criminal proceedings.) ²⁸¹
Right to an impartial hearing officer. ²⁸²	No declared right to an impartial violation officer.
Right to receive a copy of a written record of the disposition. ²⁸³	Right to receive a copy of a written record of the disposition. ²⁸⁴
Disposition of hearing may be made part of incarcerated person's institutional records.	Disposition of violation hearing not made part of incarcerated person's institutional records. ²⁸⁵
Right to an assistant. ²⁸⁶	No right to an assistant. But, you do have a right to a translator or accommodations if you are hard of hearing. ²⁸⁷

Figure I: Comparison of the Rights of Incarcerated People at Disciplinary or Superintendent's Hearings and Violation Hearings in New York²⁸⁸

Once you receive written charges, you know that a disciplinary proceeding will take place in the near future. If you are in solitary confinement because of the charges, the disciplinary or superintendent's hearing must begin within seven days of your confinement.²⁸⁹ If you are not confined, the hearing must be completed within fourteen days from the time the written charges were made against you.²⁹⁰ The Commissioner of Correctional Services or a person designated to act for the Commissioner can, however, authorize a delay beyond these time limits.²⁹¹

278. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.5 (2018) (rule governing disciplinary hearings); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.5 (2018) (rule governing superintendent hearings); see also Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 566, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2979, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 956 (1974) (holding that an incarcerated person should be permitted to call witnesses “when permitting him to do so will not be unduly hazardous to institutional safety or correctional goals”).

279. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 252.3(a)(3) (2018).

280. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251-3.1(d)(1) (2018).

281. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251-3.1(d)(1) (2018).

282. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.1(b) (2018) (rule governing disciplinary hearings); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.1 (2018) (rule governing superintendent hearings); see also Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 571, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2982, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 959 (1974) (holding that a committee made up of wardens, superintendents, and facility directors that conducted disciplinary hearings was sufficiently impartial to satisfy due process).

283. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.7(a)(5) (2018) (rule governing disciplinary hearings); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.7(a)(5) (2018) (detailing rules governing superintendent hearings); see also Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 564, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2979, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 956 (1974).

284. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 252.5(b) (2018).

285. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 252.5(d) (2018).

286. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7 § 253.4 (2018) (rule governing disciplinary hearings); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7 § 254.4 (2018) (rule governing superintendent hearings).

287. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7 § 252.4 (2018).

288. See Part E(1) of this Chapter for more information on the different levels of disciplinary proceedings.

289. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251-5.1(a) (2018).

290. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251-5.1(b) (2018).

291. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 251-5.1(a)–(b) (2018).

3. Appeal Procedures

In New York, incarcerated people have an absolute right to make an administrative appeal to another prison official.²⁹² You must pursue this administrative appeal process in order to preserve your right to pursue further appeals in the courts (your right to judicial review).²⁹³ This means that in order to have a court hear your case at a later stage, you must make an administrative appeal first. Most other states also provide appeal procedures. If you are incarcerated elsewhere, you should research the rules and regulations governing disciplinary proceedings in your state. The appeal procedures differ for disciplinary hearings, superintendent's hearings, and violation hearings. For this reason, they are discussed separately below.

(a) Disciplinary Hearings

You can begin the review process by writing to the superintendent of your facility and requesting that he review the decision made at your disciplinary hearing. You must submit your request no later than seventy-two hours (three days) after you receive your hearing disposition (the decision).²⁹⁴ If you submit your written request after the seventy-two hour deadline, you may lose your right to have your hearing reviewed.²⁹⁵ After receiving your appeal, the superintendent or a person designated to act for the superintendent must review your case and issue a decision within fifteen days.²⁹⁶ New York state regulations do not specify whether an appeal can result in an increased sentence, but New York City does not allow for such an increase.²⁹⁷

When appealing a disciplinary hearing, you should also consider writing to the superintendent. A superintendent has the power to reduce your penalty at any time an imposed penalty is in effect.²⁹⁸

(b) Superintendent's Hearings

The process for appealing a superintendent's decision is similar to the appeal procedure for disciplinary hearings discussed above. The significant differences are (1) the person you write to, (2) the number of days you have to submit your written appeal, and (3) an appeal of a superintendent's decision can never result in a harsher penalty.

After you have received the superintendent's decision following a superintendent's hearing, you have thirty days to submit your written appeal.²⁹⁹ You should submit your appeal in writing to the Commissioner of Correctional Services, not to the superintendent.³⁰⁰ Address your appeal to:

292. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.8 (2018) (detailing rule governing disciplinary hearings); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.8 (2018) (detailing rule governing superintendent hearings).

293. To institute a New York Article 78 proceeding or a federal Section 1983 claim, you must first exhaust your administrative appeal possibilities. See, e.g., Julicher v. Town of Tonawanda, 61 A.D.3d 1384, 1385, 876 N.Y.S.2d 807, 808 (4th Dept. 2009) (dismissing an employment termination petition for failing to exhaust the union's administrative process). For more information, see JLM Chapter 22, "How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules," JLM Chapter 16, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law," and JLM Chapter 14, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act."

294. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.8 (2018).

295. See Lane v. Hanberry, 593 F.2d 648, 649 (5th Cir. 1979) (holding that when an incarcerated person is advised of his right to an administrative appeal, constitutional due process does not require that he also be advised that if he chooses not to make an administrative appeal, he will not be allowed to challenge the disciplinary hearing in a court of law); Lopez v. Matthews, No. 90-3174-R, 1990 WL 94312 (D. Kan. July 2, 1990) (unpublished) (holding that an incarcerated person held in confinement who had failed to use the administrative remedy process was not allowed to challenge his confinement in a court of law).

296. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.8 (2018).

297. City of New York Department of Correction, Directive No. 6500R-E, Inmate Disciplinary Due Process § (III)(G)(4) (as revised Jan. 23, 2016), available at <https://www1.nyc.gov/assets/doc/downloads/directives/6500R-E.pdf> (last visited Nov. 24, 2020).

298. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.9 (2018).

299. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.8 (2018).

300. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.8 (2018).

Commissioner _____
New York State Department of Correctional Services
State Office Campus, Building 2
1220 Washington Avenue
Albany, New York 12226

The Commissioner, or person designated to act for him or her, must issue a decision within sixty days of receiving your appeal.³⁰¹ Under no circumstances can appealing a superintendent's hearing result in a harsher penalty.³⁰²

In addition to officially appealing a superintendent's hearing to the Commissioner, you should also consider writing to the superintendent. Writing to your superintendent may be particularly worthwhile if he or she did not preside over your hearing. Even where the superintendent did preside over your hearing, there is always a chance that you can change his or her mind. A superintendent has the authority to reduce a penalty imposed at the superintendent's hearing at any time during which an imposed penalty is in effect.³⁰³ The superintendent can reduce your penalty even if the Commissioner decides not to reverse or modify the decision made at your superintendent's hearing.

(c) Violation Hearings

To appeal the decision in your violation hearing, you must write to your superintendent within twenty-four hours of receiving notification of the decision and request that he or she review your case.³⁰⁴ The superintendent or the person designated to act for the superintendent must then issue a decision within seven days.³⁰⁵ The superintendent may reduce the penalty imposed at your hearing.³⁰⁶

Keep in mind that you can still appeal an unfavorable decision to a court of law, especially after a superintendent's hearing.³⁰⁷ However, after Sandin v. Conner,³⁰⁸ it is not likely that you would be able to successfully appeal an unfavorable decision from a violation hearing or disciplinary hearing. Remember, an appeal in court can only be successful where the punishment is extreme and implicates a liberty interest.³⁰⁹ If the penalty imposed at your violation hearing is relatively minor, filing an appeal may not be worth the trouble. Moreover, violation hearings cannot be made part of an incarcerated person's institutional records.³¹⁰ The minor infraction dealt with through a violation hearing cannot be held against you at a later date.

F. Administrative Segregation Proceedings

Similar to disciplinary confinement, a court must find that the laws or regulations that apply to your prison create a protected liberty interest for you to receive procedural protections.³¹¹ This means that unless your state has a law or regulation that gives you the right to avoid segregation from the

301. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.8 (2018).

302. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.8(d) (2018).

303. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.9 (2018).

304. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 252.6 (2018).

305. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 252.6 (2018).

306. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 252.7 (2018).

307. Remember that you must exhaust your administrative remedies before petitioning the courts. You should review Chapter 22 of the JLM, "How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules," for more information on Article 78 appeals in New York State court.

308. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418 (1995).

309. See Part E(1).

310. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 252.5(d) (2018).

311. See Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 484, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 2300, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418, 430 (1995) (holding that an incarcerated person has a liberty interest protected by the Constitution's Due Process Clause only when his administrative segregation reaches levels of atypical and significant hardship); Hewitt v. Helms, 459 U.S. 460, 472, 103 S. Ct. 864, 871–72, 74 L. Ed. 2d 675, 688–689 (1983) (holding that the proceeding involving an informal non-adversarial review of evidence provided to an incarcerated person who was placed in administrative segregation satisfied the due process requirements for continued confinement).

general prison population, you do not have a right to a formal hearing before being confined in administrative or protective custody. Not all jurisdictions have found a protected liberty interest when it comes to administrative segregation. But courts in the Second Circuit, which covers New York, have decided that some state and federal regulations regarding administrative segregation create a protected liberty interest.³¹² This Part will first discuss the minimum administrative segregation procedures that all prisons must follow before and during your administrative detention. Then, this section will cover the procedures that officials in New York must follow before and after your administrative detention. Finally, this section will describe procedures that federal prisons within the Second Circuit must follow before and after your administrative detention.

There are some minimum administrative segregation procedures that all prisons must follow before and during your administrative detention. The due process protections for disciplinary action discussed in the Sections above do not apply to administrative segregation. This means that the requirements of *Wolff v. McDonnell*³¹³ do not apply to administrative segregation. Instead, the key case for understanding the basic requirements for administrative segregation is Hewitt v. Helms.³¹⁴ In the Helms case, an incarcerated person was placed in administrative segregation after a riot in a state prison. The next day, the incarcerated person was given notice of a misconduct charge against him. After five days of confinement, a hearing committee reviewed the evidence against him, including a report of his version of the events. The committee did not reach a decision about the incarcerated person's guilt, but decided that he posed a threat to the safety of other incarcerated people and prison officials. The committee decided that his confinement in administrative segregation should be continued. The Supreme Court concluded that the prison officials' review process was acceptable and that the review process did not violate the incarcerated person's due process rights.³¹⁵

The Supreme Court created a standard for hearings to determine if an incarcerated person represents a security threat, or if he should be confined to administrative segregation while awaiting the results of an investigation into misconduct charges.³¹⁶ The Court stated that an informal, non-adversarial (which here means not focused on the dispute or conflict) review of the evidence would satisfy the due process requirements of the Fourteenth Amendment.³¹⁷ Based on the previous decisions of the Supreme Court, for administrative segregation hearings, the procedural safeguards you are entitled to in any prison are:

- (1) Some notice of the charges against you,
- (2) An opportunity to present your views orally or in writing to the prison officer who will decide whether to transfer you to (or keep you in) administrative segregation,
- (3) An informal proceeding held within a reasonable time after your transfer to administrative segregation, and
- (4) Periodic review of the charges and available evidence by the decision-maker.³¹⁸

These are the minimum procedural requirements prison officials must follow. Other state or federal regulations that govern your prison may set out additional, specific guidelines.

312. See Tellier v. Fields, 280 F.3d 69, 83 (2d Cir. 2000) (holding that federal rule 28 C.F.R. § 541.22 “contains mandatory language that gives rise to” a liberty interest); Gonzalez v. Coughlin, 969 F. Supp. 256, 257–258 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (concluding that New York rules regarding administrative confinement create a protected liberty interest); Brooks v. Chappius, 450 F. Supp. 2d 220, 223–224 (W.D.N.Y. 2006) (denial of food during containment gives rise to a liberty interest).

313. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935 (1974).

314. Hewitt v. Helms, 459 U.S. 460, 103 S. Ct. 864, 74 L. Ed. 2d 675 (1983).

315. Hewitt v. Helms, 459 U.S. 460, 476, 103 S. Ct. 864, 874, 74 L. Ed. 2d 675, 691 (1983).

316. Hewitt v. Helms, 459 U.S. 460, 474–475, 103 S. Ct. 864, 873, 74 L. Ed. 2d 675, 691 (1983).

317. Hewitt v. Helms, 459 U.S. 460, 476, 103 S. Ct. 864, 874, 74 L. Ed. 2d 675, 691 (1983).

318. See Hewitt v. Helms, 459 U.S. 460, 476–477, 103 S. Ct. 864, 874, 74 L. Ed. 2d 675, 691–692 (1983). Please note that Helms has been overturned in part on other grounds by Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 115 S.Ct. 2293, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418 (1995), but remains good law on this matter. See, e.g., Toevs v. Reid, 685 F.3d 903, 912 (10th Cir. 2012).

New York State prisons have additional, specific guidelines. In New York State prisons, you may be placed in administrative segregation only if prison officials find that your presence in the general prison population poses a threat to the general safety and security of the facility.³¹⁹ You are entitled to give prison officials a written statement responding to the charges against you. Prison officials may, if they choose, let you make your case in person. You are not entitled to be present at each review hearing. But, you are entitled to a report of the results of the review hearings and a chance to respond to those findings.³²⁰ You are also entitled to have a committee review your status of confinement in administrative segregation every sixty days.³²¹ A three-member committee, including a representative of the facility executive staff, a security supervisor, and a member of the guidance and counseling staff, will examine your record and prepare and submit a report to the superintendent.³²² The report must state:

- (1) Reasons why you were initially placed in administrative segregation,
- (2) Information on your later behavior and attitude, and
- (3) Any other factors that favor keeping you in or releasing you from administrative segregation.³²³

The law that applies to incarcerated people in federal prison is slightly different. If you are placed in administrative detention in SHU in a federal prison, you are entitled to a copy of the “Administrative Detention Order” which tells you the reasons for your detention. You will usually receive the Administrative Detention Order within twenty-four hours of your placement.³²⁴ But, you will not receive an administrative detention order if you were placed in administrative detention while waiting for classification or while in holdover status.³²⁵ A Segregation Review Official must conduct an initial review to evaluate the merits of the segregation within three days of your placement in SHU, not counting the day you were admitted, weekends, and holidays.³²⁶ A Segregation Review Official must formally review your status at a hearing that you can attend within seven days of continuous placement in SHU.³²⁷ After that, the Segregation Review Official will review your records without you there—once every seven calendar days of continuous placement.³²⁸ After every thirty days of continuous placement in SHU, the Segregation Review Official will formally review your status at a hearing that you can attend.³²⁹

In federal prisons, federal laws do require some formal hearings. This means that if you are in a federal prison, you have the right to appear and present your opinion at those hearings about your detention status. After every thirty days of continuous placement, mental health staff will examine you. This examination will include a personal interview.³³⁰ If the reasons for your confinement no longer exist, you must be released from administrative detention.³³¹ However, courts have ruled that the warden’s original decision to place you in administrative detention is in the warden’s judgment,

319. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 301.4(b).

320. See Giano v. Kelly, No. 89-CV-727(C), 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9138, at *50–51 (W.D.N.Y. May 16, 2000) (unpublished) (suggesting that in some circumstances, prisons can constitute sufficient notice and opportunity to respond to charges by informing an incarcerated person of the dates and results of his reviews, of how long he can expect to be confined and what he might do to change his status, and give him a real opportunity to present information in his defense that he was no longer a threat to the facility).

321. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 301.4(d) (2018).

322. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 301.4(d)(1) (2018).

323. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 301.4(d)(1) (2018).

324. 28 C.F.R. § 541.25(a) (2019).

325. 28 C.F.R. § 541.25(a) (2019).

326. 28 C.F.R. § 541.26(a) (2019).

327. 28 C.F.R. § 541.26(b) (2019).

328. 28 C.F.R. § 541.26(b) (2019).

329. 28 C.F.R. § 541.26(c) (2019).

330. 28 C.F.R. § 541.32(b) (2019).

331. 28 C.F.R. § 541.33(a) (2019).

and courts will generally respect and uphold the warden's decision if certain procedural requirements are met.³³²

Some rules apply only to federal and state prisons that are in the area covered by the Second Circuit (which includes New York State). Other circuits might have different rules, so be sure to check for relevant case law if you are in a prison that is somewhere other than the Second Circuit. If you are in either a federal or state prison in the Second Circuit, there must be compelling reasons for placing you in confinement and continuing your confinement in administrative segregation upon periodic review.³³³ The reason given at a later review hearing may be the same as the original reason, but it must be deemed compelling, and it must take into account all the evidence available at the time of each review.³³⁴ If new, relevant information arises after your first hearing, the committee must consider the new evidence in deciding whether you still pose a threat to the safety or security of the prison. If a review of all the available evidence does not indicate that you pose a threat, prison officials cannot keep you in administrative segregation.³³⁵ If the reason for your confinement in administrative segregation changes, you have the right to know the new reason and to respond to it.³³⁶

There must be a record of those meetings showing that there was actually "meaningful consideration" of the reasons for the segregation status.³³⁷ In Giano v. Kelly, a federal district court in New York found that the committee did not conduct "meaningful" reviews of a New York State incarcerated person's segregation status and therefore violated the incarcerated person's due process rights.³³⁸ There were two main reasons for this conclusion. First, records of the committee meetings did not show that there was a consideration of the evidence available after he was first confined.³³⁹ Second, the records of the reviews contained no conclusions reached by the committee on the specific question of whether the incarcerated person continued to pose a threat to the safety or security of the

332. See Tellier v. Fields, 280 F.3d 69, 82 (2d Cir. 2000) (stating that although a warden's decision to place a incarcerated person in administrative detention is discretionary, this discretion is not "boundless and continuing").

333. Giano v. Kelly, No. 89-CV-727(C), 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9138, at *48 (W.D.N.Y. May 16, 2000) (unpublished) (holding that confinement in administrative segregation must be based on a compelling reason, and upon review the decision-maker must determine if that reason is still valid); Ramsey v. Squires, 879 F. Supp. 270, 296 (W.D.N.Y.), aff'd, Ramsey v. Squires, 71 F.3d 405 (2d Cir. 1995) (noting periodic review requirement and holding that officials must demonstrate a compelling government interest in the restriction and the purpose of the measure is not solely punishment); McClary v. Coughlin, 87 F. Supp. 2d 205, 212 (W.D.N.Y. 2000), aff'd sub nom. McClary v. Kelly, 237 F.3d 185 (2d Cir. 2001) (stating that the need to maintain the inmate in restricted housing must be subject to meaningful "periodic review" by prison officials).

334. Giano v. Kelly, No. 89-CV-727(c), 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9138, at *48–49 (W.D.N.Y. May 16, 2000) (unpublished); see Hewitt v. Helms, 459 U.S. 460, 476, 103 S. Ct. 864, 874, 74 L. Ed. 2d 675, 691 (1983).

335. See Giano v. Kelly, No. 89-CV-727(c), 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9138, at *49 (W.D.N.Y. May 16, 2000) (unpublished) (noting periodic review hearings must consider all evidence available at the time of the review hearing).

336. See Giano v. Kelly, No. 89-CV-727(c), 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9138, at *48–49 (W.D.N.Y. May 16, 2000) (unpublished) (noting that prisons may not use a pretext to keep an incarcerated person in segregated housing when he no longer presents a threat to the facility).

337. See Taylor v. Rodriguez, 238 F.3d 188, 193 (2d Cir. 2001) (stating that a hearing for placement in administrative segregation "is not 'meaningful' if a prisoner is given inadequate information about the basis of the charges against him"); Giano v. Kelly, No. 89-CV-727(C), 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9138, at *49–55 (W.D.N.Y. May 16, 2000) (unpublished) (holding that an administrative segregation committee did not give meaningful consideration to a incarcerated person's confinement in part because the incarcerated person was neither permitted to appear before, nor submit information to the committee, and did not regularly receive information regarding the committee's recommendations); see also Mathews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319, 334, 96 S. Ct. 893, 902, 47 L. Ed. 2d 18, 33 (1976) (establishing that the kind of meaningful consideration that satisfies due process is not satisfied by a standard set of procedures, but depends on the context in which the hearing is held).

338. Giano v. Kelly, No. 89-CV-727(C), 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9138 (W.D.N.Y. May 16, (2000) (unpublished).

339. Giano v. Kelly, No. 89-CV-727(C), 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9138, at *49 (W.D.N.Y. May 16, (2000) (unpublished).

prison.³⁴⁰ Reviewing courts will generally defer to prison officials' reasons and decisions. But the court in Giano v. Kelly did conclude the reason for the plaintiff's initial confinement was no longer an adequate reason for his continued confinement.³⁴¹ The decision about what is a threat to the security of the prison does not need to be based on any single decisive factor, and there does not need to be a finding that the incarcerated person committed some sort of misconduct.³⁴² In making the decision, the committee may consider the character of the people confined in the particular facility, as well as recent and long-standing relations among incarcerated people and between those who are incarcerated and the guards.³⁴³

In Taylor v. Rodriguez, the Second Circuit addressed what constitutes meaningful review for administrative segregation in the context of gang affiliation.³⁴⁴ In that case, an incarcerated person in a Connecticut prison was placed in administrative segregation because of "recent tension in B-Unit involving gang activity" and "statements by independent confidential informants."³⁴⁵ The incarcerated person's request for specific factual accusations was denied. The Second Circuit concluded that this notice was not enough to allow the incarcerated person to prepare his defense adequately.³⁴⁶ This means that if there are accusations that you are currently involved in a gang, prison officials have to tell you the specific facts that are supporting those accusations.³⁴⁷ Unclear statements or statements of fact without evidence are not enough. Prison officials cannot just accuse you of being affiliated with a gang—they must have a reason for making that accusation, and they must tell you what it is.

In Taylor, the Second Circuit also ruled that the review of evidence at the incarcerated person's hearing did not meet due process requirements. To satisfy due process, "the relevant question is whether there is any evidence in the record that could support the conclusion reached by the disciplinary board."³⁴⁸ The report of the hearing provided no details to support the decision to segregate the incarcerated person in administrative housing. The report referred to the attached statements of confidential informants, but they were not actually attached for the court to review.³⁴⁹ Prison officials do not have to reveal the identity of confidential informants or have those informants testify at the hearing. But prison officials must make an independent assessment of confidential informants' credibility.³⁵⁰ In Taylor, the record did not contain an assessment of the confidential informant's

340. Giano v. Kelly, No. 89-CV-727(C), 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9138, at *58–60 (W.D.N.Y. May 16, (2000) (unpublished).

341. Giano v. Kelly, No. 89-CV-727(C), 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9138, at *53–54 (W.D.N.Y. May 16, 2000) (unpublished) (concluding that since his attacker was now at a different facility, the incarcerated person could no longer pose a security risk).

342. Giano v. Kelly, No. 89-CV-727(C), 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9138, at *47 (W.D.N.Y. May 16, 2000).

343. See Hewitt v. Helms, 459 U.S. 460, 474, 103 S. Ct. 864, 872, 74 L. Ed. 2d 675, 689–690 (1983).

344. Taylor v. Rodriguez, 238 F.3d 188, 192–193 (2d Cir. 2001) (holding notice given to an incarcerated person was too vague to allow him to prepare a defense, and a decision-maker must assess the reliability of a confidential informant if relying on the informant's testimony). See JLM Chapter 31, "Security Classification and Gang Validation," for more information.

345. Taylor v. Rodriguez, 238 F.3d 188, 193 (2d Cir. 2001).

346. Taylor v. Rodriguez, 238 F.3d 188, 193 (2d Cir. 2001).

347. Taylor v. Rodriguez, 238 F.3d 188, 193 (2d Cir. 2001).

348. Superintendent v. Hill, 472 U.S. 445, 455–456, 105 S. Ct. 2768, 2774, 86 L. Ed. 2d 356, 365 (1985) (holding due process is satisfied if some evidence supports a prison disciplinary board's decision to reverse good-time credits); Edwards v. Balisok, 520 U.S. 641, 648, 117 S. Ct. 1584, 1589, 137 L. Ed.2d 906, 915 (1997) (citing Superintendent v. Hill, 472 U.S. 445, 455–456, 105 S. Ct. 2768, 2774, 86 L. Ed. 2d 356, 365 (1985)); McLean v. Holder, 550 Fed. Appx. 49, 49 (2d Cir. 2014).

349. Taylor v. Rodriguez, 238 F.3d 188, 194 (2d Cir. 2001).

350. Taylor v. Rodriguez, 238 F.3d 188, 193–194 (2d Cir. 2001) (citing Giakoumelos v. Coughlin, 88 F.3d 56, 61–62 (2d Cir. 1996)) (reasoning that confidential informant's identity in prison disciplinary hearing need not be disclosed because the "requirements of prison security are unique"). See also Giakoumelos v. Coughlin, 88 F.3d 56, 61 (2d Cir. 1996) (stating that a confidential informant's testimony is sufficient to support a prison disciplinary finding as long as there has been some examination of the informant's credibility); Russell v. Scully, 15 F.3d 219, credibility around the time of the hearing. Instead, the record contained only an official statement by a prison officer submitted two years after the hearing. The court found that this official statement was insufficient to place an incarcerated person in administrative detention.

G. Conclusion

If prison officials have changed the conditions of your confinement for the worse, and you believe they acted unfairly (for example, by not allowing you to present evidence on your behalf), you may be able to bring a due process challenge in federal court. This will depend on whether your state has made a law or regulation creating a protected liberty interest, and whether the change in your confinement taking away that liberty is “atypical and significant.”³⁵¹ Even if the change in your confinement does not meet this standard, you still may be able to challenge it through the prison administrative process or in state court.³⁵² Prison officials must follow their own rules, and you can challenge the change in your confinement if these rules have not been followed.³⁵³ In all cases, your first step is to go through your prison’s administrative process.³⁵⁴ You should learn what steps you need to take to do so. Sometimes, your prison must provide you with help in bringing your case, but you must ask for this help.³⁵⁵ And remember, you only have so much time to file an appeal, whether it is within the prison’s administrative process or in the courts. If you wait too long, you may lose your ability to do so.³⁵⁶

220 (2d Cir. 1993) (holding that the incarcerated person had not been deprived of a protected liberty interest because he was only subjected to administrative confinement pending his hearing and appeal and thus the question of whether he had a clearly established right to an independent examination of the confidential informants’ credibility did not need to be decided).

351. Sandin v. Conner, 515 U.S. 472, 115 S. Ct. 2293, 132 L. Ed. 2d 418 (1995); see also Part E(1).

352. See Part C.

353. See Uzzell v. Scully, 893 F. Supp. 259, 263 n.10 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (stating that, because prison officials must adhere to their own rules, incarcerated people may administratively challenge their keeplock confinement by raising procedural error claims); see also Part E(3).

354. See Part E.

355. See Part D(3).

356. See Part E(3).

CHAPTER 19

YOUR RIGHT TO COMMUNICATE WITH THE OUTSIDE WORLD*

A. Introduction

Prison administrators often restrict your right to communicate with courts, attorneys, family, friends, and the news media. They may also limit the types and sources of materials that you may read. Prison authorities do not, however, have absolute power to limit your right to communicate. The U.S. Constitution, state constitutions, and federal, state, and city regulations limit prison authorities' power to restrict your access to the outside world. Upon imprisonment, you keep some constitutional rights, including some of your First Amendment protections of speech, press, and association.² Within prisons, however, these rights can be limited under certain circumstances to accommodate the prison's "legitimate penological interests."³

This Part of the chapter addresses constitutional protections that apply to all incarcerated people in the United States and outlines the protections that state and federal regulations add to your right to correspond with the general public. Part B discusses your rights to communicate with the general public (friends, relatives, etc.). This Chapter focuses on New York State and federal law. Your own state's law may be different from the New York laws and may provide you with additional protections. See Chapter 2 of the JLM, "Appealing Your Conviction", for information on how to conduct thorough legal research.

Part C addresses your right to correspond with courts, public officials, and attorneys. Part D discusses your right to communicate over the Internet, both directly and through third parties. Part E provides a general outline of your right to receive publications such as magazines and books, and includes a discussion of your right to receive sexually explicit materials. Part F examines your right to communicate with the news media, and Part G discusses your right to receive visitors. Finally, Part H discusses telephone access.

The legality of a prison's restrictions on all of these rights are determined by a four-part test. Courts ask whether: (1) the prison regulation is rationally related to a legitimate government interest, (2) there is an alternative way for the incarcerated person or outside communicator to exercise the right even with the restriction in place, (3) the burden or cost to the prison is too great if the right is accommodated, (4) there are no readily available alternative options that the prison could put in place.⁴ This Chapter refers to this test as the "Turner reasonableness standard" (or sometimes just the

* This Chapter was revised by Kayla Stachniak based in part on previous versions by Jordan Kushner, Jody Cummings, R. Anthony Joseph, Stephen M. Latimer, Andrew Cameron, Richard F. Storrow, Patricia A. Sheehan, and Michael Sloyer. Special thanks to Mary Lynne Werlwas, Esq., and Gary Muldoon, Esq., co-author of Handling a Criminal Case in New York (West 2001), for their valuable comments.

2. U.S. CONST. amend. I; Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 545, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1877, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 472 (1979) (explaining that "convicted prisoners do not forfeit all constitutional protections by reason of their conviction and confinement in prison"). Courts generally avoid deciding to what extent rights survive incarceration and instead determine whether the restriction is reasonable regardless of whether the right survives. See, e.g., Overton v. Bazzetta, 539 U.S. 126, 131–132, 123 S. Ct. 2162, 2167, 156 L. Ed. 2d 162, 169–170 (2003) (declining to "explore or define" a an incarcerated person's right to associate upon finding that the restriction was rationally related to a "legitimate penological interest").

3. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 404, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1877, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 467 (1989) (citing Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987)) (noting that the warden may only reject communication if it is "determined [to be] detrimental to the security, good order, or discipline of the institution or if it might facilitate criminal activity.").

4. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89–91, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79–80 (1987); see also Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 414–416, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1882–1883, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 473–475 (1989) (applying Turner test to incoming mail); Overton v. Bazzetta, 539 U.S. 126, 131–132, 123 S. Ct. 2162, 2167–2168, 156 L. Ed. 2d 162, 170 (2003) (applying Turner test to visitation restrictions); Beard v. Banks, 548 U.S. 521, 530–533, 126 S. Ct. 2572, 2578–2580, 165 L. Ed. 2d 697, 705–708 (2006) (applying Turner test to denial of publications and photographs).

“Turner standard”) because of the Supreme Court case that announced the test.⁵ Restrictions on legal mail, outgoing general correspondence, and the practice of your religion are not considered under this test. For instance, prison officials may not restrict your right to communicate without a reason, but they may legally do so in situations where exercising that right might endanger the security or order of the prison, or the rehabilitation of incarcerated people. To determine the legality of a prison’s restrictions on your religious practice, courts ask whether the restriction places a substantial burden on your ability to practice your religion.⁶

Another important term that this Chapter will use is “discretion.” As you will learn, although the courts will independently examine all four of the Turner factors, they often give a lot of weight to the prison officials’ reasoning for the decision to restrict your right to communicate. One definition for discretion is: “An individual’s power to make decisions without anyone else’s advice or consent.”⁷ This means that the courts will allow the prison officials to decide (prison officials have the discretion to decide) whether or not to restrict your right to communicate based on their understanding of the effect that the exercise of the particular right would have on the prison’s interests. As long as their decision does not violate the Constitution. The reasoning is that prison officials understand the prison conditions better than judges and are therefore better able to determine how certain acts will affect the prison.

The rights this Chapter describes are about the conditions of your confinement, and are subject to the Prison Litigation Reform Act. Because of this, if you believe your right to communicate has been improperly denied, you must first raise the problem through your institution’s administrative grievance procedure, if there is one, before you can file a federal claim. See Chapter 15 of the JLM, “Inmate Grievance Procedures”, for further information on inmate grievance procedures. If you are unsuccessful or do not receive a satisfactory result through the inmate grievance procedure, you can bring a case under a federal law, 42 U.S.C. § 1983, in federal or state court. You could choose instead to file a tort action in state court (in the Court of Claims if you are in New York), or to file an Article 78 petition in state court if you are in New York. More information on all of these types of cases can be found in Chapter 5 (on choosing a court and a lawsuit), Chapter 14 (on the Prison Litigation Reform Act), Chapter 16 (42 U.S.C. § 1983 and Bivens Actions), Chapter 17 (Tort Actions), and Chapter 22 (New York’s Article 78) of the JLM.

If you decide to pursue a claim in federal court, you need to read JLM, Chapter 14, on the Prison Litigation Reform Act (“PLRA”). Failure to follow the PLRA’s requirements can lead, among other things, to the loss of good time credits and the loss of your right to bring future claims in federal court without paying the full filing fee.

B. The Right to General (Non-Legal) Correspondence

If you are incarcerated in a state facility, your right to communicate with the outside world is protected by the U.S. Constitution, and the constitution, statutes, and regulations of the state in which you are imprisoned. If you are incarcerated in a federal facility, your rights are protected by the U.S. Constitution and federal statutes and regulations. If your mail is coming from state or federal courts, attorneys, or certain public officials, your mail is considered “legal mail.” For more information on your rights regarding legal mail, see Section C of this chapter of the JLM. This Section B talks about your rights regarding general or non-legal correspondence.

1. Federal Constitutional Protections

The First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution creates a minimum level of protection of your right to communicate with the outside world. No government body may pass laws or regulations falling below this level of protection. Some states may also provide more protection through state constitutions and statutes. The following is a discussion of the U.S. Constitution’s minimum guarantees of your right to communicate. While reading the information below, it is important to keep in mind that courts distinguish between incoming and outgoing mail.

5. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64 (1987).

6. 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1 (2020).

7. Discretion, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

Originally, the case of Procunier v. Martinez provided a standard to determine the legality of prison regulations on both incoming and outgoing mail. In that case, the U.S. Supreme Court held that unless the regulation was implemented to support the substantial government interests of security concerns, order, or rehabilitation, arbitrary censorship of both incoming and outgoing general prison correspondence (regulations preventing you from sending or receiving all or part of your mail) violates the First Amendment right to free speech of both incarcerated people and their correspondents.⁸ The Court also held that when some censorship was justified, the censorship could not be greater than necessary to serve valid government interests.⁹ This case applied to both incoming and outgoing mail. Later, the case Thornburgh v. Abbott, the Supreme Court partially overruled Martinez by specifying that the Martinez standard applies only to outgoing correspondence, which is correspondence sent by an incarcerated person to someone outside the prison.¹⁰

Restrictions on incoming mail are greater than on outgoing mail because incoming mail can pose a greater security threat. For incoming correspondence (correspondence received by an incarcerated person from the outside), a different standard applies. This standard comes from Turner v. Safley, and states that restrictions on incoming mail are valid if they are “reasonably related to legitimate penological interests.”¹¹ A penological interest is an interest of the prison system related to the management of incarcerated people, such as maintaining security or rehabilitation. Four factors must be considered in determining whether a limitation on your incoming mail meets this standard:

- (1) the rational connection between the mail restriction and the prison’s penological interest,
- (2) alternatives available to incarcerated people to exercise their rights,
- (3) the burden of accommodating rights, and
- (4) the lack of alternatives available to prisons in satisfying their interests.¹²

The reason the Abbott Court gave for treating incoming and outgoing mail differently was that mail containing contraband that comes into the prison is more of a security threat than mail that leaves the prison.¹³

Although the Turner standard may appear to be similar to the Martinez standard, there is a significant difference between the two. To satisfy the Turner standard (for incoming correspondence), prison officials must simply show the regulation could potentially achieve a legitimate goal. To meet the Martinez standard (for outgoing correspondence), officials must demonstrate that the restriction actually achieves an important goal. There are two main differences between the two standards: (1) the purposes that restrictions on outgoing mail are meant to serve must be important and not just legitimate, and (2) restrictions on outgoing mail must be shown to be more effective than restrictions on incoming mail need to be. As a result, it is easier to convince a judge that restrictions on outgoing mail are unconstitutional than it is to show that restrictions on incoming mail are unconstitutional. The standards for incoming and outgoing correspondence are explained further below with the help of examples to indicate how courts have interpreted them.

8. Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 412–414, 94 S. Ct. 1800, 1811, 40 L. Ed. 2d 224, 239–240 (1974).

9. Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 412–414, 94 S. Ct. 1800, 1811–1812, 40 L. Ed. 2d 224, 239–240 (1974). Note that the Supreme Court has severely limited the force of this requirement by refusing to interpret it as imposing a “least restrictive means” test. This means that lower courts will not invalidate a regulation simply because a less restrictive alternative is proposed. See Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 411, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1883, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 474 (1989), partially overturning Procunier.

10. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 413, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1881, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 473 (1989).

11. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261–2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987). Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 413, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1881, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 473 (1989) (finding that outgoing materials are less likely to cause disorder than incoming materials and determining that incoming mail should be held to a higher standard of inspection than outgoing mail).

12. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89–91, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79–80 (1987).

13. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 412–414, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1881–1882, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 472–473 (1989).

(a) Outgoing Correspondence

Restrictions on outgoing, non-legal mail must further an important governmental objective, and the restriction must not be greater than necessary.¹⁴ Courts have generally upheld four important types of regulations on outgoing mail under this standard: (1) regulations banning letter kiting (including mail to a third party in your letter to someone else), (2) setting postage limits, (3) banning inmate-to-inmate correspondence, and (4) requiring approved correspondence lists.¹⁵

Under New York State regulations, when the prison authorities have a reason to suspect that an incarcerated person is kiting mail, they may open that person's outgoing mail.¹⁶ Kiting is when you send a message to one person, and inside that letter, include another message that will be sent to someone else. The authorities must have proof that the officials reasonably believed the incarcerated person was kiting mail.¹⁷ Receiving incoming kited mail is also prohibited, though it is permissible for someone to send you the writing of a child within an adult's correspondence.¹⁸

Courts have also held that prison authorities are permitted to limit the amount of postage you can spend on outgoing mail.¹⁹ Similarly, courts have generally allowed prison policies that limit receiving postage in the mail and providing free postage.²⁰ These restrictions must relate to the legitimate interest of prison security. Examples of legitimate interests of security could be concerns of increased theft and unregulated transactions when stamps are used as currency, or because drugs can be smuggled on stamps.²¹

Many prisons completely ban inmate-to-inmate correspondence, and these restrictions have generally been upheld as reasonably relating to prison security.²² As inmate-to-inmate correspondence

14. Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 413–414, 94 S. Ct. 1800, 1811–1812, 40 L. Ed. 2d 224, 240 (1974); Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 413, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1881, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 473 (1989) (limiting the Martinez test to outgoing mail).

15. See, e.g., United States v. Felipe, 148 F.3d 101, 110 (2d Cir. 1998) (holding that interception of mail sent in violation of anti-kiting regulations [regulations banning communicating to a third party through someone else] was not unconstitutional, because the government had evidence from letters written by incarcerated defendant that the defendant attempted to send mail for the purposes of recruiting for membership of his gang and planning to commit further crimes). See, e.g., Davidson v. Mann, 129 F.3d 700, 702 (2d Cir. 1997) (holding that limiting the number of stamps incarcerated people could purchase was not unconstitutional). See, e.g., Purnell v. Lord, 952 F.2d 679, 683 (2d Cir. 1992) (holding that banning correspondence between two specific incarcerated people for security reasons did not violate the First Amendment). See, e.g., Palmigiano v. Travisono, 317 F. Supp. 776, 791 (D.R.I. 1970) (holding that a requirement for an approved addressee list was not a constitutional violation so long as “the criteria used to create lists are rationally related to purposes of confinement and security” of the prison facility).

16. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 720.3(p) (2020); see United States v. Felipe, 148 F.3d 101, 110 (2d Cir. 1998) (upholding restrictions on kiting).

17. See Ode v. Kelly, 159 A.D.2d 1000, 1000, 552 N.Y.S.2d 475, 476 (4th Dept. 1990) (finding inspection of an incarcerated person's outgoing mail violated his rights where the superintendent had no reason to suspect an incarcerated person was kiting mail). But see Minigan v. Irvin, 977 F. Supp. 607, 609–610 (W.D.N.Y. 1997) (permitting screening of an incarcerated person's outgoing mail provided there is “good cause pursuant to legitimate prison regulations and directives.”).

18. STATE OF NEW YORK, DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS AND COMMUNITY SUPERVISION, HANDBOOK FOR THE FAMILIES AND FRIENDS OF NEW YORK STATE DOCCS INMATES 6 (2019), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2020/01/family-handbook-english-final-12.2019-002.pdf> (last visited May 22, 2020).

19. See Gittens v. Sullivan, 670 F. Supp. 119, 123 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) (finding “$1.10 per week for stamps and an additional advance of $36 for legal mailings satisfie[d] the constitutional minimum for access to the courts”); see also Davidson v. Mann, 129 F.3d 700, 702 (2d Cir. 1997) (upholding limits on an incarcerated person's access to stamps for non-legal mail).

20. See Johnson v. Goord, 445 F.3d 532, 534 (2d Cir. 2006) (holding that an incarcerated person has no “constitutional right to unlimited free postage for non-legal mail”).

21. Johnson v. Goord, 445 F.3d 532, 535 (2d Cir. 2006).

22. See, e.g., Purnell v. Lord, 952 F.2d 679, 683 (2d Cir. 1992) (finding restriction on correspondence between specific incarcerated people at different facilities reasonably related to security interests); Farrell v. Peters, 951 F.2d 862, 863 (7th Cir. 1992) (finding prevention of correspondence between two incarcerated people involves both outgoing and incoming correspondence, it presents different circumstances from purely outgoing mail to a person that is not incarcerated. Inmate-to-inmate correspondence was at issue in Turner v. Safley, in which the Supreme Court announced the reasonable relation standard that is applied in all incoming correspondence cases and in many outgoing correspondence cases.²³ In addition, courts have also found restrictions barring correspondence between current and former inmates to be constitutional because they are rationally related to security interests such as preventing escapes and violent acts.²⁴

It is unclear whether “approved correspondence lists” for outgoing non-legal mail are constitutional. In Milburn v. McNiff, a New York court found unconstitutional a policy requiring incarcerated people who wanted to communicate with people not on their “approved correspondence lists” to submit a “request to correspond form” to the addressee.²⁵ On the other hand, various federal district courts have found this kind of regulation to be “a reasonable method of maintaining prison security without undue restriction on the First Amendment rights of prisoners.”²⁶ Such lists, of course, must pass Martinez and have only been upheld when a substantial penological interest in security or rehabilitation is involved.²⁷ In New York, state courts might follow McNiff and prohibit the use of this type of list all together. But, in other states or in federal court, the lists may be upheld, provided they are legitimately used to further prison security or rehabilitation.²⁸

In addition to the above, if you have already been sentenced and are in a minimum or low security level prison, you generally must provide a complete return address on all outgoing mail, otherwise it may be opened by prison staff.²⁹

Finally, courts do not allow prison officials to censor and discipline incarcerated people based on statements in mail that are intended to insult prison personnel, even if such statements would be who claimed to be common-law spouses was reasonably related to security where they had been criminal accomplices prior to their incarceration).

23. See generally Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 91–93, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262–2264, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 80–82 (1987) (upholding regulation barring inmate-to-inmate correspondence because prison had legitimate interest in stopping plans to escape or plans to commit violent acts shared in correspondence).

24. See Nasir v. Morgan, 350 F.3d 366, 371–372 (3d Cir. 2003).

25. Milburn v. McNiff, 81 A.D.2d 587, 589, 437 N.Y.S.2d 445, 448 (2d Dept. 1981) (further finding that there was no substantial government interest in restricting an incarcerated person’s ability to send letters to a local newspaper).

26. Palmigiano v. Travisono, 317 F. Supp. 776, 791 (D.R.I. 1970) (holding that the approved correspondence lists were constitutional, but striking other mail surveillance on First Amendment grounds); see also George v. Smith, No. 05-C-403-C, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16139, at *20 (W.D. Wis. Aug. 2, 2005) (unpublished) (“In the interest of maintaining prison security, prison officials may lawfully limit an inmate to corresponding with individuals on a pre-approved list.”); Collins v. Schoonfield, 344 F. Supp. 257, 276 (D. Md. 1972) (disagreeing with the broad prohibition on reading inmate mail under Palmigiano v. Travisono and discussing potential legitimacy of prisons reading some outgoing mail). But see Guajardo v. Estelle, 580 F.2d 748, 755 (5th Cir. 1978) (finding unconstitutional a policy limiting letters sent by incarcerated people to family and an approved list of ten individuals, excluding immediate family members, religious leaders, special correspondents, attorneys or media correspondents, because it is not essential to further legitimate security interests and is often abused as applied); Finney v. Arkansas Bd. of Corr., 505 F.2d 194, 211–212 (8th Cir. 1974) (rejecting an approved correspondence list procedure because the following justifications were not enough under Martinez: prospectively investigating potential visitors, universally prohibiting correspondence with former incarcerated people, and assuring that no unwanted mail was received by unapproved recipients).

27. See Finney v. Arkansas Bd. of Corr., 505 F.2d 194, 211 (8th Cir. 1974) (finding an approved correspondence list unconstitutional where the prison justified it as pre-screening potential visitors and protecting those who might not want to receive mail from incarcerated people).

28. Cf. United States v. Felipe, 148 F.3d 101, 110–111 (2d Cir. 1998) (upholding as serving security interests the unique, severe restrictions on mail and visitation to a court-approved list for gang member convicted of racketeering).

29. See, e.g., 28 C.F.R. § 540.14(c)(1)(iv) (2020) (staff at a minimum or low security federal prison may open the incarcerated person’s outgoing mail if the incarcerated person has not filled out the return address properly); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 720.3(i) (2020) (requiring New York State incarcerated people to include their return addresses on outgoing mail).

prohibited if made verbally.³⁰ Courts have also allowed regulations that call for the routine inspection of all non-legal outgoing mail.³¹ They have distinguished between censorship and inspection for security reasons.³² One court has even upheld the censorship of outgoing mail under the Martinez standard, although the incarcerated plaintiff in the case was held in a mental institution, rather than a jail or prison.³³

When the regulation at issue involves both incoming and outgoing correspondence, courts have applied the Turner standard.³⁴ A few courts have even departed entirely from the Martinez standard, instead applying the Turner reasonableness standard to outgoing mail as well. In general, courts are increasingly accepting of prison officials' reasons for placing restrictions on outgoing correspondence.³⁵

(b) Incoming Correspondence

Regarding the restriction of incoming correspondence (mail and publications sent to you), the Court in Thornburgh v. Abbott held that the proper standard of review was the one stated in Turner v. Safley.³⁶ In Thornburgh, the Court held that “[w]here the regulations at issue concern the entry of materials into the prison, . . . a regulation that gives prison authorities broad discretion is

30. Cases where incarcerated people are not certain if their defamatory (insulting) comments will be read are treated differently than cases involving defamatory comments directed at prison officials (for example, if someone wrote threats to a guard in a letter so that the guard reading the letter would see them). See Loggins v. Delo, 999 F.2d 364, 367 (8th Cir. 1993) (finding that prison official violated incarcerated people's 1st Amendment rights by disciplining an incarcerated person after reading an incarcerated person's letter to his brother that commented about prison guards where the letter did not raise a security risk and was not directed towards staff); Brooks v. Andolina, 826 F.2d 1266, 1268 (3d Cir. 1987) (finding no government interest in censorship); Hall v. Curran, 818 F.2d 1040, 1044–1045 (2d Cir. 1987) (finding the district court should not have granted summary judgment to prison administrator against an incarcerated person's 1st Amendment claim for censorship of his statements critical of prison administration). But see Leonard v. Nix, 55 F.3d 370, 376 (8th Cir. 1995) (finding that incarcerated people cannot use supposed personal communication to send letters that are extremely offensive to prison personnel if their purpose is only to defame (insult) prison personnel and not to communicate).

31. Bell-Bey v. Williams, 87 F.3d 832, 837–838 (6th Cir. 1996) (holding that a mail inspection procedure did not violate an incarcerated person's 1st Amendment rights because the procedure was limited to protecting the legitimate government interest of managing limited prison resources and satisfied the Martinez rule); Stow v. Grimaldi, 993 F.2d 1002, 1004 (1st Cir. 1993) (finding that inspection procedures requiring outgoing mail to be submitted for inspection in unsealed envelope served the legitimate government interest of safety).

32. Altizer v. Deeds, 191 F.3d 540, 549 (4th Cir. 1999) (holding that inspection of an incarcerated person's outgoing mail for contraband was not a constitutional violation since there is a substantial government interest in security and the incarcerated person had previously tried to mail a homemade knife).

33. Martyr v. Mazur-Hart, 789 F. Supp. 1081, 1086–1087 (D. Or. 1992) (upholding a mental institution's refusal to send letters written by an incarcerated person because the censorship furthered the important governmental interest of rehabilitation; the writing hindered the incarcerated person's progress).

34. See Duamutef v. Hollins, 297 F.3d 108, 113 (2d Cir. 2002) (upholding mail watch on all incoming and outgoing mail based on Turner standard as furthering the government interest of security where inflammatory material had previously circulated through the mail); Sisneros v. Nix, 884 F. Supp. 1313, 1331–1333 (S.D. Iowa 1995) (upholding under the Turner standard a regulation that prohibited the delivery to or from an incarcerated person of letters written in a language other than English, unless that language was the only one an incarcerated person spoke); Martin v. Rison, 741 F. Supp. 1406, 1413–1417 (N.D. Cal. 1990) (upholding a regulation that prohibited incarcerated people from acting as reporters for newspapers published outside the prison; the court based its decision in part on the fact that the article, although published outside the prison, was read within the prison and caused agitation amongst incarcerated people resulting in a need for security adjustment, and meriting application of the Turner standard to the regulation).

35. Perry v. Secretary, Florida Dept. of Corr., 664 F.3d 1359, 1365 (11th Cir. 2011) (citing Turner standard as basis for reviewing incarcerated people's solicitation of pen pals); Butti v. Unger, No. 04-5381, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14408, at *9 (S.D.N.Y. July 15, 2005) (unpublished) (citing Turner standard as basis for surveillance of an incarcerated person's outgoing mail when officials had “a reasonable suspicion of his continuing criminal activity, and [the surveillance] was reasonably related to legitimate penological interests”).

36. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 404, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1877, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 467 (1989) (citing Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261–2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987)).

appropriate.”³⁷ Under the Turner standard, restrictions are valid if they are reasonably related to a legitimate penological interest (for example, security, order, or rehabilitation of incarcerated people). This “reasonably related” standard is more general than the Martinez standard and less protective of your right to communicate.

The Court has identified four factors for determining whether a restriction meets the reasonably related standard. The first and most important factor is whether the regulation is both neutral and rationally related to the alleged legitimate government interest.³⁸ This factor can be broken down into three subparts:

- (1) Whether the government interest or goal is legitimate,
- (2) Whether the regulation is rationally related to that interest or goal, and
- (3) Whether the regulation is neutral.³⁹

Subpart (1), government interest in restricting mail, is usually either maintenance of prison security or screening for contraband. Courts almost always hold these two interests legitimate.⁴⁰ For subpart (2), under the Turner standard, the relationship between a mail restriction and the stated government interest does not need to be very close. Prisons do not need to prove the restrictions will actually promote security or screen contraband in all cases; they only need to convince the court that the restriction might achieve these goals. Courts usually find the government’s argument to be valid.⁴¹ Nevertheless, when a court does invalidate a mail restriction, it usually does so because there is no rational relationship between the restriction and the government interest.⁴² Finally, for subpart (3), regulations are considered neutral when the government interest is unrelated to suppressing expression. In other words, the restriction is neutral as long as the purpose of the restriction is something other than to stop you from expressing yourself.⁴³

The second factor of the reasonably related standard is whether the regulation leaves you, the incarcerated person, with another way to exercise the asserted right.⁴⁴ Courts usually define the right broadly, which makes it easier to find some way for you to still exercise that right. For example, the regulation in Thornburgh v. Abbott prohibited publications containing sexually explicit material. Instead of defining the right in question as the right to receive sexually explicit materials, the court

37. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 416, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1883, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 475 (1989).

38. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89–90, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987).

39. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 414, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1882, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 473 (1989).

40. See, e.g., Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 407–408, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1878–1879, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 469 (1989) (“Acknowledging the expertise of [prison] officials and that the judiciary is ‘ill equipped’ to deal with the difficult and delicate problems of prison management, this Court has afforded considerable deference to the determinations of prison administrators who, in the interest of security, regulate the relations between prisoners and the outside world”); Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447 (1979) (emphasizing that courts should defer to prison administrators’ judgment regarding the danger of contraband being introduced into prisons); Pell v. Procunier, 417 U.S. 817, 823, 94 S. Ct. 2800, 2804, 41 L. Ed. 2d 495, 502 (1974) (“[C]entral to all other corrections goals is the institutional consideration of internal security within the corrections facilities themselves.”).

41. E.g., Avery v. Powell, 806 F. Supp. 7, 10 (D.N.H. 1992) (finding a regulation that prohibited incarcerated people from receiving blank greeting cards from anyone other than the vendor to be rationally connected to the interests of promoting security and screening for contraband; the court noted that cards are often multipart, contained within envelopes, or decorated with metals or flammable substances, so cards received from non-vendors would necessitate time-consuming searches). See also Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 93, S. Ct. 2254, 2264, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 82 (1987) (holding constitutional a regulation restricting correspondence between incarcerated people); Giano v. Senkowski, 54 F.3d 1050, 1056 (2d Cir. 1995) (affirming constitutionality of policy prohibiting incarcerated people from possessing sexually explicit photographs).

42. See, e.g., Crofton v. Roe, 170 F.3d 957, 960–961 (9th Cir. 1999) (invalidating a regulation that limited the publications incarcerated people can receive to those ordered and paid for directly by the incarcerated person because the court found no rational relation between the regulation and the asserted interests of screening for contraband, minimizing fire hazards, or preventing overcrowding).

43. See Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 415–416, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1882–1883, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 474 (1989).

44. See Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 417, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1883, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 475–476 (1989) (citing Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 90, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987)).

defined the right more broadly as the right to expression, which it held could be exercised through the many other publications that were not prohibited.⁴⁵

The third and fourth factors are usually interrelated. The third factor is the impact that accommodating the right will have on other incarcerated people, guards, and prison resources. The fourth factor is whether there are any ready alternatives to the proposed regulation.⁴⁶ Because the accommodation of a right will usually require alternatives to the regulation, these two factors are often combined. For example, accommodating an incarcerated person's right to receive blank greeting cards from non-vendors would require extensive searches of more incoming mail. Such searches may be considered both an unacceptable impact of the accommodation of the right and an unacceptable alternative to the regulation at issue.⁴⁷

(c) “As Applied” versus “Facial” Challenges

Most cases discussed in this Chapter so far involve “facial” challenges—challenges to the regulation as written. But, because many prison regulations are vague, it is often hard for judges to object to them. In such cases, incarcerated people may instead bring an “as applied” challenge. As applied challenges occur when an incarcerated person objects to the way prison officials apply a regulation to him, rather than to the regulation itself.

*Nichols v. Nix*⁴⁸ and *Lyon v. Grossheim*⁴⁹ are good examples of as applied challenges to prison policies.⁵⁰ In both cases, the regulation at issue gave the superintendent power to deny an incarcerated person any publication likely to be disruptive or to produce violence. The court upheld the regulation as it was written because it facially passed the Turner standard: Preventing disruptions and violence is always a legitimate goal, and the regulation only applies to publications that are likely to hinder this goal. However, the court held that prison officials applied the regulation in an unconstitutional manner. In both cases, the court found that there was no evidence that the publications at issue were likely to threaten prison security because other incarcerated people had possessed similar publications without incident.⁵¹

If you think a prison policy is being applied in an unconstitutional way, you can challenge it even though it may look, as written, like policies that courts have upheld in the past.

(d) Procedural Safeguards

Note that several important procedural safeguards upheld by the Supreme Court in Procunier v. Martinez must still be respected by prison officials.⁵² First, an incarcerated person should be notified if prison officials return a letter addressed to him or if a letter by an incarcerated person is returned to the prison. Second, the author of the returned letter should be given a reasonable opportunity to protest the decision to restrict.⁵³

45. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 418, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1884, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 476 (1989).

46. See Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 418, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1884, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 476 (1989) (citing Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 90, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987)).

47. Avery v. Powell, 806 F. Supp. 7, 10–11 (D.N.H. 1992).

48. Nichols v. Nix, 810 F. Supp. 1448, 1466–1467 (S.D. Iowa 1993) (striking down a regulation as it was used to restrict publications that promoted racial segregation).

49. Lyon v. Grossheim, 803 F. Supp. 1538, 1540, 1554–1555 (S.D. Iowa 1992) (invalidating an official action denying incarcerated people access to “anti-Catholic” comic books which also contained negative references to homosexuality and the Soviet Union).

50. The cases were both decided in the Southern District of Iowa. Though they are only binding on prisons in that district, they provide good examples of as-applied challenges that you can bring elsewhere.

51. Nichols v. Nix, 810 F. Supp. 1448, 1463 (S.D. Iowa 1993) (“[T]he record is...devoid of evidence of past inmate confrontations as a result of other inmates possessing or reading [such] publications.”); Lyon v. Grossheim, 803 F. Supp. 1538, 1552 (S.D. Iowa 1992) (“There is...no evidence of past confrontations as a result of other inmates possessing or reading [such] publications.”).

52. Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 418–419, 94 S. Ct. 1800, 1814, 40 L. Ed. 2d 224, 243 (1974). See also Michael Mushlin, Rights of Prisoners § 14.6 (5th ed. 2017 & Supp. 2020) (describing procedural safeguards required of any prison censorship scheme).

53. Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 418–419, 94 S. Ct. 1800, 1814, 40 L. Ed. 2d 224, 243 (1974).

2. State and Federal Protections of the Right to General (Non-Legal) Correspondence

State and federal regulations may give you more rights than those the U.S. Constitution provides—these regulations cannot take away any rights guaranteed by the Constitution, but they can provide more than the Constitution does. The following is a discussion of New York State and City regulations, as well as federal regulations governing your right to communicate in writing with the general public. Incarcerated people in other states must consult their state and local regulations.⁵⁴

(a) New York State and City Regulations

In New York, the specific regulations governing your right to communicate with the outside world depend on the type of institution in which you are imprisoned. There are three different sets of regulations. One set applies only to prisons run by the New York State Department of Correctional Services (for example, Attica). The second applies to all city and county prisons and jails (for example, Nassau County Jail), and the third applies only to New York City prisons and jails (for example, Rikers Island). The Department of Correctional Services issued the first set of regulations; the New York State Commission of Correction, the second; and the New York City Department of Correction and/or the Board of Correction, the third. If you are in a New York City jail, both the second and third sets of regulations apply to you. If more than one set of regulations applies to you, courts will use the one that gives you more protection.

New York State regulations, which apply to prisons run by the Department of Correctional Services, provide protections to your right to communicate beyond the minimum required by the Constitution. These regulations allow incarcerated people, with some restrictions, to correspond with any person.⁵⁵ State regulations only prohibit incarcerated people from corresponding with people who have indicated they do not wish to receive mail from the incarcerated person or with persons listed on a court order of protection.⁵⁶ Furthermore, incarcerated people must receive advance approval in order to correspond with unrelated minors, persons on parole or probation, other New York incarcerated people, employees or former employees of the Department of Correctional Services, and victims of the incarcerated person's crime(s).⁵⁷ State regulations also prohibit prison officials from opening, inspecting, or reading outgoing correspondence (except for oversized envelopes, parcels, and incarcerated person-to-incarcerated person correspondence) without written authorization from the facility superintendent.⁵⁸ The superintendent cannot provide such authorization unless there is a reason to believe that the correspondence violates the department's regulations or that it threatens the safety, security, or good order of the prison. If authorization is given, the superintendent must set forth, in writing, the specific facts justifying it.⁵⁹

With respect to incoming mail, New York State regulations require the inspection of all such mail, but prohibit the reading of incoming correspondence (except for letters between incarcerated people and business mail) unless there is evidence that the mail contains plans for sending contraband in or out of the prison, plans for criminal activity, or information that would create a danger to others or to the prison's security and good order.⁶⁰ The facility superintendent must provide written authorization to read incoming correspondence and must specify why reading the mail is necessary.⁶¹ It is also important to be aware of your facility's specific restrictions on what can be sent through the mail; failing to follow these rules can result in your mail not reaching you.⁶²

54. JLM, Chapter 2, "Introduction to Legal Research," will be helpful in conducting this research.

55. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 720.3 (2020).

56. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 720.3(a) (2020).

57. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 720.3(b) (2020).

58. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, §§ 720.3(c)–(e) (2020).

59. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 720.3(e)(1) (2020).

60. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 720.4(a)(2) (2020).

61. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 720.4(f) (2020).

62. Items prohibited in incoming correspondence include obscene, threatening, or fraudulent materials, nude photographs, Polaroid pictures, postage stamps, and letters from others (kiting) except minor children. There is also a five-page limit on incoming correspondence. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, §§ 712.2, 720.4(c)–

The local county jail regulations also provide protections.⁶³ These regulations provide that you may correspond, with a few restrictions, with anyone you wish. Prison officials may not impose restrictions based on the amount of mail sent or received, or based on the language in which the correspondence is written.⁶⁴ Outgoing correspondence may not be opened or read unless the chief administrative officer gives written approval based on a “reasonable suspicion” that the correspondence threatens the security of the prison or of another person.⁶⁵ Incoming correspondence may be opened outside the presence of the incarcerated person-recipient to ensure the absence of contraband, but it may not be read without the written approval of the chief administrative officer.⁶⁶ Any information prison officials obtain by opening your incoming correspondence without the superintendent’s authorization may not be used in a disciplinary hearing against you.⁶⁷

New York City has additional standards set out in the Minimum Standards Regulating the Conditions of Confinement.⁶⁸ New York City incarcerated people are urged to familiarize themselves with these standards. Find out if your prison library has a copy; if it does not, ask the librarian to get one. Copies of “Minimum Standards” can be obtained by writing to:

City of New York
Board of Correction
51 Chambers Street, Room 923
New York, NY 10007

(b) Federal Regulations

If you are incarcerated in a federal prison (in a prison run by the Bureau of Prisons), you are subject to mail regulations the Federal Bureau of Prisons has issued. These rules apply only to incarcerated people who have been sentenced to serve a period of time in a prison run by the Bureau of Prisons. Some rules concerning general correspondence follow. The warden of each prison has the authority to establish your rules of correspondence.⁶⁹ The specific rules the warden develops must be communicated to you in writing upon arrival at the prison.⁷⁰ Prison authorities may open and read your mail if they determine doing so is necessary to maintain security or monitor a specific problem.⁷¹ They may not read mail that is “special” or “privileged,” although they may open it (in your presence only) to ensure that there is no contraband in the envelope.⁷² “Special” or “privileged” mail includes mail from attorneys, law enforcement officers, courts, and public officials. Regulations governing privileged mail are discussed further in Part C of this Chapter.

Prison officials may not open and read mail you are sending from a minimum-security or low-security prison unless they have “reason to believe [the mail] would interfere with the orderly running [of the prison], that it would be threatening to the recipient, or that it would facilitate

(d) (2020). See also State of N.Y. Department of Corrections And Community Supervision, Directive No. 4911, Packages & Articles Sent or Brought to Facilities (2013) (as revised, Jun. 28, 2019), <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/4911.pdf> (last visited May 23, 2020) (additional restrictions on packages brought or sent to you in prison).

63. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7004 (2020).

64. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7004.1(b) (2020).

65. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7004.2 (f)–(g) (2020).

66. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7004.3 (a)–(b) (2020).

67. See Chavis v. Goord, 265 A.D.2d 798, 798, 697 N.Y.S.2d 409, 410 (4th Dept. 1999) (reversing a disciplinary decision because prison investigation relied on information obtained through unauthorized review of an incarcerated person’s mail).

68. Rules of the City of New York, Tit. 40, Ch. 1, § 11, available at <http://www1.nyc.gov/site/boc/jail-regulations/jail-regulations.page> (last visited May 23, 2020).

69. 28 C.F.R. § 540.10 (2020).

70. 28 C.F.R. § 540.12(b) (2020).

71. 28 C.F.R. §§ 540.12(b), 540.14(a) (2020).

72. 28 C.F.R. § 540.12(b) (2020).

criminal activity.”⁷³ In medium- and high-security institutions, prison officials may read all mail other than “special mail.”⁷⁴

Federal prisons must supply you with paper and envelopes at no cost, but you must pay for stamps. If you cannot afford postage, the warden must provide stamps for a reasonable number of letters per month.⁷⁵

For more information and details about the federal regulations, you should consult the relevant regulations themselves. They can be found in the Code of Federal Regulations, 28 C.F.R. § 540.

3. A Note on Foreign-Language Materials

The ability of prisons to restrict correspondence in foreign languages remains unclear. Some courts have found that regulations prohibiting incarcerated people from writing and receiving letters in languages that cannot be understood by prison officials are permissible as reasonably related to the legitimate prison interest of security.⁷⁶ On the other hand, some courts have held that a complete ban on all foreign-language correspondence is not rational.⁷⁷ Additionally, some courts have found the exclusion of foreign-language publications unreasonable under this standard.⁷⁸ By statute in New York State, prison officials may not impose restrictions based on the language in which the mail is written.⁷⁹ Make sure to check statutes, regulations, and court decisions in your state to find out what the law is.

C. Legal Correspondence with Courts, Public Officials, and Attorneys: Privileged Correspondence

Under Procunier v. Martinez and Thornburgh v. Abbott, two important cases discussed in Part B(1) of this Chapter, both legal and non-legal correspondence generally receive protection under the First Amendment.⁸⁰ However, correspondence with courts, public officials, and attorneys (“legal mail”) receives heightened protection because censorship of this mail implicates two other important concerns: your right of meaningful access to the courts and the attorney-client privilege. This Section discusses each of these sources of protection separately. Mail to and from attorneys, courts, 73. 28 C.F.R. § 540.14 (c)(1)(i) (2020). Prison authorities can also read this mail if you are on a restricted correspondence list, if the mail is being sent to another incarcerated person, or if the return address on the envelope is incomplete. 28 C.F.R. §§ 540.14 (c)(1)(ii)–(iv) (2020).

74. 28 C.F.R. § 540.14(c)(2) (2020).

75. 28 C.F.R. §§ 540.21(a), (b), (d), (e) (2020). See also Gittens v. Sullivan, 670 F. Supp. 119, 121, 123 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) (finding reasonable the provision of an amount equal to five free stamps per week for all correspondence, in addition to a $20 advance for legal mail, where the superintendent may advance additional funds for postage on legal mail if the incarcerated person exceeds the twenty dollar limit), aff’d, 848 F.2d 389 (2nd Cir. 1988).

76. See, e.g., Ortiz v. Fort Dodge Corr. Facility, 368 F.3d 1024, 1026–1027 (8th Cir. 2004) (finding acceptable a regulation that prohibited incarcerated people from writing letters in Spanish absent a ready alternative interpreter option). See also Sisneros v. Nix, 884 F. Supp. 1313, 1331–1333 (S.D. Iowa 1995) (upholding a regulation that prohibited the delivery of letters to or from an incarcerated person written in a language other than English unless that language was the only one spoken by an incarcerated person), aff’d in part and rev’d in part on other grounds, 95 F.3d 749, 750 (8th Cir. 1996); Nelson v. Woodford, No. C 04-03684 CRB (PR), 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11120, at *25–30 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 2, 2006) (unpublished) (stating that a ban on foreign-language publications was rationally related to the security goal of preventing coded communication by gangs), aff’d, 249 Fed. Appx. 529, 530 (9th Cir. 2007).

77. Thongvanh v. Thalacker, 17 F.3d 256, 259 (8th Cir. 1994) (holding that since the prison could have secured free translation services and the facility did not otherwise read every single piece of correspondence anyway, the ban on a Lao incarcerated person’s correspondence was not rational).

78. See, e.g., Kikimura v. Turner, 28 F.3d 592, 598–600 (7th Cir. 1994) (invalidating a complete ban on foreign-language materials under the Turner test where the prison had made an attempt to accommodate the incarcerated person).

79. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7004.1(b)(2) (2020).

80. Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 94 S. Ct. 1800, 40 L. Ed. 2d 224 (1974); Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459 (1989).

paralegals, and legal organizations is treated as privileged and receives heightened protection (for instance, this mail cannot usually be censored). Mail to and from other public officials and agencies, such as U.S. Congressmen and the Department of Justice, is also usually treated as privileged and given greater protection than regular mail.

1. First Amendment Protections

Some courts have held that legal mail is entitled to a higher degree of First Amendment protection than other mail. The censorship or interference with an incarcerated person's mail is justified only "if it further one or more substantial governmental interests."⁸¹ This interference still must not be greater than necessary to the protection of said governmental interest. Even when this analysis is not applied, courts generally give legal mail more consideration than non-legal mail in evaluating restrictions.⁸²

(a) Incoming Legal Correspondence

Correspondence from your attorney is incoming mail, and so restrictions on it are evaluated under the Turner standard.⁸³ Restrictions on privileged incoming mail do not violate the First Amendment if the restrictions are reasonably related to a legitimate need to manage the prison or carry out your penalty. In Wolff v. McDonnell, the U.S. Supreme Court held that a state can require your lawyer to clearly mark her letters as coming from an attorney, and can require that her address be written on the envelope if the letters are to receive special treatment, and, finally, can require your lawyer to identify herself to prison officials before correspondence with you begins.⁸⁴ For example, in 2009, the Ninth Circuit of the U.S. Court of Appeals denied an incarcerated person's constitutional claims because the return address on his legal mail did not indicate that it came from an attorney, a valid prerequisite under California law for legal mail to receive special treatment.⁸⁵ Wolff seems to imply that prison officials cannot read or censor correspondence with your attorney if there is no suspicion that the correspondence is illegal, but this is not entirely clear.⁸⁶ According to Wolff, a requirement that letters from an attorney to an incarcerated person be opened by prison officials only in the presence of the incarcerated person may be more than what the Constitution demands.⁸⁷ Since Wolff, however, many courts have ruled that the incarcerated person must be present if the prison is opening his letters, or that the incarcerated person at least be given the opportunity to request such a safeguard.⁸⁸

81. Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 94 S. Ct. 1800, 40 L. Ed. 2d 224 (1974).

82. Davis v. Goord, 320 F.3d 346, 351 (2d Cir. 2003) ("In balancing the competing interests implicated in restrictions on prison mail, courts have consistently afforded greater protection to legal mail than to non-legal mail..."); Sallier v. Brooks, 343 F.3d 868, 874 (6th Cir. 2003) ("[W]hen the incoming mail is 'legal mail,' we have heightened concern with allowing prison officials unfettered discretion to open and read an inmate's mail because a prison's security needs do not automatically trump a prisoner's First Amendment right to receive mail, especially correspondence that impacts upon or has import for the prisoner's legal rights, the attorney-client privilege, or the right of access to the courts.").

83. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 414–419, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1882–1885, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 473–477 (1989).

84. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 576–577, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2984–2985, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 963 (1974).

85. See Paulino v. Todd, 338 F. App'x 720, 721–722 (9th Cir. 2009).

86. See Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 577, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2985, 41 L. Ed. 2d 925, 963 (1974) ("As to the ability to open the mail in the presence of inmates, this could in no way constitute censorship, since the mail would not be read. Neither could it chill such communications, since the inmate's presence ensures that prison officials will not read the mail.").

87. Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 577, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2985, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 963 (1974) ("...we think that petitioners, by acceding to a rule whereby the inmate is present when mail from attorneys is inspected, have done all, and perhaps even more, than the Constitution requires"); see also Brewer v. Wilkinson, 3 F.3d 816, 825 (5th Cir. 1993) (holding "that the violation of the prison regulation requiring that a prisoner be present when his incoming legal mail is opened and inspected is not a violation of a prisoner's constitutional rights.").

88. See Fontroy v. Beard, 559 F.3d 173, 183–184 (3d Cir. 2009) (upholding under Turner and Wolff a policy requiring attorneys to apply for a Control Number and put it on all legal mail so that it could be identified as such and then opened in front of the incarcerated people. Even though this policy did place a burden on incarcerated

(b) Outgoing Legal Correspondence

Prisons cannot restrict correspondence sent to attorneys unless the restriction furthers an important or substantial governmental interest.⁸⁹ This rule applies to incarcerated people who are detained prior to their trial, which may result in incarceration. It also applies to those who have been convicted, but face further criminal prosecution. Some courts have found that outgoing legal correspondence does not present the same security threat as non-legal correspondence, and so there is minimal government interest in restricting it.⁹⁰ Letters to some government agencies, elected officials, and legal assistance and civil liberties groups enjoy the same protection as mail addressed to your attorney.⁹¹ Also, the government has a duty to provide indigent incarcerated people with stationery and a reasonable amount of postage for legal mail.⁹² However, one federal district court case found people's First Amendment rights when attorneys did not properly request control numbers, the court found the procedure constitutional because it balanced the right with the facility's desire to avoid people sneaking in contraband through fake legal mail which had happened before and facilitated an escape); Sallier v. Brooks, 343 F.3d 868, 874 (6th Cir. 2003) (reaffirming that an opt-in policy, where an incarcerated person had to request being present when legal mail was opened, is constitutional so long as the incarcerated person is given written notice of it); Bach v. Illinois, 504 F.2d 1100, 1102 (7th Cir. 1974) (per curiam) (holding that because "prison officials in inspecting incoming mail outside the presence of an inmate are provided with an opportunity to obtain advanced warning of potential litigation which might involve the prison and more significantly, could become privy to stratagems being formulated between attorney and client with regard to pending litigation," the incarcerated person is entitled to be present during the opening of legal mail addressed to him); Kensu v. Haigh, 87 F.3d 172, 174 (6th Cir. 1996) (holding that an incarcerated person's right to be present during opening of his legal mail extends to hand-delivered correspondence as well as correspondence received through the U.S. Postal Service). But see John v. New York City Dept. of Corr., 183 F. Supp. 2d 619, 629 (S.D.N.Y. 2002) (dismissing (with leave to amend) an incarcerated person's claim for denial of access to courts when prison officials opened mail outside his presence because he failed to allege either that the officials acted deliberately and maliciously in doing so or that he suffered any injury).

89. Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 412–415, 94 S. Ct. 1800, 1811–1812, 40 L. Ed. 2d 224, 239–242 (1974), overruled in part by Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 413, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1881, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 473 (1989) (noting that the ruling in Martinez only applies to outgoing correspondence).

90. See Cancel v. Goord, No. 00 Civ. 2042 (LMM), 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3440, at *16–17 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 21, 2001) (unpublished) (finding that without more than general security interests, interference with outgoing legal mail is unconstitutional) (citing Davidson v. Scully, 694 F.2d 50, 53 (2d Cir. 1982)); Taylor v. Sterrett, 532 F.2d 462, 473–474 (5th Cir. 1976) (finding that censoring outgoing mail to attorneys, the courts or to government agencies is not significantly related to the advancement of jail security and thus unconstitutional); Palmigiano v. Travisono, 317 F. Supp. 776, 791 (D.R.I. 1970) (holding that the reading of any outgoing mail violates the 1st Amendment unless pursuant to a duly obtained search warrant).

91. See Davidson v. Scully, 694 F.2d 50, 53–54 (2d Cir. 1982) (striking down regulation restricting outgoing mail to government agencies because "[i]f prison officials are able to deny inmates free access to public officials and agencies, the fundamental right [of access to the courts] is restricted just as surely as if the government denied prisoners access to traditional legal materials. In many cases an inmate's claim might be substantially furthered by information or aid available through government agencies."). But see O'Keefe v. Van Boening, 82 F.3d 322, 322–323 (9th Cir. 1996) (upholding regulation treating grievance mail to state agencies as non-legal); Jackson v. Mowery, 743 F. Supp. 600, 606 (D. Ind. 1990) ("[T]he legal mail protected by the Constitution extends only to safeguard communications between an inmate and his attorney, and [defendant] has no basis for his claim of interference with 'legal mail' to and from his family and friends.").

92. See Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 824–825, 97 S. Ct. 1491, 1496, 52 L. Ed. 2d 72, 81 (1977) (stating that it is "indisputable that indigent inmates must be provided at state expense with paper and pen to draft legal documents, with notarial services to authenticate them, and with stamps to mail them") overruled in part by Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 354, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2181, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 619–620 (1996) ("It must be acknowledged that several statements in Bounds went beyond the right of access recognized in the earlier cases on which it relied, which was a right to bring to court a grievance that the inmate wished to present . . . These statements appear to suggest that the State must enable the prisoner to discover grievances, and to litigate effectively once in court. See Bounds, 430 U.S. at 825–826, and n. 14. These elaborations upon the right of access to the courts have no antecedent in our pre-Bounds cases, and we now disclaim them"). But see Gaines v. Lane, 790 F.2d 1299, 1308 (7th Cir. 1986) (citing Bach v. Coughlin, 508 F.2d 303, 307 (7th Cir. 1974)) (explaining that while incarcerated people have a right to access the courts, they are not entitled to unlimited free postage, and that a ten-day delay in sending an incarcerated person's legal mail did not violate his limited constitutional right to freedom of association.⁹³ The mail was initially delayed because of insufficient funds on two occasions.⁹⁴

2. Your Right to Meaningful Access to the Courts and Assistance of Counsel

You have a constitutional right to meaningful court access and assistance of counsel.⁹⁵ In Davidson v. Scully, the Second Circuit held that restrictions on an incarcerated person's legal mail can violate this right.⁹⁶ For example, courts have stated that allowing prison officials to read mail to courts or between attorneys and incarcerated people can prevent incarcerated people from bringing abuses to the attention of courts because they fear retaliation.⁹⁷ Thus, even if your First Amendment claim fails because the restriction at issue is related to an important government objective, you can still challenge the restriction if it prevents you from having meaningful court access.

However, these claims will likely not succeed unless you also prove that there was some actual harm to your ability to assert a legal claim.⁹⁸ In one recent New York case, the district court reiterated prison officials can balance incarcerated people's rights to use the mails against budgetary concerns); Chandler v. Coughlin, 763 F.2d 110, 114 (2d Cir. 1985) (finding that state is not required to provide indigent incarcerated people unlimited free postage, but only a "reasonably adequate" amount of postage for access to the courts); Gittens v. Sullivan, 670 F. Supp. 119, 123 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) (finding that "$1.10 per week for stamps and an additional advance of $36.00 for legal mailings satisfies the constitutional minimum for access to the courts"), aff'd, 848 F.2d 389, 390 (2d Cir. 1988).

93. See Branham v. Mansfield, No. 2:04-CV-286, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 87195 at *15 (W.D. Mich. 2009) (unpublished).

94. See Branham v. Mansfield, No. 2:04-CV-286, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 87195 at *15 (W.D. Mich. 2009) (unpublished).

95. See Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 821–823, 97 S. Ct. 1491, 1494–1495, 52 L. Ed. 2d 72, 78–80 (1977) (reviewing the history of Supreme Court decisions that have established a right of access to the courts and the assistance of counsel). But see Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 351, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2180, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 618 (1996) (holding that an incarcerated person must prove that lack of necessary legal assistance or library actually hindered case). See Chapter 12 and Chapter 9, Part G of the JLM for a full discussion of the right to effective assistance of counsel.

96. Davidson v. Scully, 694 F.2d 50, 53 (2d Cir. 1982) (holding that prison officials who did not allow an incarcerated person to mail sealed letters to various public agencies violated the incarcerated person's right to meaningful access to the courts).

97. See Taylor v. Sterrett, 532 F.2d 462, 476 (5th Cir. 1976); Martin v. Brewer, 830 F.2d 76, 78–79 (7th Cir. 1987) (distinguishing incoming from outgoing mail to the courts on this ground).

98. See Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 351, 116 S. Ct. 2174, 2180, 135 L. Ed. 2d 606, 618 (1996) (holding the incarcerated person must prove his prison's law library or legal assistance program was lacking in a way actually hindering his efforts to pursue a legal claim); Bourdon v. Loughren, 386 F.3d 88, 98–99 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding appointment of counsel to an incarcerated person was sufficient to satisfy the incarcerated person's right of access to the courts; assistance from that counsel is measured not by the "effectiveness" standard of the Sixth Amendment, but by the counsel's capabilities as a qualified and trained person); DeLeon v. Doe, 361 F.3d 93, 94 (2d Cir. 2004) (dismissing incarcerated person's claim for denial of court access when prison officials caused delays to his court filings because case was not dismissed for untimeliness but instead on the merits after a bench trial); Oliver v. Fauver, 118 F.3d 175, 178 (3d Cir. 1997) (holding interference with mail, if it reaches its intended destination, is insufficient to show actual injury); Taylor v. Coughlin, 29 F.3d 39, 40 (2d Cir. 1994) (per curiam) (holding prison's failure to supply incarcerated people with adequate typewriters did not cause any injury; the incarcerated people were able to access the courts through handwritten documents); Shango v. Jurich, 1988 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 7597 at *63–64 (N.D. Ill. July 15, 1988) (unpublished) (holding that "the mere fact that some inmates may suffer delays or other inconveniences in obtaining access to the law library...does not amount to a constitutional violation."); Richardson v. McDonnell, 841 F.2d 120, 122 (5th Cir. 1988) (holding that the loss of outgoing court documents was not a sufficient injury because the error was noted in time to allow the plaintiff to re-file the documents); Jermosen v. Coughlin, 877 F. Supp. 864, 871 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (holding that the confiscation of a tape mailed to an incarcerated person did not qualify as a sufficient injury because the incarcerated person had access to the tape when preparing his civil action, and at the time the tape was taken, the incarcerated person's case had already been settled). But see Key v. Artuz, No. 95 CV 0392 (HB), 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13201, at *5–6 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 19, 1995) (unpublished) (holding that a prison's mishandling of legal mail that resulted in the incarcerated person missing a court-imposed deadline was a sufficient showing of injury).

that to state a claim for denial of access to the courts, the incarcerated person must show that the defendant's actions actually hindered his pursuit of legal claims and caused actual injury.⁹⁹ The court determined that the incarcerated person in this case experienced only inconvenience and a delay in sending outgoing mail.¹⁰⁰ Neither of those reach the necessary threshold. The threshold requires that you experience a constitutional deprivation that is severe enough to bring a Section 1983 claim. Some courts have also required that the interference be "deliberate and malicious."¹⁰¹ In other words, they require that the prison authorities have intentionally interfered with an incarcerated person's legal mail with the purpose of denying him access to the courts. However, some courts have ordered that a claim of interference should be reviewed liberally if brought by a pro se litigant.¹⁰²

3. Attorney-Client Privilege

For communications with your attorney, you have the additional shield of the attorney-client privilege.¹⁰³ This privilege allows you to refuse to disclose, and to prevent any other person from disclosing, confidential communications between your attorney and you. The protection that it provides is limited in two ways. First, because the privilege only protects you against disclosure of your legal correspondence, it may only be used to challenge the reading of your legal mail, not the inspection of it.¹⁰⁴ However, even though prisons may declare temporary emergencies requiring them to open your mail, they may not use an emergency to justify indefinitely opening your mail out of your presence.¹⁰⁵ Second, there are exceptions to the kinds of communication that are protected by the privilege. For the attorney-client privilege to apply, you must intend for your communication to remain confidential.¹⁰⁶ In other words, if you disclose information to someone other than your attorney, this information will no longer be considered privileged. Disclosure to representatives of the attorney, such as his or her secretary or student clerk, however, is considered the same as communication with the

99. See Wesolowski v. Washburn, 615 F. Supp. 2d 126, 129 (W.D.N.Y. 2009).

100. See Wesolowski v. Washburn, 615 F. Supp. 2d 126, 129 (W.D.N.Y. 2009).

101. Smith v. O'Connor, 901 F. Supp. 644, 649 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (holding that although corrections officials destroyed an incarcerated person's personal property, including his legal papers, the incarcerated person failed to show prejudice because the motion allegedly destroyed was one that could be filed any time and thus he failed to state a claim that he was denied access to the courts); Herrera v. Scully, 815 F. Supp. 713, 723 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) (holding that prison officials did not act in an "intentional and deliberate manner to deprive [the incarcerated person] of his constitutional rights by preventing his legal mail from arriving at court in a timely manner.").

102. See, e.g., Key v. Artuz, No. 95 CV 0392 (HB), 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13201, at *7 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 13, 1995) (unpublished) (reading complaint liberally and denying defendant's motion to dismiss where interference caused incarcerated person to miss court-imposed deadline but incarcerated person failed to allege invidious (malicious) intent).

103. Attorney-client privilege will generally have its own statute in your state. In New York, the relevant statute can be found at N.Y. C.P.L.R. 4503 (McKinney 2007).

104. Frye v. Henderson, 474 F.2d 1263, 1264 (5th Cir. 1973) (per curiam) (stating opening mail to check for contraband is legitimate); People v. Poe, 193 Cal. Rptr. 479, 481, 145 Cal. App. 3d 574, 578 (Cal. Ct. App. 1983) (citing Wolff v. McDonnell, 418 U.S. 539, 577, 94 S. Ct. 2963, 2985, 41 L. Ed. 2d 935, 963 (1974)). Some courts have even held prison officials can open mail from a court outside your presence, since court documents are public records and therefore not subject to the same protections. See Keenan v. Hall, 83 F.3d 1083, 1094 (9th Cir. 1996) (finding incoming mail from a court not "legal mail").

105. See Jones v. Brown, 461 F.3d 353, 362–363 (3d Cir. 2006) (finding that though a risk of anthrax terrorism might have justified temporarily opening incarcerated people's mail after September 11, 2001, there was no rational basis for continuing this policy more than three years later in the absence of a continuing risk).

106. United States v. Robinson, 121 F.3d 971, 976 (5th Cir. 1997) (holding that the fact that a meeting between an incarcerated person and his attorney "take[s] place away from public view" is not enough to prove that the incarcerated person intended the communication between them to be confidential); Colton v. United States, 306 F.2d 633, 638 (2d Cir. 1962) (holding that in the case of an attorney preparing a tax return, no privilege could be expected since the form is not intended to be confidential but "is given for transmittal by the attorney to others"); Priest v. Hennessy, 51 N.Y.2d 62, 68–69, 409 N.E.2d 983, 986, 431 N.Y.S.2d 511, 514 (1980) ("[N]ot all communications to an attorney are privileged. In order to make a valid claim of privilege, it must be shown that the information sought to be protected from disclosure was a 'confidential communication' made to the attorney for the purpose of obtaining legal advice or services") (citing Matter of Jacqueline F., 47 N.Y.2d 215, 219, 391 N.E.2d 967, 970, 417 N.Y.S.2d 884, 887, (1979)).

attorney and is covered under the privilege.¹⁰⁷ It does not matter if your communications with your lawyer are written or oral; both are equally privileged.¹⁰⁸ An exception is that you cannot claim the attorney-client privilege if the communication furthers future wrongdoing.¹⁰⁹

4. Legal Correspondence and New York State and City Regulations

The following is a discussion of additional New York rules governing legal mail restrictions. Incarcerated people in other states must consult their state and local regulations. The New York Department of Correctional Services regulations state that incoming legal mail should be opened and examined only in the presence of the incarcerated person and will not be read by prison authorities without written superintendent authorization.¹¹⁰ Outgoing privileged mail may not be opened, inspected, or read without written superintendent authorization. The regulations applying to city and county jails in New York have essentially the same provisions, except they additionally state that mailed communications with attorneys may not be read without a search warrant.¹¹¹

The standards applicable to jails in New York City distinguish between privileged and non-privileged mail. Your privileged incoming mail cannot be opened except in your presence or pursuant to a search warrant, and your privileged outgoing correspondence can only be opened or read pursuant to a search warrant.¹¹²

5. Legal Correspondence and Federal Regulations

Privileged mail is referred to as “special mail” in the federal regulations governing the Federal Bureau of Prisons.¹¹³ This includes mail from state and federal courts, attorneys, the President and Vice-President, governors, members of the U.S. Congress, embassies and consulates, federal law enforcement officers, and the Department of Justice (excluding the Bureau of Prisons, but including U.S. Attorneys).¹¹⁴ Mail from any of these sources should be marked as follows on the envelope: “Special Mail—Open only in the presence of the inmate.”¹¹⁵ Prison authorities may still open these letters to ensure there is no contraband and to confirm the enclosed letter does in fact qualify as special mail. But, they may not read the letter. If the envelope is not marked as special mail, the correspondence will be treated as general correspondence.¹¹⁶ Mail from attorneys must be marked as described above and must indicate the attorney’s name and the fact that he or she is an attorney. While the word “Attorney” does not need to appear on the envelope, there must be some indication that the person sending the letter is an attorney. This indication does not have to be placed on any particular place on the envelope.¹¹⁷

As a practical matter, whether you are incarcerated in a state or federal prison, you should clearly label envelopes of privileged correspondence: “Privileged Correspondence (Special Mail)—Do Not Open Except in the Presence of Intended Inmate-Recipient.” You may also want to suggest your lawyer tape shut all mail sent to you. This will let you know whether your mail had been opened and read when you were not present, since you would be able to see where the tape was removed from the envelope.

107. See N.Y. C.P.L.R. 4503(a)(1) (McKinney 2007).

108. Le Long v. Siebrecht, 196 A.D. 74, 76, 187 N.Y.S. 150, 150 (2d Dept. 1921).

109. In re Associated Homeowners & Businessmen’s Org., Inc., 87 Misc. 2d 67, 68, 385 N.Y.S.2d 449, 450 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 1976) (pointing towards the exception for communications “in furtherance of fraudulent or other unlawful acts” as reason for a denial of an application to quash subpoena of an attorney).

110. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 721.3(b)(1) (2020).

111. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7004.4(d) (2020). Note that this section of the regulations distinguishes legal privileged correspondence from general privileged correspondence.

112. Rules of the City of New York, Tit. 40, Ch. 1, §1-11(c)(6), (e) available at <http://www1.nyc.gov/site/boc/jail-regulations/jail-regulations.page> (last visited May 24, 2020).

113. 28 C.F.R. § 540.2(c) (2020).

114. 28 C.F.R. § 540.2(c) (2020).

115. 28 C.F.R. § 540.2(c) (2020).

116. 28 C.F.R. § 540.18(b) (2020).

117. Merriweather v. Zamora, 569 F.3d 307, 313–314 (6th Cir. 2009); 28 CFR 540.19 (2020).

D. Internet Communication

The right of an incarcerated person to access the Internet is a new subject. There are not many cases testing the rights of incarcerated people to communicate through the Internet. However, the Turner standard applies to cases involving Internet communication.¹¹⁸

Most states ban incarcerated people from direct, unsupervised access to the Internet.¹¹⁹ Federal legislation prevents access without official supervision.¹²⁰ Though this statute has not yet been tested in court, it will likely be upheld because it does not completely ban access, but rather just requires supervision, and is related to a valid prison interest—security. Some states allow certain incarcerated people to access the Internet under supervision for educational and professional courses.¹²¹ Similarly, the Federal Bureau of Prisons has a program called the Trust Fund Limited Inmate Computer System (TRULINCS). This system lets incarcerated people send electronic messages to families and attorneys without actually using the Internet.¹²² Keep in mind, however, that in order to use TRULINCS, you must consent to monitoring of your messages by prison officials.¹²³ Attorney-client privilege does not apply to messages sent through TRULINCS.¹²⁴ You should look into the regulations of your own state to find out its specific rules.

Indirect use of the Internet happens when incarcerated people use third parties (non-incarcerated people) to help them communicate or receive information. For instance, an incarcerated person might write a letter to a third party describing the information he wants posted on the Internet or that he wants sent in an email. The third party would then post the information online or send the email, and afterwards would print any Internet response and mail it to the incarcerated person.¹²⁵ Some states have passed laws against this type of indirect Internet communication. For instance, Ohio prevents any access, direct or indirect, except for access related to educational programs.¹²⁶ Arizona has a similar statute that limits incarcerated people's direct and indirect access to the Internet and email.¹²⁷ Minnesota, California, Kansas, and Wisconsin have similar laws.¹²⁸

The reaction to these laws in various courts has been mixed. In 2004, the Ninth Circuit struck down a California policy that prohibited incarcerated people from receiving mail that has material

118. See Part B, Section 1 of this Chapter for an explanation of the Turner standard.

119. See Titia A. Holtz, Reaching Out from Behind Bars: The Constitutionality of Laws Barring Prisoners from the Internet, 67 BROOK. L. REV. 855, 859 (2002). Laura E. Gorgol, Unlocking Potential: Results of a National Survey of Postsecondary Education in State Prisons, INSTITUTE FOR HIGHER EDUCATION POLICY (2011).

120. Protection of Children from Sexual Predators Act of 1998, Title VIII, sec. 801, Pub. L. No. 105–314, 112 Stat. 2974, 2990 (1998) (withholding federal funding from any federal program that allows incarcerated people to have unsupervised access to the Internet). This statute was enacted in response to a specific case in which an incarcerated person who had been granted access to participate in online classes instead used his unsupervised time to download child pornography. Protection of Children from Sexual Predators Act of 1998, Title VIII, sec. 802, Pub. L. No. 105–314, 112 Stat. 2974, 2990 (1998).

121. See OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 5145.31(C)(1)(a) (LexisNexis 2004).

122. Federal Bureau of Prisons, TRULINCS: Frequently Asked Questions, available at <https://www.bop.gov/inmates/trulincs.jsp> (last visited May 24, 2020) (discussing the Bureau of Prisons' e-mail program).

123. U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Prisons, Form BP-A0934.052, Inmate Agreement for Participation in TRULINCS Electronic Messaging Program.

124. U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Prisons, Form BP-A0934.052, Inmate Agreement for Participation in TRULINCS Electronic Messaging Program.

125. At least one court has held incarcerated people cannot be punished if third parties post accounts from those incarcerated people on the Internet for them. See Canadian Coalition against the Death Penalty v. Ryan, 269 F. Supp. 2d 1199, 1201, 1203 (D. Ariz. 2003). Keep in mind, however, that this is different from “kiting,” where you send a message to one person, and inside that message, include another message that will be sent to someone else. See section B(1)(a) of this chapter for more information on kiting.

126. OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 5145.31(C)(1)(a) (LexisNexis 2004).

127. ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 41-1604 (2012).

128. See Valerie Alter, Jailhouse Informants: A Lesson in E-Snitching, 10 J. TECH. L. & POL'Y 223, 232 (2005); Computer Use for/by Inmates, <https://www.thefreelibrary.com/Computer+use+for%2Fby+inmates.-a0208273651> (last visited Oct. 5, 2020).

downloaded from the Internet.¹²⁹ Applying the Turner standard, the court did not find a logical relationship between the regulation and the legitimate concerns of security, and of increased workload for the mailroom.¹³⁰ On the other hand, a 2008 California case confirmed that incarcerated people may be denied direct Internet access, stating that there is no independent First Amendment right to computer and Internet access.¹³¹

The response at the district court level has also been mixed. A judge in Arizona found the state law to be unconstitutional,¹³² while a judge in Kansas upheld a similar law.¹³³ The Ninth Circuit case and the Arizona district court case show that the policies prohibiting indirect access to the Internet (by receiving Internet-generated materials in the mail) might be more likely to be struck down compared to policies dealing with direct Internet access. However, it is important to remember that there are still not enough cases on this matter to determine exactly how various courts will handle the issue of Internet communication.

E. Receipt and Possession of Publications

You have a First Amendment right to receive publications, and a publisher has a First Amendment right to send you publications. The same standards that govern censorship of incoming mail apply to your right to receive and possess books, magazines, and other reading material. Before 1989, Procunier v. Martinez held that a publication could not be prohibited unless the prison could show that the publication threatened prison security or order, or that the publication would negatively affect an incarcerated person's rehabilitation.¹³⁴

But, in 1989, in Thornburgh v. Abbott, the U.S. Supreme Court replaced the Martinez standard with a standard easier for prison officials to meet: the Turner standard.¹³⁵ Now, a court can limit your right to receive and possess publications for reasons related to a legitimate prison interest (the Turner standard).¹³⁶ The Supreme Court has noted that courts should respect and defer to the "informed discretion of correction officials."¹³⁷ This means that while censorship is not allowed just because the publication's content is unpopular or offensive, it will be relatively easy for officials to restrict access to publications by citing security concerns.¹³⁸

Lower federal and state court decisions that cancelled restrictions under the old Martinez standard most likely do not reflect current law, so you probably cannot reference them in any court papers. This means that you cannot rely on cases decided before 1989. See the discussion of Martinez and Abbott in Part B of this Chapter.

1. General Standards for Receiving Publications

Using the Turner standard, most courts have upheld restrictions on incarcerated people receiving incoming publications. This is generally the case for restrictions that are reasonably related to the 129. Clement v. Cal. Dept. of Corr., 364 F.3d 1148, 1152 (9th Cir. 2004).

130. Clement v. Cal. Dept. of Corr., 364 F.3d 1148, 1152 (9th Cir. 2004).

131. Carmony v. County of Sacramento, No. CIV S-05-1679 LKK GGH P, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11137, at *47–48 (E.D. Cal. 2008) (unpublished).

132. Canadian Coalition Against the Death Penalty v. Ryan, 269 F. Supp. 2d 1199, 1203 (D. Ariz. 2003).

133. Waterman v. Commandant, 337 F. Supp. 2d 1237, 1241–1242 (D. Kan. 2004) (upholding a policy that allows prison personnel to reject incoming mail that has photocopies of publications or materials that do not come directly from the publisher). Note that the Kansas law differed from the Arizona law in that it prohibited what inmates could receive in the mail, as opposed to what inmates could send out to people to put on the internet.

134. Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 413, 94 S. Ct. 1800, 1811, 40 L. Ed. 2d 224, 240 (1974).

135. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 404, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1877, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 467 (1989) (holding that restrictions on incoming mail should be analyzed under the standard established in Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89–91, 109 S. Ct. 2254, 2261–2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79–80 and not the Martinez standard which courts had been using for incoming mail since 1974).

136. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 404, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1877, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 467 (1989).

137. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 418, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1884, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 476 (1989) (quoting Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 90, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 80 (1982)).

138. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 415–416, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1882–1883, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 474–475 (1989).

legitimate governmental interests of security and order, screening contraband, preventing fire, and promoting rehabilitation.¹³⁹ In Frost v. Symington, a federal appeals court upheld regulations which did not allow incarcerated people to have sexually explicit magazines.¹⁴⁰ In Malik v. Coughlin, a New York state court, citing Abbott, allowed prisons to censor an incoming article that made critical and exaggerated allegations about prison medical personnel.¹⁴¹ The censored article said that correctional facilities used incarcerated people as guinea pigs for drug testing.¹⁴² Even though the article had been read by incarcerated people at two other prison facilities and had not caused violence, the court found that this prison could ban the article for security reasons.¹⁴³ Withholding publications that contain racist statements has also been upheld by federal courts relying on Abbott.¹⁴⁴ Prison officials can probably also ban internal incarcerated people's newsletters by claiming that they are contrary to prison security if the newsletters contain similar forbidden content. But, as one court held in Epps v. Smith, a prison cannot ban an outside incarcerated person's newsletter that does not contain prohibited content (in this case, a self-described "revolutionary prisoners' newspaper" published in California and distributed in a New York penitentiary).¹⁴⁵ The court there emphasized the rights of those outside the prison to express their political views.¹⁴⁶

Sometimes courts will not allow publications to be banned if the government does not have an important reason to ban them. In one case, the court did not allow a regulation that only allowed incarcerated people to receive publications they ordered and paid for directly because the government did not have a strong enough reason for imposing the rule.¹⁴⁷ Similarly, in another case, the court said that a restriction on publications that contained any nudity could be rejected as too broad because the restriction included scientific texts and works of art.¹⁴⁸

A common restriction imposed by prisons is the "publishers-only" rule, which allows incarcerated people "to receive newspapers, magazines, and books from publishers or book clubs

139. See, e.g., Waterman v. Farmer, 183 F.3d 208, 217–218 (3d Cir. 1999) (holding that a state statute prohibiting pornographic materials for incarcerated people had a rational relationship to sex offender rehabilitation); Dawson v. Scurr, 986 F.2d 257, 260–261 (8th Cir. 1993) (holding that there was a rational relationship between prohibiting psychologically unfit incarcerated people from seeing sexually explicit materials and the legitimate goal of rehabilitation); Skelton v. Pri-Cor, 963 F.2d 100, 103 (6th Cir. 1991) (holding that because hardback books can be used to smuggle contraband, a ban on such books was valid); Malik v. Coughlin, 154 A.D.2d 135, 137–138, 552 N.Y.S.2d 182, 184 (3d Dept. 1990) (holding that the accusations contained in the publication were likely to incite disobedience and were therefore properly restricted). But see Prison Legal News v. Lehman, 397 F.3d 692, 700 (9th Cir. 2005) (finding that banning catalogs and bulk mailings is not rationally related to decreasing the risk of fire, since limitations already exist on the number of possessions in incarcerated people's cells); Morrison v. Hall, 261 F.3d 896, 902 (9th Cir. 2001) (holding that reducing fire hazards is a legitimate government interest but banning bulk mailings does not rationally serve that interest when there are other regulations on the amount of paper incarcerated people can have in their cells).

140. Frost v. Symington, 197 F.3d 348, 357–358 (9th Cir. 1999) (finding that regulation of pornographic materials promotes security interests and so it satisfies Turner).

141. Malik v. Coughlin, 154 A.D.2d 135, 138–139, 552 N.Y.S.2d 182, 184 (App. Div. 3rd Dept. 1990).

142. Malik v. Coughlin, 154 A.D.2d 135, 136, 552 N.Y.S.2d 182, 183 (3d Dept. 1990).

143. Malik v. Coughlin, 154 A.D.2d 135, 137–138, 552 N.Y.S.2d 182, 184 (3d Dept. 1990).

144. See, e.g., Thomas v. U.S. Sec'y of Def., 730 F. Supp. 362, 364–365 (D. Kan. 1990) (holding that restriction of materials that could cause racial confrontations was valid); Chriceol v. Phillips, 169 F.3d 313, 315–317 (5th Cir. 1999) (holding that restriction of materials that advocated racial, religious, or national hatred that could cause violence was valid); Winburn v. Bologna, 979 F. Supp. 531, 534–535 (W.D. Mich. 1997) (holding that restriction of mail that promoted racial supremacy was valid).

145. Epps v. Smith, 112 Misc. 2d 724, 730, 447 N.Y.S.2d 577, 581–582 (Sup. Ct. 1981).

146. See Epps v. Smith, 112 Misc. 2d 724, 728–729, 447 N.Y.S.2d 577, 580–581 (Sup. Ct. Wyoming County 1981) (finding that there was no evidence incarcerated people were using the paper to communicate); see also Nasir v. Morgan, 350 F.3d 366, 371–374 (3d Cir. 2003) (upholding a ban on correspondence between incarcerated people and the formerly incarcerated under Turner balancing test, despite the 1st Amendment interests of the non-incarcerated).

147. Crofton v. Roe, 170 F.3d 957, 960–961 (9th Cir. 1999).

148. Aiello v. Litscher, 104 F. Supp. 2d 1068, 1082 (W.D. Wis. 2000). But see Mauro v. Arpaio, 188 F.3d 1054, 1060 n.4 (9th Cir. 1999) (upholding a restriction on sexually explicit materials, even if it includes art and science texts, as not unconstitutionally overbroad).

only.”¹⁴⁹ The Supreme Court in Bell v. Wolfish held that a prison may adopt a publishers-only rule for hardcover books if they deem it necessary to prison security by preventing contraband smuggling.¹⁵⁰ If your prison has such a rule, you have no right to receive hardcover publications directly from friends or family. This case only dealt with hardcover books, so it is unclear to which other publications it applies. Lower courts have extended the publishers-only rule to other publications like magazines and soft-cover books because requiring incarcerated people to receive materials directly from the publisher is a minor inconvenience compared to requiring the prison to search all materials not sent in factory-sealed packages.¹⁵¹ But, courts have found that some restrictions on your ability to receive publications are not rational and have struck them down. For example, one circuit court has stated that prisons may not require books ordered from approved vendors to have special shipping labels.¹⁵² Also, some courts have said that prisons cannot place certain restrictions on bulk mail.¹⁵³ In a recent California case, a federal court held that stopping a vendor from sending free, softbound, religious materials to incarcerated people was not allowed.¹⁵⁴ Finally, one court found that prison officials should allow incarcerated people to receive magazine subscriptions as gifts, though a different, higher court supported a ban on magazine subscriptions.¹⁵⁵

Bans on certain publications, other than sexually explicit ones, can be found reasonably related to rehabilitation interests. The Supreme Court upheld a Pennsylvania regulation denying all newspapers and magazines to incarcerated people held in segregation and temporarily classified as particularly dangerous or unmanageable.¹⁵⁶ The reason for this was that such a restriction was reasonably related to the prison’s interest in promoting good behavior.¹⁵⁷ It was important in this case that the incarcerated people’s placement in segregation was not permanent, and that they could earn back their privileges to possess publications.¹⁵⁸ One of the Supreme Court justices, Justice Stevens, dissented (disagreed with the outcome) because he thought that the rationale of rehabilitation was too broad and could theoretically justify taking away any right or privilege in prison.¹⁵⁹ Because this case is relatively recent, it is important to note that there is some disagreement on the issue, even within the Supreme Court.

You cannot be punished for having literature that is prohibited if the literature is prohibited by an unconstitutional or illegal rule. If you are punished for having this literature, Chapter 18 of the 149. See, e.g., Ward v. Washtenaw Cnty. Sheriff’s Dept., 881 F.2d 325, 326–327 (6th Cir. 1989).

150. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 550–552, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1880–1881, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 475–477 (1979).

151. See Ward v. Washtenaw Cnty. Sheriff’s Dept., 881 F.2d 325, 329–330 (6th Cir. 1989) (finding a publisher’s only rule applying to books, magazines and newspapers was reasonably related to a legitimate interest in maintaining prison security, as it allowed the prison “to control the security problems caused when contraband such as drugs and weapons are smuggled in various books, magazines, and newspapers to inmates from unidentified sources or visitors”).

152. Ashker v. Cal. Dept. of Corr., 350 F.3d 917, 924 (9th Cir. 2003).

153. Morrison v. Hall, 261 F.3d 896, 904 (9th Cir. 2001) (holding that prison cannot ban incarcerated people from receiving subscriptions sent by bulk, third, or fourth class mail); Prison Legal News v. Lehman, 397 F.3d 692, 700–701 (9th Cir. 2005) (finding prison may not prohibit incarcerated people from receiving non-subscription bulk mail and catalogs).

154. Jesus Christ Prison Ministry v. Cal. Dept. of Corr., 456 F. Supp. 2d 1188, 1201–1202 (E.D. Cal. 2006).

155. Prison Legal News v. Werholtz, No. 02-4054-MLB, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73629, at *13 (D. Kan. Oct. 1, 2007) (unpublished) (finding that a Kansas policy of banning gift subscriptions was not rational and therefore unconstitutional). But see Grissom v. Werholtz, 524 F. App’x 467, 471–472 (10th Cir. 2013) (upholding a prison’s prohibition of magazine subscriptions for an incarcerated person who had been placed in isolation and had a history of possessing dangerous contraband).

156. Beard v. Banks, 548 U.S. 521, 524–525, 126 S. Ct. 2572, 2575–2576, 165 L. Ed. 2d 697, 702–703 (2006).

157. Beard v. Banks, 548 U.S. 521, 533, 126 S. Ct. 2572, 2580, 165 L. Ed. 2d 697, 707 (2006) (“[W]ithholding such privileges ‘is a proper and even necessary management technique to induce compliance with the rules of inmate behavior, especially for high-security prisoners who have few other privileges to lose.’” (quoting Overton v. Bazzetta, 539 U.S. 126, 134, 123 S. Ct. 2162, 2168–2169, 156 L. Ed. 2d 162, 171 (2003))).

158. Beard v. Banks, 548 U.S. 521, 532, 126 S. Ct. 2572, 2579–2580, 165 L. Ed. 2d 697, 707 (2006).

159. Beard v. Banks, 548 U.S. 521, 547–548, 126 S. Ct. 2572, 2588–2589, 165 L. Ed. 2d 697, 716–717 (2006) (Stevens, J., dissenting).

JLM, “Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Proceedings,” should help you understand your rights during prison disciplinary proceedings.

Finally, you should remember that state law, and state and federal regulations, might also protect your access to literature. For example, federal regulations allow incarcerated people in minimum and low-security facilities to receive soft-cover books from any source, though they can receive hardcover books only from the publisher, a book club, or a bookstore.¹⁶⁰ Incarcerated people in medium- or high-security facilities must receive all books from the publisher, a book club, or a bookstore.¹⁶¹ In addition, facility administrators may reject publications if they contain content that could be considered a security risk, like depictions of violence and sexually explicit material (discussed in more detail below).¹⁶² So, you should research additional regulations or laws that might apply to you.

2. Receiving Sexually Explicit Materials

Some regulations specifically do not allow sexually explicit materials. Courts have upheld such regulations based on two different government interests: (1) promoting rehabilitation, and (2) protecting prison security. In Ballance v. Virginia, the court upheld the confiscation of photographs of partially nude children from a convicted pedophile, reasoning that “due . . . to the prison’s interest in rehabilitating this disease,” prison officials acted reasonably in confiscating the photographs.¹⁶³ Similarly, in Dawson v. Scurr, the court held that restrictions denying sexually explicit materials to psychologically unfit incarcerated people were justified because exposure to such materials would interfere with their rehabilitation.¹⁶⁴

The Thornburgh standard gives prison officials discretion to ban sexually explicit material if officials reasonably believe the material poses a threat to prison order.¹⁶⁵ Prison officials are given this discretion because allowing an incarcerated person to have such material may encourage violence by leading other incarcerated people to make assumptions about that incarcerated person’s beliefs, sexual orientation, or gang affiliations.¹⁶⁶ At least one federal circuit court has held that a ban on sexually explicit material is reasonable in order to prevent sexual harassment of female staff.¹⁶⁷ But, at least one other circuit has struck down blanket bans on sexually explicit material. Instead, that circuit requires the prison to show that giving a specific publication to incarcerated people will harm their rehabilitation before banning the publication.¹⁶⁸ Even if the prison decides to ban sexually explicit materials, some courts have held that both the incarcerated person and the publisher are entitled to notice of the ban and an opportunity to respond.¹⁶⁹ The reason for granting notice to publishers is that they have a First Amendment right to communicate with individual incarcerated people if they so

160. 28 C.F.R. § 540.71(a)(1), (3) (2020).

161. 28 C.F.R. § 540.71(a)(2) (2020).

162. For an explanation of content that can amount to a security risk, see 28 C.F.R. § 540.71(b) (2020).

163. Ballance v. Virginia, 130 F. Supp. 2d 754, 760 (W.D. Va. 2000).

164. Dawson v. Scurr, 986 F.2d 257, 260–262 (8th Cir. 1993).

165. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 411–412 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1880–1881, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 471–472 (1989).

166. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 412–413, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1881, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 472–473 (1989).

167. Mauro v. Arpaio, 188 F.3d 1054, 1059–1060 (9th Cir. 1999).

168. See Ramirez v. Pugh, 379 F.3d 122, 129 (3d Cir. 2004) (finding that “the connection between the [restrictive statute] and the government’s rehabilitative interest” is not “obvious upon consideration of the entire federal inmate population, including those prisoners not incarcerated for sex-related crimes”).

169. Montcalm Publishing Corp. v. Beck, 80 F.3d 105, 106 (4th Cir. 1996) (finding that “publishers are entitled to notice and an opportunity to be heard when their publications are disapproved for receipt by inmate subscribers”); Jacklovich v. Simmon, 392 F.3d 420, 433–434 (10th Cir. 2004) (holding that publishers as well as incarcerated people have a right to be notified when inmate subscribers are prohibited from receiving the publishers’ publications). Note that the 10th Circuit later clarified that Jacklovich governed only intentional rejections of the publications, rather than accidental rejections such as a mistake in the mailroom. Jones v. Salt Lake Cnty., 503 F.3d 1147, 1162–1163 (10th Cir. 2007).

choose.¹⁷⁰ Additionally, at least one court has held that incarcerated people have a right to appeal censorship decisions to someone other than the official who ordered the censorship.¹⁷¹

In Thornburgh v. Abbott, one of the regulations at issue allowed the warden to ban homosexually explicit material depicting people who are the same gender as the prison population.¹⁷² The Supreme Court held that the rule was valid. But, the same regulation in Thornburgh does not permit a warden to reject heterosexually explicit material, or non-explicit homosexual material, unless it is “detrimental to the security, good order, or discipline of the institution, or if it might facilitate criminal activity.” Nor does the regulation allow the warden to reject non-explicit homosexual material.¹⁷³ The Court reasoned that “prisoners may observe particular material in the possession of a fellow prisoner, draw inferences about their fellow [prisoner]’s . . . sexual orientation . . . and cause disorder by acting accordingly . . . [I]t is essential that prison officials be given broad discretion to prevent such disorder.”¹⁷⁴

It is unclear what this means for the incarcerated person who wants to receive sexually explicit homosexual material because the discretion given to officials in Thornburgh v. Abbott may result in different decisions and regulations in different jurisdictions.¹⁷⁵ At least one court has suggested that because exposure of one’s homosexual identity is more likely to lead to assault by others in a maximum-security prison than in a minimum-security facility, security concerns are more legitimate in a maximum-security facility.¹⁷⁶ Such reasoning could mean that incoming sexually explicit homosexual material may be denied at maximum-security facilities, but not minimum-security facilities.

As a general rule, LGBTQ+ incarcerated people may seek to obtain non-sexually explicit homosexual material through the mail. Federal regulations seem to allow the general admission of these materials unless they are found to be detrimental to the security, good order, or discipline of the 170. Montcalm Publishing Corp. v. Beck, 80 F.3d 105, 109 (4th Cir. 1996).

171. Krug v. Lutz, 329 F.3d 692, 699–700 (9th Cir. 2003).

172. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 405 n.6, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1877 n.6, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 468 n.6 (1989) (The Program Statement No. 5266.5 explained that 28 C.F.R. § 540.71(b)(7) (2007) (the regulation at issue) allowed the warden to reject the following types of sexually explicit material: (1) homosexual (of the same sex as the prison population), (2) sado-masochistic, (3) bestial, or (4) material involving children.)

173. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 404–405, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1877, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 467 (1989) (quoting 28 C.F.R. § 540.71(b)(7) (2020)).

174. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 412–413, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1881, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 472–473 (1989).

175. Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 417 n.15, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1883 n.15, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 475 n.15 (1989) (noting that “the exercise of discretion called for by these regulations may produce seeming ‘inconsistencies,’ but what may appear to be inconsistent results are not necessarily signs of arbitrariness or irrationality.”). Compare Inosencio v. Johnson, 547 F. Supp. 130, 135–136 (E.D. Mich. 1982), aff’d sub nom. Brown v. Johnson, 743 F.2d 408, 413 (6th Cir. 1984) (holding that the prohibition of a homosexual worship service to be constitutional because incarcerated people attending such services would be exposing themselves to attacks from other incarcerated people), with Lipp v. Procunier, 395 F. Supp. 871, 877–878 (N.D. Cal. 1975) (holding the prohibition of homosexual worship services to be a possible violation of incarcerated people’s 1st Amendment right to religious freedom and requiring prison officials to present findings of fact that clearly supported their assertion that such a service would present a danger to the prison population). The Second Circuit has not considered the issue of sexually explicit homosexual materials in prisons, but it has upheld a regulation banning incarcerated people from keeping sexually explicit photos of their wives and girlfriends on the grounds that such photos may create violence among incarcerated people due to their personal nature. Giano v. Senkowski, 54 F.3d 1050, 1057 (2d Cir. 1995). See also Thomas v. Scully, No. 89 Civ. 4715, 1990 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16229 at *3 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 4, 1990) (unpublished) (holding that a ban on nude photographs of incarcerated people’s wives and girlfriends is reasonably related to the prison’s legitimate interest in preventing violence between an incarcerated person and a guard or another incarcerated person and therefore does not violate the 1st Amendment because of the emotionally charged nature of the photographs).

176. See Inosencio v. Johnson, 547 F. Supp. 130, 135 (E.D. Mich. 1982), aff’d sub nom. Brown v. Johnson, 743 F.2d 408 (6th Cir. 1984) (citing testimony by the director of the California Department of Corrections that the Department could make a good argument for denying incarcerated people the ability to attend an LGBTQ+ church service in a maximum-security prison while allowing those in a medium-security facility to attend such services). The same court would likely reason that receiving sexually explicit homosexual materials could also put an inmate at a greater risk of attack in a maximum-security prison than in a medium security one. See also C.F.R. §§ 540.71(b)(7), 540.72 (2020).

institution.¹⁷⁷ State incarcerated people who desire such material, however, may encounter the same arguments used by prison officials to ban sexually explicit homosexual materials. For instance, one court applied an identification theory in Harper v. Wallingford to find that an incarcerated person's First Amendment rights were not violated when non-explicit mail promoting consensual sexual relationships between adult men and juvenile males was withheld from him.¹⁷⁸ The court accepted the prison officials' concern that the material, when seen by other incarcerated people, would make the incarcerated person a target as a homosexual and would thus make him vulnerable to assault.¹⁷⁹ However, these arguments might fail to persuade courts if it is clear that the incarcerated person is already known to identify as LGBTQ. This is because one of the main arguments used by prison officials is identification.¹⁸⁰ For more information on gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgender issues, see JLM, Chapter 30, "Special Information for Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, and/or Queer Incarcerated People."

Courts have also allowed restrictions on explicit heterosexual materials, including sexually explicit photographs of incarcerated people's wives or girlfriends.¹⁸¹ While these restrictions are almost always found to be constitutional, a few courts have reviewed such regulations much more closely. In Aiello v. Litscher, the court held that a regulation banning all written or visual materials containing nudity or sexual behavior was too vague because it would also ban important works of art and literature.¹⁸² It noted that a jury could find that the prohibition of these works is not reasonably related to legitimate prison interests. It also concluded that there was no evidence that the materials threaten security or rehabilitation.¹⁸³

F. Access to the News Media

You may want to publicize your case by attracting the media's attention. The Supreme Court has held that a reasonable and effective means of communication between incarcerated people and the media must exist.¹⁸⁴ But, prisons have a legitimate security interest in limiting access to outside visitors, including the press.¹⁸⁵ The Court held that limiting or prohibiting face-to-face interviews with 177. See Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 404, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1877, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 467 (1989) (noting that publications can be restricted only if they are "detrimental to the security, good order, or discipline of the institution or if [they] might facilitate criminal activity").

178. Harper v. Wallingford, 877 F.2d 728, 733 (9th Cir. 1989) (determining that the materials at issue could incite violence by and against the incarcerated people reading them).

179. Harper v. Wallingford, 877 F.2d 728, 730 (9th Cir. 1989).

180. See Espinoza v. Wilson, 814 F.2d 1093, 1098–1099 (6th Cir. 1987) (finding that protecting the sexual identity of incarcerated people was not a valid reason for restricting access to LGBTQ+ publications since the incarcerated people in question were already open about being LGBTQ but finding in favor of the warden because he stated other legitimate reasons for restricting access).

181. Mauro v. Arpaio, 188 F.3d 1054, 1059–1060 (9th Cir. 1999) (upholding restrictions on explicit heterosexual materials as reasonably related to the goal of preventing sexual harassment of female prison guards); Giano v. Senkowski, 54 F.3d 1050, 1055–1056 (2d Cir. 1995) (holding that the regulation was rationally related to the prevention of violence in prisons; the court pointed out that other avenues are available for reinforcing emotional bonds, such as non-nude photographs or romantic letters, and for satisfying the right to graphic sexual imagery, such as commercially produced erotica or sexually graphic letters).

182. Aiello v. Litscher, 104 F. Supp. 2d 1068, 1082 (W.D. Wis. 2000).

183. Aiello v. Litscher, 104 F. Supp. 2d 1068, 1081 (W.D. Wis. 2000); see also Kaufman v. McCaughtry, 419 F.3d 678, 685 (7th Cir. 2005) (following Aiello in finding that a definition of "pornography" agreed to in a settlement by the parties could not be contested as overly broad).

184. Pell v. Procunier, 417 U.S. 817, 841, 94 S. Ct. 2800, 2810, 41 L. Ed. 2d 495, 512 (1974) (1974) (holding that prison officials will be given discretion in regulating the entry of reporters into prison for interviews with inmates so long as reasonable and effective means of communication remain open to incarcerated people).

185. Pell v. Procunier, 417 U.S. 817, 826, 94 S. Ct. 2800, 2806, 41 L. Ed. 2d 495, 503–504 (1974); see also Saxbe v. Washington Post Co., 417 U.S. 843, 850, 94 S. Ct. 2811, 2815, 41 L. Ed. 2d 514, 519–520 (1974) (Pell's companion case, finding that under the Federal Bureau of Prisons regulations, the media does not have the right to access prisons and inmates beyond the rights granted to members of the general public. Saxbe differs from Pell in that Saxbe only looks at the rights of the media, while Pell also addresses the rights of incarcerated people to communicate with the media).

the press does not violate the First Amendment as long as incarcerated people can still communicate with the press in writing or through visitors.¹⁸⁶ The Court has said that the freedom of the press does not grant the media special access to prisons.¹⁸⁷ This means that the news media's physical access (through visitation, tours, photographs, etc.) can be restricted just like the public's physical access based on security interests can. In a recent case, a court noted that these kinds of restrictions can vary depending on the security of a particular prison or unit.¹⁸⁸

Federal regulations governing incarcerated people held by the Federal Bureau of Prisons provide that correspondence sent to the media be treated as if it were privileged and is considered special mail.¹⁸⁹ The rules discussed in Part C of this Chapter for privileged correspondence therefore apply to letters to the media for those incarcerated people. Correspondence from the media is subject to inspections for contraband, qualification as media correspondence, and content likely to promote either illegal activity or conduct contrary to Bureau regulations.¹⁹⁰ But an incarcerated person may not receive pay for any correspondence with the media, act as a reporter, or publish under a byline.¹⁹¹ This restriction on publishing under a byline was recently successfully challenged in a federal district court.¹⁹² The court found the absolute restriction was too broad for the stated interest of maintaining prison security, especially considering incarcerated people were allowed other publishing opportunities.¹⁹³ As this is a recent development, you should watch to see if other courts agree.

The warden of a federal prison has a duty to provide information to the media about certain events that take place in the prison. These include deaths, inside escapes, and institutional emergencies.¹⁹⁴ The warden must also provide basic information about an incarcerated person that is a matter of public record if the media requests it, unless the information is confidential.¹⁹⁵

G. Visitation

If you have been convicted, your constitutional rights to visitation may be severely restricted. However, pretrial detainees are almost certainly allowed reasonable visitation rights,¹⁹⁶ since lack of access to visitors like attorneys can infringe the right to due process and counsel.¹⁹⁷ In Overton v.

186. Pell v. Procunier, 417 U.S. 817, 835, 94 S. Ct. 2800, 2810, 41 L. Ed. 2d 495, 509 (1974). For example, the California policy in Pell allowed incarcerated people face to face visits with members of their family, their clergy, their attorneys, and friends of prior acquaintance. Pell v. Procunier, 417 U.S. 817, 824–825, 94 S. Ct. 2800, 2085, 41 L. Ed. 2d 495, 503 (1974).

187. Houchins v. KQED, 438 U.S. 1, 15–16, 98 S. Ct. 2588, 2597, 57 L. Ed. 2d 553, 565 (1978) (holding that a local broadcast company could be subjected to a prison's restrictions on in-person visits, despite the company's investigation into the prison's bad conditions).

188. Hammer v. Ashcroft, 570 F. 3d 798, 804–805 (7th Cir. 2009) (upholding a ban on person to person meetings between the media and incarcerated people in the special confinement unit, which contains most incarcerated people facing the federal death penalty).

189. 28 C.F.R. §§ 540.2(b), 540.20(a) (2020).

190. 28 C.F.R. § 540.20(c) (2020).

191. 28 C.F.R. § 540.20(b) (2020).

192. Jordan v. Pugh, 504 F. Supp. 2d 1109, 1126 (D. Colo. 2007).

193. Jordan v. Pugh, 504 F. Supp. 2d 1109, 1124–1126 (D. Colo. 2007) (reaching the same outcome under both the Turner and Martinez standards).

194. 28 C.F.R. § 540.65(a) (2020).

195. 28 C.F.R. § 540.65(b), (c) (2020).

196. See Jones v. Diamond, 594 F.2d 997, 1013–1014 (5th Cir. 1979), on reh'g, 636 F.2d 1364 (1981); see also Ky. Dept. of Corr. v. Thompson, 490 U.S. 454, 463–465, 109 S. Ct. 1904, 1910–1911, 104 L. Ed. 2d 506, 517–518 (1989) (holding that state regulations setting forth categories of visitors who might be excluded from visitation did not implicate an incarcerated person's liberty interest in receiving visitors under the Due Process Clause of the 14th Amendment); see also Martinez v. Coombe, 95-CV-1147, 1996 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15330, at *9 (N.D.N.Y. Aug. 22, 1996) (clarifying the language set forth by the Supreme Court in Thompson, by concluding that although a court can no longer look only to mandatory language of a statute, the statute is still relevant in determining whether a liberty interest exists).

197. See Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 419, 94 S. Ct. 1800, 1814, 40 L. Ed. 2d 224, 243 (1974) (“[I]nmates must have a reasonable opportunity to seek and receive the assistance of attorneys. Regulations and

Bazzetta, the Supreme Court did not clearly define the rights of incarcerated people to visitation. Instead, the Court ruled that a regulation restricting visits was reasonably related to the prison interest of security and therefore the regulation did not violate the incarcerated person's constitutional rights.¹⁹⁸ Regardless of whether you have been convicted or are still awaiting trial, visitation rights may be restricted for certain reasons, including institutional administration, security, and rehabilitation.¹⁹⁹ Prison officials may regulate the time, place, and manner of visits²⁰⁰ (but note that for pretrial detainees, those regulations must be reasonable).²⁰¹ Prison officials may also restrict some of the rights of visitors.²⁰² The Turner reasonableness standard also applies to visitation, so courts can invalidate unreasonable restrictions.²⁰³ Contact visits are not constitutionally required for pretrial detainees or for convicted people.²⁰⁴

Prison officials have broad discretion in decisions about who may visit because visitors do impact security. It is up to the prison official to produce evidence that a visitation restriction was due to a security concern. The incarcerated person then must show by substantial evidence that the prison officials' response was exaggerated and unjustified. Some restrictions on visitation are allowable for security reasons.²⁰⁵ In one case, for instance, the Supreme Court upheld a regulation requiring an "approved visitor list" as reasonably related to security interests.²⁰⁶

Courts have upheld rules restricting visits to those who have a personal or professional relationship with the incarcerated person. They have also upheld rules denying visits by formerly incarcerated people²⁰⁷ and people suspected of smuggling contraband.²⁰⁸ The Supreme Court upheld practices that unjustifiably obstruct the availability of professional representation or other aspects of the right of access to the courts are invalid.").

198. Overton v. Bazzetta, 539 U.S. 126, 131–132, 123 S. Ct. 2162, 2167, 156 L. Ed. 2d 162, 170 (2003) ("We need not attempt to explore or define the asserted right of association at any length or determine the extent to which it survives incarceration because the challenged regulations bear a rational relation to legitimate penological interests. This suffices to sustain the regulation in question.").

199. See Overton v. Bazzetta, 539 U.S. 126, 129, 123 S. Ct. 2162, 2166, 156 L. Ed. 2d 162, 168 (2003) (finding that rehabilitation, maintenance of basic order, and prevention of violence are legitimate objectives of the correctional system); Pell v. Procunier, 417 U.S. 817, 822, 94 S. Ct. 2800, 2804, 41 L. Ed. 2d 495, 501 (1974) (finding that an incarcerated person retains 1st Amendment rights that are not inconsistent with legitimate penological objectives).

200. See Martin v. Tyson, 845 F.2d 1451, 1455–1456 (7th Cir. 1988) (per curiam) (holding that legitimate safety concerns and other practical constraints justified restrictions imposed on pretrial detainees).

201. See Martin v. Tyson, 845 F.2d 1451, 1458 (7th Cir. 1988) (per curiam) (upholding policy limiting pretrial detainee's telephone access to every other day).

202. See Gray v. Bruce, 26 F. App'x. 819, 823–824 (10th Cir. 2001) (holding that subjecting an incarcerated person's wife to drug tests was generally acceptable as people have diminished privacy rights when visiting a prison. However, subjecting her to an "ion spectrometer test," which tests for the presence of illegal drugs, may have been an unlawful search under the Fourth Amendment because it was unreliable and required her to submit to a strip search to enter the facility once a positive result was obtained).

203. Overton v. Bazzetta, 539 U.S. 126, 132, 123 S. Ct. 2162, 2168, 156 L. Ed. 2d 162, 170 (2003) (applying Turner test to Michigan regulations restricting visits).

204. See Block v. Rutherford, 468 U.S. 576, 589, 104 S. Ct. 3227, 3234, 82 L. Ed. 2d 438, 449 (1984) (holding contact visits are a privilege, not a right and that visits can be denied due to security concerns).

205. See Pell v. Procunier, 417 U.S. 817, 826–828, 94 S. Ct. 2800, 2806–2807, 41 L. Ed. 2d 495, 503–505 (1974) (holding that placing certain restrictions on visitations may further significant governmental interests and is therefore permitted).

206. Overton v. Bazzetta, 539 U.S. 126, 131–136, 123 S. Ct. 2162, 2167–2170 156 L. Ed. 2d 162, 169–173 (2003).

207. See Farmer v. Loving, 392 F. Supp. 27, 31 (W.D. Va. 1975) (allowing ban on visitation by formerly incarcerated people).

208. See Robinson v. Palmer, 841 F.2d 1151, 1156–1157 (D.C. Cir. 1988) (finding a ban on visits by the wife of an incarcerated person, who was caught smuggling marijuana into prison, was justified by prison's interest in preventing drug smuggling and because the incarcerated person had other ways to communicate with his wife); Thorne v. Jones, 765 F.2d 1270, 1275 (5th Cir. 1985) (finding a ban on visits from an incarcerated person's mother, who was suspected of smuggling drugs and refused to submit to a strip search, was justified by security interests and did not violate the First Amendment); Rowland v. Wolff, 336 F. Supp. 257, 260 (D. Neb. 1971) (holding the similar regulations in Overton.²⁰⁹ The Seventh Circuit denied the constitutional claims of an incarcerated person whose niece and daughter had been removed from his visitor list.²¹⁰ The court held that this was reasonable because the individual had previously been convicted of violent sex offenses and admitted to raping two children. Based on the holdings in Overton and Turner, the Seventh Circuit stated that a prison policy that restricts an incarcerated person's constitutional rights is valid if it is rationally related to legitimate interests. To decide if a restriction meets this standard, the court must consider four issues: (1) whether a rational relationship exists between the policy and the interest it claims to advance, (2) whether there are other ways to exercise the right in question, (3) the impact that accommodating the right will have on prison resources, and (4) whether there are alternatives to the policy.²¹¹ A 2009 New York case held that the Commissioner of Correctional Services had a rational basis for denying the incarcerated person's request to participate in a family reunion program. The court emphasized that this decision is highly discretionary and will be upheld as long as there is a rational basis.²¹² The Commissioner in this case considered the appropriate factors, including the incarcerated person's disciplinary record and participation in counseling sessions. The Commissioner ultimately based his decision on the nature of the incarcerated person's crimes, and the court found this decision rational.²¹³

Visits by immediate family usually receive greater protection. Nevertheless, protection of children plays an important role. Regarding visiting children, the court is primarily concerned with the best interests of the children. At least in New York, Family Court has broad discretion to make these decisions.²¹⁴ In one 2001 New York case, the court found that an incarcerated father's petition for visitation with his daughters was properly denied based on the children's best interests.²¹⁵ The court said that the mere fact of incarceration is not enough to deny visitation.²¹⁶ However, in this case, the incarcerated father had almost no contact with his children in the five years he had been incarcerated. The children would have to travel many hours with a paternal grandmother they barely knew in order to visit, and the children themselves did not express any interest in seeing their father.²¹⁷ This was enough to deny visitation.

Restrictions on visits from minor children who are not closely related to the incarcerated person are routinely upheld. The court generally views those restrictions as reasonably related to prison security and protecting children.²¹⁸ In one case, the court upheld a prison's decision to deny visitation by the three-month-old niece of an incarcerated person convicted of sexual assault. The incarcerated person argued that this restriction violated his familial association rights, and that the decision to interest of the state in preventing the introduction of lethal weapons outweighs an incarcerated person's interest in being visited by his sisters).

209. Overton v. Bazzetta, 539 U.S. 126, 133–134, 123 S. Ct. 2162, 2168–2169, 156 L. Ed. 2d 162, 171–172 (2003).

210. Stojanovic v. Humphreys, 309 F. App'x 48, 49 (7th Cir. 2009).

211. Stojanovic v. Humphreys, 309 F. App'x 48, 52 (7th Cir. 2009) (holding that not all prongs must be addressed for the restriction to be valid if the other factors speak overwhelmingly in favor of the restriction).

212. Philips v. Comm'r of Corr. Servs., 65 A.D.3d 1407, 1408, 885 N.Y.S.2d 138, 138 (3d Dept. 2009) (decision to deny an incarcerated person convicted of sexually assaulting four teenage girls, three of them at gunpoint, from participating in a family reunion program was supported by rational basis). See also Cabassa v. Goord, 40 A.D.3d 1281, 1281, 836 N.Y.S.2d 351, 351–352 (3d Dept. 2007) (denying an incarcerated person's participation in a family reunion program as supported by a rational basis based on his involuntary protective custody status and the associated security concern).

213. Philips v. Comm'r of Corr. Servs., 65 A.D.3d 1407, 1408, 885 N.Y.S.2d 138, 139 (3d Dept. 2009).

214. See, e.g., Williams v. Tillman, 289 A.D.2d 885, 885, 734 N.Y.S.2d 727, 728 (3d Dept. 2001).

215. See, e.g., Williams v. Tillman, 289 A.D.2d 885, 885, 734 N.Y.S.2d 727, 728 (3d Dept. 2001).

216. See, e.g., Williams v. Tillman, 289 A.D.2d 885, 886, 734 N.Y.S.2d 727, 728 (3d Dept. 2001).

217. See, e.g., Williams v. Tillman, 289 A.D.2d 885, 886, 734 N.Y.S.2d 727, 728 (3d Dept. 2001).

218. Overton v. Bazzetta, 539 U.S. 126, 133, 123 S. Ct. 2162, 2168, 156 L. Ed. 2d 162, 170–171 (2003). See also Wirsching v. Colorado, 360 F.3d 1191, 1199–1200 (10th Cir. 2004) (upholding rule barring a person convicted of sex offenses from visits with his minor daughter as reasonably related to promoting his rehabilitation and to the child's best interest).

deny visitation was irrational and unreasonable.²¹⁹ However, the court found that the restriction had a connection to the prison's legitimate interests in safety and rehabilitation. In that case, the prison's decision was based on a recommendation by the incarcerated person's social worker who recommended that the incarcerated person not see female minors because of his past conduct of sexual assaults and failure to receive sexual offender treatment.²²⁰

In addition to safety, visitation restrictions are sometimes upheld for reasons of rehabilitation. These restrictions usually take away visitation privileges from incarcerated people who have broken institutional rules. In Overton, the Supreme Court upheld a Michigan regulation that prevented incarcerated people with two substance abuse disciplinary violations from receiving visitors (except legal and religious visitors). The court there emphasized the prison's interest in rehabilitation.²²¹ However, it was important in this case that the visitation ban was not permanent, since visitation could be reinstated for good behavior. It was also important that incarcerated people had other ways to communicate with the persons who were denied visitation.²²² A federal court in New York similarly held that suspending an incarcerated person from the Family Reunion Program did not violate the Constitution, since contact visitation is a privilege, not a right.²²³ If the regulation in your case differs from these regulations (for example, if it is permanent), you may be able to challenge it in court. But be careful of filing a claim that might be dismissed as frivolous (having no legal merit), since it would become a strike under the Prison Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA").²²⁴ JLM, Chapter 14 has more information on the PLRA. In one New York case, the court struck down a prison's decision to take away an incarcerated person's contact visits. The prison took away visits after a failed urine drug test, but the court questioned whether the new visit restrictions were really connected to any safety or security concerns. The court struck it down because the restriction was arbitrary and capricious and therefore a due process violation.²²⁵

Incarcerated LGBTQ+ individuals who want visitation from their partners should note the case Doe v. Sparks.²²⁶ In that case, an incarcerated person, who is a lesbian, challenged the officials' refusal to allow visits from her girlfriend. There, prison rules only permitted visits between heterosexual people and their opposite sex partners. The court struck down this restriction. The court decided that the visitation policy had a rational relationship to security and disciplinary needs, but that other prison policies weakened this rational relationship.²²⁷ The court found that the connection between the policy and the supposed reasons for the policy were "so remote as to be arbitrary."²²⁸ The policy was thus unconstitutional. *Whitmire v. Arizona*²²⁹ is another helpful decision for LGBTQ+ couples. In this case, an Arizona policy prohibited same-sex kissing and hugging but allowing heterosexuals to

219. Phillips v. Thurmer, No. 08-cv-286-bbc, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46331, at *1-4 (W.D. Wis. June 1, 2009).

220. Phillips v. Thurmer, No. 08-cv-286-bbc, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 46331, at *4-5 (W.D. Wis. June 1, 2009).

221. Overton v. Bazzetta, 539 U.S. 126, 134, 123 S. Ct. 2162, 2168-2169, 156 L. Ed. 2d 162, 171-172 (2003).

222. Overton v. Bazzetta, 539 U.S. 126, 135, 123 S. Ct. 2162, 2169, 156 L. Ed. 2d 162, 172 (2003).

223. See Giano v. Goord, 9 F. Supp. 2d 235, 241 (W.D.N.Y. 1998) (stating that it is well-established that contact visits are a privilege, not a right) overruled on other grounds, Giano v. Goord, 250 F.3d 146 (2d Cir. 2001).

224. Giano v. Goord, 9 F. Supp. 2d 235, 242 (W.D.N.Y. 1998) (dismissing an incarcerated person's complaint with prejudice for being frivolous), overruled on other grounds, Giano v. Goord 250 F.3d 146 (2d Cir. 2001).

225. Matter of Rivera v. New York City Dept. of Corr., 24 Misc. 3d 536, 541, 876 N.Y.S.2d 631, 635 (Sup. Ct. Bronx County 2009).

226. Doe v. Sparks, 733 F. Supp. 227, 228 (W.D. Pa. 1990).

227. Doe v. Sparks, 733 F. Supp. 227, 233 (W.D. Pa. 1990). Policies limiting the freedoms of incarcerated gay people often focus, in the case of the prison's security interests, on the danger of the gay person being "outed" and thus becoming a target for sexual or non-sexual assault. As for the prison's disciplinary interests, the usual rationale is that the prison runs the risk of appearing to condone gay relations in prison unless it limits some of the freedoms incarcerated people have. Doe v. Sparks, 733 F. Supp. 227, 233 (W.D. Pa. 1990).

228. Doe v. Sparks, 733 F. Supp. 227, 234 (W.D. Pa. 1990).

229. Whitmire v. Arizona, 298 F.3d 1134, 1135 (9th Cir. 2002).

embrace during visits. A gay couple sued, and the Court of Appeals struck down the policy because the policy was not rationally related to prison safety.²³⁰

Courts today are likely to be even more protective of the rights of same-sex couples. The Supreme Court has grown increasingly suspicious of classifications based on sexual orientation.²³¹ And, after Lawrence v. Texas,²³² decided ten years after Sparks and one year after Whitmire, the Court would likely recognize a constitutional right of privacy to LGBTQ+ conduct protected under the Due Process and Equal Protection clauses of the Constitution.²³³

One area in which the rights of same-sex couples is particularly relevant is conjugal visitation, or extended family visitation. Certain incarcerated people get visitation with their families for several days at a time at a private location on the prison campus. In June 2007, California became the first state to grant incarcerated LGBTQ+ people in registered domestic partnerships the same rights to conjugal visits as married heterosexual couples.²³⁴ Along with California, only New York, Washington, and Connecticut explicitly allow same-sex partners to participate in conjugal visits.²³⁵ Similar to California, Washington State allows same-sex couples in state registered domestic partnerships the same rights to conjugal visits as married heterosexual couples.²³⁶ However, in Connecticut, conjugal visits with your partner are only allowed if the two of you were legally married before you were incarcerated and the two of you have children in common.²³⁷

New York has instituted a Family Reunion Program in about one-third of its correctional facilities. The program allows incarcerated people to spend up to several days in privacy with their spouses, children, or parents. In January 2009, the Department of Correctional Services updated its “eligible relations” policy to include same-sex partners validly married to an incarcerated person in a jurisdiction that recognizes same-sex marriage.²³⁸ At the same time, same-sex partners who are not married in this way and who have instead registered their relationship through New York’s domestic partnership program are still excluded from participating in the Family Reunion Program.²³⁹ However, New York courts may be receptive to discrimination claims, because New York law explicitly

230. Whitmire v. Arizona, 298 F.3d 1134, 1135–1137 (9th Cir. 2002).

231. Kacy Elizabeth Wiggum, Note, Defining Family in American Prisons, 30 Women’s Rts. L. Rep. 357, 387 (2009); see, e.g., Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620, 635, 116 S. Ct. 1620, 1629, 134 L. Ed. 2d 855, 867–868 (1996) (finding a Colorado law that banned protecting gay and lesbian people from discrimination unconstitutional).

232. Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 562 123 S. Ct. 2472, 2475, 156 L. Ed. 2d 508, 515 (2003) (holding that a Texas law that made it a crime for persons of the same sex to engage in certain intimate conduct was unconstitutional because it violated the due process right to privacy).

233. Kacy Elizabeth Wiggum, Note, Defining Family in American Prisons, 30 Women’s Rts. L. Rep. 357, 388–389 (2009).

234. Kacy Elizabeth Wiggum, Note, Defining Family in American Prisons, 30 Women’s Rts. L. Rep. 357, 368–369 (2009). See also Cal. Fam. Code § 297.5(g) (2010).

235. See Dana Goldstein, Conjugal Visits, THE MARSHALL PROJECT (2015), available at <https://www.themarshallproject.org/2015/02/11/conjugal-visits> (last visited Oct. 7, 2020).

236. See State of Washington Department of Corrections, Prison Visits, WA DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS (2020), available at <https://www.doc.wa.gov/corrections/incarceration/visiting/prison-visits.htm#efv> (last visited Oct. 7, 2020); State of Washington Department of Corrections, Frequently Asked Questions (FAQ), WA DEPARTMENT OF CORRECTIONS (2020), available at <https://www.doc.wa.gov/corrections/incarceration/visiting/faq.htm#immediate-family> (last visited Oct. 7, 2020).

237. See Christopher Reinhart, Extended Family Visits in Prison, CONNECTICUT GENERAL ASSEMBLY (2014), available at <https://www.cga.ct.gov/2014/rpt/2014-R-0053.htm> (last visited Oct. 7, 2020).

238. Kacy Elizabeth Wiggum, Note, Defining Family in American Prisons, 30 Women’s Rts. L. Rep. 357, 377–378 (2009).

239. Kacy Elizabeth Wiggum, Note, Defining Family in American Prisons, 30 Women’s Rts. L. Rep. 357, 378 (2009). See also State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4500, Family Reunion Program, 5–6 (as revised Jan. 5, 2016), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/08/4500%20Family%20Reunion%20Program.pdf> (last visited July 4, 2020).

prohibits discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation, and New York domestic partners have the same right to visitation as any spouse at hospitals, nursing homes, and other health care facilities.²⁴⁰

Under *Turner*²⁴¹, it is important to determine whether there are other ways to communicate with those who cannot visit. For instance, oftentimes incarcerated people can still communicate with those restricted from visiting through telephone calls and letters.²⁴² In addition, Turner says courts should consider the burden of accommodating many visits, like security and personnel costs.²⁴³

Keep in mind that federal, state, and local regulations may give you additional visitation rights. People incarcerated in facilities run by the New York Department of Correctional Services should consult the Family Handbook for visitation restrictions. Most visitors do not need special permission. However, the Superintendent must give approval in writing in advance for visitors under parole or probation, with past or pending criminal histories, or who are also Department employees or volunteers.²⁴⁴ The Superintendent also has the power to deny visitation as necessary for security or other reasons.²⁴⁵

H. Using Telephones

While some courts hold that incarcerated people have a First Amendment right to telephone access,²⁴⁶ other courts refuse to hold that incarcerated people have such a right.²⁴⁷ Even courts

240. Kacy Elizabeth Wiggum, Note, Defining Family in American Prisons, 30 Women's Rts. L. Rep. 357, 379 (2009).

241. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89–91, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79–80 (1987), superseded by statute on other grounds, Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000bb–2000bb-4 (2018) (prohibiting the government from restricting an incarcerated person's free exercise of religion, unless it serves a compelling government interest, and is narrowly tailored to serve that interest).

242. See, e.g., Overton v. Bazzetta, 539 U.S. 126, 135, 123 S. Ct. 2162, 2169, 156 L. Ed. 2d 162, 172 (2003) (stating that incarcerated people have other means of communication and noting these alternatives need not be ideal, only available).

243. See, e.g., Overton v. Bazzetta, 539 U.S. 126, 135, 123 S. Ct. 2162, 2169, 156 L. Ed. 2d 162, 172 (2003) (citing Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 96 L. Ed. 2d 162 (1987)).

244. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Handbook for Families and Friends of New York State DOCCS Inmates 10–11 (as revised Dec. 2019), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2020/01/family-handbook-english-final-12.2019-002.pdf> (last visited Jul. 4, 2020).

245. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Handbook for Families and Friends of New York State DOCCS Inmates 11 (as revised Dec. 2019), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2020/01/family-handbook-english-final-12.2019-002.pdf> (last visited Jul. 4, 2020).

246. See Johnson v. California, 207 F.3d 650, 656 (9th Cir. 1999) (affirming that incarcerated people have a First Amendment right to telephone access but holding that incarcerated people are not entitled to a specific rate for their telephone calls); see also Walton v. N.Y. State Dep't of Corr. Servs., 18 Misc. 3d 775, 786–787, 849 N.Y.S.2d 395, 404–405 (Sup. Ct. Albany County 2007) (upholding constitutional right to telephone access but dismissing claim that rates under a contract between the Department of Correctional Services and MCI, a telephone provider, violated families' and others' rights under the New York constitution). Many decisions involve pretrial detainees' phone access rights; Johnson v. Galli, 596 F. Supp. 135, 138 (D. Nev. 1984) (holding that the First Amendment protects reasonable access to telephone communication for a pretrial detainee); Moore v. Janing, 427 F. Supp. 567, 576–577 (D. Neb. 1976) (affirming the unconstitutionality of institutional eavesdropping on the telephone calls of pretrial detainees but finding timing restrictions on telephone access reasonable); Johnson-El v. Schoemehl, 878 F.2d 1043, 1051–1052 (8th Cir. 1989) (finding a policy limiting pretrial detainees to one call to their lawyers every two weeks “patently inadequate” to secure assistance of counsel); Johnson v. Brelje, 701 F.2d 1201, 1207–1208 (7th Cir. 1983) (finding limiting pretrial detainee to two 10-minute calls a week and no incoming calls violated his right to court access), overruled on other grounds by Maust v. Headley, 959 F.2d 644, 647–648 (7th Cir. 1992). Check if your state has enacted laws granting incarcerated people rights to phone access.

247. U.S. v. Footman, 215 F.3d 145, 155 (1st Cir. 2000) (stating that “[p]risoners have no per se constitutional right to use a telephone”); Edwards v. Horn, No. 10 Civ. 6194, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30968, at *20 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 7, 2012) (stating that “phone restrictions do not impinge on a prisoner's constitutional rights where recognizing a right to telephone access say the right can be severely limited.²⁴⁸ The Turner case governs these restrictions on phone use. Courts point to prison security as a valid reason under Turner.²⁴⁹ Courts also point to the fact that incarcerated people have only a limited need for telephones because they have other ways of communicating with the outside world, like letter-writing and visitation.²⁵⁰ In short, courts usually uphold restrictions on phone use unless the restrictions eliminate telephone access entirely or get in the way of attorney representation.²⁵¹

These restrictions govern how much you have to pay to make a call, what types of calls you can make, whom you can call, and how many calls you can make. In one case,²⁵² the Ninth Circuit said incarcerated people were not entitled to a specific telephone rate and so it was okay to charge them a an inmate has alternate means of communicating with the outside world.”) (quoting Henry v. Davis, No. 10 Civ. 7575, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 84100, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 1, 2011)).

248. See, e.g., U.S. v. Felipe, 148 F.3d 101, 110 (2d Cir. 1998) (upholding the constitutionality of severe restrictions on an incarcerated person’s telephone use where those restrictions were related to the state’s interest in preventing him from ordering further crime from within the prison); Carter v. O’Sullivan, 924 F. Supp. 903, 909–910 (C.D. Ill. 1996) (holding the computerized collect calling system employed by a prison, which blocked certain callers and prevented three way calling, was a “reasonable restriction” on the constitutional right to telephone communication and finding “[m]onitoring of inmate telephone calls is acceptable because of legitimate concerns regarding prison security.”); Strandberg v. City of Helena, 791 F.2d 744, 747 (9th Cir. 1986) (holding that incarcerated people have a 1st Amendment right to telephone access but this right can be limited for the legitimate security interests of the prison and finding that denial of access to a telephone in the 30 minutes of imprisonment was not a violation of the incarcerated person’s rights).

249. See, e.g., United States v. Felipe, 148 F.3d 101, 110–113 (2d Cir. 1998) (applying the Turner test to severe limitations on communication and finding the goal of prison security legitimate to justify restrictions); Gilday v. Dubois, 124 F.3d 277, 293–294 (1st Cir. 1997) (finding no right for an incarcerated person to use the telephone “on his own terms,” and holding that, because of reasonable prison security measures, it does not violate any constitutional right, or the Massachusetts Wiretap Act, to interfere with calls by incarcerated people to numbers not on a pre-approved list); Carter v. O’Sullivan, 924 F. Supp. 903, 909–910 (C.D. Ill. 1996) (upholding the constitutionality of a prison’s computerized collect calling system that blocked certain callers and prevented three way calling because it provided for additional prison security, among other things); Wooden v. Norris, 637 F. Supp. 543, 555 (M.D. Tenn. 1986) (holding that a coinless telephone system requiring operator assistance did not infringe on incarcerated people’s First Amendment rights since it helped to prevent illicit activity between incarcerated people, fraudulent billing, and vandalism).

250. See, e.g., United States v. Lentz, 419 F. Supp. 2d 820, 835–836 (E.D. Va. 2005) (holding that, if incarcerated people have other means for confidential communication, monitoring inmate-counsel telephone calls does not infringe on 6th Amendment rights because “prisoners are not entitled to any particular method of access to the courts or to their lawyers”); Bellamy v. McMickens, 692 F. Supp. 205, 214 (S.D.N.Y. 1988) (denying a claim of deprivation when the telephone restrictions were not an absolute denial of access to counsel because “states have no obligation to provide the best manner of access to counsel”); Pino v. Dalsheim, 558 F. Supp. 673, 675 (S.D.N.Y. 1983) (holding that “the procedures providing for unlimited personal and mail communication with an attorney are constitutionally sufficient,” even though incarcerated people and their attorneys may prefer to communicate by telephone); Wooden v. Norris, 637 F. Supp. 543, 554 (M.D. Tenn. 1986) (stating that the court would consider both “the alternative means of communication offered by the prison administration” and “the justification” offered by the incarcerated person in preferring the telephone system in order to determine “the effect the current telephone system and policies have on the ability of inmates’ families to communicate with” those incarcerated).

251. Compare Keenan v. Hall, 83 F.3d 1083, 1092 (9th Cir. 1996) (denying an incarcerated person’s claim that he had been deprived of his First Amendment right to telephone access because he could still make calls for emergencies or to his lawyer), with Johnson-El v. Schoemehl, 878 F.2d 1043, 1051–1052 (8th Cir. 1989) (finding a policy limiting pretrial detainees to one call to their attorney every two weeks “patently inadequate” to secure assistance of counsel), with McClendon v. City of Albuquerque, 272 F. Supp. 2d 1250, 1258 (D.N.M. 2003) (finding restrictions, including a ban on attorney visits and a five-minute limit on attorney phone calls, “would ‘unjustifiably obstruct the availability of professional representation’”) (quoting Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 419, 94 S. Ct. 1800, 40 L. Ed. 2d 224 (1974), overruled on other grounds, Thornburgh v. Abbot, 490 U.S. 401, 481, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459 (1989)).

252. Johnson v. California, 207 F.3d 650, 656 (9th Cir. 2000), rev’d on other grounds, Johnson v. California, 543 U.S. 499, 125 S. Ct. 1141, 160 L. Ed. 2d 949 (2005).

higher rate than people outside prison. In another case,²⁵³ the Ninth Circuit upheld a rule requiring all calls to be operator-assisted and collect (which means that incarcerated people there cannot call toll-free numbers). In another case,²⁵⁴ the Sixth Circuit upheld a regulation that only allowed calls to people on an approved list. Courts have also upheld restrictions on the number of calls an incarcerated person can make.²⁵⁵

Additionally, these restrictions govern your privacy during phone calls. Call monitoring does not violate your Fourth Amendment privacy rights for two reasons. First, there is no reasonable expectation of privacy in outbound calls from prison.²⁵⁶ Second, incarcerated people are considered to have consented to monitoring when they are made aware of the surveillance, either by signs near the telephones or informational handbooks.²⁵⁷ However, as an exception to this general rule, many courts have held prisons must allow unmonitored phone calls between an incarcerated person and his attorney so long as the phone call is arranged in advance.²⁵⁸ If such a call between an incarcerated person and his attorney is not arranged in advance, it can be monitored like any other call. Courts justify monitoring lawyer-prisoner phone calls that were not pre-arranged by noting that incarcerated people have the alternative of corresponding with their lawyers confidentially through the mail.²⁵⁹

I. Conclusion

Limitations on your right to communicate with the outside world, as discussed in this Chapter, may be among the most frustrating restrictions you have to face while in prison. In most circumstances, prison authorities have great discretion to restrict your right to communicate. You may want to challenge a restriction, or its application to you, if you feel that the restriction is not reasonably related to a legitimate prison interest and violates your constitutional rights. You should be careful, however, that your challenge does not appear frivolous. This means that you must have some specific constitutional basis for making your challenge.²⁶⁰

253. Shoot v. Roop, No. 92-35532, 1993 U.S. App. LEXIS 5890, at *5-6 (9th Cir. Mar. 16, 1993).

254. Washington v. Reno, 35 F.3d 1093, 1100 (6th Cir. 1994); see also Carter v. O'Sullivan, 924 F. Supp. 903, 910-911 (C.D. Ill. 1996) (upholding collect call system requiring each incarcerated person to provide officials with a list of up to thirty individuals the incarcerated person wished to call).

255. See, e.g., Pope v. Hightower, 101 F.3d 1382, 1385 (11th Cir. 1996) (upholding a restriction limiting number of individuals an incarcerated person can call to ten); Robbins v. South, 595 F. Supp. 785, 789 (D. Mont. 1984) (upholding a restriction of one call per week); Moore v. Janing, 427 F. Supp. 567, 576-577 (D. Neb. 1976) (upholding a restriction of three five-minute calls per week).

256. See, e.g., United States v. Van Poyck, 77 F.3d 285, 291 (9th Cir. 1996) (holding that "any expectation of privacy in outbound calls from prison is not objectively reasonable and that the Fourth Amendment is therefore not triggered by the routine taping of such calls.").

257. See, e.g., United States v. Workman, 80 F.3d 688, 693-694 (2d Cir. 1996) (holding that a sign placed below telephones warning that calls would be monitored was sufficient notice of surveillance, and that use of the telephones after such notice indicated implied consent); see also United States v. Verdin-Garcia, 516 F.3d 884, 894 (10th Cir. 2008) (holding that "[a] prisoner's voluntarily made choice . . . to use a telephone he knows may be monitored implies his consent to be monitored").

258. See generally Tucker v. Randall, 948 F.2d 388, 391 (7th Cir. 1991) ("[O]fficials may tape a prisoner's telephone conversations with an attorney only if such taping does not substantially affect the prisoner's right to confer with counsel."); Martin v. Tyson, 845 F.2d 1451, 1458 (5th Cir. 1988) (allowing a prison to maintain an unmonitored line for legal calls and monitored lines for all other calls).

259. See, e.g., United States v. Felipe, 148 F.3d 101, 110-111 (2d Cir. 1998) (allowing "severe" restrictions on an incarcerated person's ability to communicate with the outside world because the incarcerated person could still contact his attorney, among others, through correspondence); Gilday v. Dubois, 124 F.3d 277, 294 (1st Cir. 1997) (citing retention of the right to correspond with counsel and family through the mail as one factor in establishing the reasonableness of a restrictive telephone system); Pino v. Dalsheim, 558 F. Supp. 673, 675 (S.D.N.Y. 1983) (holding "the procedures providing for unlimited personal and mail communication with an attorney are constitutionally sufficient").

260. The Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) has a "three strikes" provision that prevents incarcerated people from filing a suit if on three previous occasions, they sued in federal court and their cases were dismissed for being frivolous, malicious, or failed to state a claim. 28 U.S.C. § 1915(g). So, proceed carefully, using this Chapter as a guide to successful and unsuccessful suits. For more information on the PLRA, see Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act.”

CHAPTER 20

USING ARTICLE 440 OF THE NEW YORK CRIMINAL PROCEDURE LAW TO ATTACK YOUR UNFAIR CONVICTION OR ILLEGAL SENTENCE*

A. Introduction

If you have been convicted in a New York state court, it may be possible for you to challenge and overturn your conviction. Under certain circumstances (explained below), you may ask the trial court to either “vacate” (cancel) the judgment or “set aside” your sentence. You can make this request in a “motion” brought under Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law.¹² Part B of this Chapter explains what Article 440 motions are, why you may make a motion, and when a court will consider your motion. Part C explains how to make an Article 440 motion. Part D describes what usually happens after you make an Article 440 motion. Part E details the positive decisions possible through an Article 440 motion. Part F explains how to appeal a court’s denial of your Article 440 motion. Part G summarizes important things to think about when making an Article 440 motion. Finally, Appendix B to this Chapter contains forms for filing Article 440 motions.

If you have been convicted in another state court (besides New York), see Appendix A for a list of similar post-conviction relief statutes from other states.

B. When to Use Article 440

1. What is an Article 440 Motion?

An Article 440 motion challenges the legality of your conviction or sentence.³ If your Article 440 motion succeeds, you will receive a new trial or a new sentence. An Article 440 motion is not an “appeal”⁴ and is not a substitute for an appeal or second appeal.⁵ In an appeal, you request a higher court (i.e., the “appellate division” or a “court of appeals”) to review errors of the trial court. In an appeal, you may only raise issues that were part of the trial record. The following list describes information included within your trial record. This information is usually part of a traditional appeal. The following information is not usually included in an Article 440 motion:

- (1) The “complaint” and the “indictment,”
- (2) The “minutes” of any “hearing to suppress evidence” (a hearing to exclude evidence resulting from an illegal search or seizure) and other hearings, and
- (3) The report of the formal proceedings in the trial court. This includes:
 - (a) the pleadings and motions made by both sides,

* This Chapter was revised by Geoffrey Gordon based on previous versions by Melissa Elstein, Maia P. Sloss, members of the 1977 Columbia Human Rights Law Review, Terry Dixon, and Joe Pellican. Special thanks to Harold Ferguson at the Legal Aid Society for his helpful comments.

1. A motion is a request to a court or judge asking for a ruling or order in your favor.

2. The laws pertaining to Article 440 motions can be found in §§ 440.10–440.70 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law (“N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW”).

3. Other ways of attacking your conviction include filing an appeal, or a state or federal writ of habeas corpus. For information about how to file an appeal, please see Chapter 9 of the JLM, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence.” For information about federal and state writ of habeas corpus, please see Chapter 13 of the JLM, “Federal Habeas Corpus,” and Chapter 21 of the JLM, “State Habeas Corpus: Florida, New York, and Michigan.” These two chapters describe the federal writ of habeas corpus and the state writ of habeas corpus, respectively. Both of these writs can be used to obtain post-conviction relief for state and federal constitutional violations.

4. For more on how to appeal your conviction, see Chapter 9 of the JLM, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence.”

5. See People v. Harris, 109 A.D.2d 351, 353, 491 N.Y.S.2d 678, 682 (2d Dept. 1985) (explaining that an Article 440 motion “is designed to inform the court of facts not reflected in the record and not known at the time of judgment that would, as a matter of law, undermine the judgment.”).

- (b) the minutes of a guilty plea if you made one,
- (c) the minutes of the trial court, including objections made by both sides and court rulings,
- (d) the charges to the jury, if it was a jury trial,
- (e) the minutes of the arraignment and the sentencing,
- (f) the minutes of any adjournment, and
- (g) any trial testimony and evidence such as documents, photographs, reports, etc.

An Article 440 motion allows you to inform the trial court of facts that were not in the trial record. You would not be able to raise these facts on appeal⁶ because appellate courts cannot consider facts not in the trial record.⁷ There are two types of Article 440 motions: a “motion to vacate judgment” and a “motion to set aside sentence.”

The first kind of motion, a motion to vacate a judgment, is found in Section 440.10 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law. This motion challenges the fairness and/or legality of your conviction. This motion attacks your conviction by stating that the trial court acted improperly when it found you guilty. If this motion is granted, you receive a new trial or appeal.

The second kind of motion, a motion to set aside your sentence, is based on Section 440.20 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law. This motion attacks your sentence by arguing that the punishment you received is too harsh for the crime. It does not challenge your guilt. For example, you can challenge your sentence if it exceeds the maximum sentence allowed by the law.

Article 440 was created to partially replace the remedy of “coram nobis.” Some courts may still refer to an Article 440 motion as a “writ of coram nobis.”⁸ A “writ of coram nobis” is an order by an appeals court to a lower court to consider facts not on the trial record, which might have changed the outcome of the lower court case if known at the time of trial. Coram nobis comes from common law, which means that it came from opinions written by judges on various cases (case law). Article 440, on the other hand, is a statute, which means that the New York state legislature passed the law. After a statute is passed, it is added to the state (or federal) code, so sometimes people refer to these laws as “codified.”

A writ of coram nobis is not available in situations covered by Article 440.⁹ However, in some situations, you can still use a writ of coram nobis even if an Article 440 motion is unavailable. For example, a coram nobis motion, not an Article 440 motion, should be used to raise a claim of ineffective assistance of appellate counsel (the lawyer who helped with your appeal).¹⁰ However, you should still

6. See People v. Bell, 161 A.D.2d 772, 772–773, 556 N.Y.S.2d 118, 119 (2d Dept. 1990) (holding that one cannot appeal directly based on matters outside of the record); People v. Piparo, 134 A.D.2d 295, 295, 520 N.Y.S.2d 621, 622 (2d Dept. 1987) (stating that facts not contained in the record are not reviewable on direct appeal).

7. See Martin v. Manhattan and Bronx Surface Transit Authority, 198 A.D.2d 160, 160 (1st Dept. 1993) (explaining that a court may not consider facts outside the record raised for the first time on appeal).

8. See People v. Crimmins, 38 N.Y.2d 407, 413–14, 343 N.E.2d 719, 724, 381 N.Y.S.2d 1, 6 (1975) (stating that motion to vacate judgment was formerly known as coram nobis); People v. Donovan, 107 A.D.2d 433, 443, 487 N.Y.S.2d 345, 352 (2d Dept. 1985) (stating that CPL 440.10 (that is, Article 440) is the codification into statutory law of common law post-judgment coram nobis proceedings); People v. Lyon, 143 Misc. 2d 690, 692–693, 541 N.Y.S.2d 702, 704 (Suffolk Cnty. Ct. 1989) (referring to CPL 440.10 as a post-judgment writ of coram nobis).

9. See People v. Perez, 162 Misc. 2d 750, 763, 616 N.Y.S.2d 928, 937 (Sup. Ct. Kings Cnty. 1994) (holding that writ of coram nobis is unavailable where an Article 440 motion is applicable).

10. See People v. Bachert, 69 N.Y.2d 593, 600, 509 N.E.2d 318, 323, 516 N.Y.S.2d 623, 628 (1987), abrogated on other grounds by People v. Andrews, 23 N.Y.3d 605, 993 N.Y.S.2d 236 (2014) (stating that a claim of ineffective assistance of appellate counsel is covered by a writ of coram nobis and not an Article 440 motion). You can file a coram nobis motion in New York claiming that you received ineffective assistance of appellate counsel, or that you were wrongfully deprived of appellate counsel. If the Appellate Division denies your coram nobis motion, you may be able to appeal the denial to the Court of Appeals. However, the denial of your coram nobis motion must have occurred on or after November 1, 2002, and you must first be granted a certificate of leave to appeal by either a judge of the Court of Appeals or a justice of the Appellate Division department that denied your motion. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 450.90 (McKinney 2005); N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 450.90 practice cmnt. at 273 (McKinney 2005). See Part B(2)(a) of this Chapter for a discussion of the standard under which a court will examine ineffective assistance of trial counsel.

use an Article 440 motion for a claim of ineffective assistance of trial (versus appellate) counsel when the trial record does not contain sufficient facts for an appellate court to review your claim on appeal. Ineffective assistance of counsel occurs when your lawyer did not follow professional standards while representing you, and there is a reasonable probability that your lawyer's poor work negatively affected the outcome of your case.¹¹

Article 440 replaced the remedy of state habeas corpus. State habeas corpus challenges the government's right to keep you in prison by making sure your imprisonment is legal. State habeas corpus is still available for New York state incarcerated people in some situations, but courts generally require you to make an Article 440 motion instead (most frequently, state habeas can still be used to challenge parole and bail decisions). The remedy for a habeas corpus violation is immediate release from custody. Under an Article 440 motion, the relief granted is not immediate release but rather a new trial, appeal, or sentence.¹²

2. What You Can Complain About in an Article 440 Motion

(a) Motion to Vacate Judgment

Article 440.10 lists eleven wrongs that you may complain about in a motion to vacate judgment.¹³ These eight wrongs are as follows.

- (1) The trial court lacked "jurisdiction" to decide your case.¹⁴
- (2) The judge or prosecutor (or a person representing one of them) used fraud, "misrepresentation" (false statements), or "duress" (physical or undue psychological pressure) to secure your conviction.¹⁵ However, you cannot simply claim that the judge or district attorney used fraud or misrepresentation.¹⁶ You must support your Article 440 motion with specific facts in the form of an "affidavit" and, if possible, witnesses.¹⁷
- (3) At trial, the prosecutor introduced (or the judge allowed in) "material evidence" (key evidence that significantly impacted the trial) which the prosecutor or judge knew was false at the time of trial.¹⁸ Again, you cannot just state that the judge or district attorney knew certain facts were false, you must show that they knew the facts to be false.¹⁹
- (4) The prosecutor introduced material evidence that was obtained in violation of your rights under the U.S. or New York State Constitutions.²⁰

11. See Chapter 12 of the JLM, "Appealing Your Conviction Based on Ineffective Assistance of Counsel," for more information.

12. See Chapter 21 of the JLM, "State Habeas Corpus: Florida, New York, and Michigan," for more information.

13. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §§ 440.10(1)(a)–(k) (McKinney 2005).

14. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(1)(a) (McKinney 2005). For an explanation of jurisdiction, see Chapter 2 of the JLM, "Introduction to Legal Research."

15. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(1)(b) (McKinney 2005).

16. See People v. Smith, 227 A.D.2d 655, 656, 641 N.Y.S. 2d 905, 907 (3d Dept. 1996) (finding that the defendant's claims of duress, fraud, and misrepresentation by the prosecution and the court, were conclusory and could not serve as a basis for vacating the judgment), People v. Gates, 168 A.D. 2d 995, 995, 564 N.Y.S.2d 938, 938 (4th Dept. 1990) (finding that an unsupported claim of fraud, without more, is not enough to overturn a conviction).

17. See People v. Saunders, 301 A.D. 2d 869, 872, 753 N.Y.2d 620, 624 (3d Dept. 2003) (finding that affidavits were insufficient to require an Article 440 hearing because they did not contain any supporting evidentiary facts useful to the defendant's case).

18. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(1)(c) (McKinney 2005).

19. See People v. Brown, 56 N.Y.2d 242, 246–47, 436 N.E.2d 1295, 1297, 451 N.Y.S. 2d 693, 695 (1982) (upholding the trial court's denial of the defendant's motion to vacate judgment because the defendant's motion papers did not contain any evidence demonstrating that the prosecution was aware of the witness' false testimony).

20. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(1)(d) (McKinney 2005). For more information on such violations, see JLM, Chapter 13, "Federal Habeas Corpus", which lists possible violations of the Constitution, and Chapter 21, "State Habeas Corpus," which lists possible violations of New York State's Constitution. Be aware you may not

- (5) You could not understand or participate in the trial because you suffered from a mental disability of some kind.²¹ For instance, in one case, an incarcerated person claimed in his Article 440 motion that he did not remember or understand his plea or the sentencing proceedings. In support of his motion, he noted that after the judgment he had been diagnosed with psychosis associated with brain trauma. In light of this fact, the court held that there should be a hearing on the individual's motion to vacate the conviction for manslaughter.²²
- (6) The record of your case failed to include "prejudicial" (improper and biased) conduct that occurred at your trial, and an appellate court would reverse the judgment against you if the conduct was in the record.²³ Such conduct includes the prosecutor's failure to supply you with "Brady material." Brady material is any evidence that the prosecutor has or that the prosecutor knows that is favorable to the defense and material to guilt or punishment.²⁴ This material is often referred to as "exculpatory evidence" (that is, evidence favorable to the defendant). To have a conviction overturned based upon the failure to produce Brady material, there must be a "reasonable probability" that the evidence would have affected the ultimate outcome of the trial.²⁵ However, if your trial was in a New York state court and your defense counsel made a specific request for the evidence in question, and the prosecutor did not give you that evidence, there need only be a "reasonable possibility" that the evidence would have changed the outcome.²⁶ The reasonable probability test is harder to satisfy than the reasonable possibility test. Under the reasonable probability test, the undisclosed evidence receives the same weight as it would have been given had it been introduced at trial. Thus, the trial court reviewing an Article 440 motion must determine how the evidence would have affected the be able to raise these constitutional violations if you raised them unsuccessfully on appeal. See Part B(3) of this Chapter.

21. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(1)(e) (McKinney 2005).

22. People v. Hennessey, 111 A.D.3d 1166, 1167–1169, 975 N.Y.S.2d 502, 503–505 (3d Dept. 2013).

23. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(1)(f) (McKinney 2005); see also People v. Letizia, 155 A.D.2d 952, 952–953, 547 N.Y.S.2d 767, 768 (4th Dept. 1989) (finding that where the record did not contain conduct claimed to be improper and prejudicial, the issue could be raised in an Article 440 motion); People v. Cleveland, 132 A.D.2d 921, 921, 518 N.Y.S.2d 477, 477–478 (4th Dept. 1987) (finding that defendant's claim that the District Attorney had previously represented him on other charges and was therefore disqualified from prosecuting him could be raised in an Article 440 motion since the conduct which was claimed to be improper and prejudicial did not appear in record).

24. Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 87, 83 S. Ct. 1194, 1196–1197, 10 L. Ed. 2d 215, 218 (1963) (holding that the suppression of evidence by the prosecution denied petitioner due process).

25. People v. McCray, 23 N.Y.3d 193, 198, 12 N.E. 3d 1079, 1081, 989 N.Y.S.2d 649, 651–652 (2014) ("Under Brady, a defendant is entitled to the disclosure of evidence favorable to his case 'where the evidence is material.' In New York, the test of materiality where ... the defendant has made a specific request for the evidence in question is whether there is a 'reasonable possibility' that the verdict would have been different if the evidence had been disclosed.") (citations omitted); see also People v. Garrett, 23 N.Y.3d 878, 891–892, 18 N.E.3d 722, 733, 994 N.Y.S.2d 22, 33 (2014) (explaining that, to satisfy the materiality prong of Brady test, there must be "a 'reasonable possibility' that [disclosure of specific documents] would have changed the result of the proceedings" and finding no "reasonable probability that disclosure ... would have changed the result of defendant's proceedings") (internal citations omitted); Kyles v. Whitley, 514 U.S. 419, 434, 115 S. Ct. 1555, 1566, 131 L. Ed. 2d 490, 506 (1995) (holding that for Brady purposes, "a 'reasonable probability' of a different result is ... shown when the government's evidentiary suppression 'undermines confidence in the outcome of the trial'" (quoting U.S. v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 678, 105 S. Ct. 3375, 3381, 87 L. Ed. 2d 481, 492 (1985))).

26. See People v. Bond, 95 N.Y.2d 840, 843, 735 N.E.2d 1279, 1281, 713 N.Y.S.2d 514, 516 (2000) (vacating second degree murder conviction because a reasonable possibility existed that the result would have been different if prosecutor had disclosed, in response to a specific Brady request, key witness' denial of having seen the shooting); People v. Vilardi, 76 N.Y.2d 67, 77, 555 N.E.2d 915, 920–921, 556 N.Y.S.2d 518, 523–524 (1990) (holding that a showing of a "reasonable possibility" that failure to disclose favorable evidence contributed to the guilty verdict is the appropriate standard under New York State constitutional law where the defendant has made a specific request for the exculpatory material); People v. Carver, 114 A.D.3d 1199, 1199–1200, 979 N.Y.S.2d 752, 752–753 (4th Dept. 2014) (reversing conviction of assault in the first degree because there existed a "reasonable possibility" that the timely disclosure of a 911 call recording specifically requested by the defendant would have changed the result of the case).

jury's deliberations. While you do not have to show that, with the evidence, you would not have originally been convicted, the evidence must be strong enough to call into question the fairness of your conviction.²⁷ On the other hand, the reasonable possibility test focuses on the evidence withheld, and the court must determine whether the failure to disclose it may have contributed to the verdict.²⁸ Additionally, the evidence in both cases must be admissible in court. For example, "polygraph" (lie detector) test results suggesting that a witness lied are of no use since they are not admissible as evidence.²⁹ Brady material may also include evidence in the possession of other law enforcement agencies involved in your prosecution (for example, FBI Crime Lab notes). However, if an out-of-state agency refuses to turn over materials, the prosecution cannot be held responsible for failure to disclose.³⁰

- (7) After your trial, you uncovered new evidence that you could not have discovered before or during your trial. To succeed on this ground, you must show that the evidence: (a) will probably change the result in your case if a new trial is granted, (b) was discovered after the trial, (c) could not have been discovered before or during the trial by the exercise of "due diligence" (proper research), (d) is material to the issue of your guilt, and (e) does not simply duplicate or contradict other evidence.³¹ Furthermore, if you would like to make an Article 440 motion on the grounds of newly discovered evidence, you must make the motion within a reasonable time after you find the new evidence. If you were convicted after pleading guilty, you may use newly discovered forensic DNA testing of evidence for an Article 440 motion if the court decides that

27. See People v. Wagstaffe, 120 A.D.3d 1361, 1364–1365, 992 N.Y.S.2d 340, 344 (2d Dept. 2014) (finding that "there was a reasonable probability that, had the prosecution identified these documents when delivering them to the defendants, the employment of these documents would have changed the outcome of the defendants' trial").

28. See People v. Bond, 95 N.Y.2d 840, 843, 735 N.E.2d 1279, 1281, 713 N.Y.S.2d 514, 516 (2000) (vacating second degree murder conviction because a reasonable possibility existed that the result would have been different if prosecutor had disclosed, in response to a specific Brady request, key witness' denial of having seen shooting); People v. Carver, 114 A.D.3d 1199, 1199–1200, 979 N.Y.S.2d 752, 752–753 (4th Dept. 2014) (reversing conviction of assault in the first degree because there existed a "reasonable possibility" that the timely disclosure of a 911 call recording specifically requested by the defendant would have changed the result of the case); People v. Williams, 50 A.D.3d 1177, 1180, 854 N.Y.S.2d 586, 590 (3d Dept. 2008) (finding a "reasonable possibility" existed of a different result if requested evidence that would have impeached a key witness had been properly disclosed); cf. People v. Phillips, 55 A.D.3d 1145, 1149, 865 N.Y.S.2d 787, 791 (3d Dept. 2008) (finding no "reasonable possibility" that disclosure of a witness's investigation for drug-related offenses would have produced a different result since witness's credibility was "already blemished" during cross-examination).

29. See People v. Garrett, 23 N.Y.3d 878, 892, 18 N.E.3d 722, 733, 994 N.Y.S.2d 22, 33 (2014) ("This Court has not squarely addressed whether ... inadmissible evidence may be considered 'material' under Brady so long as it 'could lead to admissible evidence'" (citations omitted)); People v. Mazyck, 118 A.D.3d 728, 730–731, 987 N.Y.S.2d 95, 98–99 (2d Dept. 2014) (holding that the defendant's purported statements, which would not be admissible because they were hearsay, could not be basis for vacating judgment of conviction under article 440). But see People v. Scott, 88 N.Y.2d 888, 890–891, 667 N.E.2d 923, 924, 644 N.Y.S.2d 913, 915 (1996) (finding that the failure to produce the scratch sheet from a polygraph examination of the witness is not grounds for vacating conviction in part because the polygraph results would have been inadmissible as evidence).

30. See People v. Santorelli, 95 N.Y.2d 412, 421–422, 741 N.E.2d 493, 497–498, 718 N.Y.S.2d 696, 700–701 (2000) (refusing to vacate conviction based upon prosecutor's failure to provide reports from a parallel FBI investigation where the FBI, "an independent Federal law enforcement agency not subject to State control," was unwilling to turn over the reports to the prosecutor).

31. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(1)(g) (McKinney 2005); see also People v. Watson, 993 N.Y.S.2d 645, 645, 2014 NY Slip Op 50927(U), ¶¶ 13–14, 43 Misc. 3d 1234(A), 1234A (Sup. Ct. Bronx County 2014) (setting standards for newly discovered evidence); People v. Smith, 108 A.D.3d 1075, 1075–1077, 968 N.Y.S.2d 786, 786–789 (4th Dept. 2013) (holding that the affidavit of a co-defendant, which merely contradicted earlier statements, did not constitute new evidence and could not serve as a basis for vacating judgment of the defendant's conviction for attempted second-degree murder, first-degree assault, and second-degree criminal possession of weapon); People v. Sherman, 372 N.Y.S.2d 546, 547–549, 83 Misc.2d 563, 564–565 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 1975) (holding that the indictment of a police officer who testified at trial and the investigation of a judge who signed the search warrant were not enough to grant an Article 440 motion).

you have demonstrated a substantial probability of innocence.³² If you were convicted after a trial, you must show a reasonable probability that the newly discovered forensic DNA testing of evidence would have led to a more favorable verdict in order to use it for an Article 440 motion.³³

- (8) Your conviction was obtained in violation of your constitutional rights.³⁴ Chapter 13 of the JLM, “Federal Habeas Corpus,” provides a long list of possible violations of your rights under the Constitution. You may raise any of these violations in your Article 440 motion as long as they are applicable to your case and your motion satisfies the conditions described in Part B(3) of this Chapter.³⁵ For example, if you do not include your constitutional attack in your direct appeal of your conviction, you will not be able to make an Article 440 motion based on that constitutional claim later on, unless your claim falls into one of the exceptions described in Part B(3) of this Chapter.³⁶
- (9) You were convicted after being arrested for prostitution, loitering for the purpose of prostitution, or prostitution in a school zone, and you participated as a victim of sex trafficking or labor trafficking or while compelling prostitution.³⁷ A person is guilty of compelling prostitution when he knowingly forces or intimidates a person less than eighteen years old to engage in prostitution.³⁸ If you would like to make an Article 440 motion on these grounds, you must make the motion within a reasonable time after you have ceased to be a victim of such trafficking or compelling prostitution. Reasonable concerns for your safety or the safety of family members and other victims of trafficking and compelling prostitution are considered in determining what counts as a reasonable time.³⁹ You do not need to have official documentation of your status as a victim of trafficking or compelling prostitution at the time of the offense in order to make an Article 440 motion, but if you do, it will create a presumption that your participation in the offense was a result of having been a victim of trafficking or compelling prostitution.⁴⁰
- (10) You were convicted of a class A or unclassified misdemeanor prior to August 28, 2019, and your conviction was obtained in violation of your constitutional rights.⁴¹ If you file an Article 440 motion on these grounds, the court will presume that a conviction by plea was not knowing, voluntary and intelligent if it has severe and ongoing consequences. The court will also presume that a conviction by verdict for these offenses violates the state constitution.
- (11) You were convicted of unlawful possession of marijuana in the second degree, which means you knowingly and unlawfully possessed marijuana, or you were convicted of unlawful possession of marijuana in the first degree, which means you knowingly and unlawfully possessed one or more substances containing marijuana and the substances weighed more

32. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(1)(g-1)(1) (McKinney 2005).

33. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(1)(g-1)(2) (McKinney 2005).

34. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(1)(h) (McKinney 2005).

35. As noted in Chapter 13 of the JLM, “Federal Habeas Corpus,” “exhaustion” (doing all you can to get state courts to change your conviction or sentence) is required for a federal court to grant a writ of habeas corpus to a petitioner. See Bossett v. Walker, 41 F.3d 825, 828 (2d Cir. 1994) (stating that a federal court cannot grant a writ of habeas corpus “unless the petitioner has exhausted state remedies” or the state does not have corrective processes) (quoting 28 U.S.C. § 2254(b) (1988)). In many situations, you must raise a federal constitutional violation through an Article 440 motion in order to satisfy the exhaustion requirement. See, e.g., U.S. ex rel. Cleveland v. Casscles, 479 F.2d 15, 19–20 (2d Cir. 1973) (finding that, in light of a new factual allegation, the petitioner should be required to raise an Article 440 motion with the state court before a district court could consider a possible constitutional violation).

36. See People v. Skinner, 154 A.D.2d 216, 221, 552 N.Y.S.2d 932, 934–935 (1st Dept. 1990) (holding that failure to raise an issue on appeal when defendant had knowledge to do so forecloses an Article 440 motion).

37. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(1)(i) (McKinney 2005).

38. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 230.33 (McKinney 2008).

39. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(1)(i)(i) (McKinney 2005).

40. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(1)(i)(ii) (McKinney 2005).

41. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(1)(j) (McKinney 2005).

than one ounce.⁴² These judgments must have occurred prior to August 28, 2019. If you file an Article 440 motion on these grounds, the court will presume that a conviction by plea was not knowing, voluntary and intelligent if it has severe and ongoing consequences. The court will also presume that a conviction by verdict for these offenses violates the state constitution.

In addition to federal constitutional violations, you may also raise violations of your rights under the New York State constitution. These rights are generally very similar to your federal constitutional rights. For example, the law under both constitutions forbids attorneys from intentionally discriminating against people by race or gender in selecting a jury.⁴³ This claim could be raised as a violation of your rights under the New York State constitution and under the U.S. Constitution.

You should be aware that some of your rights under the New York State constitution are broader than the same rights under the U.S. Constitution. For example, the New York State constitution provides you with greater protection against unreasonable police searches than the U.S. Constitution.⁴⁴ The New York State constitution also provides you with greater protection against a court imposing a longer sentence upon you after a successful appeal.⁴⁵ In addition, the New York State constitution requires a prosecutor to supply you with more evidence than the U.S. Constitution requires.⁴⁶ Finally, your right to a lawyer is broader under the New York State constitution than the U.S. Constitution.⁴⁷

You should include claims of state constitutional violations in your Article 440 motion. If you claim a violation of a specific federal constitutional provision (for example, the Fourth Amendment's prohibition against unreasonable searches and seizures), it is a good idea to cite the equivalent state constitutional provision (which, in this example, would be Article I, Section 12 of the New York State constitution).

Another example of state and federal constitutional violations that can be raised in an Article 440 motion is ineffective assistance of counsel at trial. This is a claim that states your lawyer did not comply with professional standards while representing you, and there is a reasonable probability your 42. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(1)(k) (McKinney 2005). For the definitions of unlawful possession of marijuana in the second and first degree, see N.Y. PENAL LAW § 221.05, 221.10 (McKinney 2008).

43. See, e.g., People v. Kern, 75 N.Y.2d 638, 649–653, 554 N.E.2d 1235, 1240–1243, 555 N.Y.S.2d 647, 652–655 (1990) (discussing the New York State constitution's ban on racial discrimination in jury selection); see also Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79, 84–98, 106 S. Ct. 1712, 1716–1724, 90 L. Ed. 2d 69, 79–89 (1986) (discussing the Federal Constitution's ban on racial discrimination in jury selection).

44. See People v. Dunn, 77 N.Y.2d 19, 25, 564 N.E.2d 1054, 1058, 563 N.Y.S.2d 388, 392 (1990) (finding that police use of a specially trained narcotics detection dog to conduct a “canine sniff” outside defendant's apartment is a search under the New York State constitution).

45. See People v. Van Pelt, 76 N.Y.2d 156, 161–162, 556 N.E.2d 423, 425–426, 556 N.Y.S.2d 984, 986–987 (1990) (finding that a sentence following retrial that was longer than the sentence from the first trial is presumed to be vindictive (that is, driven by anger, resentment, and/or revenge) and must be set aside, even if the second trial judge is different from the first trial judge).

46. See People v. Vilardi, 76 N.Y.2d 67, 77, 555 N.E.2d 915, 920, 556 N.Y.S.2d 518, 523 (1990) (holding that where a specific discovery request made the prosecutor aware that defendant considered exculpatory (that is, favorable to the defendant) evidence important to the defense, the standard is “reasonable possibility” that not turning over the evidence contributed to the outcome, rather than “reasonable probability”); cf. People v. Lesiuk, 161 A.D.2d 21, 25, 560 N.Y.S.2d 711, 713 (3d Dept. 1990) (stating that the standard is “reasonable probability” where the prosecution has tried hard to produce a missing exculpatory police informant), aff'd, 81 N.Y.2d 485, 617 N.E.2d 1047, 600 N.Y.S.2d 931 (1993). The reasonable probability test is more difficult to satisfy than the reasonable possibility test. The difference between the tests is that under the reasonable probability test, the undisclosed evidence receives no more weight than it would have been given had it been introduced at trial. Thus, the trial court reviewing an Article 440 motion must determine how that evidence would have affected the jury's deliberations. On the other hand, the reasonable possibility test focuses on the evidence withheld, and the court must determine whether the failure to disclose it possibly contributed to the verdict.

47. See People v. Velasquez, 68 N.Y.2d 533, 536, 503 N.E.2d 481, 483, 510 N.Y.S.2d 833, 835 (1986) (“In this State the right to counsel, both as to the time of its attachment and as to its waiver, is broader than the protection afforded under Federal law.”) (internal citation omitted). See also People v. Hobson, 39 N.Y.2d 479, 483–484, 348 N.E.2d 894, 897, 384 N.Y.S.2d 419, 421–422 (1976) (detailing New York case law that extended protections for the defendant under the State constitution beyond those guaranteed by the Constitution).

case was negatively affected.⁴⁸ You should be aware that in New York, you may not make a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel solely because your lawyer unsuccessfully used a certain trial strategy—even if that strategy was offensive, outrageous,⁴⁹ daring, or innovative.⁵⁰ In addition, you cannot simply claim that your lawyer was ineffective. You must identify your lawyer’s specific acts or omissions (failing to act) that you believe were so ineffective that you were deprived of your right to counsel. Then, you must also show that this lack of counsel prejudiced your defense so much that the trial was not a fair trial.⁵¹ For example, it is unlikely that an error by counsel, even if professionally unreasonable, would result in setting aside the judgment if the error did not affect the outcome. However, if you can show that your attorney had a conflict of interest while representing you, and that this conflict made the attorney’s performance worse, courts will presume that you were prejudiced.⁵² Your attorney would have had a conflict of interest if your attorney had a work-related reason or a substantial personal reason to give you less than a full effort. One possible reason would be if your attorney, without telling you or the judge, also represented a witness who testified against you.⁵³

(b) Motion to Set Aside Sentence

Unlike the Article 440.10 motion to challenge your conviction (discussed above), an Article 440.20 motion attacks your sentence as unauthorized, illegally imposed, or in some other way invalid.⁵⁴ A

48. See Chapter 12 of the JLM “Appealing Your Conviction Based on Ineffective Assistance of Counsel,” for more information.

49. See People v. Sullivan, 153 A.D.2d 223, 226–227, 550 N.Y.S.2d 358, 359–360 (2d Dept. 1990) (holding that the defense attorney’s reference to victims as “skells,” “pimps,” or “junkies” was not ineffective counsel because it is presumed to have been a part of trial strategy).

50. See People v. Baldi, 54 N.Y.2d 137, 151–152, 429 N.E.2d 400, 407–408, 444 N.Y.S.2d 893, 900–901 (1981) (holding that the defense attorney’s strategy of testifying at his client’s trial in an attempt to present an insanity defense was not ineffective assistance even though his being on the stand left his client without representation).

51. See Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 687, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 2064, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674, 693 (1984) (stating you must first specify the error made by counsel, and then show that the error prejudiced your defense to such an extent that it affected the result of the trial). In New York, you are entitled to meaningful representation. People v. Baldi, 54 N.Y.2d 137, 147, 429 N.E.2d 400, 405, 444 N.Y.S.2d 893, 898 (1981) (“So long as the evidence, the law, and the circumstances of a particular case, viewed in totality and as of the time of the representation, reveal that the attorney provided meaningful representation, the constitutional requirement will have been met.”). New York has retained the Baldi “meaningful representation” standard in preference to the federal Strickland standard in evaluating claims of ineffective assistance of trial counsel. Under the Baldi “meaningful representation” standard, showing prejudice is important but not required. Under the federal Strickland standard, you must show your defense was prejudiced. People v. Stultz, 2 N.Y.3d 277, 282, 810 N.E.2d 883, 886, 778 N.Y.S.2d 431, 434 (2004) (stating that the appropriate standard for effective assistance of counsel is the same meaningful representation standard as People v. Baldi). You should note, however, “meaningful representation” does not mean “perfect representation,” but only reasonably competent representation. People v. Benevento, 91 N.Y.2d 708, 712, 697 N.E.2d 584, 587, 674 N.Y.S.2d 629, 632 (1998) (quoting People v. Modica, 64 N.Y.2d 828, 829, 476 N.E.2d 330, 331, 486 N.Y.S.2d 931, 932 (1985)).

52. See Cuyler v. Sullivan, 446 U.S. 335, 349–350, 100 S. Ct. 1708, 1719, 64 L. Ed. 2d 333, 347 (1980) (stating that a defendant who shows that a conflict of interest actually affected the adequacy of his representation need not demonstrate prejudice); Nix v. Whiteside, 475 U.S. 157, 176, 106 S. Ct. 988, 999, 89 L. Ed. 2d 123, 140 (1986) (noting that “conflict” does not include the one created by a client proposal that violates an attorney’s ethical obligations); see also Winkler v. Keane, 812 F. Supp. 426, 431 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) (finding that existence of a contingency fee arrangement between defendant and his attorney does not amount to a per se claim of ineffective assistance of counsel); People v. Wandell, 75 N.Y.2d 951, 952, 554 N.E.2d 1274, 1275, 555 N.Y.S.2d 686, 687 (1990) (stating that an attorney must inform the client and the trial court of conflicting interests so that the court may conduct a record inquiry to determine whether the client understands the implications of the conflict); People v. Gomberg, 38 N.Y.2d 307, 314–316, 342 N.E.2d 550, 555, 379 N.Y.S.2d 769, 776–777 (1975) (holding that trial judge’s inquiry into possible conflict of interest between defendants and their counsel, and defendants’ opportunity to retain separate counsel, fulfilled attorney’s obligation to protect defendants’ rights).

53. See Chapter 12 of the JLM, “Appealing Your Conviction Based on Ineffective Assistance of Counsel,” for more examples of conflicts of interest.

54. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.20(1) (McKinney 2009).

sentence is unauthorized if it is longer than the law allows.⁵⁵ For example, third degree burglary, a Class D felony,⁵⁶ carries a maximum sentence of seven years if you are a first or second felony offender.⁵⁷ Thus, you could make an Article 440 motion to attack a sentence of seven years and one day for third degree burglary if you are a first or second felony offender. However, you could not attack a sentence of seven years. Even if this sentence is longer than sentences that other defendants received for the same crime, the law allows a seven-year sentence.⁵⁸ You cannot raise a claim that your sentence was too harsh or long under this motion as long as the sentence is allowed by law.⁵⁹

In addition to the unauthorized sentence described above, there may be other reasons you can raise an Article 440 motion to set your sentence aside as illegal. Some of these grounds include:

- (1) “Due process” errors in the sentencing procedures,⁶⁰
- (2) The sentencing court disregarded your “right of allocution,” which means that the judge failed to ask you at your sentencing if you wished to address the court on your own behalf,⁶¹
- (3) The sentencing court ignored your right to be present at sentencing,⁶²

55. See People v. Fuller, 119 A.D.2d 692, 692, 501 N.Y.S.2d 116, 116 (2d Dept. 1986) (changing sentence that was longer than maximum length of time for the crime committed).

56. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 140.20 (McKinney 2010). The N.Y. Penal Law describes and classifies every felony. In order to determine whether your sentence was authorized by law, you should first find out what class of felony you were convicted of by looking up your offense in the Penal Law. Burglary and related offenses, for example, are defined in § 140.05 through § 140.40 of the Penal Law. Then, you should check § 70.00 of the Penal Law, which specifies the longest and shortest terms of sentence that can be imposed for the various classes of felonies.

57. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.00(2)(d) (McKinney 2009).

58. See People v. Baraka, 109 Misc. 2d 271, 272–273, 439 N.Y.S.2d 827, 829–830 (Crim. Ct. N.Y. Cty. 1981) (holding that the court deciding an Article 440 motion has no authority to change a sentence that conforms to the Penal Law).

59. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.20(1) (McKinney 2009); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.20 practice cmt. (McKinney 2009). See Chapter 9 of the JLM, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence,” for more information on appeals.

60. See People v. Bellamy, 160 A.D.2d 886, 887–888, 554 N.Y.S.2d 320, 321 (2d Dept. 1990) (vacating sentence and finding that, while the judge had authority to vacate a previously-imposed minimum permissible sentence, defendant’s right to due process was violated when the judge then imposed maximum permissible sentence, without offering any explanation for doing so).

61. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 380.50(1) (McKinney 2009) gives you the right to make such a statement. To have your sentence set aside on this ground, you must show that, had your right been honored, you would have said or revealed something that would have required the court to conduct further inquiry before sentencing you. See People v. St. Claire, 99 A.D.2d 982, 982, 473 N.Y.S.2d 19, 20 (1st Dept. 1984) (stating that violation of right to allocution should be raised in Article 440.20 motion); People v. Quiles, 72 A.D.2d 610, 610, 421 N.Y.S.2d 119, 119–120 (2d Dept. 1979) (stating that where a defendant at sentencing raised the possibility of a defense that possibly negated his criminal intent, the trial court was required to conduct further inquiry); People ex rel. Boddingham v. La Vallee, 50 A.D.2d 692, 692, 375 N.Y.S.2d 477, 477–478 (3d Dept. 1975) (holding that defendant who was denied right of allocution is entitled only to resentencing and not release from incarceration); People v. Luchey, 41 A.D.2d 1023, 1023–1024, 343 N.Y.S.2d 997, 998 (4th Dept. 1973) (reversing sentence because the judge did not ask the defendant if the defendant wanted to speak during the sentencing proceeding).

62. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 380.40(1) (McKinney 2018) gives you the right to be present at sentencing and at resentencing. See People v. Brown, 155 A.D.2d 608, 608, 547 N.Y.S.2d 664, 664 (2d Dept. 1989) (finding that the court’s failure to produce the defendant at resentencing denied him his right to be present). You may waive this right if you are being charged with a misdemeanor or petty offense, in which case a court may sentence you in your absence. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 380.40(2) (McKinney 2018). To succeed on an Article 440 motion based on a denial of this right, you must show that, if you were present, you would have said something that would have required the court to investigate your case further. However, your right to be present may have been forfeited by your actions if you were removed from the courtroom due to misbehavior after being warned that you would be sentenced without your presence. See People v. Herrera, 160 A.D.2d 416, 416, 554 N.Y.S.2d 30, 30–31 (1st Dept. 1990) (based on defendant’s behavior, “it is clear that defendant voluntarily absented himself from the sentencing proceedings, thereby waiving such right”). You may also have forfeited your right to be present if you failed to appear after being advised that a sentence would be pronounced in your absence. See People v. Griffin, 135 A.D.2d 730, 731, 522 N.Y.S.2d 632, 634 (2d Dept. 1987) (holding that the defendant gave up his right to be present at his felony hearing and sentencing by not appearing even though “he knew when he refused to attend that the hearing court would proceed in his absence”). Finally, if you willfully failed to appear in order to ruin the sentencing

- (4) The court violated your First Amendment right of free association by, for example, considering at sentencing your membership in a racist organization even though this membership was not relevant to any of the issues at your trial.⁶³
- (5) The court sentenced you as a second-time or third-time offender, but the prior conviction was obtained in violation of your constitutional rights or was in some other way invalid.⁶⁴ For example, you may challenge the constitutional validity of the prior convictions or the decision to count them as “predicates” (prior convictions). The most common error is the use of out-of-state convictions as predicate felonies. Your out-of-state conviction will only count as a felony if your criminal conduct would have been a felony in New York, or if in the other state your conduct was punishable by a sentence of more than one year imprisonment and is also punishable by a sentence of more than one year under New York law.⁶⁵ For example, a felony conviction in New Jersey of promoting prostitution by soliciting persons to patronize a prostitute cannot be used as a predicate felony in New York since the equivalent New York crime (promoting prostitution in the fourth degree) is a misdemeanor.⁶⁶
- (6) The court incorrectly imposed “consecutive sentences” (one sentence running after another) when you should have been sentenced to “concurrent sentences” (two sentences running at the same time).⁶⁷ In general, consecutive sentences cannot be imposed where (a) a single act constitutes two or more offenses, or (b) a single act constitutes one offense and is a material element of another.⁶⁸ For example, if you committed armed robbery, you can be charged with the crimes of robbery and weapons possession. However, you cannot be sentenced consecutively for these crimes, as they were part of the same act.

process, your right to be present may have been forfeited by your actions. See People v. Corley, 67 N.Y.2d 105, 109–110, 491 N.E.2d 1090, 1092, 500 N.Y.S.2d 633, 635 (1986) (affirming the sentence imposed in the defendant’s absence where the “defendant willfully absented himself from the court for the purpose of frustrating the sentencing process.”).

63. See Dawson v. Delaware, 503 U.S. 159, 165–166, 112 S. Ct. 1093, 1097–1098, 117 L. Ed. 2d 309, 317–318 (1992) (holding that admitting evidence of the defendant’s membership in racist gang at the capital sentencing proceeding was error because that evidence was not relevant to any issue in the punishment phase).

64. See People v. Simmons, 143 A.D.2d 153, 154, 531 N.Y.S.2d 928, 928–929 (2d Dept. 1988) (finding that the defendant’s prior conviction for buying, receiving, and concealing stolen property under an Alabama statute that did not specify monetary value for stolen property was not a predicate (prior) felony for purposes of second felony offender status, as the New York statute required proof that the value of the stolen property exceeded $250). If you did not raise an objection at the time the prosecution identified to you the prior felony to be used for sentencing enhancement, an appeals court will not review this sentencing issue. See People v. Sullivan, 153 A.D.2d 223, 233, 550 N.Y.S.2d 358, 364 (2d Dept. 1990) (“When the defendant fails to raise an objection, and when, as a result, the legality of the sentence cannot be determined by this court upon the information contained in the appellate record, review as a matter of law should be denied.”). If no objection was made due to mutual mistake, the appellate court can still reverse if the use of the predicate (prior) felony was clear error (meaning that it was apparent on the record that use of the predicate felony was error). See People v. Eason, 168 Misc. 2d 44, 46–47, 641 N.Y.S.2d 1018, 1020 (Sup. Ct. Queens Cty. 1996) (setting aside sentence where the defendant was improperly determined to be a second felony offender by mutual mistake because the prior felony had not yet been sentenced, making it unavailable as a predicate, and the error was clear on the record); see also N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §§ 400.15(7)(b), 400.16, 400.20(6) (McKinney 2018), & 400.21(7)(b) (McKinney 2005).

65. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.06(1)(b)(i) (McKinney 2009).

66. See People v. Johnson, 127 A.D.2d 1003, 1003, 513 N.Y.S.2d 60, 6160 (4th Dept. 1987) (holding that a New Jersey felony conviction for promoting prostitution did not constitute a felony for New York sentencing purposes because the crime would have been a misdemeanor in New York, for which a term of imprisonment in excess of one year was not authorized).

67. See People v. Riggins, 164 A.D.2d 797, 797–798, 559 N.Y.S.2d 535, 536 (1st Dept. 1990) (finding that the court had no authority to change concurrent sentences to consecutive ones on its own without being asked to do so by either side).

68. See N.Y. PENAL LAW § 70.25(2) (McKinney 2009); People v. Jeanty, 268 A.D.2d 675, 679–681, 702 N.Y.S.2d 194, 200–201 (3d Dept. 2000) (holding that the lower court erred in making sentences, for robbery in the first degree and burglary in the first degree, consecutive to a felony murder sentence because the conduct constituting the robbery and burglary offense could have been a material element of the felony murder; however, the court also held that aggregate sentence of 75 years to life was proper).

Remember, a motion under Article 440.20 deals only with your sentence and has no effect on your underlying conviction. If your motion is granted, the court will vacate your sentence and resentence you in accordance with the law.⁶⁹

(c) Request for DNA Testing

In a relatively new section of Article 440, a defendant may request in his 440 motion that a forensic DNA test be done on evidence introduced at trial.⁷⁰ The court will order that a test be done if it determines that the following requirements are met:

- (1) Your 440 motion requests forensic testing on clearly identified specific and particular evidence,
- (2) The evidence upon which you are requesting a DNA test was obtained in connection with the trial that resulted in your conviction, and
- (3) There is a reasonable probability that if the results of a DNA test had been admitted at the trial, the verdict would have been more favorable to you.⁷¹

The third requirement is probably the most important one. The court will not order a DNA test if it believes there is no reasonable probability that the verdict would have been different even if you are right about the DNA test.⁷² For more information on DNA testing, see Chapter 11 of the JLM, “Using Post-Conviction DNA Testing to Attack Your Conviction or Sentence.”

3. When You Can Get Relief Under Article 440

There are strict requirements for making a motion to vacate judgment under Section 440.10. In contrast, the requirements for making a motion to set aside a sentence under Section 440.20 are more relaxed. The requirements for making each type of motion are discussed separately below.

(a) When You Are Not Entitled to File a Motion to Vacate a Judgment Under Section 440.10

There are four circumstances in which the court must deny your motion to vacate a judgment under Section 440.10.⁷³ These four circumstances are:

- (1) If your claim was raised on appeal and the court denied your complaint on the merits (in other words, when the appellate court considered your claims and decided that they were not sufficient to overcome your guilty conviction).⁷⁴ There is an exception to this rule. The exception applies when the law changed after your appeal was decided, and the courts apply the new law “retroactively” (in other words, the courts apply a new law to old cases which have been tried, decided, or appealed before the change in the law occurred).⁷⁵ The Court of Appeals will only give full retroactivity to new laws which aim to protect the fact-finding process from unreliably obtained information which relates directly and substantially to guilt or innocence (in other words, to prevent a defendant from being found guilty on unreliably obtained

69. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.20(4) (McKinney 2005); N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.20 practice cmt. (McKinney 2005).

70. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.30(1-a) (McKinney 2005).

71. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.30(1-a) (McKinney 2005). See Footnote 39 of this Chapter for an explanation of “reasonable probability.”

72. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.30(1-a) (McKinney 2005); see also People v. Tookes, 167 Misc. 2d 601, 605–606, 639 N.Y.S.2d 913, 916 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. Cty. 1996) (finding no reasonable probability where: (1) there was no case for mistaken identity, (2) there was clear evidence of rape, (3) defendant failed earlier to pursue an enzyme analysis, and (4) a showing that defendant’s DNA did not match the crime scene sample would not likely have resulted in a “verdict more favorable to the defendant”). See Footnote 39 of this Chapter for an explanation of “reasonable probability.”

73. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(2)(a)–(d) (McKinney 2005).

74. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(2)(a) (McKinney 2005); see, e.g., People v. Skinner, 154 A.D.2d 216, 221, 552 N.Y.S.2d 932, 934 (1st Dept. 1990) (holding that arguments raised and rejected on their merits on direct appeal may not be subsequently raised in an Article 440 motion).

75. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(2)(a) (McKinney 2005).

information).⁷⁶ “Full retroactivity” means you can raise the new law in a post-conviction proceeding, such as an Article 440 motion, even though you were convicted and had appealed before the new law came into effect. However, full retroactivity has been applied very rarely in New York.⁷⁷ The courts decide whether a new rule should apply retroactively based on three factors:

- (a) the new rule’s purpose (that is, whether the purpose of the new law is to protect the fact-finding process from unreliably obtained information which relates directly to guilt or innocence),
 - (b) the extent of the reliance on the old rule (in other words, whether there were a great number of cases and, as a result, a large number of defendants were convicted and incarcerated under the old rule), and
 - (c) the effect on the administration of justice in applying the new rule retroactively (in other words, because the old rule applied to so many cases, making the new rule retroactive would result in too many over rulings and retrials, and it would over-burden the criminal courts. In such a situation, the courts are unwilling to apply the new rule retroactively).⁷⁸
- (2) You cannot make a Section 440.10 motion on the basis of an error that you may still raise in an appeal of your conviction, or that you have already raised in an appeal that is pending (an appeal is pending if the appeals court has not yet handed down a decision).⁷⁹ Remember,

76. See People v. Laffman, 161 A.D.2d 111, 112–13, 554 N.Y.S.2d 840, 841 (1st Dept. 1990) (“Where a new rule ... has as its purpose preserving the fact-finding process from unreliably obtained information bearing directly and substantially on a defendant’s guilt or innocence, the rule should be applied retroactively ...”).

77. See People v. Hill, 85 N.Y.2d 256, 263–264, 648 N.E.2d 455, 458–459, 624 N.Y.S.2d 79, 82 (1995) (vacating the conviction and remanding for a new trial, holding that the new Ryan rule, which states that a defendant could only be found guilty if he had knowledge of the weight of the illegal drugs he possessed, should be applied retroactively to cases of sale of illegal drugs); People v. Laffman, 161 A.D.2d 111, 111–113, 554 N.Y.S.2d 840, 841 (1st Dept. 1990) (vacating the judgment and remanding for a new trial, holding that a standard applying to stationhouse identification procedures in a subsequent case should apply retroactively whether on direct review or collateral proceedings). But see People v. Pepper, 53 N.Y.2d 213, 221–222, 423 N.E.2d 366, 369–370, 440 N.Y.S.2d 889, 892–893 (1981) (finding the defendant was not entitled to retroactive application of a court decision that held that once an indictment or complaint has been filed, a defendant could not have waived his constitutional right to counsel unless in presence of counsel); People v. Douglas, 205 A.D.2d 280, 292, 617 N.Y.S.2d 733, 740 (1st Dept. 1994) (stating that the Ryan decision, which held that defendant’s knowledge of drug weight was to be proved by the prosecution, will not be applied retroactively); People v. Byrdsong, 161 Misc. 2d 232, 234–235, 613 N.Y.S.2d 543, 544–545 (Sup. Ct. Queens Cty. 1994) (holding that the retroactivity of a rule, which stated that defendants generally had the right to be present during Sandoval hearings, was limited to only direct appeals and not to post-conviction hearings); People v. Alvarez, 151 Misc. 2d 697, 701, 573 N.Y.S.2d 592, 594–595 (Sup. Ct. Kings Cty. 1991) (stating that the Van Pelt decision, which held that a presumption of vindictiveness applies where a second sentence is higher after retrial than the original sentence, will not be applied retroactively).

78. See People v. Pepper, 53 N.Y.2d 213, 220–221, 423 N.E.2d 366, 369, 440 N.Y.S.2d 889, 891–892 (1981) (outlining the three-part test for retroactivity but holding that changes in the rules governing a defendant’s right to pre-trial counsel applied retroactively only to cases still on direct review at the time of the change in law); see also People v. Mitchell, 80 N.Y.2d 519, 528–529, 606 N.E.2d 1381, 1386, 591 N.Y.S.2d 990, 995 (1992) (applying the three-part Pepper test in holding that a new state statutory right applied only prospectively and not retroactively because (1) the new rule did not fix any constitutional problems and only indirectly related to the fact-finding process, (2) the courts had substantially relied on the old rule, and (3) retroactive application would substantially burden the justice system); People v. Douglas, 205 A.D.2d 280, 289–290, 617 N.Y.S.2d 733, 738–739 (1st Dept. 1994) (holding that although there is a very good argument for the first prong of the test, retroactivity cannot apply because the second prong would not be met since the vast majority of drug cases relied on the old rule, and the third prong would therefore not be met because retroactivity would place a huge burden on the court system); People v. Perez, 162 Misc. 2d 750, 762–763, 616 N.Y.S.2d 928, 936 (Sup. Ct. Kings Cty. 1994) (observing that a certain new rule would not apply retroactively because retroactivity would violate the second and third prongs of this three-pronged test due to past substantial reliance and the potential for future substantial burden on the administration of justice).

79. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(2)(b) (McKinney 2005); see also People v. Cooks, 67 N.Y.2d 100, 104, 491 N.E.2d 676, 678, 500 N.Y.S.2d 503, 505 (1986) (holding that if the record is sufficient for review of the issue on direct appeal, the issue cannot be also reviewed in an Article 440 motion); People v. Griffin, 115 A.D.2d 902, 904, 496 N.Y.S.2d 799, 801 (3d Dept. 1985) (denying the defendant’s Article 440 motion because judgment was already

Article 440 is not a substitute for an appeal. However, you may complain in a Section 440.10 motion about an error without first appealing the error if your trial record does not contain sufficient facts to allow an appeals court to review the error.⁸⁰ For example, if you have found new evidence that could not have been available at the time of the trial, and therefore was not included in the record, yet would have been more favorable to you, you may bring a Section 440.10 motion directly.⁸¹ But be very careful about deciding to use an Article 440 motion to complain about a decision without first bringing a direct appeal. The court reviewing your Article 440 motion decides if your trial record contains sufficient facts for an appeal. If the court finds that there are sufficient facts in your trial record for direct appeal, your Article 440 motion will be dismissed. If you did not also file or pursue a direct appeal, it may be too late to do so.⁸² Sometimes there may be doubt as to whether there are sufficient facts in the record for an appeals court to review. In that situation, you should be careful to file a timely direct appeal, and you should not just rely solely on an Article 440 motion in case the motion is denied.⁸³ However, you may complain in a Section 440.10 motion without first appealing if you were a victim of sex trafficking.⁸⁴ In order to qualify for this exception, you must have been arrested for prostitution under N.Y. Penal Law § 230.00 or for loitering for the purpose of prostitution under N.Y. Penal Law § 240.37. Additionally, your participation in the offense must have been a result of having been a victim of sex trafficking.⁸⁵

- (3) An error cannot be brought up in an Article 440 motion unless you brought it up in your appeal or you have a good excuse for not raising the issue on appeal. If you appealed only your sentence and not your conviction or if you did not include the error in your appeal, then you may not bring up the error.⁸⁶ One example of a good excuse would be where the error was overlooked due to ineffective assistance of appellate counsel.⁸⁷ (But if you believe your lawyer was ineffective because your lawyer did not tell you of your right to appeal, you must make a motion instead under N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law Section 460.30.) Another good excuse is where an appeal seemed useless due to the state of the law at the time, but the law changed later and on appeal to the Appellate Division and defendant failed to demonstrate the existence of relevant new evidence not in the record). Part B(1) of this Chapter contains a list of information found in your trial record.

80. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(2)(b) (McKinney 2005). See Chapter 9 of the JLM, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence,” for a full discussion of how to appeal your sentence and/or conviction.

81. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(1)(g) (McKinney 2005).

82. See People v. Cooks, 67 N.Y.2d 100, 104, 491 N.E.2d 676, 678, 500 N.Y.S.2d 503, 505 (1986) (holding that if the defendant could have raised the issue on direct appeal, the judge must dismiss the Article 440 motion); N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10 practice cmt. (McKinney 2005) (“[S]hould the record be found by the motion court to have been sufficient for review of the point on direct appeal, the motion must be dismissed ... and the defendant, having permitted the time for perfecting the appeal to elapse, will be left without a remedy.”).

83. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10 practice cmt. (McKinney 2005).

84. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §§ 440.10(1)(i), (2)(b) (McKinney 2005).

85. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(1)(i) (McKinney 2005) (“[A]nd the defendant's participation in the offense was a result of having been a victim of sex trafficking under section 230.34 of the penal law ... or trafficking in persons under the Trafficking Victims Protection Act (United States Code, title 22, chapter 78)...”)

86. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(2)(c) (McKinney 2005); see, e.g., People v. Skinner, 154 A.D.2d 216, 221, 552 N.Y.S.2d 932, 934–935 (1st Dept. 1990) (holding that the defendant's failure to present his constitutional attack in his direct appeal prevented any consideration of it in an Article 440 motion); People v. Cunningham, 104 Misc. 2d 298, 302–304, 428 N.Y.S.2d 183, 187–188, (Sup. Ct. Bronx Cty. 1980) (holding that a court must deny an Article 440 motion where a defendant could have, but did not, raise the issue on direct appeal, despite a subsequent retroactively effective change in the law regarding that issue).

87. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10 practice cmt. (McKinney 2009) (discussing that the writ of coram nobis “remains available as a remedy where one is required and none is provided by statute” and accordingly that the writ of coram nobis can be used to bring a claim of ineffective appellate counsel); see also People v. Bachert, 69 N.Y.2d 593, 599, 509 N.E.2d 318, 322, 516 N.Y.S.2d 623, 627 (1987) (holding that § 440.10 did not invalidate the writ of coram nobis and therefore review of ineffective counsel by the appellate court was available). See Footnote 10 of this Chapter for more discussion on a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel.

courts applied the new law retroactively. Because of those changes, you can argue that your conviction is fundamentally unfair.⁸⁸

- (4) The judge will deny your Section 440.10 motion if it is based on an issue that involves only the validity of your sentence, rather than your conviction.⁸⁹ Instead, you must complain about your sentence in a motion to set aside your sentence under N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.20, not Section 440.10.

(b) When You May File a Motion to Vacate Judgment Under Section 440.10

While a judge must deny your Section 440.10 motion in the four circumstances listed above, there are other circumstances in which a judge can deny, but is not required to deny, your Section 440.10 motion.⁹⁰ These circumstances are:

- (1) You did not “preserve the issue for review on appeal.” This means that you did one or more of the following things: (1) you did not object at the trial to errors that happened during the trial, (2) you did not ask the court to give a particular instruction to the jury, (3) you did not ask the court to make a ruling on an issue, (4) you did not present facts that would have supported your claim and that you should have found through due diligence (proper research), or (5) in some way you did not make sure that an issue would be in the trial record.⁹¹ The following are examples of some of the issues you may raise in an Article 440 motion even though the issues were not preserved (kept) for review on appeal.
- (a) You may complain that you received ineffective, or bad, assistance of counsel at trial, but your claim depends on what information is found in your trial record. Since the trial record does not usually contain details of your lawyer’s performance at trial, the New York Court of Appeals believes that an Article 440 motion is usually better than an appeal for an ineffective assistance of counsel claim.⁹² However, if the trial record does contain facts that would allow an appellate court to review a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, it is important that you raise the claim on direct appeal.⁹³

88. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(3)(b) (McKinney 2005); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.10 practice cmt. (McKinney 2009) (discussing how a court, under § 440.10(3)(b), may choose not to bar relief if there has been a retroactively effective change in law).

89. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(2)(d) (McKinney 2005).

90. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §§ 440.10(3)(a)–(c) (McKinney 2005) (stating that although the court may deny the motion under any of the circumstances specified, in the interest of justice and for good cause shown, it can use its discretion to grant the motion and vacate the judgment.).

91. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(3)(a) (McKinney 2005); see People v. Green, 177 A.D.2d 856, 857, 576 N.Y.S.2d 625, 626 (3d Dept. 1991) (holding denial of defendant’s 440.10 motion was proper because his failure to object to prosecutor’s use of peremptory challenges did not allow for the creation of a record subject to review); People v. Nuness, 151 A.D.2d 987, 988, 542 N.Y.S.2d 76, 77 (4th Dept. 1989) (holding that because defendant did not object at trial to prosecutor’s failure to turn over police notes or request a hearing to determine the existence of the notes, the issue was not preserved for appeal and could not be raised in a § 440.10 proceeding); People v. Craft, 123 A.D.2d 481, 482, 506 N.Y.S.2d 492, 493 (3d Dept. 1986) (holding that the shackling of the defendant in the presence of the jury was not a basis for a § 440.10 motion because defendant did not object at trial nor request an instruction to the jury to disregard the shackling); People v. Donovan, 107 A.D.2d 433, 443–444, 487 N.Y.S.2d 345, 352–353 (2d Dept. 1985) (holding that because the defendant did not claim at trial that his confession was obtained in violation of his right to counsel, the defendant could not raise this issue for the first time in a § 440.10 motion). As explained in Chapter 9 of the JLM, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence,” you or your lawyer must protest errors that occur at trial when they happen in order to ensure that these errors will be reviewed on appeal.

92. See People v. Brown, 45 N.Y.2d 852, 853–854, 382 N.E.2d 1149, 1149–1150, 410 N.Y.S.2d 287, 287 (1978) (observing that since the record often does not provide enough information for appeal on effectiveness of counsel, an Article 440 motion is usually a better method for ineffectiveness of counsel claims); see also N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.10(3)(a) (McKinney 2005) (stating that a court may deny a motion to vacate a judgment where the defendant failed to raise an issue prior to sentencing, even though facts in support of the issue raised in the Article 440 motion could have easily appeared on the record had the defendant acted with due diligence, but also noting that “[t]his paragraph does not apply to a motion based upon deprivation of the right to counsel at the trial or upon failure of the trial court to advise the defendant of such right.”).

93. See People v. Gonzalez, 158 A.D.2d 615, 615, 551 N.Y.S.2d 586, 587 (2d Dept. 1990) (denying an Article

- (b) You may raise an issue in your motion if you could not have raised the issue at trial because, at that time, you could not have discovered the important facts.⁹⁴ For example, in one Article 440 motion, a defendant complained that he was not told the prosecutor had an agreement with a witness against the defendant, even though defendant's counsel asked the prosecutor. The prosecutor had agreed to recommend a lesser sentence for the witness in exchange for the witness's testimony against the defendant. The trial court denied the motion because the defendant could have raised this issue at trial and the intermediate appellate court "affirmed" (approved) the trial court's order. But, the Court of Appeals disagreed, finding that the defendant could not have known of or discovered the agreement at the time of trial and, therefore, could not have raised the issue at trial.⁹⁵
- (c) You may claim that there was prejudicial or harmful newspaper publicity about your case before and during the trial. However, if you did not alert the trial court to such newspaper publicity, and therefore, this negative publicity was not included in the record for the appeals court to review, a judge may decide to deny a Section 440.10 motion which raises this issue.⁹⁶
- (d) You may claim that you were a victim of sex trafficking if you have been arrested for prostitution under N.Y. Penal Law § 230.00 or for loitering for the purpose of prostitution under N.Y. Penal Law § 240.37.⁹⁷ In addition, your participation in the offense must have been a result of having been a victim of sex trafficking under N.Y. Penal Law § 230.34 or trafficking in persons under the Trafficking Victims Protection Act.⁹⁸
- (2) A trial court can decide to either consider or reject a second motion to vacate the judgment (do away with it) as long as (i) the issue was not decided on direct appeal, and (ii) it was included in your first Article 440 motion.⁹⁹ Again, there is an exception to this rule if the law has changed since your earlier motion and the change has been held to apply retroactively (applying to a past event).¹⁰⁰
- (3) The third situation where a trial court can decide to grant or reject your motion is when you could have raised this issue in a previous Section 440.10 motion, but you did not. Unless you can show a good reason for not including the issue in your earlier motion, the court may deny your second motion.¹⁰¹ It is important, therefore, that you include all possible supporting issues and complaints in your Section 440.10 motion. You may not be able to raise any additional issues that you leave out in another Article 440 motion.

(c) Alleging Omission of Rosario Materials

You may file a 440 motion if the government did not give you what is called "Rosario material." Rosario material is any recorded statement of a prosecution witness (including police officers) that the police or prosecution have in their possession that relates to the subject matter of the witness' trial 440 motion in part due to the ineffectiveness of counsel's claims. Counsel's claims were based on matters in the record and the court held that they should have been raised on direct appeal rather than in an Article 440 motion).

94. See People v. Qualls, 70 N.Y.2d 863, 865–866, 517 N.E.2d 1346, 1347, 523 N.Y.S.2d 460, 461–462 (1987) (finding defendant could not have discovered evidence of the prosecutor's misconduct during trial, based on the prosecutor's misrepresentation of the substance of its cooperation agreement with a witness, and so defendant was granted a hearing on his Article 440 motion).

95. People v. Qualls, 70 N.Y.2d 863, 865–866, 517 N.E.2d 1346, 1347, 523 N.Y.S.2d 460, 461–462 (1987).

96. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(3)(a) (McKinney 2009); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.10 practice cmt. (McKinney 2009).

97. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(1)(i)–(ii) (McKinney 2009) (McKinney 2009).

98. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 230.34 (McKinney 2009), 22 U.S.C. § 7101 (2012).

99. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(3)(b) (McKinney 2009); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.10 practice cmt. (McKinney 2009).

100. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(3)(b) (McKinney 2009); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.10 practice cmt. (McKinney 2009).

101. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(3)(c) (McKinney 2009); N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.10 practice cmt. (McKinney 2009).

testimony. By law, the prosecutor must give you those statements that relate to the witness' testimony at your trial.¹⁰² But, note that even if the prosecutor failed to give you the Rosario materials, that does not mean that your conviction is automatically overturned. Instead, the court must find a "reasonable possibility" that the failure to give you such statements "materially" (substantially) contributed to a verdict against you. Only then will the court reverse your conviction on appeal because Rosario materials were not given to you.¹⁰³ Likewise, if you raise the issue of omitted (left out) Rosario materials in an Article 440 motion, the court will reverse your conviction only if you can prove that the omission of the materials was not harmless error (in other words, that the omission negatively affected your defense).¹⁰⁴ If you raise this claim for the first time in an Article 440 motion, you must show that there was a reasonable possibility that the failure to give you these statements contributed to the verdict against you.¹⁰⁵

Furthermore, it is unlikely that a court will reverse your conviction for this reason if the material kept by the prosecution duplicates (repeats) material in the record,¹⁰⁶ or if the prosecution merely delayed in producing the material.¹⁰⁷ However, courts interpret "duplication" very narrowly. Unless

102. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.45(1)(a) (McKinney 2009); see also People v. Rosario, 9 N.Y.2d 286, 290–91, 173 N.E.2d 881, 883–84, 213 N.Y.S.2d 448, 450–51 (1961) (finding that the trial court should have turned over to defense counsel, on their request, statements given by prosecution witnesses before trial that related to their trial testimony, so that defense counsel could have rightfully used those statements on cross-examination). Note that in this case the error was found to be harmless due to its specific circumstances.

103. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 240.75 (McKinney 2009) (removing the previous rule from People v. Ranghelle, 69 N.Y.2d 56, 63, 503 N.E.2d 1011, 1016, 511 N.Y.S.2d 580, 585 (1986) that failure to turn over Rosario material was per se (automatic) reversible error, replacing the Ranghelle rule with the "reasonable possibility" standard); People v. Sorbello, 285 A.D.2d 88, 95–96, 729 N.Y.S.2d 747, 752–753 (2d Dept. 2001) (holding that § 240.75, which replaced the old Ranghelle rule, applies retroactively to all cases that are being prosecuted or appealed as of February 1, 2001); see also People v. Rosas, 297 A.D.2d 390, 390–391, 746 N.Y.S.2d 610, 611 (2d Dept. 2002) (finding that failure to disclose certain statements that related to the identification of the defendant by the victim's son could reasonably have affected the verdict); People v. Potter, 283 A.D.2d 1011, 1011–1012, 725 N.Y.S.2d 778, 779–780 (4th Dept. 2001) (granting new trial because of the reasonable possibility that failure to disclose tapes and statement relating to the witness' trial testimony materially contributed to the verdict). But see People v. Delosanto, 307 A.D.2d 298, 299, 763 N.Y.S.2d 629, 631 (2d Dept. 2003) (denying reversal despite finding that a Rosario violation was committed because there was no reasonable possibility that disclosure of grand jury minutes would have contributed to the trial).

104. People v. Jackson, 78 N.Y.2d 638, 641, 585 N.E.2d 795, 797, 578 N.Y.S.2d 483, 485 (1991) (stating that motion for post-conviction relief brought after a completed direct appeal will only be successful if defendant can prove both improper conduct by prosecutor and prejudice to the defense); see also People v. Machado, 90 N.Y.2d 187, 192, 681 N.E.2d 409, 412, 659 N.Y.S.2d 242, 245 (1997) (holding that in an Article 440 motion, defendant/movant must prove that the failure to turn over Rosario material prejudiced the outcome of the defendant/movant's case, even if an appeal is pending at the time the Article 440 motion is filed).

105. See People v. Machado, 90 N.Y.2d 187, 192, 681 N.E.2d 409, 412, 659 N.Y.S.2d 242, 245 (1997) (stating that defendant/movant must prove the omission of materials prejudiced his case and contributed to the verdict against him, conviction will not be automatically reversed regardless of whether defendant's direct appeal is still pending or completed); People v. Vilardi, 76 N.Y.2d 67, 77–78, 555 N.E.2d 915, 920–921, 556 N.Y.S.2d 518, 523–524 (1990) (explaining that the standard for determining whether an omission of Rosario material was prejudicial is whether there was a reasonable possibility that the defendant would not have been convicted had the Rosario material been provided at trial); People v. Nikollaj, 155 Misc. 2d 642, 648–649, 589 N.Y.S.2d 1013, 1017–1018 (Sup. Ct., Bronx County 1992) (granting defendant new trial because prosecution's withholding of a lot of Rosario materials, including a 16-minute recorded interview of the main eyewitness, prejudiced defendant's case, and there was a reasonable possibility that the violations contributed to the verdict).

106. See People v. Cortez, 184 A.D.2d 571, 573, 584 N.Y.S.2d 609, 611 (2d Dept. 1992) (finding that conviction need not be reversed if material withheld by prosecution is duplicative of other evidence in the record); People v. Ray, 140 A.D.2d 380, 382–383, 527 N.Y.S.2d 864, 866 (2d Dept. 1988) (stating that the prosecution must prove the undisclosed statements are indeed duplicative).

107. See People v. Blagrove, 183 A.D.2d 837, 837–838, 584 N.Y.S.2d 86, 87 (2d Dept. 1992) (stating that the prosecution's delay in turning over material relating to a prosecution witness' testimony will only result in a reversal if the defense was substantially prejudiced by the delay, and finding no delay where "[t]he defendant received the notes prior to the doctor's testimony, and had a full opportunity to cross-examine him based upon the notes . . . [and] the defendant was generally apprised of the fact that the notes were based on the autopsy report the excluded material appears in the record in identical or almost identical form, the court will probably not reject your claim on the grounds that the undisclosed Rosario material was duplicative.¹⁰⁸

(d) When You May File a Motion to Set Aside a Sentence under Section 440.20

Just like in a motion to vacate a judgment under Section 440.10, in a motion to vacate your sentence under Section 440.20, you do not have to wait until you have appealed your conviction to make the motion. You can make this motion at any time after your sentencing.¹⁰⁹ But, if you challenged your sentence when you appealed your conviction and lost, you cannot challenge your sentence again through a Section 440.20 motion.¹¹⁰ There is an exception to this rule that applies if (1) the law has changed in the time since your appeal, and (2) the new law is made retroactive (meaning that the new law can apply to your case even though that law was passed after you were convicted and sentenced).¹¹¹ In addition, the judge may deny your motion if the issue was already decided in a previous Section 440.20 motion or a similar non-appeal proceeding, such as a habeas corpus motion.¹¹² The court may grant your motion, however, if it is in the interest of justice and a good reason is shown.¹¹³

C. How to File an Article 440 Motion

1. Preparing Your Motion Documents

Appendix B of this Chapter (beginning on page 627) contains forms to help you prepare an Article 440 motion. For any motion you make using Article 440, you will need at least two documents. The first document is a Notice of Motion. It tells the court that you are challenging your conviction and/or sentence. It also states the reason for your challenge. The notes after the sample Notice of Motion in Appendix B tell you how to fill out this document.

The second document is an “affidavit.” This is a sworn statement of facts made by someone with firsthand knowledge of the facts. Either you, a witness at your trial, or someone else who knows facts that will convince the court your conviction or sentence was wrong can prepare and swear to an affidavit. Appendix B of this Chapter provides a sample affidavit written as though you (the defendant) made the affidavit.¹¹⁴

To write a good affidavit, you must do more than make general claims such as “I was deprived of my constitutional right to counsel” or “the officer had no probable cause to arrest me.” If you make these claims in your motion, you must give details of the specific circumstances under which you were and other physical evidence.”).

108. See People v. Young, 79 N.Y.2d 365, 370–371, 591 N.E.2d 1163, 1166–1167, 582 N.Y.S.2d 977, 980–981 (1992) (finding that two documents cannot be duplicative if “there are variations or inconsistencies between them[,]” including omissions, that the exception to an automatic reversal rule for duplicate material is “simply not consistent with the principles underlying our case law[,]” and should be read very narrowly to apply when material is in fact a duplication of material in the record).

109. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.20(1) (McKinney 2009).

110. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.20(2) (McKinney 2009). See, e.g., People v. Chapman, 115 A.D.2d 911, 911, 496 N.Y.S.2d 588, 588 (3d Dept. 1985) (finding that a court must deny an Article 440 motion when the sentencing issue was previously determined on the merits as part of a direct appeal).

111. A court will review a claim that you raised in a previous Article 440 motion if the law has changed since your appeal, and the new law applies to cases decided before the change. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.20(2) (McKinney 2005 & Supp. 2011) (“[T]he court may deny such a motion when the ground or issue raised thereupon was previously determined on the merits upon an appeal from the judgment or sentence, unless since the time of such appellate determination there has been a retroactively effective change in the law controlling such issue.”).

112. N.Y. CRIM PROC. LAW § 440.20(3) (McKinney 2009).

113. N.Y. CRIM PROC. LAW § 440.20(3) (McKinney 2009). Note, however, that it is rare for the court to grant a 440.20 motion on these grounds. See, e.g., People v. Baraka, 109 Misc. 2d 271, 274, 439 N.Y.S.2d 827, 830 (N.Y. Crim. Ct., New York County 1981) (reading the “interest of justice” and “good cause” grounds narrowly for the discretion that a judge holds in this context).

114. A witness affidavit would look almost the same as the defendant’s affidavit, except that the witness must identify himself and explain why he is aware of the facts to which he is swearing.

denied counsel or state in a clear and detailed way what led to your arrest. For example, if you asked for a lawyer at trial and the judge told you that you were not entitled to a lawyer, you should include in your affidavit the name of the judge, the exact words he used (if you can remember them), the date (or approximate date) that the statement was made, and the names of any witnesses who heard the judge make the statement.

If a judge thinks that there is no reasonable possibility that the facts stated in your affidavit are true, he or she will deny your motion.¹¹⁵ Therefore, you should be as detailed and precise about the facts of your story as possible. In addition, if any witnesses are available, you should have them write affidavits that support your story.

You should also be careful to include all of the possible reasons or issues on which you could bring an Article 440 motion.¹¹⁶ If you leave one out, a court will probably not allow you to raise the ground in a later motion.¹¹⁷

You must swear in the presence of a notary that the facts stated in your affidavit are true.¹¹⁸ If prison officials refuse to provide you with a notary, you can verify your affidavit through a witness. In order to verify your affidavit, you should sign your own name at the bottom of the form. You should also ask a friend to witness (watch) as you sign the affidavit and have the friend sign his own name under the line that reads “sworn to before me” at the end of the affidavit. Finally, you should write an explanation under the signature of the friend who witnessed your signature regarding the fact that the prison officials refused to provide a notary. Appendix A of JLM, Chapter 17, contains a “Sample Verification” (A-2) that can be filled out by a friend.

2. When and Where to File

(a) When to File

There is no “statute of limitations” (time limit) for making an Article 440 motion.¹¹⁹ But, if you wait too long after your sentencing, a court may decide to deny your motion.¹²⁰ For example, one court denied a Section 440.10 motion that a defendant made three years after his conviction because he could not explain the delay. The court believed he could have discovered the facts underlying his claim earlier.¹²¹ Furthermore, Article 440 requires you to make a motion based on newly discovered evidence within a reasonable time after you discover the new evidence.¹²²

(b) Where to File

You must bring an Article 440 motion in the trial court where you were convicted. You cannot bring it in the court of another county where you happen to be imprisoned. To file your motion, mail your Notice of Motion, your sworn statement(s) (affidavit(s)), and all supporting documents to the clerk

115. See People v. Selikoff, 35 N.Y.2d 227, 244, 318 N.E.2d 784, 795, 360 N.Y.S.2d 623, 638 (1974) (denying motion based on incredible and unsubstantiated claim that trial judge, deceased at time of motion, had made an off-the-record sentencing promise to defendant). But see People v. Seminara, 58 A.D.2d 841, 843, 396 N.Y.S.2d 472, 475 (2d Dept. 1977) (granting motion for hearing where defendant claimed that judge’s law secretary made probation promise to defendant and claim was supported by affidavit from his trial attorney).

116. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.30(1) (McKinney 2009).

117. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(3)(c) (McKinney 2009).

118. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.30(1) (McKinney 2009).

119. See People v. Corso, 40 N.Y.2d 578, 580, 357 N.E.2d 357, 359, 388 N.Y.S.2d 886, 889 (1976) (holding that a § 440.10 claim may be filed at any time).

120. See People v. Byrdsong, 161 Misc. 2d 232, 236, 613 N.Y.S.2d 543, 545 (Sup. Ct. Queens County 1994) (denying relief to an incarcerated person who filed a §440 motion nine years after trial and seven years after all appeals had been exhausted); People v. Wilson, 81 Misc. 2d 739, 740, 365 N.Y.S.2d 961, 962–963 (Dist. Ct. Nassau County 1975) (denying motion to vacate judgment and finding it to be a “significant factor” that defendant waited almost five years to complain of his conviction).

121. See People v. Friedgood, 58 N.Y.2d 467, 470–471, 448 N.E.2d 1317, 1319, 462 N.Y.S.2d 406, 408 (1983).

122. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(1)(g) (McKinney 2005).

of the court where you were convicted.¹²³ See Appendix II of the JLM for the addresses of the trial courts for each county in New York State. In New York State, the trial courts are called the supreme courts. You must also send a copy of your papers to the district attorney of the county where you were convicted. See Appendix III in the back of the JLM for a list of the addresses of the district attorneys' offices for each county in New York.

3. How to Get Help from a Lawyer

You do not have a right to a lawyer to help you prepare your Article 440 motion. But the court may decide to assign you a lawyer under certain circumstances. First, the court must decide to hold a hearing based on your motion and affidavits, and then you must request a lawyer.¹²⁴ You should request a lawyer because he can usually help you present a better case.

To request a lawyer, you need to file certain documents ("poor person's papers"). "Poor person's papers" state that you would like a lawyer, but are unable to pay for one. These papers also allow you to request that the clerk of the court serve the district attorney with all of your papers, so you do not have to serve the papers yourself. "Poor person's papers" are also known as a request to proceed "in forma pauperis." Chapter 9 of the JLM, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence," describes poor person's papers in more detail and also contains sample poor person's papers. You may make and use a copy of the papers in Appendix B of Chapter 9 of the JLM (but do not tear them out of the book), as long as you:

- (1) Replace all references to "Appeal" with either "Motion to Vacate Judgment" or "Motion to Set Aside Sentence," whichever is applicable,
- (2) Delete all references to "Appellate Division" and "Judicial Department" (make sure that "Supreme Court" still appears), and
- (3) Make sure that the county in which you were convicted is included wherever there is a reference to the Supreme Court.

D. What to Expect After You Have Filed Your Article 440 Motion

Once you have filed your motion, the district attorney will ordinarily file a response ("answer") to your motion with the judge who received your motion. The district attorney must also send you or your lawyer a copy of the answer.¹²⁵ The answer will usually deny some or all of the allegations in your motion and supporting papers.

The judge will then review the facts and arguments set forth in the district attorney's answer and in your motion and supporting affidavits. Next, the judge will grant your motion, deny your motion, or hold a hearing. The judge will grant your motion if your papers state a legal ground for "vacating" (canceling) the judgment or setting aside your sentence. The judge will deny your motion without a hearing if your papers do not state a legal ground for vacating the judgment or setting aside your sentence. Additionally, the judge will deny your motion without a hearing if your papers lack facts to support a legal ground.¹²⁶ The judge will also deny your motion without a hearing if:

123. If your trial was moved to a different county (for example, to avoid pretrial publicity), you should send your motion to the court in the county where you were indicted. See People v. Klein, 96 Misc. 2d 564, 566, 409 N.Y.S.2d 374, 375–376 (Sup. Ct. Suffolk County 1978) (holding the appropriate venue for a hearing in the nature of a fundamental error ("coram nobis") would be in the county of the indictment, rather than the county where the case was moved for the purpose of trial).

124. See N.Y. COUNTY LAW § 722(4) (McKinney 2017); People ex rel. Anderson v. Warden, 68 Misc. 2d 463, 470, 325 N.Y.S.2d 829, 837 (Sup. Ct. Bronx County 1971) ("Assignment of counsel other than for an evidentiary hearing is discretionary in both habeas corpus and Article 440 proceedings.").

125. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.30(1)(a) (McKinney 2005).

126. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.30(4)(a) (McKinney 2005). See, e.g., People v. Risalek, 172 A.D.2d 870, 870–871, 568 N.Y.S.2d 172, 173–174 (3d Dept. 1991) (denying motion where defendant's allegations of fraud and coercion were contradicted by transcripts, other allegations in motion were not supported by affidavits or other evidence, and defendant failed to preserve the objection to the plea he knowingly entered into); People v. Portalatin, 132 A.D.2d 581, 582, 517 N.Y.S.2d 301, 302 (2d Dept. 1987) (denying hearing because allegations of

- (1) Affidavits do not support the facts you use to support your motion;
- (2) Documentary proof shows that a fact necessary to support your motion is clearly false;
- (3) The record from your trial contradicts a fact necessary to support your motion; or
- (4) A fact necessary to support your motion is either contradicted by an official court document or supported only by your own testimony, and there is no reasonable possibility the claim is true.¹²⁷

Otherwise, the judge must grant a hearing on your motion.¹²⁸ Whether the court grants you a hearing or not, the court must state for the official record what facts it found to be true, how it viewed the law, and why it decided the way it did.¹²⁹

If the judge decides to hold a hearing, you have the right to attend this hearing. You may decide to “waive” (not use) this right in writing.¹³⁰ It is recommended that you go to the hearing, and you do not waive the right to appear. At the hearing, you will bear the responsibility of proving that your claims are true (this responsibility is called a “burden of proof”).¹³¹ To meet your burden of proof, you must persuade the judge that the essential facts of your story are true by a “preponderance” (majority) of the evidence, which means that the facts are more likely to be true than not true.¹³² In other words, you must convince the judge that the evidence supporting your claim outweighs the evidence against your claim.

Even if the hearing convinces the court that the facts stated in your motion and affidavit are true, the court will not automatically grant your motion. The facts stated in your motion must also persuade the judge that your conviction or sentence was unfair.¹³³ Part B of this Chapter explains what kinds of acts by the trial judge or prosecutor may make a conviction or sentence unfair under Article 440.

E. What Relief the Court Can Provide Under Article 440

1. Motion to Vacate Judgment (440.10)

In deciding on a Section 440.10 motion, the court has several choices:

- (1) Even if the court finds that the facts you have stated are true, the court may deny your motion if the court finds that your conviction was fair;¹³⁴ prosecutorial misconduct were not preserved or without merit); People v. Batts, 96 A.D.2d 842, 842–843, 465 N.Y.S.2d 600, 601 (2d Dept. 1983) (denying motion for failure to set forth sufficient grounds to justify a hearing).

127. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.30(4)(b)–(d) (McKinney 2005).

128. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.30(5) (McKinney 2005). See, e.g., People v. Ferreras, 70 N.Y.2d 630, 631, 512 N.E.2d 301, 302, 518 N.Y.S.2d 780, 781 (1987) (finding that defendant who submitted personal affidavit supporting claim of ineffective counsel due to conflict of interest was entitled to hearing on motion).

129. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.30(7) (McKinney 2005).

130. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.30(5) (McKinney 2005).

131. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.30(6) (McKinney 2005). In contrast, the prosecutor had to prove you guilty beyond a reasonable doubt at your trial.

132. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.30(6) (McKinney 2005). See, e.g., People v. Richard, 156 A.D.2d 270, 270, 548 N.Y.S.2d 659, 660 (1st Dept. 1989) (denying defendant’s Article 440 motion because claims were not supported by the required preponderance of evidence).

133. See, e.g., People v. Lehrman, 155 A.D.2d 693, 694, 548 N.Y.S.2d 260, 260–61 (2d Dept. 1989) (finding defendant failed to demonstrate that jury misconduct impaired his right to trial); People v. Dean, 125 A.D.2d 948, 949, 510 N.Y.S.2d 41, 41 (4th Dept. 1986) (denying Article 440 motion because defendant could have raised issue on appeal and defendant failed to show denial of due process); People v. Rhodes, 92 A.D.2d 744, 745, 461 N.Y.S.2d 81, 83 (4th Dept. 1983) (stating that to prevail on Article 440 motion based on claim of juror misconduct, defendant must prove misconduct by a preponderance of the evidence and show that the misconduct created a substantial risk of prejudice; mere speculation of prejudice is insufficient).

134. See, e.g., People v. Machado, 90 N.Y.2d 187, 188–89, 681 N.E.2d 409, 410, 659 N.Y.S.2d 242, 243 (1997) (holding that the defendant must demonstrate prejudice in Article 440 motions made after a direct appeal has concluded, even though reversal is required upon a direct appeal when prosecution fails to turn over a pretrial witness statement); People v. Dean, 125 A.D.2d 948, 949, 510 N.Y.S.2d 41, 41 (4th Dept. 1986) (denying Article 440 motion because defendant could have raised issue on appeal and defendant failed to show denial of due process).

- (2) The court may grant your Section 440.10 motion to vacate the judgment and dismiss the indictment or charge against you. If the court grants your Section 440.10 motion, you will either be released from prison or (more likely) receive a new trial;¹³⁵ or
- (3) If your motion raises new evidence, the judge may vacate the judgment and order a new trial.¹³⁶ Alternatively, the judge may reduce your conviction to a lesser offense, if the district attorney agrees.¹³⁷

2. Motion to Set Aside Sentence (440.20)

Even if the judge decides to grant your motion to set aside your sentence under Section 440.20, he will not change your underlying conviction. The court must resentence you by following the New York Penal Code's guidelines and limits for sentences.

F. How to Appeal if Your Article 440 Motion is Denied

You do not have the automatic right to appeal a denial of your Article 440 motion to an intermediate appellate court (in New York, the intermediate appellate court is called the Appellate Division).¹³⁸ To appeal, you must request "leave" (permission) from a judge of the intermediate appellate court to which you want to appeal.¹³⁹ You must request leave to appeal within thirty days after you receive a copy of the court's order denying your Article 440 motion.¹⁴⁰ When you request leave, you must apply for a "certificate granting leave to appeal."¹⁴¹ In order to apply for a certificate, you must check the appropriate appellate division rules. The appellate court you appeal to will be located in one of four departments. Use the rules for the department where the intermediate appellate court you appeal to is located.¹⁴² If the judge of the appellate court grants you permission to appeal, you will receive the certificate indicating that you may appeal.¹⁴³ Within fifteen days after you receive this certificate, you must file the certificate and a notice of appeal in the court that denied your Article 440 motion.¹⁴⁴ You must also "serve" (give) the certificate and notice of appeal upon the district

135. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(4) (McKinney 2009).

136. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(5)(a) (McKinney 2009). The new evidence must be substantial enough to create a probability that it would have changed the outcome of the original trial had it been admitted in time.

137. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 440.10(5)(b) (McKinney 2009); see also People v. Reyes, 92 A.D.2d 776, 777, 459 N.Y.S.2d 614, 614 (1st Dept. 1983) (reducing defendant's conviction for robbery in the first degree to robbery in the second degree after evidence showed gun was a toy pistol). See Chapter 9 of the JLM, "Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence," for a detailed explanation and example of lesser included offense.

138. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 450.15 (McKinney 2009); see also People v. Farrell, 85 N.Y.2d 60, 70, 647 N.E.2d 762, 768, 623 N.Y.S.2d 550, 556 (1995) (holding that the New York constitution does not prevent the legislature from limiting a defendant's right to appeal a denial of a non-final post-judgment collateral motion). However, you do have the right to appeal an order that sets aside your sentence if the district attorney makes an Article 440 motion under § 440.40 to seek a longer sentence against you. N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 450.10(4) (McKinney 2009).

139. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.15 (McKinney 2009). Assuming you were convicted in a New York supreme court and filed your Article 440 motion there, you would appeal from a denial of your Article 440 motion to the appellate division of the department in which you were convicted. For a listing of the counties included in each department, see note 134 below.

140. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.10(4)(a) (McKinney 2009).

141. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.10(4)(a) (McKinney 2009).

142. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.15(2) (McKinney 2009). These rules are located in N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 22, § 600.8(d) (for the 1st Dept.), § 670.6(b) (for the 2d Dept.), § 800.3 (for the 3d Dept.), and 1000.13(o) (for the 4th Dept.). The First Department includes the counties of the Bronx and New York. The 2nd Department includes the counties of Dutchess, Kings, Nassau, Orange, Putnam, Queens, Richmond, Rockland, Suffolk, and Westchester. The Third Department includes the counties of Albany, Broome, Chemung, Chenango, Clinton, Columbia, Cortland, Delaware, Essex, Franklin, Fulton, Greene, Hamilton, Madison, Montgomery, Otsego, Rensselaer, St. Lawrence, Saratoga, Schenectady, Schoharie, Schuyler, Sullivan, Tioga, Tompkins, Ulster, Warren, and Washington. The 4th Department includes the counties of Allegany, Cattaraugus, Cayuga, Chautauqua, Erie, Genesee, Herkimer, Jefferson, Lewis, Livingston, Monroe, Niagara, Oneida, Onondaga, Ontario, Orleans, Oswego, Seneca, Steuben, Wayne, Wyoming, and Yates.

143. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.15(1) (McKinney 2009).

144. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.10(4)(b) (McKinney 2009). See Chapter 9 of the JLM, "Appealing Your attorney of the county where your trial court is located.¹⁴⁵ Once you have completed these steps, you have “taken” your appeal.¹⁴⁶

You should be aware that judges rarely grant permission to appeal from denials of Article 440 motions. Nonetheless, it is essential that you seek leave to appeal from a denial of your Article 440 motion. As noted in Chapter 13 of the JLM, “Federal Habeas Corpus,” you must seek leave to appeal to satisfy the exhaustion requirements for raising a claim in a federal habeas corpus petition.

If a judge of the intermediate court denies you leave to appeal, the state appeals process ends at that stage and cannot be pursued further.¹⁴⁷ (Note, however, that you may still be able to raise your claim in a federal habeas corpus petition as described in Chapter 13, “Federal Habeas Corpus,” of the JLM.) If you do receive permission to appeal and the appellate court then denies your appeal, you may appeal the denial to the New York Court of Appeals, the state’s highest court.¹⁴⁸ To do so, you must request permission to appeal from a judge of the Court of Appeals.¹⁴⁹ You must make your request within thirty days after the intermediate appellate court hands down the denial you are trying to appeal.¹⁵⁰ Again, if you are granted permission to appeal, you will be issued a certificate indicating you have permission to appeal.¹⁵¹ Upon issuance of the certificate, your appeal is “taken.”¹⁵²

In addition, the district attorney has the right to appeal an Article 440 motion that sets aside either your conviction or your sentence.

G. Conclusion

With an Article 440 motion, you can challenge your conviction (Section 440.10) or your sentence (Section 440.20). Remember that if you have already appealed your case and lost, you cannot raise any issue already decided by the appellate court in the course of your appeal. But if a court has not decided on your appeal yet, you can still make an Article 440 motion. You can then make a motion to “consolidate” (combine) the appeal and the 440 motion for the sake of “judicial economy” (efficiency). If you consolidate, the range of factual matters the court may examine will be expanded in the appeal. Also, all of the errors presented together may better persuade the court that your trial was unfair.

You must prove that the facts stated in your motion and affidavit are true. You must also prove that the facts state a legal ground that is serious enough to require a court to grant your motion. If you claim that the court made a mistake during your trial, you must show that the mistake affected your chance of being not guilty or that the mistake was so serious that you must be protected from it. If you could have raised a claim in an earlier Article 440 motion, a court will probably deny your present motion. A court will also probably deny your present motion if you have already made an Article 440 motion on the same ground(s) and lost.

If you plead guilty at your trial, you will have a harder time succeeding on a motion to vacate judgment.

Conviction or Sentence,” for a definition of a notice of appeal and a description of the appeals process, generally, and also for a sample notice of appeal from a denial of an Article 440 motion.

145. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §§ 460.10(3)(b), 460.10(4) (McKinney 2009).

146. See Chapter 9 of the JLM, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence,” to see what steps may still be necessary to legally perfect your appeal.

147. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 450.15 (McKinney 2009).

148. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.10(5) (McKinney 2009).

149. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.10(5) (McKinney 2009). You may also seek permission from an appellate division judge if the appellate division denied your motion. See Chapter 9 of the JLM, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence” for more information.

150. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §§ 460.10(5)(a), 460.20 (McKinney 2009).

151. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.10(5)(b) (McKinney 2009).

152. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 460.10(5)(b) (McKinney 2009). Again, however, you must still perfect your appeal. See Chapter 9 of the JLM, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence.”

APPENDIX A

STATE POST-CONVICTION RELIEF STATUTES

Alabama	ALA. CODE § 15-21-1 et seq.
Alaska	ALASKA STAT. § 12.75.010 et seq.
Arizona	ARIZ. R. CRIM. P. 32, ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 13-4121 et seq.
Arkansas	ARK. R. CRIM. P. 37, ARK. CODE ANN. § 16-112-101 et seq.
California	CAL. PENAL CODE § 1473 et seq.
Colorado	COLO. R. CRIM. P. 35, COLO. REV. STAT. § 13-45-101 et seq.
Connecticut	CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 52-466 et seq.
Delaware	DEL. SUP. CT. CRIM. R. 35, DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 10, § 6901 et seq.
D.C.	D.C. CODE § 23-110, D.C. CODE § 16-1901 et seq.
Florida	FLA. R. CRIM. P. 3.850
Georgia	GA. CODE ANN. § 9-14-1 et seq.
Hawaii	HAW. REV. STAT. § 660-3 et seq.
Idaho	IDAHO CODE ANN. § 19-4901 et seq.
Illinois	725 ILL. COMP. STAT. 5/122-1 et seq.
Indiana	IND. CODE ANN. § 34-25.5-1-1 et seq. , IND. R. P. FOR POST-CONVICTION REMEDIES R. PC 1.
Iowa	IOWA CODE ANN. § 663A.1 et seq.
Kansas	KAN. STAT. ANN. § 60-1501 et seq.
Kentucky	KY. R. CRIM. P. 11.42, KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 419.020 et seq.
Louisiana	LA. CODE CRIM. PROC. ANN. art. 924 et seq.
Maine	ME. REV. STAT. ANN. tit. 15, § 2121 et seq. , ME. REV. STAT. ANN. tit. 14, § 5501 et seq.
Maryland	MD. CODE ANN., CRIM. PROC. § 7-101 et seq. , MD. CODE ANN., CTS. & JUD. PROC. § 3-701 et seq.
Massachusetts	MASS. R. CRIM. P. 30, MASS. GEN. LAWS ch. 276, § 19
Michigan	MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 600.4301 et seq.
Minnesota	MINN. STAT. ANN. § 590.01 et seq.
Mississippi	MISS. CODE ANN. § 99-39-1 et seq.
Missouri	MO. S. CT. R. CRIM. P. 91.01, MO. ANN. STAT. § 532.010
Montana	MONT. CODE ANN. § 46-21-101 et seq.
Nebraska	NEB. REV. STAT. § 29-3001 et seq.
Nevada	NEV. REV. STAT. §§ 34.720, 176.515.
New Hampshire	N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. § 534:1 et seq.
New Jersey	N.J. STAT. ANN. § 2A:67-1 et seq.
New Mexico	N.M. STAT. ANN. § 31-11-6
North Carolina	N.C. GEN. STAT. 15A-1411 et seq. , N.C. GEN. STAT. 17-1 et seq.
North Dakota	N.D. CENT. CODE § 32-22-01 et seq.
Ohio	OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 2953.21 et seq.
Oklahoma	OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. 22, § 1080 et seq.
Oregon	OR. REV. STAT. § 138.510 et seq.
Pennsylvania	42 PA. CONS. STAT. ANN. § 6501 et seq.
Rhode Island	R.I. GEN. LAWS § 10-9.1-1 et seq. , R.I. GEN. LAWS § 10-9-3 et seq.
South Carolina	S.C. CODE ANN. § 17-27-10 et seq.
South Dakota	S.D. CODIFIED LAWS § 21-27-1 et seq.
Tennessee	TENN. CODE ANN. § 40-9-119 et seq.
Texas	TEX. CODE CRIM. PROC. ANN. art. 11.01 et seq.
Utah	UTAH CODE ANN. § 78B-9-101 et seq.
Vermont	VT. STAT. ANN. tit. 13, § 7131 et seq.
Virginia	VA. CODE ANN. § 8.01-654 et seq.
Washington	WASH. REV. CODE ANN. § 7.36.010 et seq.
West Virginia	W. VA. CODE § 53-4A-1 et seq.
Wisconsin	WIS. STAT. ANN. § 974.06 et seq.
Wyoming	WYO. STAT. ANN. § 7-14-101 et seq. , WYO. STAT. ANN. § 1-27-101 et seq.

APPENDIX B

SAMPLE ARTICLE 440 MOTIONS AND SUPPORTING PAPERS

This Appendix contains the following materials:

- B-1. Sample Notice of Motion by Defendant to Vacate Judgment
- B-2. Sample Defendant's Affidavit in Support of Motion to Vacate Judgment
- B-3. Sample Notice of Motion by Defendant to Set Aside Sentence
- B-4. Sample Defendant's Affidavit in Support of Motion to Set Aside Sentence

DO NOT TEAR THESE FORMS OUT OF THE JLM. Copy them on your own paper and fill them out according to the facts of your particular case. The endnotes following the sample documents tell you how to fill in the necessary information. Remember, your affidavit is a sworn statement, you can be punished if you intentionally include any statements that you know are false. Change the wording of the forms, if necessary, so that all the statements apply to your case. You must sign your affidavit in the presence of a notary public.

No poor person's papers (in forma pauperis) have been included in these forms. Part C(3) of this Chapter tells you how to use poor person's papers to obtain a lawyer in an Article 440 proceeding. Sample poor person's papers may be found in Chapter 9 of the JLM.

Appendix II at the end of the JLM lists the addresses and jurisdictions of the New York state courts to which these papers should be addressed.

B-1. Sample Notice of Motion by Defendant to Vacate Judgment

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK
 COUNTY OF _____ⁱ

_____	X
The People of the State of New York	:
	:
Plaintiffs,	:	NOTICE OF MOTION
	:	TO VACATE JUDGMENT
	:
- against -	:	Indictment No. _____ ⁱⁱ
	:
_____, ⁱⁱⁱ	:
	:
Defendant.	:
_____	X

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that upon the annexed affidavit of _____,^{iv} duly sworn to the ____ day of _____, _____,^v (and documents attached thereto) and upon the accusatory instrument and _____,^{vi} and all proceedings previously heretofore held herein, defendant will move this Court at Criminal Term, Part _____^{vii} thereof, at the Courthouse located at _____,^{viii} on the ____ day of _____, _____ at ____ a.m.,^{ix} or as soon thereafter as counsel may be heard, for:

An order pursuant to Criminal Procedure Law § 440.10(____)^x vacating the judgment entered against the above-named defendant on the ____ day of _____, _____,^{xi} on the following grounds:

1. _____
2. _____^{xii}

[if applicable, include] An order pursuant to N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.30(1-a), directing that forensic Deoxyribonucleic Acid (DNA) testing be performed on evidence specified in the annexed affidavit,

An order, pursuant to N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.30(5), to produce the defendant at any hearing to be conducted for the purpose of determining this motion, and Such other and further relief as the Court may deem just and proper.

Dated: _____
 _____,^{xiii}
 _____^{xiv}
 _____^{xv}

Defendant, pro se.^{xvi}

To: .

District Attorney of _____ County,
 _____, New York^{xvii}

B-2. Sample Defendant's Affidavit in Support of Motion to Vacate Judgment

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK
COUNTY OF _____^{xviii}

_____	X
The People of the State of New York	:
	:
Plaintiffs,	:	AFFIDAVIT
	:
- against -	:	Indictment No. _____ ^{xix}
	:
_____, ^{xx}	:
Defendant.	:
_____	X

State of New York)
County of _____^{xxi} ss.:)

_____,^{xxii} being duly sworn, deposes and says:

1. I am the defendant in the above-entitled proceeding. I make this affidavit in support of a motion, pursuant to section 440.10, subdivision _____,^{xxiii} to vacate the judgment of conviction herein, upon the ground that _____.^{xxiv}

2. I was indicted for _____.^{xxv} At the arraignment I entered a plea of "not guilty" and posted bail in the amount of $ _____.^{xxvi} I was tried in this court before Hon. Judge _____^{xxvii} on _____, _____.^{xxviii} The case was submitted to a jury, which rendered a verdict of guilty.^{xxix}

3. On _____, _____,^{xxx} I was sentenced to _____.^{xxxi}

4. The evidence adduced at my trial may be summarized as follows:

_____,^{xxxii}
_____,^{xxxiii}

6. [If applicable, include:] Among the evidence gathered by the State in its investigation of the crime and admitted at my trial [or] but not admitted at my trial was _____, which contains Deoxyribonucleic Acid (DNA). DNA testing of _____ is relevant to proof of guilt in that _____.
_____.^{xxxiv} My conviction occurred prior to January 1, 1996, to wit, on _____.

7. The ground(s) for relief raised upon this motion has (have) not previously been determined on the merits upon a prior motion or proceeding in a court of this state, or upon an appeal from the judgment, or upon a prior motion or proceeding in a federal court.^{xxxv}

WHEREFORE, I respectfully request that my conviction be vacated on the ground that _____,^{xxxvi} and that this Court grant such other and further relief as it may deem just and proper [or if applicable:] WHEREFORE, I respectfully request an Order of this Court pursuant to N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.30(1-a), directing that forensic Deoxyribonucleic Acid (DNA) testing be conducted upon _____.^{xxxvii}

_____^{xxxviii}

_____^{xxxix}

Sworn to before me this:

day of _____, 20____

xl

NOTARY PUBLIC

B-3. Sample Notice of Motion by Defendant to Set Aside Sentence

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK
 COUNTY OF _____^{xli}

_____	X
The People of the State of New York	:
	:
Plaintiffs,	:	NOTICE OF MOTION
	:	TO SET ASIDE SENTENCE
	:
- against -	:	Indictment No. _____ ^{xlii}
	:
_____, ^{xliii}	:
	:
Defendant.	:
_____	X

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that upon the annexed affidavit of _____,^{xliv} duly sworn to the _____ day of ___, 20___,^{xlv} (and documents attached thereto) and upon the accusatory instrument and all other papers filed and proceedings heretofore had herein, defendant will move this Court, Part _____^{xlvi} thereof, at the Courthouse located at _____,^{xlvii} on the ___ day of _ ___, 20___, at ___ a.m.,^{xlviii} or as soon thereafter as counsel may be heard, for:

(1) an order, pursuant to Criminal Procedure Law, section 440.20, setting aside the sentence heretofore imposed upon the above-named defendant on the __ day of _____, _____,^{xlix} or, in the alternative, ordering a hearing to determine whether such sentence should be set aside on the ground(s) that:

_____^[reasons],¹

(2) An order, pursuant to Crim. Proc. Law § 440.30(5), to produce the defendant at any hearing conducted to determine this motion, and

(3) Such other and further relief as the Court may deem just and proper.

PLEASE TAKE FURTHER NOTICE that answering affidavits, if any, are to be served upon the undersigned at least ___^{li} days prior to the return of this motion.

Dated: _____

_____^{lii}

_____^{liii}

Defendant, pro se.

To:

District Attorney of _____ County,

_____, New York^{liv}

B-4. Sample Defendant's Affidavit in Support of Motion to Set Aside Sentence

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK
COUNTY OF _____^{lv}

_____	X
The People of the State of New York	:
	:
Plaintiffs,	:	AFFIDAVIT
	:
- against -	:	Indictment No. _____ ^{lvi}
	:
_____, ^{lvii}	:
Defendant.	:
_____	X

State of New York)
County of _____^{lviii} ss.:)

_____,^{lix} being duly sworn, deposes and says:

1. I am the defendant in the above-entitled proceeding. I make this affidavit in support of a motion, pursuant to section 440.20 to set aside the sentence herein, upon the ground that _____^{lx}

2. I was indicted for _____^{lxi}. At the arraignment I entered a plea of "not guilty" and posted bail in the amount of $_____.^{lxii} I was tried in this court before Hon. Judge _____^{lxiii} on _____, _____^{lxiv}

3. After a trial^{lxv} held on _____, _____, ^{lxvi} I was found guilty of count(s) _____^{lxvii} of the indictment charging _____ in the _____ degree, a Class _____ felony.^{lxviii} Bail was revoked and I was held in the _____, located at _____, _____^{lxix} New York, until the sentencing for my conviction held on _____, _____^{lxx} before Hon. Judge _____^{lxxi} in Criminal Term Part _____ of the _____^{lxxii} County Supreme Court.

4. I was sentenced to a _____ term of imprisonment at _____ Correction Facility, _____, ^{lxxiii} New York.

5. _____^{lxxiv}

6. _____^{lxxv}

7. The ground(s) for relief described by this affidavit has (have) not previously been determined on the merits upon a prior motion or proceeding in a court of this state other than an appeal from the judgment, or upon a prior motion or proceeding in a federal court.^{lxxvi}

WHEREFORE, I respectfully request that this Court enter an order, pursuant to section 440.20 of the Criminal Procedure Law, setting aside the sentence imposed upon me and resentencing me in accordance with law, and granting such other and further relief as the Court may deem just and proper.

_____^{lxxvii}

Sworn to before me this:

day of _____, 20____^{lxxviii}

NOTARY PUBLIC

Fill in the blanks indicated in the sample documents as follows:

-
- i. Fill in the name of the county in which the court hearing your motion is located.
 - ii. Fill in your indictment number.
 - iii. Fill in your name.
 - iv. Since you should submit an affidavit with your motion, you should fill your name in here. Also, if you are submitting affidavits of other people who have taken part in your case, their names should be filled in, and the word "affidavit" changed to "affidavits."
 - v. Fill in the date or dates on which you or others signed your affidavits: day, month, year.
 - vi. Describe briefly other documents, if any, that you are attaching because they will help you make your case to the court. For example, you can mention a transcript of your trial.
 - vii. Fill in the "Part" number of the court, if you know it.
 - viii. Fill in the address of the court.
 - ix. Fill in the date on which the hearing will be held.
 - x. Fill in the subsection of § 440.10 that corresponds to the ground upon which you are making your motion. See Section B(2) of this Chapter for information on these subsections.
 - xi. Fill in the day, month, and year on which the judgment of conviction was entered against you.
 - xii. List the reasons why you think the court should vacate the judgment against you. See Section B(2) of this Chapter for more information.
 - xiii. Fill in date on which you signed this notice, and the city and state in which you signed it.
 - xiv. Sign your name here.
 - xv. Fill in your complete mailing address here.
 - xvi. Pro se means that you are acting as your own legal representative (without a lawyer).
 - xvii. Fill in the name of the district attorney, and the county and town in which he or she is located.
 - xviii. Fill in the name of the county in which the court hearing your motion is located.
 - xix. Fill in your indictment number.
 - xx. Fill in your name.
 - xxi. Fill in the name of the county in which you are signing this affidavit.
 - xxii. Your name, in capital letters.
 - xxiii. Fill in the subsection of § 440.10 that corresponds to the ground upon which you are making your motion. See Section B(2) of this Chapter.
 - xxiv. List briefly the ground that corresponds to the subsection of N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.10 provided above. See Section B(2) of this Chapter for a list of grounds.
 - xxv. Fill in the name of the offense for which you were indicted.
 - xxvi. Fill in the amount of bail you posted.
 - xxvii. Fill in the trial judge's name.
 - xxviii. Fill in the date or dates including the day, month, and year on which your trial took place.
 - xxix. If you did not have a jury trial, simply indicate that the judge found you guilty.
 - xxx. Fill in the day, month, and year on which judgment was given in your case.
 - xxxi. Fill in the sentence ordered in your case.
 - xxxii. Summarize the evidence that the prosecution relied upon and that the jury was allowed to consider.
 - xxxiii. Summarize the facts which support the reasons you set out in numbers 1 through 8, above, for challenging your conviction.
 - xxxiv. Fill in the evidence, if any, containing DNA samples, how that evidence proves your innocence, and the date, prior to January 1, 1996, that your conviction occurred, if applicable.
 - xxxv. If you have previously raised the issues on which you are basing this motion, you should change this paragraph to reflect that fact. If the law has changed since you previously litigated the issues, you should state this.
 - xxxvi. Briefly state the reasons for your motion.
 - xxxvii. Fill in the evidence upon which you want DNA testing performed.
 - xxxviii. Sign your name, in the presence of a notary public. If your prison will not give you access to a notary, see Appendix A, Endnote 102 to Chapter 16 of the JLM.
 - xxxix. Print your complete mailing address below your signature.
 - xl. The notary will sign and fill in the date here after seeing you sign the document.
 - xli. Fill in the name of the county in which the court hearing your motion is located.
 - xlii. Fill in your indictment number.
 - xliii. Fill in your name.
 - xliv. Since you should submit an affidavit with your motion, your name should be filled in here. Also, if you are submitting affidavits of other people who took part in the case, their names should be filled in, and the word "affidavit" changed to "affidavits."
 - xlv. Fill in the date you signed your affidavit.

-
- xlvi. Enter the number of the court part, if you know it.
 - xlvii. Enter the address and city of the court hearing your motion.
 - xlviii. Enter the date and time of your hearing.
 - xliv. Enter the day, month, and year on which you were sentenced.
 - l. Give the reasons your sentence should be set aside. See Section B(2) of this Chapter. The three grounds are (a) sentence unauthorized, (b) sentence illegally imposed, or (c) sentence invalid otherwise, as a matter of law. If you can raise more than one ground, you should include all that apply.
 - li. Fill in the amount of notice you feel is necessary, considering the length of time you will need to develop arguments to answer their affidavit.
 - lii. Fill in date on which you signed this notice, and the city and state in which you signed it.
 - liii. Sign your name and print your complete mailing address underneath.
 - liv. Enter the name of the district attorney, followed by his or her county and address.
 - lv. Fill in the name of the county in which the court hearing your motion is located.
 - lvi. Fill in your indictment number.
 - lvii. Fill in your name.
 - lviii. Fill in the name of the county in which you are signing this affidavit.
 - lix. Your name, in capital letters.
 - lx. List briefly the reasons why you think the court should vacate the sentence against you. See Section B(2) of this Chapter for a list of possible reasons.
 - lxi. Fill in the name of the offense for which you were indicted.
 - lxii. Fill in the amount of bail you posted.
 - lxiii. Fill in the trial judge's name.
 - lxiv. Fill in the date or dates, including day, month, and year on which your trial took place.
 - lxv. If you pled guilty, leave out this first sentence in paragraph 3. Instead, write: "I entered a plea of guilty to (give the name of the crime), a Class (give the class of the felony: A, B, C, etc.) felony."
 - lxvi. If you had a trial, fill in the date or dates, including the day, month, and year of the trial.
 - lxvii. If you had a trial, fill in the numbers of the counts of the indictment of which you were convicted.
 - lxviii. If you had a trial, fill in the names, degrees (if any), and classes of the offenses of which you were convicted.
 - lxix. Give the name and address of the facility where you were held while you were waiting to be sentenced.
 - lxx. Fill in the date, including the day, month, and year of your sentencing.
 - lxxi. Fill in the name of the judge who sentenced you.
 - lxxii. Enter the county and part number of the court that sentenced you.
 - lxxiii. Enter the terms of the sentence that you received and the name and address of the facility in which you are to serve your sentence.
 - lxxiv. Indicate whether or not an appeal has been taken in your case. If so, give the name of the court, the date it was heard/decided, and the name of the judge who heard your appeal.
 - lxxv. Give the reasons why you think your sentence is illegal. See Section B(2) of this Chapter for a list of possible reasons.
 - lxxvi. If you have previously raised the issues on which you are basing this motion, you should change this paragraph to reflect the previous court proceedings. If the law has changed since you previously litigated the issues, you should state this.
 - lxxvii. Sign your name, in the presence of a notary public, and print your complete mailing address below your signature.
 - lxxviii. The notary will sign and fill in the date here after seeing you sign the document.

CHAPTER 21

STATE HABEAS CORPUS: FLORIDA, NEW YORK, AND MICHIGAN*

A. Introduction

This Chapter discusses how the writ of habeas corpus is applied in three states: Florida, New York, and Michigan.¹ The rules about habeas corpus in Florida, New York, and Michigan are often similar. This Introduction will give you a short overview of habeas corpus. Part B has specific information about Florida petitions, Part C has specific information about New York petitions, and Part D has specific information about Michigan petitions. These parts offer important information, including how, where, and when to file your petition. If you are in prison in a state other than Florida, New York, or Michigan, and wish to file a habeas corpus petition in state court, the laws may differ in important ways from the ones described below.² You should be sure to check the laws in your own state before filing a state habeas petition.³

1. What is a Writ of Habeas Corpus?

When you file a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, you are asking a judge for a hearing to determine whether your imprisonment is lawful. This hearing is not another trial. Instead of deciding whether you were guilty or not, the judge will evaluate the fairness of the procedure used to convict and sentence you. To get a writ of habeas corpus, you must file a petition for a civil (not criminal) proceeding in either state or federal court. An incarcerated person filing a habeas corpus petition is often referred to as a “petitioner” or “relator.” This chapter will cover filing a petition in state, not federal, court. To learn more about federal habeas corpus, you should read JLM, Chapter 13, “Federal Habeas Corpus.”

2. Requirements for Habeas Relief

There are four requirements you must fulfill in order to get state habeas relief:

- (1) you must be in custody,
- (2) you must be entitled to immediate release if your petition is successful,
- (3) you must be incarcerated within a state prison, and
- (4) there must be no other legal procedure to get the relief you want.

(a) Custody

Custody means you are confined by the state in some way. Usually you cannot challenge a sentence you have not started to serve. In Florida, New York, and Michigan, you may apply for habeas corpus if you are in jail or prison. Whether you may apply for habeas corpus if you are on parole, released on a bond, or released on your own recognizance (“ROR”), depends on which state convicted you.⁴ See

* This Chapter was revised by Tanya Sehgal based in part on previous versions by Renate Lunn, Alison Wright and Jennifer Morrison.

1. “Habeas corpus” is often shortened to “habeas.” Also, “petition for a writ of habeas corpus” is sometimes shortened to “petition for habeas corpus,” or “habeas petition.”

2. See JLM, Chapter 20, “Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedural Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence,” Appendix A, for a list of statutes for state post-conviction relief in other states. JLM, Chapter 2, “Introduction to Legal Research” can help you to conduct further research on the laws in your state.

3. If you are incarcerated in a federal prison, you cannot file for state habeas corpus. You must file a petition for federal habeas corpus. See JLM, Chapter 13, “Federal Habeas Corpus” for more information about federal habeas corpus.

4. The phrase “released on your own recognizance” (often shortened to “ROR’d” or simply “ROR”) means that the court has released you without bail because you have given a written promise to appear at your next court date.

Parts A(3)(c), B(3)(c), C(2)(c), and D(2)(c) of this Chapter for more information about habeas corpus petitions if you are on probation or parole.

(b) Immediate Release

Florida, New York, and Michigan courts will usually refuse to consider your habeas corpus petition unless a successful petition will result in your immediate release.⁵ For example, if you are serving time for several convictions, you may not petition for a writ of habeas corpus to challenge only one conviction or sentence, since you will remain imprisoned for the other convictions regardless of the outcome of your petition.⁶

However, you may be able to petition for habeas corpus even though it will not result in your immediate release if you complain about a specific aspect of your incarceration. For example, if you are incarcerated at the wrong facility or your bail was set too high, you may petition for a writ of habeas corpus. While you will not be released if your petition is granted, you will be transferred to the correct facility or your bail will be lowered.

(c) Incarcerated within the state

If you are incarcerated in a federal prison, state habeas corpus relief is not available to you.⁷ See JLM, Chapter 13, “Federal Habeas Corpus,” for help with applying for a habeas writ in federal court

5. In Florida: see North v. State, 217 So. 2d 608, 609 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1969) (denying petition for writ of habeas corpus when defendant was no longer in custody); Schmunk v. State ex rel. Sandstrom, 353 So. 2d 907, 907 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1977) (denying petition when defendant was fined for a traffic violation, but never in custody). In New York: see People ex rel. Daniels v. Beaver, 303 A.D.2d 1025, 1025, 757 N.Y.S.2d 195, 195 (4th Dept. 2003) (holding that trial court properly dismissed habeas petition where, even if petitioner had been denied the right to appear before the Parole Board, he would not have been entitled to immediate release); People ex rel. Chakwin v. Warden, 63 N.Y.2d 120, 125, 470 N.E.2d 146, 148, 480 N.Y.S.2d 719, 721 (1984) (“[H]abeas corpus generally will lie only where the defendant would become entitled to his immediate release upon the writ being sustained[.]”); People ex rel. Kaplan v. Comm’r of Corr., 60 N.Y.2d 648, 649, 454 N.E.2d 1309, 1309, 467 N.Y.S.2d 566, 566 (1983) (denying writ of habeas corpus because petitioner would only be entitled to the remedies of a new trial or new appeal, not immediate release). See also People ex rel. DeFlumer v. Strack, 212 A.D.2d 555, 555, 623 N.Y.S.2d 1, 1 (2d Dept. 1995) (denying habeas petition where petitioner challenged several conditions of his conditional release); People ex rel. Travis v. Coombe, 219 A.D.2d 881, 881, 632 N.Y.S.2d 340, 340 (4th Dept. 1995) (denying habeas petition where conditions for conditional release were not met and petitioner was therefore not entitled to immediate release even if the writ was granted). In Michigan: see Trayer v. Kent Cnty. Sheriff, 304 N.W.2d 11, 12, 104 Mich. App. 32, 34–35 (Mich. Ct. App. 1981) (finding petition for writ of habeas corpus not proper where petitioner was transferred out of state and therefore the state that was petitioned could not provide immediate release).

6. In Florida: see Alderman v. State, 188 So. 2d 803, 804 (Fla. 1966) (denying writ of habeas corpus when an incarcerated person was legally incarcerated on concurrent sentences and only challenged one sentence); Gorman v. Cochran, 127 So. 2d 667, 667–668 (Fla. 1961) (denying writ of habeas corpus to an incarcerated person who was attacking a future sentence he had not yet begun to serve). In New York: see People ex rel. Brown v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 70 N.Y.2d 391, 398, 516 N.E.2d 194, 197, 521 N.Y.S.2d 657, 660 (1987) (denying writ of habeas corpus because an incarcerated person, “in addition to being held on the parole violation, is being held on unrelated pending criminal charges. Because success on the merits in this proceeding would not entitle him to immediate release from custody, the remedy of habeas corpus is unavailable.”). In Michigan: see In re Rhyndress, 317 Mich. 21, 23, 26 N.W.2d 581, 582 (1947) (denying writ of habeas corpus to an incarcerated person serving two sentences, one for breaking and entering and one for escaping from prison, at least “until the expiration of the sentence imposed upon him for escaping from prison”).

7. In Florida: see Simmons v. State, 579 So. 2d 874, 874 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1991) (holding that the state circuit court is without power to issue a writ of habeas corpus for an incarcerated person who is not in the custody of the state). In New York: see N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7002(a) (McKinney 2013) (“A person illegally imprisoned or otherwise restrained in his liberty within the state. . . may petition without notice for a writ of habeas corpus[.]”); N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7002(c)(3) (McKinney 2013) (“The petition. . . shall state. . . that a court or judge of the United States does not have exclusive jurisdiction to order [the petitioner] released.”). In Michigan: see In re Abbott, 255 N.W. 603, 604, 267 Mich. 703, 706 (1934) (“No state judge or court, after they are judicially informed that the party is imprisoned under the authority of the United States, has any right to interfere with him, or to require him to be brought before them.”).

if you are incarcerated in a federal prison or if you are unsure about whether you are incarcerated in a federal prison. Importantly, if you are incarcerated within a state prison, you must submit your petition in the state where you are incarcerated.⁸

(d) No Other Options

You may not petition the court for a writ of habeas corpus if there are still other ways to get the relief you seek. Other procedures include an appeal, administrative procedures, and grievance procedures. If you have not yet finished your appeal or are in the middle of a grievance hearing, you should not file a habeas petition until you are done with those other procedures. A habeas petition is different from these other procedures. For instance, when you appeal, you are asking the court to reconsider the decision of the lower court. When you file a habeas petition, on the other hand, you are asking the court to consider whether the conviction and sentencing procedure was fair. You should read JLM, Chapter 15, “Inmate Grievance Procedures,” for more information about grievance proceedings for incarcerated people, and JLM, Chapter 9, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence,” for discussion of an appeal. Each state has its own standards for and exceptions to the general rule that other procedures must not be available when seeking habeas relief.

3. What You Can Complain About in Your Habeas Petition

(a) Before Trial⁹

If you are incarcerated (detained) before your trial, you may be able to claim one of the following grounds for habeas relief: improper extradition, excessive bail, or delay. In Florida, you can also challenge a search warrant or probable cause. These grounds are discussed in detail in Part B of this Chapter.

(i) Extradition

An extradition is a warrant for arrest demanding that the arrested person be returned to and tried in the state issuing the warrant. If you were arrested in Florida, New York, or Michigan on an extradition warrant from another state (the demanding state), you may contest extradition to that state by petitioning the court for a writ of habeas corpus in the state in which you are in custody.¹⁰ However, the Supreme Court has held that in such circumstances the state court may only consider the following issues: whether the documents from the demanding state are in order, whether you are a fugitive, whether you have been charged with a crime in the demanding state, and whether you are the person named in the extradition warrant.¹¹

8. In Florida: see Dugger v. Jackson, 598 So. 2d 280, 282, 17 Fla. L. Weekly 1264, 1266 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1992) (vacating lower court's grant of habeas corpus writ because incarcerated person had not petitioned the state of conviction, South Carolina, nor had the state given its authority for the Florida court to hear such claim). In New York: see People ex rel. Warren v. People, 171 A.D.2d 768, 768, 567 N.Y.S.2d 321, 321 (2d Dept. 1991) (dismissing federal incarcerated person's habeas corpus petition because the petitioner was incarcerated outside of New York State); In Michigan: see MICH. COMP. LAWS § 600.4307, 600.4310 (1961) (specifying that actions for habeas corpus may not be brought “in cases where such courts or judges have exclusive jurisdiction under the laws of the United States, or have acquired exclusive jurisdiction by the commencement of suits in such courts”).

9. See JLM, Chapter 3, “Your Right to Learn the Law and Go to Court” for more information generally on your rights before trial.

10. For example, if you are arrested in Florida on an extradition warrant from Georgia, you could contest your extradition to Georgia using the Florida state habeas corpus procedures.

11. The demanding state is the state that requested the arrest and the state to which the incarcerated person will be extradited (sent) for prosecution. The state in which the incarcerated person is being held is known as the asylum state. See State v. Luster, 596 So. 2d 454, 456, 17 Fla. L. Weekly 206, 206 (Fla. 1992) (adopting Doran in Florida); People ex rel. Coster v. Andrews, 104 Misc. 2d 506, 512, 428 N.Y.S.2d 594, 597–598 (Sup. Ct. Broome County 1980) (applying Doran to New York); Michigan v. Doran, 439 U.S. 282, 289, 99 S. Ct. 530, 535, 58 L. Ed. 2d 521, 527 (1978) (“[A] court considering release on habeas corpus can do no more than decide (a) whether the extradition documents on their face are in order; (b) whether the petitioner has been charged with a crime in the demanding state; (c) whether the petitioner is the person named in the request for extradition; and (d) whether

You may challenge the extradition warrant on the following two grounds: (1) if you can prove by convincing evidence that you were not in the demanding state at the time the crime was committed, or (2) if you have been held longer than allowed by the laws of the state in which you are held.¹²

(ii) Bail

You do not have a constitutional right to bail, but if you are granted bail, it must not be excessive. Florida, New York, and Michigan all permit you to ask for habeas relief if you have been denied bail, or if the bail was excessive.¹³ Each state has different ways to decide when bail is too much. Read the state-specific parts of this Chapter and research your state's laws to get the most correct information.

(iii) Delay

Each state has a maximum amount of time that it can keep you in prison without filing formal charges. You can file for habeas corpus if you have been in prison for longer than this without being charged. There are two types of formal charges. The first is called an information. Prosecutors can issue an information without a grand jury. New York prosecutors usually use informations to charge people with misdemeanors. The second formal charge is called an indictment. Grand juries issue indictments.

(b) After Your Conviction

If you are incarcerated after your conviction, you may be able to claim one of the following grounds for habeas relief:

- (1) confinement beyond your sentence or a miscalculation of sentence;
- (2) violation of fundamental constitutional or statutory rights;
- (3) new or void law;
- (4) ineffective assistance of counsel; or the petitioner is a fugitive.”). See also People v. Culwell, 163 Misc. 2d 576, 579–580, 621 N.Y.S.2d 490, 492–493 (Sup. Ct. Schoharie County 1995) (granting writ of habeas corpus and finding that petitioner was not a fugitive where the demanding state failed to comply with N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 570.16 (McKinney 2009), which required proof that petitioner either committed a crime in the demanding state or did acts in New York which would constitute a crime in the demanding state).

12. In Florida, this ties into the other factors. If you were not in the demanding state at the time of the incident then you are also not a fugitive from justice. See Galloway v. Josey, 507 So. 2d 590, 594, 12 Fla. L. Weekly 182, 182 (Fla. 1987) (granting habeas petition and holding that once a petitioner comes forward with clear and convincing evidence to rebut the presumption that he was a fugitive, the burden shifts to the state to produce competent evidence discrediting an incarcerated person's proof to such a degree that it is no longer clear and convincing). See also State v. Cox, 306 So. 2d 156, 159, (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1974) (“[T]he question of whether an accused is a fugitive from justice asks nothing more than whether he was bodily present in the demanding state at the time of the offense and thereafter departed from that state.”); State ex rel. Smith v. Clark, 33 So. 2d 721, 722, 160 Fla. 113, 114 (Fla. 1948) (denying habeas petition where record determined that petitioner was in the state at the time of the commission of the robbery); Trent v. McLeod, 179 So. 906, 907, 131 Fla. 617, 618–619 (Fla. 1938) (denying habeas petition where nothing in the record supported petitioner's claim that he was not in the demanding state); State ex rel. Stringer v. Quigg, 107 So. 409, 412, 91 Fla. 197, 203 (Fla. 1926) (holding that the court must consider, among other things, whether the warrant shows that he was in the demanding state at the time that the offense was committed); Kuney v. State, 102 So. 547, 549, 88 Fla. 354, 358–359 (Fla. 1924) (reversing lower court because it did not consider whether petitioner was in the demanding state at the time of the alleged offense).

In New York: see People ex rel. Friedman v. Comm'r of N.Y.C. Dept. of Corr., 66 A.D.2d 689, 690, 411 N.Y.S.2d 267, 268–269 (1st Dept. 1978) (holding that failure to specify when a crime was committed deprived petitioner of the right to prove that he was out of the state at the time). But see People ex rel. Pata v. Lindemann, 75 A.D.2d 654, 654–655, 427 N.Y.S.2d 445, 446 (2d Dept. 1980) (denying habeas petition and holding that where the indictment charged crimes of a continuing nature which allegedly took place throughout the entire period covered by the indictment, it was up to the accused to prove his absence from the demanding state throughout the entire period).

13. In Florida: see FLA. R. CRIM. P. § 3.131(d)(3) (West 2019). In New York: see N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7010(b) (McKinney 2013).

(5) discovery of new evidence.

In New York, you can also file if there has been excessive delay before your trial, or a violation of the rules of your sentence.¹⁴ Each state has a different approach. For more information on grounds for habeas petitions in particular states, see Parts B (Florida), C (New York), and D (Michigan) of this Chapter.

(c) While You Are On Probation or Parole

You can also file a habeas petition if your parole or probation is taken away. Every state gives you the right to a hearing to decide if you have violated the terms of your parole.¹⁵ The hearing determines if you will be held in custody until the decision on whether your parole will be taken away.

The court must tell you when and where the hearing will take place. You have the right to attend the hearing, speak for yourself, bring witnesses to speak for you, and question witnesses speaking against you. You also have the right to a hearing on whether your parole or probation will be taken away “within a reasonable time” after you have been taken into custody.¹⁶ For more information about parole, see JLM, Chapter 35, “Getting Out Early: Conditional and Early Release,” and JLM, Chapter 36, “Parole.”

In Florida, you can use a habeas petition to challenge any mistakes made in these hearings. You can also use a habeas petition to challenge Florida Probation and Parole Commission decisions about your expected parole release date.¹⁷ You can file a habeas petition if you are still in prison after your expected release date.¹⁸

New York¹⁹ and Michigan allow habeas petitions in connection with parole revocation hearings.

14. See People ex rel. Anderson v. Warden, N.Y.C. Corr. Inst. for Men, 68 Misc. 2d 463, 468, 325 N.Y.S.2d 829, 835 (Sup. Ct. Bronx County 1971) (holding that “if there is an unreasonable delay in the disposition of an article 440 motion, the defendant can, perhaps, properly bring a writ of habeas corpus.”); see also People ex rel. Lee v. Smith, 58 A.D.2d 987, 987, 397 N.Y.S.2d 266, 267 (4th Dept. 1977) (granting a hearing on the merits of relator’s habeas corpus petition, even though an appeal was pending, because the relator’s appeal had been pending for more than four years). You should read Part C(2)(b)(vi) of this Chapter for more information about “unreasonable delay” habeas grounds in New York. See People ex rel. Brown v. Johnston, 9 N.Y.2d 482, 485, 174 N.E.2d 725, 726, 215 N.Y.S.2d 44, 45 (1961) (holding that “it seems quite obvious that any further restraint in excess of that permitted by the judgment or constitutional guarantees should be subject to inquiry.”). You should read Part C(2)(h)(1) of this Chapter for more information about “violation of the conditions of your sentence” habeas grounds in New York.

15. Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 485, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 2602, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484, 496–497 (1972). Since this is a Supreme Court case, it applies to all states.

16. Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 487–488, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 2603–2604, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484, 498 (1972).

17. See State v. Sampson, 297 So. 2d 120, 121–122 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1974) (finding that habeas corpus is the proper method for challenging an order of the Florida Parole and Probation Commission); see also State ex rel. Wainwright v. Holley, 234 So. 2d 409, 410 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1970) (holding that the proper way to challenge an error in post-conviction proceedings such as parole revocation is through habeas corpus); Jackson v. Mayo, 73 So. 2d 881, 882–883 (Fla. 1954) (granting relief where no evidence was offered to authorize revocation of parole); Beal v. Mato, 70 So. 2d 367, 369 (Fla. 1954) (holding that where there is a complete absence of any adjudication at all, the judgment and sentence will be subject to being set aside on habeas corpus); Sellers v. Bridges, 15 So. 2d 293, 295, 153 Fla. 586, 590–591 (Fla. 1943) (holding that whether an incarcerated person inexcusably violated conditions of pardon or parole was proper for habeas inquiry). See Williams v. Florida Parole Comm’n, 625 So. 2d 926, 934, 18 Fla. L. Weekly 2258 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1993) (finding that the proper remedy to challenge presumptive release date is habeas corpus and the proper remedy for refusal to set a presumptive release date is mandamus).

18. See Jenrette v. Wainwright, 410 So. 2d 575, 576–578 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1982) (ruling that incarcerated person whose presumptive parole release date had passed was entitled to immediate release on habeas corpus).

19. Read Part C(2)(j)(ii) of this Chapter for more information about bringing a petition for habeas corpus in connection with your parole revocation hearing in New York.

(d) Jurisdiction

You may also get habeas relief if the court that imprisoned you did not have jurisdiction to do so. Jurisdiction is the ability to hear and decide your case. Every court needs two types of jurisdiction. First, the court must have personal jurisdiction, or the power to judge you. The court must also have subject matter jurisdiction, or the power to judge the act you were charged with. If the court that sentenced you did not have either or both of these, you can file a habeas petition.²⁰

(i) Personal Jurisdiction

A court has personal jurisdiction over you when you are brought to that court and appear before the judge.²¹ This probably already happened when you were convicted or at your arraignment (if you have not yet gone to trial). Because of this, it is very difficult to petition for habeas by arguing that the court lacked personal jurisdiction.

(ii) Subject Matter Jurisdiction

Subject matter jurisdiction is the court's ability to decide cases related to the action that you were charged with. The court only has subject matter jurisdiction if the right kind of charges have been issued.²² Formal charges give jurisdiction to a court, so you can file a habeas petition before or after your conviction if the charges against you have serious issues.²³ To get habeas relief, the charges must 20. See Ex parte Livingston, 156 So. 612, 618, 116 Fla. 640, 654 (Fla. 1934) (“Want of jurisdiction over person or subject matter is always ground for relief on habeas corpus.”).

21. See Frisbie v. Collins, 342 U.S. 519, 522–523, 72 S. Ct. 509, 511–512, 96 L. Ed. 541, 545–546 (1952) (denying petitioner's application for habeas corpus even though he was brought into the court's jurisdiction by forcible abduction).

In New York, see People ex rel. Ortiz v. Warden, 119 A.D.2d 526, 528, 501 N.Y.S.2d 667, 668 (App. Div. 1st Dept. 1986) (dismissing petition for habeas corpus, and, by applying two U.S. Supreme Court cases to New York, ruling that even though New York authorities did not provide the proper papers for extradition, court has personal jurisdiction if petitioner is present in court).

22. An “information” and an “indictment” are both considered formal charges. See JLM, Appendix V: Definitions of Words Used in the JLM. Read Part A(3)(a)(iii) of this Chapter for information about the different types of formal charges.

23. In Florida: see Ex parte Livingston, 156 So. 612, 618, 116 Fla. 640, 654 (Fla. 1934) (holding that a faulty indictment may be grounds to overturn a conviction and may be challenged at any time); see also Farrior v. State ex rel. Compton, 13 So. 2d 147, 147, 152 Fla. 754, 756 (Fla. 1943) (finding that habeas is a proper remedy for an indictment that fails to allege a crime); Locklin v. Pridgeon, 30 So. 2d 102, 103 158 Fla. 737, 739 (Fla. 1947) (finding that “the sufficiency of the indictment may be challenged in habeas corpus proceedings when it totally fails to charge an offense under any valid law,” and granting a writ of habeas corpus where the statute under which he was convicted was too indefinite and uncertain to comply with due process requirements); Ex parte Wilson, 14 So. 2d 846, 846–847, 153 Fla. 459, 460–461 (Fla. 1943) (granting habeas petition and remanding with instructions where verdict purporting to find petitioner guilty of criminal offense was defective as the crime was not found within the statutes and judgment pronounced by trial court was imperfect), aff'd 155 Fla. 511, 20 So. 2d 673 (1945); House v. State, 172 So. 734, 735, 127 Fla. 145, 149–150 (Fla. 1937) (granting habeas petition when court failed to adjudicate the petitioner as “guilty” following his guilty plea, leaving the resolution of his case “incomplete”); Martin v. State, 166 So. 467, 467, 123 Fla. 143, 144–45 (Fla. 1936) (holding that petitioner could raise issue of defective information on post-conviction petition for writ of habeas corpus). In New York: see People ex rel. Morris v. Skinner, 67 Misc. 2d 221, 224, 323 N.Y.S.2d 905, 909 (Sup. Ct. Monroe County 1971) (granting habeas relief where information failed to charge petitioner with a crime); John A. Gebauer et al., 64 N.Y. Jur. 2d, Habeas Corpus § 47 (2nd ed. 2020) (“Where it appears, on the return to a writ of habeas corpus, that the relator is improperly detained because of the failure to lodge the proper information against him or her, it is the duty of the court to discharge him or her from future detention. . .”); see also People ex rel. Gray v. Tekben, 86 A.D.2d 176, 180, 449 N.Y.S.2d 276, 280 (N.Y. App. Div. 2d. Dept. 1982) (granting habeas corpus where the indictment charging assault in second degree only conferred jurisdiction to enter judgment on such crime or lesser included offenses, and petitioner was convicted of another offense, which was neither included in the indictment nor a lesser included offense of assault), aff'd, 57 N.Y.2d 651, 439 N.E.2d 875, 454 N.Y.S.2d 66 (1982). In Michigan: see Ringstaff v. Mintzes, 539 F.Supp.1124, 1129 (E.D. Mich. 1982) (holding that “habeas corpus relief can be invoked with respect to indictments returned by grand juries only where the indictment is so defective that a valid conviction could be so wrong that they do not even charge you with a crime.²⁴ What constitutes as a defective indictment varies from state to state. For instance, a defective indictment might not list all of the elements of the crime, or it might charge you with something not against the law, or it might have been issued after the statute of limitations for the offense has run. If the court finds the indictment is defective, it will be voided and you will be entitled to immediate release for that charge. But, the prosecutor may try to re-indict you for the same offense, using an indictment that is not defective.

B. Florida

This Part explains some of the basic rules for filing a habeas corpus petition in Florida.

1. Requirements

The Florida writ of habeas corpus rules can be found in Rule 3.850 of the Florida Rules of Criminal Procedure and in Title VI, Section 79.01 of the Florida State Statutes.²⁵ To challenge your conviction, sentence, or confinement, you must either file a Rule 3.850 motion or file a habeas petition. If you want to challenge your conviction on any of the grounds specified in Rule 3.850 (see the next Section titled “Requirements of a Rule 3.850 Motion”), then you must file a Rule 3.850 motion. If your grounds for relief do not fall within those listed in the Section “Determining Whether to File a Rule 3.850 Motion or a Habeas Petition” below, then you may file a habeas petition. Although the Rule 3.850 motion asks for relief similar to a habeas petition, you should be sure to follow its own specific pleading requirements. Incarcerated persons facing the death penalty in Florida must follow a different procedure.²⁶ The rest of this Section will explain the requirements for a habeas petition, and the requirements for a Rule 3.850 petition will follow.

(a) Custody

If you are on parole or probation, you are eligible for habeas corpus.²⁷ However, if you have been released on bond or “released on your own recognizance” (you signed a promise saying that you will show up for future court appearances and will not engage in any illegal activity), you may not file a petition for writ of habeas corpus in Florida.²⁸

(b) Immediate Release

You must be entitled to immediate release upon the success of your habeas claim.

(c) Incarcerated Person within the state

In Florida, if you were convicted in another state, but sent to prison in Florida, the state that convicted you (the sending state) must hear your habeas corpus petition.²⁹ under no circumstances result from facts proved thereunder”).

24. In Florida: see Ex parte Stirrup, 19 So. 2d 712, 713, 155 Fla. 173, 174 (Fla. 1944) (holding habeas will not secure release where the indictment was merely defective in its allegations but that it will secure release when the charge fails to state any offense); see also Petersen v. Mayo, 65 So. 2d 48, 48 (Fla. 1953) (“Defects in an information are not subject to attack in a habeas corpus proceeding unless the defects are of such magnitude that the information utterly fails to charge any crime or offense under the laws of the State of Florida.”).

25. FLA. R. CRIM. P. 3.850(a)–(n) (2009). FLA. STAT. ANN. § 79.01 (2009).

26. See FLA. R. CRIM. P. 3.851 (2009) (setting out additional relief procedures after a death sentence has been imposed and affirmed on direct appeal).

27. See State v. Bolyea, 520 So.2d 562, 563–564, 13 Fla. L. Weekly 117, 117 (Fla. 1988) (holding that a petitioner on probation is in custody); Sellers v. Bridges, 15 So. 2d 293, 295–296, 153 Fla. 586, 590–591 (Fla. 1943) (holding that parole is sufficient restraint on freedom to consider parolee in custody).

28. See State ex rel. Curley v. Gatlin, 5 So. 2d 54, 54, 149 Fla. 1, 1 (Fla. 1941) (holding that incarcerated person released on an appearance bond is not entitled to habeas relief because incarcerated person is no longer in custody). See Sandstrom v. Kolski, 305 So. 2d 75, 76 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1974) (refusing to entertain petition for habeas corpus when petitioner promised to appear in court at a future date, since petitioner was not in custody).

29. See Meyer v. Moore, 826 So. 2d 330, 331, 27 Fla. L. Weekly 764 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2002) (denying a petition for writ of certiorari because although petitioner was serving time in Florida he was convicted in Kansas,

(d) No Other Options

If you are appealing administrative action taken against you by the Florida State Department of Corrections or complaining about the conditions of your confinement, you must follow Florida's administrative procedures before filing a petition for relief in state court. Rule 33-103 of the Florida Administrative Code describes the administrative procedures available to you.³⁰ Your petition for habeas corpus will not be granted unless you have followed these procedures.³¹ For example, your habeas petition may be dismissed if you file it before “exhausting” (using up) all administrative procedures.³² Florida courts will also refuse to consider your habeas petition if you could have raised an issue or error on appeal, but did not.³³ Alleging “ineffective assistance of counsel” will not allow you to raise issues in your habeas petition that could have been raised on appeal.³⁴

1. Requirements of a Rule 3.850 Motion

(a) Grounds for Motion³⁵

You may bring a Rule 3.850 motion for relief from judgment or release from custody if:

- (1) The judgment entered against you or sentence imposed on you violates the U.S. Constitution, Federal law, or Florida law.
- (2) The court did not have jurisdiction to enter the judgment against you.
- (3) The court did not have jurisdiction to impose the sentence.
- (4) The sentence exceeded the maximum authorized by law.
- (5) Your plea was involuntary.
- (6) The judgment against you or sentence imposed is otherwise subject to collateral attack.

(b) Time Limits

If you believe that your sentence exceeds the time limits provided by law, you may file your Rule 3.850 motion at any time during your proceedings. However, all Rule 3.850 claims must be filed no later than two years after your judgment and sentence become final.³⁶

These time requirements will not apply if you can prove that you did not know the facts critical to your Rule 3.850 motion before the deadline. You must also show that these facts could not have been discovered through the exercise of “due diligence” (reasonable or expected actions). The time limit will also not apply if you are asserting a violation of your constitutional rights, which were established and the Florida circuit court lacked jurisdiction to consider or grant a writ of habeas corpus)).

30. FLA. ADMIN. CODE ANN. r. 33–103 (2010).

31. See Seccia v. Wainwright, 517 So. 2d 80, 81, 12 Fla. L. Weekly 2886 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1987) (dismissing incarcerated person's habeas claim for improper administrative confinement where petitioner failed to exhaust administrative remedies); Sutton v. Strickland, 485 So. 2d 25, 25–26, 11 Fla. L. Weekly 675 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1986) (dismissing incarcerated person's petition for writ of habeas corpus on the ground that he failed to exhaust incarcerated person grievance procedures); Griggs v. Wainwright, 473 So. 2d 49, 49–50, 10 Fla. L. Weekly 1844 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1985) (holding that an incarcerated person challenging his confinement must exhaust his administrative remedies before seeking habeas relief).

32. See Comer v. Fla. Parole & Prob. Comm'n, 388 So. 2d 1341, 1341 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1980) (holding that the failure to exhaust all available administrative remedies may procedurally bar relief by writ of habeas corpus).

33. See Hardwick v. Dugger, 648 So. 2d 100, 105, 19 Fla. L. Weekly 433 (Fla. 1994) (finding habeas corpus was not an available remedy where errors of law either were or could have been raised on direct appeal); see also T.L.W. v. Soud, 645 So. 2d 1101, 1105, 19 Fla. L. Weekly 2520 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1994) (stating that habeas claims concerning whether the detention of minors is contrary to a Florida statute must first be addressed to trial courts or in a motion for post-conviction relief).

34. See Mills v. Dugger, 574 So. 2d 63, 65, 15 Fla. L. Weekly 589 (Fla. 1990) (finding that alleging ineffective counsel will not allow relator to raise issues that should have been raised on appeal).

35. See FLA. R. CRIM. P. 3.850(a) (2009).

36. FLA. R. CRIM. P. 3.850(b) (2009).

after the two-year time period had passed. Finally, you can challenge the Rule 3.850 time period if you retained counsel to file your motion, but your lawyer failed to file the motion on time.³⁷

(c) Contents of Motion

Your Rule 3.850 motion must be made under oath and include facts and details about the judgment or sentence under attack. If you have appealed the judgment or sentence, you must include those facts, and you must include the ruling of the court on your appeal.³⁸ You must inform the court whether you have filed a previous post-conviction motion, and if so, how many motions you have filed.³⁹ If you filed a previous motion or motions, you must also state the reason or reasons you did not raise your current Rule 3.850 claims in those prior filings. Finally, you must inform the court of the type of relief you want, as well as provide a brief statement of facts you relied upon in the motion.⁴⁰

2. Determining Whether to File a Rule 3.850 Motion or a Habeas Petition(a) Before Trial

(i) Extradition

In Florida, you may be held for a maximum of thirty days before you can be “extradited” (moved) to another state.⁴¹ If you have been held for over thirty days awaiting extradition, you may bring a habeas corpus petition in Florida. Extradition issues may be brought to the court through a writ of habeas corpus, and not according to the procedures laid out in Rule 3.850.⁴²

(ii) Bail

You may ask for habeas relief on the ground that you were denied bail or that your bail is excessive.⁴³ Some courts require petitioners to prove that they have tried to make bail and will not

37. FLA. R. CRIM. P. 3.850(b) (2009).

38. FLA. R. CRIM. P. 3.850(c) (2009); see also Catlett v. State, 367 So. 2d 735, 735 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1979) (dismissing a motion to vacate because the plaintiff failed to mention prior appeals or Rule 3.850 motions).

39. FLA. R. CRIM. P. 3.850(c) (2009); see also Catlett v. State, 367 So. 2d 735, 735 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1979) (dismissing a motion to vacate because the plaintiff failed to mention prior appeals or Rule 3.850 motions).

40. FLA. R. CRIM. P. 3.850(c) (2009).

41. See Hill v. Roberts, 359 So. 2d 911, 913 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1978) (finding an incarcerated person entitled to discharge on a habeas writ where he was available for extradition for more than thirty days, and demanding state took no action to receive him); see also FLA. STAT. ANN. § 941.15 (2006) (setting statutory maximum of thirty days).

42. See State v. Luster, 596 So. 2d 454, 454, 17 Fla. L. Weekly 206 (Fla. 1992) (holding that a court considering release on habeas corpus can do no more than decide whether extradition documents sent by demanding state are in order on their face, whether petitioner has been charged with a crime in the demanding state, whether petitioner has been named in the demand, and whether petitioner is a fugitive); Galloway v. Josey, 507 So. 2d 590, 591, 12 Fla. L. Weekly 182 (Fla. 1987) (finding that, on habeas review, when an extradition warrant is based upon a facially valid probable cause hearing in another state, the accused may only avoid extradition by producing clear and convincing proof that he is not a fugitive).

43. See Bennett v. State, 96 Fla. 237, 238, 118 So. 18, 18 (Fla. 1928) (finding that a person seeking release on bail should do so by filing a habeas corpus petition); see also Bradwell v. McClure, 488 So. 2d 566, 567, 11 Fla. L. Weekly 978 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1986) (granting habeas relief and ordering trial court to set a reasonable bail for petitioner). See Nicholas v. Cochran, 673 So. 2d 882, 883, 21 Fla. L. Weekly 989, 989 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1996) (granting writ after finding that trial court's large increase of bail upon discovering that petitioner possessed more assets than the court was aware of did not comply with the purposes of bail); Rawls v. State, 540 So. 2d 946, 947, 14 Fla. L. Weekly 935, 935 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1989) (finding that writ of habeas corpus is available when petitioner can show that the trial court has set bail at an unreasonable amount and that bond schedules do not justify excessive bail). In order to discourage the profits from the sale of drugs being used to post bail, under Fla. Stat. Ann. § 903.046(2)(h) (2009), courts may consider the street value of drugs when setting bail on drug-related offenses. See Alvarez v. Crowder, 645 So. 2d 63, 63–64, 19 Fla. L. Weekly 2363, 2363 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1994) (citing Fla. Stat. Ann. § 903.046 (1993)) (noting that the criteria that should be taken into consideration in evaluating the amount of bail include: “nature of the offense and applicable penalty, family ties, length of residence in the community, employment history, financial resources, the defendant's prior criminal record, risk of flight, consider a habeas petition if the evidence indicates that you could not post bail in any amount.⁴⁴ If the court finds in your favor, it may grant relief or lower your bail. If you have already been convicted, the court will not review any petition requesting bail because you cannot get bail after you are convicted. To challenge your bail proceedings or pretrial detainment conditions, you do not need to exhaust Rule 3.850 procedures. Instead, you may immediately file a habeas petition.⁴⁵

(iii) Delay

If no formal charges are filed against you within twenty-one days, you may be entitled to release on a Rule 3.850 motion. You may raise a habeas claim after completing all Rule 3.850 procedures.⁴⁶ If you are released or charged before the court rules on your habeas petition, your petition becomes “moot” (not relevant) and the court will not consider it.⁴⁷ You may also petition the court for a writ of habeas corpus if you request a preliminary hearing and are not granted one in a timely manner.⁴⁸

(iv) Search Warrant and Probable Cause

If you were arrested through a search warrant, you may file a pretrial motion under Rule 3.850 challenging whether the search warrant was valid.⁴⁹ You may also challenge your arrest on the ground that there is no probable cause to believe that you committed the crime with which you are charged.⁵⁰ Probable cause is a low standard to prove and courts are not likely to grant habeas relief on this ground.⁵¹ When deciding your petition, the court will not evaluate conflicting testimony in order to danger to the community and street value of any drugs involved”). But see Sikes v. McMillian, 564 So. 2d 1206, 1208, 15 Fla. L. Weekly 1949, 1949 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1990) (finding Fla. Stat. Ann. § 903.046(2)(h) (2009) does not support a court increasing bail when defendant is charged with purchasing and not selling drugs).

44. See Ex parte Smith, 141 Fla. 434, 434–435, 193 So. 431, 431–432 (Fla. 1940) (holding that reduction of bail will not be considered on habeas petition where the record indicates that petitioner would not have been able to make bail in any amount, but without prejudice to renew petition if petitioner becomes able to make bail).

45. See Dupree v. Cochran, 698 So. 2d 945, 946, 22 Fla. L. Weekly 2201 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1997) (granting petitioner’s habeas petition because trial judge failed to specify the facts and reasons why she revoked the bond); Wilson v. State, 669 So. 2d 312, 313–314, 21 Fla. L. Weekly 661 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1996) (finding, upon habeas review, that trial court abused its discretion in committing petitioner to custody for failure to appear at rescheduled trial).

46. See Fla. R. Crim. P. 3.133(b) (2009); see also Beicke v. Boone, 527 So. 2d 273, 275, 13 Fla. L. Weekly 1410, 1410 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1988) (finding that the state’s failure to file charges within twenty-one days of arrest entitled defendant to an adversary preliminary hearing on any felony charge pending against him; the state’s failure to present evidence at the required hearing entitled defendant to “release on his own recognizance,” release conditioned on the promise to appear in court when required, on any felony charges resulting from the crime for which he was arrested).

47. See Bowens v. Tyson, 578 So. 2d 696, 697, 16 Fla. L. Weekly 270, 270 (Fla. 1991) (holding that defendant who was held in custody for thirty days without filing information or indictment was not entitled to automatic pretrial release where the state filed information after the thirty-day period, but before the court heard defendant’s motion for release).

48. The state is prohibited from holding anyone in custody beyond forty days unless they have been formally charged with a crime. See Fla. R. Crim. P. 3.134 (2019).

49. See State ex rel. Wilson v. Quigg, 154 Fla. 349–358, 17 So. 2d 697, 698–703 (Fla. 1944) (considering search warrant’s validity on appeal from a habeas corpus proceeding, where defendant was held in part based on the warrant).

50. See Jefferson v. Sweat, 76 So. 2d 494, 501 (Fla. 1954) (finding habeas corpus is a proper remedy for testing validity of arrest warrant); State ex rel. Hanks v. Goodman, 253 So. 2d 129, 130 (Fla. 1971) (stating defendant in custody has remedy through habeas corpus if there is no probable cause to hold him).

51. See Alabama v. White, 496 U.S. 325, 330, 110 S. Ct. 2412, 2416, 110 L. Ed. 301, 308 (1990) (“[P]robable cause means ‘a fair probability that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found.’”) (quoting Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213, 238, 103 S. Ct. 2317, 2332, 76 L. Ed. 2d 527 (1983)). But see Pierce v. Mims, 418 So. 2d 273, 273 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1982) (finding no probable cause for arrest warrant when the only evidence presented at preliminary hearing was hearsay).

make determinations of fact.⁵² The court will leave this determination for trial. After completing all Rule 3.850 procedures, you may raise these same issues in a habeas petition.

(b) After Your Conviction

(i) Confinement Beyond Sentence

You are also entitled to Rule 3.850 relief if your sentence is “void” (not valid). A court will consider a sentence void if it was not issued properly based on what is required by the law. For example, if the judgment fails to state an offense, does not state clearly that you have been found guilty, or lists a charge not on the indictment, your conviction and sentence might be void.⁵³ If you are denied relief under Rule 3.850, you may then raise this claim in a habeas corpus proceeding.

(ii) Fundamental Rights

You may attack prior criminal proceedings under Rule 3.850 by asserting a violation of your “fundamental” (most basic) constitutional rights. If you are denied relief, you may raise these issues in a petition for habeas relief. Although there is no comprehensive list of rights that Florida courts have declared “fundamental,” courts have consistently allowed petitioners to claim certain rights in habeas petitions. These include the right to a trial by jury, the right to due process, the right not to be convicted twice of the same charge (also called the right against double jeopardy), the right to appeal, and the right to a speedy trial.⁵⁴ You may also claim the right to be free from cruel and unusual

52. See State ex rel. Price v. Stone, 128 Fla. 637, 641, 175 So. 229, 231 (Fla. 1937) (denying motion to appoint special commissioner to take testimony because “while on habeas corpus the court will examine the legal sufficiency of the alleged facts to make out a crime, it will not determine the probative force of conflicting testimony upon which the charge is based.”).

53. See Anglin v. Mayo, 88 So. 2d 918, 921–922 (Fla. 1956) (granting writ of habeas corpus for illegal sentencing when defendant was sentenced to imprisonment for five years using an outdated statute and the sentence imposed by the revised statute was shorter); Anderson v. Chapman, 109 Fla. 54, 57–58, 146 So. 675, 677 (Fla. 1933) (“[I]f the vice of a sentence is not merely that it is defective, but [that it] is of an entirely different character from that authorized by law, it is generally held that such sentence is void, and that the incarcerated person will be discharged on habeas corpus.”); see also Dean v. State, 476 So. 2d 318, 319, 10 Fla. L. Weekly 2331 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1985) (reversing sentences of youthful offender that exceeded maximums specified in Youthful Offender Act); R.J.K. v. State, 375 So. 2d 871, 871 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1979) (granting writ to juvenile because committing the juvenile to the Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services for an indeterminate period was improper); State ex rel. Saunders v. Boyer, 166 So. 2d 694, 696–697 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1964) (remanding case for resentencing as sentence of one year of hard labor for contempt of court was not authorized by statute and was void). But see Dixon v. Mayo, 124 Fla. 485, 487, 168 So. 800, 800–801 (Fla. 1936) (denying writ of habeas corpus when court found relator’s argument—that the language of the judgment appeared to find him guilty of a charge different than the one on the indictment—was “not tenable” (or not reasonable) because the differing element was not material to the crime).

54. See Myrick v. Wainwright, 243 So. 2d 179, 180 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1971) (considering and denying habeas petition because the official court record clearly showed that the petitioner had been advised of his right to appeal his conviction and sentence); Dennis v. Wainwright, 243 So. 2d 181, 182 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1971), aff’d sub nom., 247 So. 2d 88 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1971) (finding that to raise the issue of denial of right to appeal because of untimely filing (filing for an appeal after the deadline had passed), petitioner must prove that the frustration (denial) of right to appeal was due to state action and not to petitioner’s negligence). See also Deal v. Mayo, 76 So. 2d 275, 276 (Fla. 1954) (holding that habeas corpus review is proper to test whether petitioner was subject to double jeopardy at trial); Sneed v. Mayo, 69 So. 2d 653, 655 (Fla. 1954) (despite non-compliance with state statute, court denied writ because constitutional requirement of due process was met in this case (because the defendant waived his right to a jury trial); Lightfoot v. Wainwright, 369 So. 2d 110, 111 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1979) (finding that a person who has been denied right to due process is entitled to habeas relief). See Sneed v. Mayo, 66 So. 2d 865, 869–870, 874 (Fla. 1953) (holding that habeas corpus is proper to review the allegation that petitioner was denied right to trial by jury). To raise this issue in a habeas petition, you must have been denied your right to a jury trial. If you were offered a jury trial and turned it down, then you expressly waived your right to a jury trial and may not petition the court for habeas on this issue. See Pena v. Schultz, 245 So. 2d 49, 50 (Fla. 1971) (finding habeas is proper to determine whether right to speedy trial was denied); Griswold v. State, 77 Fla. 505, 515–517, 82 So. 44, 48 (Fla. 1919) (holding that unless there was evidence that the continuance [delay in trial] was granted punishment (in other words, you may challenge your prison conditions by alleging they are so unbearable that they must be considered cruel and unusual punishment).⁵⁵

(iii) New or Void Law

You may also petition the court under Rule 3.850 on the ground that you were prosecuted under an unconstitutional statute.⁵⁶ It is very rare for courts to find a statute unconstitutional. If the statute you were prosecuted under is declared unconstitutional, you are entitled to immediate release.

(d) Ineffective Counsel

You have the right to effective assistance of counsel to help you with your appeal. You may petition the court according to the process laid out in Rule 3.850 if you: (1) are “indigent” (poor), (2) requested counsel on appeal, and (3) were denied that right to counsel.⁵⁷ If you did not make your need for counsel known, the court is not likely to consider your petition. You may also petition the court for habeas relief if your counsel was ineffective.⁵⁸ Proving ineffective assistance of counsel is very difficult. The court will only consider whether the attorney’s mistakes were so great that they were “grossly” (obviously) outside the range of acceptable performance and “hindered” (prevented) your appeal and undermined its result.⁵⁹ You must show there is a good chance that, if your counsel had not made these without good cause, the court presumed one continuance did not violate the defendant’s speedy trial right). This issue should be brought before trial. It is very unlikely the court will grant relief on this issue after conviction.

55. See Graham v. Vann, 394 So. 2d 176, 177 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1981) (affirming writ of habeas corpus where petitioners sought relief from prison conditions that were constantly dangerous to the lives and safety of the incarcerated people, even though a federal case challenging inadequate medical care was pending). Prison conditions may also be challenged using 42 U.S.C. § 1983; see JLM, Chapter 16 “Using 42 U.S.C § 1983 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law” for more information.

56. See Sandstrom v. Leader, 370 So. 2d 3, 5 (Fla. 1979) (“[A] writ of habeas corpus may be utilized by an accused to challenge the constitutionality of a statutory provision under which he is charged.”); State ex rel. Matthews v. Culver, 114 So. 2d 796, 796 (Fla. 1959) (holding petitioner was being unlawfully detained because he was convicted and sentenced under a statute that was later declared unconstitutional and therefore he must be released); Coleman v. State ex rel. Jackson, 140 Fla. 772, 774, 193 So. 84, 85 (Fla. 1939) (holding habeas corpus is the proper procedure where the charge made does not constitute a crime under the laws of Florida because the statute under which the charge is being made is unconstitutional); La Tour v. Stone, 139 Fla. 681, 695–697, 190 So. 704, 710–711 (Fla. 1939) (stating the right to attack an information or indictment by writ of habeas corpus is limited, and a habeas corpus proceeding is a proper vehicle when the offense charged does not constitute a crime under the laws of the State because the statute invoked is unconstitutional); Roberts v. Schumacher, 127 Fla. 461, 462, 173 So. 827, 827 (Fla. 1937) (noting habeas corpus is appropriate relief when the statute under which offense was charged is invalid); State ex rel. Dixon v. Cochran, 114 So. 2d 228, 229 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1959) (granting a writ of habeas corpus for a conviction and sentence under a statute that was later held invalid by the Florida Supreme Court).

57. See Baggett v. Wainwright, 229 So. 2d 239, 241–242 (Fla. 1969) (holding that incarcerated people have a constitutional right to counsel for purposes of direct appeal and the state’s failure to give access to a lawyer entitles an incarcerated person to habeas relief to enforce that right, as long as the incarcerated person makes his need for counsel known). For more information on ineffective assistance of counsel claims, see Chapter 12 of the JLM, “Appealing Your Conviction Based on Ineffective Assistance of Counsel.”

58. See Owen v. Crosby, 854 So. 2d 182, 188, 28 Fla. L. Weekly 615, 615 (Fla. 2003) (holding that petition for post-conviction relief is the proper method to raise claims of ineffective assistance of appellate counsel); Groover v. Singletary, 656 So. 2d 424, 425, 20 Fla. L. Weekly 151, 151 (Fla. 1995) (denying habeas petition because all claims had been raised in prior Rule 3.850 proceedings and were found to be procedurally barred or without merit and therefore appellate counsel was not ineffective for failing to raise them); Nerey v. State, 634 So. 2d 206, 206–207, 19 Fla. L. Weekly 661 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 3d Dist. 1994) (denying habeas petition and finding appellate counsel was not ineffective because counsel could reasonably have concluded that an argument would not prevail [succeed]).

59. See Rogers v. Singletary, 698 So. 2d 1178, 1180–1181, 21 Fla. L. Weekly 503, 22 Fla. L. Weekly 561 (Fla. 1996) (applying Pope v. Wainwright, 496 So. 2d 798, 11 Fla. L. Weekly 533 (Fla. 1986), and denying writ of habeas corpus where the court found that the relator [the petitioner] did knowingly and intelligently waive the right to counsel for his appeal); Pope v. Wainwright, 496 So. 2d 798, 800, 11 Fla. L. Weekly 533 (Fla. 1986) (limiting mistakes, the outcome on appeal would have been different.⁶⁰ You may not use a habeas corpus proceeding to allege ineffective assistance of your counsel at trial that issue may only be raised on appeal.⁶¹ Finally, you do not need to complete all Rule 3.850 procedures if you are challenging the ineffectiveness of the lawyer who helped with your appeal. In those circumstances, you may immediately file a habeas petition.⁶²

(e) New Evidence

If there is newly discovered evidence in your case, you may attack or challenge the judgment against you according to Rule 3.850 procedures.⁶³ If you later file a habeas petition, be aware that the evidence must be very strong.⁶⁴ It must be so strong that, if admitted, it would probably produce an acquittal on retrial.⁶⁵ In addition, you must be able to prove that the information was not known by you or your attorney and could not have been discovered by you or your attorney at the time of the trial.⁶⁶ The court will be required to hold an evidentiary hearing on your claim for post-conviction relief, unless the evidence is plainly refuted by the record.⁶⁷ You may also file for post-conviction relief if you can show that the prosecutor failed to turn over exculpatory evidence (evidence tending to support your innocence).⁶⁸ To establish a claim that the prosecutor failed to turn over such evidence, you must be able to show that:

determinations of ineffective appellate counsel to situations where the alleged failures of counsel are important enough to be serious error or serious failure to perform professionally as a lawyer and whether the failure by counsel interfered with the process of the appeal so much that the result cannot be trusted) (citing Johnson v. Wainwright, 463 So. 2d 207, 209, 10 Fla. L. Weekly 85 (Fla. 1985)); Jackson v. Dugger, 580 So. 2d 161, 162, 16 Fla. L. Weekly 327 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 4th Dist. 1991) (granting petition for habeas corpus where counsel was determined to be defective due to his failure to raise an issue on appeal that counsel for relator's [petitioner's] co-defendant raised, causing co-defendant's conviction to be reversed).

60. For more information on ineffective assistance of counsel claims, see Chapter 12 of the JLM, "Appealing Your Conviction Based on Ineffective Assistance of Counsel."

61. See Breedlove v. Singletary, 595 So. 2d 8, 10, 17 Fla. L. Weekly 67 (Fla. 1992) (holding that claims of trial counsel's effectiveness cannot be heard in habeas corpus proceedings).

62. See Groover v. Singletary, 656 So. 2d 424, 425, 20 Fla. L. Weekly S151 (Fla. 1995) (noting that a petition for a writ of habeas corpus is the appropriate vehicle to raise claims of ineffective assistance of appellate counsel).

63. See McLin v. State, 827 So. 2d 948, 951–952, 27 Fla. L. Weekly 743 (Fla. 2002) (analyzing a Rule 3.850 motion raising newly discovered evidence by incorporating an affidavit of an eyewitness to the murder stating that McLin did not commit the crime for which he was convicted); see also FLA. R. CRIM. P. 3.850 (West 2018) (outlining the general grounds on which a sentence can be vacated, set aside, or corrected).

64. DNA evidence may be such an example. See JLM, Chapter 11, "Using Post-Conviction DNA Testing to Attack Your Conviction or Sentence."

65. See Jones v. State, 591 So. 2d 911, 915, 16 Fla. L. Weekly 745 (Fla. 1991) ("[T]he newly discovered evidence must be of such a nature that it would probably produce an acquittal on retrial."); see also Davis v. State, 736 So. 2d 1156, 1159, 24 Fla. L. Weekly 260 (Fla. 1999) (denying post-conviction relief motion because petitioner's allegations regarding expert witness testimony were speculative and thus not newly discovered evidence); Williamson v. Dugger, 651 So. 2d 84, 89, 19 Fla. L. Weekly 582 (Fla. 1994) (denying habeas corpus petition because new affidavits petitioner offered to impeach a witness's credibility were not likely to lead to an acquittal on retrial).

66. See Jones v. State, 591 So. 2d 911, 916, 16 Fla. L. Weekly 745 (Fla. 1991) (holding newly discovered information must have been unknown at time of trial and could not have been discovered through reasonable diligence); see also Steinhorst v. State, 695 So. 2d 1245, 1247–1248, 22 Fla. L. Weekly 335 (Fla. 1997) (affirming the denial of defendant's habeas motion because due diligence could have uncovered files relating to the fact that defendant's judge recused himself [excused for potential conflict of interest or lack of impartiality] on a co-defendant's case, which defendant attempted to offer as newly discovered evidence); Correll v. State, 698 So. 2d 522, 523–524, 22 Fla. L. Weekly 188 (Fla. 1997) (denying petitioner's post-conviction relief because the evidence on an expert witness's education offered to impeach the witness could have been discovered at trial).

67. See McLin v. State, 827 So. 2d 948, 954, 27 Fla. L. Weekly 743 (Fla. 2002) ("To uphold the trial court's summary denial of claims raised in a 3.850 motion, the claims must be either facially invalid or conclusively refuted by the record. Further, where no evidentiary hearing is held on a claim for post-conviction relief, an appellate court must accept the defendant's factual allegations to the extent they are not refuted by the record.") (quoting Foster v. State, 810 So. 2d 910, 914, 27 Fla. L. Weekly 147 (Fla. 2002)).

68. See Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 87, 83 S. Ct. 1194, 1196–1197, 10 L. Ed. 2d 215, 218 (1963)

- (1) The state possessed evidence favorable to your case;
- (2) You did not possess nor could have obtained such evidence with reasonable effort;
- (3) The prosecution suppressed (did not turn over) the evidence; and
- (4) There is a reasonable probability the case would have come out differently if the evidence had been disclosed.⁶⁹

(f) Probation or Parole

Florida courts have held that a Rule 3.850 motion, followed by a habeas petition if unsuccessful, is the correct procedure by which you can challenge errors in parole revocation proceedings and orders of the Florida Probation and Parole Commission.⁷⁰ You may also file a habeas petition to challenge the Parole Commission's determinations of presumptive parole release dates, or if you are incarcerated after your presumptive release date.⁷¹

(g) Subject Matter Jurisdiction

In Florida, courts will ordinarily find that as long as an indictment or information does not completely fail to charge an offense, it provides the accused with enough information to construct a

("[S]uppression by the prosecution of evidence favorable to an accused . . . violates due process where the evidence is material either to guilt or to punishment, irrespective of the good faith or bad faith of the prosecution."); see also Kyles v. Whitley, 514 U.S. 419, 421–422, 115 S. Ct. 1555, 1560, 131 L. Ed. 2d 490, 498 (1995) (applying Brady and reversing the denial of a habeas corpus petition because the state failed to disclose evidence favorable to the petitioner); Brown v. Wainwright, 785 F.2d 1457, 1458 (11th Cir. 1986) (reversing a petitioner's conviction because the prosecution knowingly allowed false testimony to be introduced and exploited in its case).

69. Downs v. State, 740 So. 2d 506, 513–517, 24 Fla. L. Weekly 231, 231 (Fla. 1999) (denying motion for post-conviction relief because appellant's contentions that appellee had, among other things, withheld exculpatory evidence and that appellant had received ineffective assistance of counsel were meritless); Mills v. State, 684 So. 2d 801, 806, 21 Fla. L. Weekly 527, 527 (Fla. 1996) (denying motion for successive petition where defendant failed to produce statements or evidence to show that further proceedings would have changed court's conclusion of guilt); Scott v. State, 657 So. 2d 1129, 1132, 20 Fla. L. Weekly 133, 133 (Fla. 1995) (reversing trial court's decision and remanding for evidentiary hearing on issue of possible Brady violations raised by defendant's motion, but denying habeas petition as procedurally barred); Hildwin v. Dugger, 654 So. 2d 107, 110–111, 20 Fla. L. Weekly 39, 39 (Fla. 1995) (denying habeas petition but vacating and remanding for new sentencing before a jury because counsel's errors had deprived petitioner of a reliable penalty phase).

70. See Bush v. State, 945 So. 2d 1207, 1210, 31 Fla. L. Weekly 879 (Fla. 2006) (holding that the proper remedy for an incarcerated person to pursue in challenging a sentence-reducing credit determination by the Department of Corrections, where the incarcerated person has exhausted administrative remedies and is alleging entitlement to immediate release, is a petition for writ of habeas corpus); State v. Sampson, 297 So. 2d 120, 121–122 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 4th Dist. 1974) (finding that habeas corpus is the proper method for challenging order of the Florida Parole and Probation Commission); State ex rel. Wainwright v. Holley, 234 So. 2d 409, 410 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2d Dist. 1970) (holding that the proper way to challenge error in post-conviction proceedings such as parole revocation is through habeas corpus); see also Jackson v. Mayo, 73 So. 2d 881, 882–883 (Fla. 1954) (granting relief where the commission revoked parole based on evidence that had not been introduced at the revocation hearing); Beal v. Mato, 70 So. 2d 367, 369 (Fla. 1954) (affirming that where there is a complete absence of any adjudication at all, the judgment and sentence will be subject to being set aside on habeas corpus); Sellers v. Bridges, 15 So. 2d 293, 295, 153 Fla. 586, 590–591 (1943) (holding that whether the incarcerated person inexcusably violated conditions of pardon or parole was proper for habeas inquiry).

71. See Williams v. Fla. Parole Comm'n, 625 So. 2d 926, 934, 18 Fla. L. Weekly 2258 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist. 1993) (finding that the proper remedy to challenge presumptive release date is habeas corpus), overruled in part on other grounds by Sheley v. Fla. Parole Comm'n, 703 So. 2d 1202, 23 Fla. L. Weekly 130 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist. 1997). See Jenrette v. Wainwright, 410 So. 2d 575, 577–579 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 3d Dist. 1982) (ruling that incarcerated person whose presumptive parole release date has passed is entitled to immediate release on habeas corpus). But see Kirsch v. Greadington, 425 So. 2d 153, 155 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist. 1983) (holding that a successful habeas petition merely obliges the parole commission to exercise its judgment without the previous unconstitutional factors).

defense and protects him from future prosecution for the same act. Therefore, courts generally will not find such indictments or informations void or defective.⁷²

3. How to File a Habeas Petition

(a) When to File

First, make sure you are not eligible to bring a Rule 3.850 motion. Florida courts will refuse to issue a writ of habeas corpus if you can pursue your claim through another available action, like a Rule 3.850 motion, but fail to do so.⁷³

If you are facing the death penalty, your petition for a writ of habeas corpus must be filed at the same time as the initial brief filed on your behalf in the appeal of the circuit court's order on a motion to vacate, set aside, or correct a sentence.⁷⁴

(b) Where to File

Where you file depends upon the stage of your criminal case. If you have not yet been convicted, or are filing a petition related to a probation violation, you must petition the circuit court judge presiding over your case.⁷⁵ But if the state Supreme Court has affirmed your conviction, you must file your petition with the state Supreme Court.⁷⁶ If you originally file with the circuit court, and the circuit court denies your petition, then you may file another petition with the state Supreme Court.⁷⁷ In general, you should file the petition in the jurisdiction in which you are incarcerated. However, if you are raising an issue that should have been raised on direct appeal (like ineffective assistance of counsel), you should file in the court where the original sentence was imposed.⁷⁸

(c) What to Include in Your Petition

Because the writ of habeas corpus is such a unique right, the courts in Florida may occasionally grant applications for writs that do not follow statutory requirements. For example, an attorney may make a telephone call to a judge to apply for a writ, or a judge may decide that the informal letters from an incarcerated person provide sufficient grounds for issuing the writ.⁷⁹ However, it is always

72. See Stack v. State ex rel. LaFratta, 230 So.2d 15, 16 (Fla. App. 1969) (holding that where the information did not completely fail to state a violation of the law, a habeas petition was not the proper way to challenge it; instead, petitioner should have brought a motion to quash); State ex rel. Burton v. Taylor, 148 So.2d 11, 13 (Fla. 1962) (holding that "information adequately informed petitioner of the nature of the accusation against him, the date of its alleged commission and of the particulars surrounding the transaction alleged to be a violation of the statute" such that it "did not 'utterly' or 'wholly fail' to charge the offense"); Taylor v. Chapman, 173 So. 143, 146, 127 Fla. 401, 407–408 (1937) (refusing to grant a writ where the information sufficiently claimed intent and overt acts that would have resulted in commission of the crime).

73. FLA. R. CRIM. P. 3.850(l) (West 2018) (allowing for belated appeal and discretionary review).

74. FLA. R. CRIM. P. 3.851(d)(3) (West 2018).

75. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 79.01 (West 2009); see also Newkirk v. Jenne, 754 So. 2d 61, 62, 25 Fla. L. Weekly 518 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 4th Dist. 2000) (finding that where the petitioner was being detained in relation to a probation violation, the circuit court judge presiding over her case had full authority to order her release).

76. See Kinsey v. Davis, 19 So. 2d 323, 325, 154 Fla. 889, 892 (Fla. 1944) (holding that where the petitioner's conviction had been affirmed by the Supreme Court, his habeas petition should have been made to the Supreme Court because the circuit court could not grant a writ).

77. See Deeb v. Gandy, 148 So. 540, 541 110 Fla. 283, 284 (Fla. 1933) (holding that the petitioner was entitled to bail after the circuit court held that he should be remanded without bail).

78. See FLA. STAT. ANN. § 79.01 (West 2009); see also Collins v. State, 859 So. 2d 1244, 1245, 28 Fla. L. Weekly 2628 (Fla. 2003) (stating that when a petitioner attacks the validity of the conviction by raising issues relating to the trial or to the propriety of the plea, jurisdiction lies with the trial court that imposed the sentence); McLeroy v. State, 704 So. 2d 151, 152, 22 Fla. L. Weekly 2718 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 5th Dist. 1997) (denying a petition for writ of habeas corpus alleging ineffective assistance of counsel because the incarcerated person improperly filed in the jurisdiction where he was incarcerated rather than where the original sentence was imposed).

79. See Jamason v. State, 455 So. 2d 380, 381, 9 Fla. L. Weekly 330 (Fla. 1983) (upholding an oral writ of better to comply with statutory requirements if you can, basing your argument on enough detailed, factual allegations to make a case that on its face shows you are entitled to be released.⁸⁰ The statutory requirements for your application for a writ include:

- (1) The facts you are relying on for relief,
- (2) A request for a writ of habeas corpus, and
- (3) An optional argument in support of the petition with citations of authority.⁸¹

While you do not need to present all the evidence of your wrongful detention, you should attach to your petition copies of the warrant, process, or proceeding that is causing you to be detained.⁸² You should also state that you have exhausted all the administrative remedies available to you.⁸³

(d) How to File

After you have created your petition for habeas corpus including all the items outlined in Part (B)(3)(c) above, “What to Include in Your Petition”, you should send your petition and any supporting documents to the court specified above in Part (B)(3)(b), “Where to File”.

habeas corpus which was issued in response to an oral application by the client’s attorney over the telephone). See Sneed v. Mayo, 66 So. 2d 865, 868 (Fla. 1953) (finding that although the application for a writ was an informal letter not conforming to statutory requirements, the communication was sufficient); McKay v. Jenkins, 405 So. 2d 287, 289 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist. 1981) (construing [interpreting] the appellant’s informal letter to the court as a petition for a writ).

80. See Sneed v. Mayo, 66 So. 2d 865, 870 (Fla. 1953) (stating that a habeas petition must contain at least “some good faith suggestion of illegal detention”); Sullivan v. State ex rel. McCrory, 49 So. 2d 794, 796 (Fla. 1951) (noting that a habeas petition should be dismissed if the petition does not make a case that on its face shows that the petitioner should be released from custody); Herring v. State, 181 So. 892, 892, 132 Fla. 658, 659 (Fla. 1938) (denying a habeas petition since the incarcerated person did not claim unlawful detention); Sims v. Dugger, 519 So. 2d 1080, 1082, 13 Fla. L. Weekly 292 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist. 1988) (reversing the dismissal of a petition for habeas corpus because the petition contained detailed factual allegations); Brown v. Wainwright, 498 So. 2d 679, 679, 11 Fla. L. Weekly 2626 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist. 1986) (denying a petition for habeas in part because the petition failed to include any arguments in support of the allegations); DeAngelo v. Strickland, 426 So. 2d 1264, 1264 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist. 1983) (affirming the denial of an incarcerated person’s habeas petition because the incarcerated person was not entitled to the relief he sought and he failed to make a prima facie case because he did not claim that he was illegally imprisoned); Bennington v. Thornton, 370 So. 2d 856, 857 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 4th Dist. 1979) (denying an incarcerated person’s habeas petition because he failed to show that the trial court abused its discretion in denying him bail or failing to hold a hearing as soon as was possible); Bagley v. Brierton, 362 So. 2d 1048, 1049 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist. 1978) (per curiam) (affirming the portion of the trial court’s denial of an incarcerated person’s habeas petition in which he claimed he was denied adequate medical care because even if the allegations were true, he would not be entitled to relief); Smith v. State, 176 So. 2d 383, 384 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 3d Dist. 1965) (per curiam) (affirming the trial court’s denial of an incarcerated person’s habeas petition because the petition did not contain factual allegations to support its conclusions).

81. FLA. R. CIV. P. 1.630(b) (West 2018).

82. See Johnson v. Lindsey, 103 So. 419, 421, 89 Fla. 143, 148 (Fla. 1925) (stating that a habeas petition does not need to include all of the evidence necessary to establish that the detention is wrongful). See Cooper v. Lipscomb, 122 So. 5, 5, 97 Fla. 668, 670 (Fla. 1929) (stating that where the petitioner was arrested and held by the sheriff pursuant to a warrant, a habeas petition should include a copy of the warrant); Johnson v. Lindsey, 103 So. 419, 421, 89 Fla. 143, 148 (Fla. 1925) (stating that if a petitioner claims that he is unlawfully detained because the processes or proceedings under which he is being held are invalid, then the habeas petition should include copies of such proceedings or processes); see also Simons v. State, 555 So. 2d 960, 961, 15 Fla. L. Weekly 253 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist. 1990) (denying a petition for writ of habeas corpus, in which the petitioner claimed he was being deprived of his right to a pretrial release due to his inability to afford bond, because the petition did not include a copy of the order or a transcript of the hearing from the lower court on bond reduction); McNamara v. Cook, 336 So. 2d 677, 679 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 4th Dist. 1976) (finding a habeas petition insufficient because it did not include documentary evidence).

83. See Moore v. Dugger, 613 So. 2d 571, 572, 18 Fla. L. Weekly 499 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist. 1993) (finding that a petition for writ was insufficient because it did not allege that the petitioner had exhausted administrative remedies).

4. Your Right to Counsel for Your Habeas Petition

The U.S. Supreme Court has held that you have no federal constitutional right to counsel for state habeas corpus proceedings.⁸⁴ In Florida, you have no right to appointed counsel (a lawyer assigned by the court) in a habeas proceeding.⁸⁵ A public defender may represent you, but there is no requirement that one be appointed to you.⁸⁶ But if you are applying for a writ because you are about to be extradited, you are entitled to be provided with an attorney.⁸⁷

5. What to Expect After You File

In Florida, the court must issue a writ of habeas corpus if your petition states allegations (claims or assertions of wrongdoings), which, if true, would entitle you to release.⁸⁸ When the court issues the writ, it establishes a date for the person who has you in custody to return you to the court.⁸⁹ The respondent (whoever has you in custody) may provide a response, also called a “return.”⁹⁰ The response includes the respondent’s arguments for keeping you in custody. If the respondent does not return you to court by the scheduled date, he must pay you $300.⁹¹ You have a right to provide a reply to a response within twenty days of receiving it.⁹² If the return does not address a fact that you allege in your petition, you do not need to prove that fact in your reply.⁹³ In your reply, you may, if necessary, put forth other important, material facts not stated in your petition.⁹⁴

The court may decide to hold a hearing to evaluate the facts you allege in your petition. This hearing is usually held after a return is filed, but the court may also decide to hold a hearing before issuing the writ.⁹⁵ You have the right to a hearing if your petition is “facially sufficient,” which means

84. See Pennsylvania v. Finley, 481 U.S. 551, 555, 107 S. Ct. 1990, 1993, 95 L. Ed. 2d 539, 545, 55 U.S.L.W. 4612 (1987) (“[T]he right to appointed counsel extends to the first appeal of right, and no further.”).

85. See Coffee v. Wainwright, 172 So. 2d 851, 853 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist. 1965) (finding that because post-conviction habeas corpus proceedings are civil, not criminal, “there is no absolute right to assistance of a lawyer” (quoting State v. Weeks, 166 So. 2d 892, 896 (Fla. 1964))).

86. See Graham v. Vann, 394 So. 2d 176, 178 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist. 1981) (“[T]he court possesses the authority to appoint counsel to represent the indigent appellees.”).

87. See Bentzel v. State, 585 So. 2d 1118, 1119–1120, 16 Fla. L. Weekly 2410 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist. 1991) (finding that an incarcerated person has a statutory right to counsel at a habeas corpus proceeding challenging extradition).

88. See Guess v. Barton, 599 So. 2d 770, 771, 17 Fla. L. Weekly 1427 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist. 1992) (“For purposes of appellate review, [the court] must assume that the allegations of appellant’s habeas petition are true.”); Roy v. Dugger, 592 So. 2d 1235, 1236, 17 Fla. L. Weekly 386 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist. 1992) (reversing summary denial of the lower court on the ground that if the incarcerated person’s allegations were true, they could establish that the department had failed to comply with due process, which could establish a violation of due process or the protection against cruel and unusual punishment).

89. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 79.04(2) (West 2009).

90. FLA. R. APP. P. 9.100(j) (West 2018).

91. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 79.05(1) (West 2009).

92. FLA. R. APP. P. 9.100(k) (West 2018).

93. See State ex rel. Libtz v. Coleman, 5 So. 2d 60, 61, 149 Fla. 28, 30 (Fla. 1941) (holding that undenied allegations in a petition for writ of habeas corpus are taken as true).

94. See Sneed v. Mayo, 66 So. 2d 865, 870 (Fla. 1953) (stating that, in his reply, petitioner “may allege facts not appearing in the petition”); see also Bard v. Wolson, 687 So. 2d 254, 255 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist. 1996) (reversing an order denying a petition for writ because the appellant was not given an opportunity to reply to the response); Matera v. Buchanan, 192 So. 2d 18, 20 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 3d Dist. 1966) (finding that after the respondent has filed a return, the petitioner may “allege facts not appearing in the petition or return that may be material in the case”).

95. See Turiano v. Butterworth, 416 So. 2d 1261, 1263 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 4th Dist. 1982) (finding that the trial court did not err (make a mistake) in holding an evidentiary hearing before issuing a writ of habeas corpus).

that if everything on your petition is true, you would be entitled to a writ.⁹⁶ In Florida, hearings are informal, and if a witness is unable to attend, he may provide an affidavit instead.⁹⁷

Once the hearing is completed, the court may release you, remand (return) you to custody, or release you on bail.⁹⁸ Though there are no fees to apply for a writ, you may be ordered to pay the cost of the proceedings if the writ is not granted.⁹⁹

6. Your Right to Appeal

You may appeal the denial of your application for a writ of habeas corpus to the state's highest court. Filing the petition in the appellate court will be treated as a notice of appeal as long as you raise the same issues you raised in lower court.¹⁰⁰ However, you also should usually file a notice of appeal.

C. New York

This Part explains some of the basic rules for filing a habeas corpus petition in New York.

1. Requirements

The New York habeas corpus rules can be found in Article 70 of New York Civil Practice Law and Rules, also known as N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7001–7012 (McKinney 2009). The New York State Legislature has restricted the use of the writ of habeas corpus. For most post-conviction relief (challenges to your conviction or sentence), you must file an Article 440 motion, not a petition for a writ of habeas corpus.¹⁰¹

(e) Custody

If you have been released on parole, on probation, on conditional release, ROR, or you are free on bail, a New York court cannot grant a writ of habeas corpus.¹⁰²

(f) Immediate Release

You are entitled to immediate release if your habeas petition is successful.¹⁰³

(g) Incarcerated Person in the State

You must be incarcerated in New York.

96. See Seibert v. Dugger, 595 So. 2d 1083, 1084, 17 Fla. L. Weekly 784 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist. 1992) (finding that dismissal of a petition for writ of habeas corpus without a hearing is error when the incarcerated person makes specific allegations which, if true, would establish that the department of corrections had failed to comply with its own rules).

97. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 79.08 (West 2009).

98. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 79.08 (West 2009).

99. See Beasley v. Cahoon, 147 So. 288, 295, 109 Fla. 106, 126 (Fla. 1933) (finding that a petitioner can be required to pay costs in a habeas case).

100. See Garner v. Wainwright, 454 So. 2d 28, 28 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1st Dist. 1984) (per curiam) (treating filing of same habeas petition as a notice of appeal since it was filed with the appellate court within 30 days, as the appellate rules required).

101. For more information on filing an Article 440 motion, see JLM, Chapter 20, “Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence.”

102. See People ex rel. Doty v. Krueger, 26 N.Y.2d 881, 882, 258 N.E.2d 215, 215, 309 N.Y.S.2d 932, 932 (1970) (person on probation); People ex rel. Nunez v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 182 A.D.2d 998, 998, 585 N.Y.S.2d 716, 716 (3d Dept. 1992) (person on parole); People ex rel. Birt v. Grenis, 76 A.D.2d 872, 872, 428 N.Y.S.2d 494, 494 (2d Dept. 1980) (person on conditional release); People ex rel. Doyle v. Fischer, 159 A.D.2d 208, 208, 551 N.Y.S.2d 830, 830 (1st Dept. 1990) (ROR); Bayless v. Wandel, 119 Misc. 2d 82, 84, 462 N.Y.S.2d 396, 397 (Sup. Ct. Fulton County 1983) (person free on bail).

103. People ex rel. Goldberg v. Warden of Rikers Is. Corr. Facility, 45 A.D.3d 356, 356, 846 N.Y.S.2d 15, 15 (1st Dept. 2007) (declining to issue a writ of habeas corpus because the incarcerated person was not entitled to immediate release).

(h) No Other Options

A New York court will not grant your petition for a writ of habeas corpus if there are other procedures available, unless there are exceptional circumstances of “practicality and necessity.”¹⁰⁴ In other words, you must have a very good reason for filing a petition for habeas corpus instead of appealing your conviction, filing an Article 78 petition, or filing an Article 440 motion.¹⁰⁵ See Section 2(b)(ii) below for more information about what might constitute exceptional circumstances of practicality and necessity. To find out more about how to challenge your conviction or sentence using Article 440, see JLM, Chapter 20, “Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedural Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence.” For a description of how to appeal administrative decisions using Article 78, see JLM, Chapter 22, “How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Laws and Rules.”

2. What You Can Complain About in Your Habeas Petition

(a) Before Trial: Extradition

You may be held in custody in New York for no more than ninety days before you are extradited. After the first thirty days of custody, New York may file an extension for sixty additional days of custody.¹⁰⁶ Therefore, a failure to extradite you may entitle you to a writ of habeas corpus in two situations. First, a court may grant habeas corpus relief if you have been held in custody in New York for over ninety days. Second, a court may issue a writ if you have been held for more than thirty days and the state of New York has not applied for an extension.

(b) Bail

You have grounds for a habeas petition if the court improperly set or denied bail. The court may have acted improperly if it did not follow New York's statutory guidelines, violated constitutional provisions forbidding excessive bail (for example, bail was set too high), or denied bail arbitrarily (for example, the court did not give a reason for why bail was not set).¹⁰⁷ New York Criminal Procedure Law § 510.30(2)(a) lists factors that a court must use to determine the amount, if any, of your bail.¹⁰⁸

104. People ex rel. Keitt v. McMann, 18 N.Y.2d 257, 262, 220 N.E.2d 653, 655, 273 N.Y.S.2d 897, 900 (1966) (ruling that habeas corpus is not the preferred means of protecting fundamental rights and that departure from “traditional orderly proceedings”, such as appeal, should be allowed only when required by reason of “practicality and necessity”).

105. See People ex rel. Wise v. Scully, 163 A.D.2d 444, 444, 570 N.Y.S.2d 1018, 1018 (2d Dept. 1990) (holding that the court cannot review errors already considered on a direct appeal); People ex rel. Sanchez v. Hoke, 132 A.D.2d 861, 862, 518 N.Y.S.2d 69, 70 (3d Dept. 1987) (declining to grant habeas relief where petitioner had direct appeal pending and had raised the same issues in an unsuccessful application under Article 440); People ex rel. Proctor v. Henderson, 74 A.D.2d 718, 719, 425 N.Y.S.2d 680, 680 (4th Dept. 1980) (holding that habeas corpus is not available where the issue had already been decided in an earlier Article 440 motion, but suggesting that the incarcerated person could bring another Article 440 motion seeking the same relief).

106. See People ex rel. Linaris v. Weizenecker, 89 Misc. 2d 814, 816, 392 N.Y.S.2d 813, 815 (Sup. Ct. Putnam County 1977) (granting writ of habeas corpus where petitioner had been held beyond 90-day period without warrant even though other charges were pending against him in New York); see also N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW §§ 570.36, 570.40 (McKinney 2009).

107. See People ex rel. Klein v. Krueger, 25 N.Y.2d 497, 499, 255 N.E.2d 552, 554, 307 N.Y.S.2d 207, 209–210 (1969) (holding that in a habeas corpus proceeding, the court can review a bail decision if the decision appears to be excessive or arbitrary according to constitutional or statutory standards); see, e.g., People ex rel. Gutierrez v. Jacobson, 219 A.D.2d 740, 740, 632 N.Y.S.2d 466, 466 (2d Dept. 1995) (dismissing habeas petition because the lower court's bail determination was reasonable and did not violate constitutional or statutory standards); People ex rel. Hunt v. Warden of Rikers Is. Corr. Facility, 161 A.D.2d 475, 476, 555 N.Y.S.2d 742, 743 (1st Dept. 1990) (dismissing habeas petition because the lower court did not abuse discretion in denial of bail); see also N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7010(b) (McKinney 2013).

108. These factors are character, reputation, habits, and mental condition; employment and financial resources; ties to family and community and length of residence in community; criminal record; juvenile record; previous failure to show up in court; the likelihood of conviction or the merit of any pending appeal; and the

If a court bases its bail determination on a factor not included in the statute, or ignores one or more of the factors, you may challenge the court's action by petitioning for habeas corpus.¹⁰⁹ Normally, when deciding a habeas corpus petition, the court can only review the record that was before the court that set your bail. In other words, the court deciding on your petition can only look at the facts and evidence that were presented at your bail hearing. It cannot consider new evidence that the bail-fixing court did not see.¹¹⁰ If you can show that bail was set too high, the court can grant a writ of habeas corpus reducing the amount, but it will not release you.¹¹¹ If you have already been tried and convicted, the court will dismiss your habeas petition as moot or irrelevant, because bail no longer matters once you have been convicted.¹¹²

(c) Delay

You may petition for a writ of habeas corpus if you were arrested without a warrant, have been detained for longer than twenty-four hours, and have not yet been arraigned (an "arraignment" is when you are called before the court to answer your charge).¹¹³ At your arraignment, you should receive a complaint. If you are charged with a misdemeanor, the District Attorney's office has five days (not counting Sunday) to replace the complaint with an information.¹¹⁴ If you have been arrested for a felony, the District Attorney's office has five days either to file an indictment against you by a grand jury vote or to file an information. These five days do not include weekends or holidays.¹¹⁵ However, even if these requirements are not met, your application for habeas relief may be denied if: (1) the delay is a result of your own actions; (2) the District Attorney already filed a certification that an sentence that may be imposed. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 510.30(2)(a) (McKinney 2009).

109. See People ex rel. Bryce v. Infante, 144 A.D.2d 898, 899, 535 N.Y.S.2d 215, 216 (3d Dept. 1988) (overturning denial of bail set on the basis of defendant's suicidal tendencies); People ex rel. Ryan v. Infante, 108 A.D.2d 987, 988 n.1, 485 N.Y.S.2d 852, 853–854 n.1 (3d Dept. 1985) (finding that a judge cannot increase bail to force a defendant to locate an absent codefendant, unless the defendant has assisted the co-defendant in bail jumping); People ex rel. Bauer v. McGreevy, 147 Misc. 2d 213, 216, 555 N.Y.S.2d 581, 583 (Sup. Ct. Rensselaer County 1990) (holding that bail cannot be denied solely to protect the community from possible future criminal conduct by the defendant); Becher ex rel. Vadakin v. Dunston, 142 Misc. 2d 103, 104, 536 N.Y.S.2d 396, 397 (Sup. Ct. Rensselaer County 1988) (overturning denial of bail issued without conducting a hearing and on the ground that the defendant disobeyed a court order to testify before the grand jury); People ex rel. Glass v. McGreevy, 134 Misc. 2d 1085, 1086, 514 N.Y.S.2d 622, 623 (Sup. Ct. Rensselaer County 1987) (holding that a negative AIDS test cannot be made a condition for bail).

110. See People ex rel. Rosenthal v. Wolfson, 48 N.Y.2d 230, 231–233, 397 N.E.2d 745, 745–746, 422 N.Y.S.2d 55, 55–56 (1979) (holding that, absent "extraordinary circumstances", new evidence relevant to bail determination should be submitted to the bail-fixing court, not to a habeas court).

111. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7010(b) (McKinney 2013) ("If the person detained has been admitted to bail but the amount fixed is so excessive as to constitute an abuse of discretion, and he is not ordered discharged, the court shall direct a final judgment reducing bail to a proper amount."). For example, if you were indicted for selling heroin on two different occasions for amounts totaling $19,000, and you have a wife and son with whom you had been living in the community, the court may find that bail set at $150,000 is excessive. People ex rel. Mordkofsky v. Stancari, 93 A.D.2d 826, 827, 460 N.Y.S.2d 830, 832 (2d Dept. 1983).

112. See Kassebaum v. al-Rahman, 212 A.D.2d 482, 483, 624 N.Y.S.2d 573, 573 (1st Dept. 1995) (denying habeas petition challenging bail amount because petitioner had already been tried and convicted).

113. See People ex rel. Maxian v. Brown, 77 N.Y.2d 422, 426–427, 570 N.E.2d 223, 225, 568 N.Y.S.2d 575, 577 (1991) (granting habeas because an unexplained delay of arraignment for more than 24 hours violates N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW 140.20(1)); see also N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 140.20(1) (McKinney 2004).

114. See N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 170.70 (McKinney 2007); People ex rel. Alvarez v. Warden, Bronx House of Det., 178 Misc. 2d 254, 256, 680 N.Y.S.2d 153, 154–155 (Sup. Ct. Bronx County 1998) (granting a writ of habeas corpus because an information was not filed within five days); see also People ex rel. Neufeld v. McMickens, 70 N.Y.2d 763, 765, 514 N.E.2d 1368, 1368, 520 N.Y.S.2d 744, 744 (1987) (holding that five-day period includes the first day of custody unless the first day preceded arraignment or was a Sunday).

115. See People ex rel. Barna v. Malcolm, 85 A.D.2d 313, 316–317, 448 N.Y.S.2d 176, 178–179 (1st Dept. 1982) (finding that time to file an indictment or information may be extended if it expires upon a Saturday, Sunday, or public holiday, or if there is "good cause").

indictment has been voted; (3) a grand jury filed an indictment or a direction to file an information; or (4) a court finds good cause for the delay.¹¹⁶

You may also petition for a writ of habeas corpus if you are being denied your right to a speedy trial under subdivision (2) of New York's speedy trial statute.¹¹⁷ This statute applies to people who are incarcerated and have an information or indictment filed against them, but who have not yet gone to trial.¹¹⁸ If the court grants your petition, you will have the right to "be released on bail or on [your] own recognizance, upon such conditions as may be just and reasonable."¹¹⁹ If your trial has started, you can no longer bring a habeas corpus petition on this ground. Instead, you should raise the issue on direct appeal.¹²⁰

(d) After Your Conviction

(i) Confinement Beyond Sentence

You may petition for habeas corpus relief if you have already served your sentence and are still being detained. This detainment may be due to clerical error, office delay, or miscalculation of jail or prison time. However, you can only bring the petition only as long as you are entitled to immediate release if you win.¹²¹

Unless one of the administrative mistakes listed above has been committed, you may not file for a writ of habeas corpus to contest your sentence. For example, if you are serving time for several convictions, you may not petition for a writ of habeas corpus to challenge only one of these convictions or sentences, since you will remain imprisoned under the other convictions. This is explained more in Part A(2)(b) of this Chapter. Also, if you were improperly given a consecutive sentence instead of a concurrent sentence, or you were incorrectly sentenced as a "predicate" or "persistent felon" instead of a first-time offender, you cannot petition for a writ of habeas corpus to fix this mistake because it would not result in your immediate release.¹²² Instead, you must raise such issues in a direct appeal or an Article 440 motion.

116. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 180.80 (McKinney 2007 & Supp. 2020).

117. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 30.30 (McKinney 2018 & Supp. 2020).

118. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 30.30 (McKinney 2018 & Supp. 2020). You may only petition for a writ of habeas corpus to challenge a violation of subdivision (2), not subdivision (1), of § 30.30. Under subdivision (2), a defendant charged with a felony cannot be held in custody before going to trial for longer than 90 days. A defendant charged with a misdemeanor, where the punishment for the misdemeanor is longer than three months of incarceration, cannot be held in custody for longer than 30 days before going to trial. A defendant charged with a misdemeanor where the punishment for the misdemeanor is less than three months of incarceration cannot be held for longer than 15 days before going to trial. And a defendant charged with only a violation cannot be held in custody before going to trial for longer than five days. See People ex rel. Chakwin v. Warden, 63 N.Y.2d 120, 126, 470 N.E.2d 146, 149, 480 N.Y.S.2d 719, 722 (1984) (finding that a delay of 91 days, after excluding delay due to defendant's motions, exceeds 90-day time limit, and requires release of defendant). Note that you must file a motion for release in order to have a habeas claim to challenge the violation of your right to a speedy trial. People ex rel. Bullock v. Barry, Index No. 02-403954, 2002 N.Y. Misc. LEXIS 1525, at *4-5 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 2002) (unpublished).

119. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 30.30(2) (McKinney 2018 & Supp. 2020).

120. See Kassebaum v. Al-Rahman, 212 A.D.2d 482, 483, 624 N.Y.S.2d 573, 573 (1st Dept. 1995) (affirming the denial of habeas petition on speedy trial grounds because petition was brought after trial had commenced); see also People ex rel. McDonald v. Warden, 34 N.Y.2d 554, 554, 310 N.E.2d 537, 537, 354 N.Y.S.2d 939, 939 (1974) (finding that once criminal action is brought to trial, habeas petition based on denial of right to speedy trial should be denied).

121. See People ex rel. Henderson v. Casscles, 66 Misc. 2d 492, 495, 320 N.Y.S.2d 99, 104 (Sup. Ct. Westchester County 1971) (noting that although habeas petition would be appropriate where petitioner was entitled to immediate release, petitioner should use Article 78 motion if he seeks only to re-compute jail time).

122. See People ex rel. Sims v. Senkowski, 226 A.D.2d 800, 801, 640 N.Y.S.2d 820, 820-821 (3d Dept. 1996) (ruling that petitioner claiming that he should not have been sentenced as a persistent felon should raise this argument on direct appeal or file an Article 440 motion); People ex rel. McGourty v. Senkowski, 213 A.D.2d 954, 954, 624 N.Y.S.2d 308, 308 (3d Dept. 1995) (dismissing habeas petition where petitioner claimed that he was improperly sentenced as a persistent felon because, if successful, petitioner would be entitled only to resentencing, not immediate release); People ex rel. Hampton v. Scully, 166 A.D.2d 734, 734-735, 561 N.Y.S.2d 482, 483 (2d

(ii) Fundamental Rights

Some cases suggest that New York courts will not require you to use other available procedures if you are claiming a violation of a fundamental right.¹²³ However, courts have been reluctant to hold that a violation of a fundamental right alone can serve as a basis for a writ of habeas corpus. Generally, courts will only bypass traditional proceedings, such as appeal, where “practicality and necessity” require it.¹²⁴ Some cases go so far as to state that habeas corpus may not be used to attack a judgment on constitutional grounds when habeas corpus is not the primary cause of the case.¹²⁵

(e) New or Void Law

You may also petition the court on the ground that the statute under which you were prosecuted is unconstitutional.¹²⁶ It is very rare for courts to declare a statute unconstitutional. If a court does declare that you were prosecuted under a statute that was unconstitutional, you are entitled to immediate release on a habeas petition. A New York court may also grant writs of habeas corpus when the law has changed, and the law used to convict you has been declared void. Finally, a court may grant a writ of habeas corpus if your claim involves the “violation of a fundamental constitutional right, which was not clearly recognized nor fully articulated” by the Court of Appeals until after you had completed all appeals of your conviction.¹²⁷

Dept. 1990) (denying habeas petitions because the re-calculation of the sentence would not result in immediate release, and holding that an Article 78 proceeding would be more appropriate to force a re-calculation of the sentence). But see People ex rel. Colan v. La Vallee, 14 N.Y.2d 83, 86–87, 198 N.E.2d 240, 241, 248 N.Y.S.2d 853, 855 (1964) (granting habeas corpus where defendant was not informed, before his guilty plea, that his previous conviction would increase his punishment).

123. See Roberts v. County Court of Wyoming County, 39 A.D.2d 246, 253, 333 N.Y.S.2d 882, 890 (4th Dept. 1972) (“[W]hile some form of alternative relief, such as coram nobis [an order changing a judgement based on the discovery of a fundamental error], might also have been available to the relator in the present case, this should not foreclose the relator from proceeding by way of habeas corpus.”); People ex rel. Rohrlach v. Follette, 20 N.Y.2d 297, 299–300, 229 N.E.2d 419, 420, 282 N.Y.S.2d 729, 730–731 (1967) (finding that habeas corpus is appropriate to test whether there has been a deprivation of a fundamental constitutional or statutory right in a criminal prosecution, in this case, right to a trial by jury). Note that these are old cases and courts have become increasingly reluctant to review habeas corpus petitions if other procedures are available. For a list of constitutional and statutory rights in criminal cases, see JLM, Chapter 9, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence.” For more information on other forms of alternative relief, such as Article 440 motions and coram nobis, see JLM, Chapter 20, “Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence.”

124. People ex rel. Keitt v. McMann, 18 N.Y.2d 257, 262, 220 N.E.2d 653, 655, 273 N.Y.S.2d 897, 900 (1966) (ruling that habeas corpus is not the preferred means of providing relief for fundamental constitutional or statutory rights and that departing from traditional orderly proceedings, such as appeal, should be permitted only when dictated by reason of “practicality and necessity.”); People ex rel. Hall v. LeFevre, 92 A.D.2d 956, 957, 460 N.Y.S.2d 640, 641 (3d Dept. 1983) (holding that the “facts of this case do not demonstrate a violation of petitioner’s fundamental constitutional rights so egregious as to compel a departure from traditional orderly procedure.”); People ex rel. Russell v. LeFevre, 59 A.D.2d 588, 588, 397 N.Y.S.2d 27, 28 (3d Dept. 1977) (holding that habeas is not a proper remedy for attacking the judgment of conviction and noting the petitioner should have filed an Article 440 motion).

125. See People ex rel. Sales v. LeFevre, 93 A.D.2d 945, 946, 463 N.Y.S.2d 58, 59 (3d Dept. 1983) (holding that habeas corpus may not be utilized to collaterally attack the judgment on constitutional grounds—in this case, the right of confrontation—and that the facts of the case do not compel departure from traditional orderly procedure); People ex rel. Russell v. LeFevre, 59 A.D.2d 588, 588, 397 N.Y.S.2d 27, 28 (3d Dept. 1977) (dismissing a habeas corpus petition alleging violation of a constitutional right because habeas is not the proper remedy for attacking the judgment of conviction and noting the petitioner should have filed an Article 440 motion).

126. See People ex rel. Haines v. Hunt, 242 N.Y.S. 105, 107–108, 229 A.D. 419, 420–422 (3d Dept. 1930) (holding that habeas corpus is the proper remedy for a relator convicted under an unconstitutional statute).

127. See People ex rel. Rodriguez v. Harris, 84 A.D.2d 769, 770, 443 N.Y.S.2d 784, 785 (2d Dept. 1981). In Rodriguez, the petitioner filed for a writ of habeas corpus alleging a violation of his right to counsel based on a Court of Appeals decision, People v. Rogers, 48 N.Y.2d 167, 422 N.Y.S.2d 18, 397 N.E.2d 709 (1979) (prohibiting police interrogation of defendant, in absence of counsel, on matters related or unrelated to pending charges for which defendant is already represented by counsel). The Rodriguez court upheld the lower court’s dismissal of the

(f) Ineffective Counsel

In New York, you cannot use habeas corpus proceedings to claim ineffective assistance of counsel.¹²⁸ This is because the remedy would be a new trial and not release from custody (and habeas petitions are only for getting released from custody). Filing an Article 440.10 motion would be the appropriate cause of action.¹²⁹

(g) New Evidence

In New York, if you wish to raise the issue of new evidence, you must file an Article 440 motion.¹³⁰ See JLM, Chapter 20, “Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence” for more information on how to do this.

(h) Unreasonable Delay

A court may grant a writ of habeas corpus if there has been an “unreasonable delay” in the disposition (settlement) of an Article 440 motion¹³¹ or if your appeal has been pending for an unusually long time.¹³²

In addition, you may petition for habeas corpus if waiting for the appeal of your conviction will cause you to face a longer prison term.¹³³ In one case, an incarcerated person petitioned for habeas corpus on the grounds that he was wrongfully imprisoned in New York. The individual’s commitment order indicated that he should be imprisoned in Alabama, where he had earlier escaped from prison. The court granted the writ of habeas corpus even though an appeal that raised the issue of wrongful imprisonment was pending, because the appeal was not due to be heard by the court until later in the writ, ruling that the Rogers decision could not be given retroactive application to petitioner’s criminal case. People ex rel. Rodriguez v. Harris, 84 A.D.2d 769, 770, 443 N.Y.S.2d 784, 785 (2d Dept. 1981). Note that the court denied the petition in Rodriguez on narrow grounds. The Court of Appeals had previously held in People v. Pepper, 53 N.Y.2d 213, 221, 423 N.E.2d 366, 369, 440 N.Y.S.2d 889, 892 (1981), that in cases involving a defendant’s right to counsel in pretrial encounters, retroactive application of a change in decisional law is limited to those cases still on direct review at the time the change in law occurred. See also People ex rel. Gallo v. Warden, 32 A.D.2d 1051, 1052, 303 N.Y.S.2d 752, 753 (2d Dept. 1969) (holding that a habeas corpus proceeding was proper for reviewing propriety of imposition of a consecutive sentence where the petition was based upon decisions rendered after petitioner’s appeal).

128. For more information about ineffective assistance of counsel claims, see f, Chapter 12, “Appealing Your Conviction Based on Ineffective Assistance of Counsel.”; see also Application of Jones, 34 Misc. 2d 564, 565, 227 N.Y.S.2d 1002, 1004 (Sup. Ct. Special Term New York County 1962) (denying a habeas petition because habeas is “not the proper remedy for testing the requirements of due process or whether relator was properly represented by assigned counsel”).

129. See People ex rel. Hall v. LeFevre, 460 N.Y.S.2d 640, 641, 92 A.D.2d 956, 957 (3d Dept. 1983) (holding that issues of inadequacy of counsel must proceed using a 440 motion). For more information on filing Article 440.10 motions, see JLM, Chapter 20, “Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence.”

130. See People v. Taylor, 246 A.D.2d 410, 411, 668 N.Y.S.2d 583, 584 (1st Dept. 1998) (holding that the power to set aside a verdict on the grounds of new evidence is derived from N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 440.10(1)(g) and listing the six criteria that new evidence must meet).

131. See People ex rel. Anderson v. Warden, New York City Corr. Inst. for Men, 68 Misc. 2d 463, 468, 325 N.Y.S.2d 829, 835 (Sup. Ct. Bronx County 1971) (“[I]f there is an unreasonable delay in the disposition of an article 440 motion, the defendant can, perhaps, properly bring a writ of habeas corpus.”).

132. See People ex rel. Lee v. Smith, 58 A.D.2d 987, 987, 397 N.Y.S.2d 266, 267 (4th Dept. 1977) (granting a hearing on the merits of petitioner’s habeas corpus petition, even though an appeal was pending, because the petitioner’s appeal had been pending for more than four years).

133. See State ex rel. Harbin v. Wilmut, 104 Misc. 2d 272, 274–275, 428 N.Y.S.2d 152, 154–155 (Sup. Ct. Chemung County 1980) (finding a writ of habeas corpus “available when an incarcerated person is confined in the wrong State penal institution” and the incarcerated person’s current place of incarceration will result in a longer term of imprisonment).

year, and none of the time that the incarcerated person served in New York would count against his Alabama sentence.¹³⁴

(i) Violations of the Conditions of Your Sentence (New York Only)

You may also petition for a writ of habeas corpus if the conditions of your imprisonment are worse than the conditions authorized by your judgment of conviction or by the New York and U.S. Constitutions.¹³⁵ For example, you may petition for habeas corpus on the grounds that:

- (1) You are being denied the rehabilitation, care, or treatment required by your sentence;¹³⁶
- (2) You were arbitrarily and illegally transferred to an institution for the criminally insane;¹³⁷
- (3) You have been found not guilty because of mental illness¹³⁸ and are being held at an institution for the criminally insane, but you have not received a hearing or proceeding to evaluate your mental health as required by New York Criminal Procedure Law Section 330.20;¹³⁹
- (4) You have been found not guilty because of mental illness and are being held at an institution for the criminally insane, but are no longer suffering from mental illness and are thus entitled to release, or are no longer dangerous and are thus entitled to transfer to a non-secure facility as required by New York Criminal Procedure Law Section 330.20;¹⁴⁰
- (5) You are held in a different prison than the one on the sentencing court's commitment order;¹⁴¹ or

134. See State ex rel. Harbin v. Wilmot, 104 Misc. 2d 272, 274–275, 428 N.Y.S.2d 152, 154–155 (Sup. Ct. Chemung County 1980).

135. See People ex rel. Brown v. Johnston, 9 N.Y.2d 482, 485, 174 N.E.2d 725, 726, 215 N.Y.S.2d 44, 45 (3d Dept. 1961) (“[I]t seems quite obvious that any further restraint in excess of that permitted by the judgment or constitutional guarantees should be subject to inquiry.”).

136. See People ex rel. Smith v. La Vallee, 29 A.D.2d 248, 250, 287 N.Y.S.2d 601, 604 (4th Dept. 1968) (petitioner with an indeterminate sentence is entitled to psychiatric treatment and examination).

137. See People ex rel. Brown v. Johnston, 9 N.Y.2d 482, 485, 174 N.E.2d 725, 726, 215 N.Y.S.2d 44, 45 (3d Dept. 1961) (holding that lower court wrongly refused to consider petition for habeas corpus that challenged the transfer of a person convicted of rape from a prison to a mental hospital).

138. This is also known as “not guilty by reason of insanity.”

139. See People ex rel. Thorpe v. Von Holden, 63 N.Y.2d 546, 555, 473 N.E.2d 14, 18, 483 N.Y.S.2d 662, 666 (4th Dept. 1984) (finding that a habeas petition is proper to test whether petitioner may remain in custody when the Department of Mental Health Commissioner has failed to comply with time, notice, and hearing requirements for a statutory retention order). If your petition is granted for this reason, the court will order your release or your transfer to a non-secure facility, unless there is evidence of a dangerous mental disorder. If the court has ordered your release, the State Commissioner of Mental Health or Mental Retardation and Developmental Disabilities may, however, apply to the court to have you remain at the institution. This application may be granted if it is immediately filed and processed. See State ex rel. Henry L. v. Hawes, 174 Misc. 2d 929, 933–934, 667 N.Y.S.2d 212, 216 (Co. Ct. Franklin County 1997) (granting petitioner's habeas writ and ordering petitioner immediately transferred to a non-secure facility because the order of confinement had expired and no application for the order's extension had been made, in violation of N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 330.20).

140. See McGraw v. Wack, 220 A.D.2d 291, 292, 632 N.Y.S.2d 135, 136 (1st Dept. 1995) (finding that writ of habeas corpus is the proper proceeding for petitioner to seek transfer to a non-secure facility or release); People ex rel. Schreiner v. Tekben, 160 Misc. 2d 724, 727, 611 N.Y.S.2d 734, 736 (Sup. Ct. Orange County 1994) (holding that the habeas corpus proceeding was an appropriate mechanism for transfer from a secure psychiatric facility to a non-secure facility), aff'd sub nom. People ex rel. Richard S. v. Tekben, 219 A.D.2d 609, 610, 631 N.Y.S.2d 524, 524 (2d Dept. 1995) (holding that habeas petition is the proper mechanism to seek transfer from a secure to a non-secure facility).

141. See People ex rel. Harbin v. Wilmot, 104 Misc. 2d 272, 274, 428 N.Y.S.2d 152, 154 (Sup. Ct. Chemung County 1980) (holding that an incarcerated person was illegally imprisoned within New York State when he was held in a prison in New York rather than the Alabama prison that was specified on his commitment order by the sentencing court).

- (6) You were transferred to solitary confinement as a result of unconstitutional discrimination.¹⁴²

However, wardens and the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision (“DOCCS”) have wide discretion in determining the conditions of your incarceration, and courts will find that few forms of punishment inside the prison will violate your constitutional rights or the conditions of your sentence.¹⁴³

(j) Probation or Parole

(i) Preliminary Revocation Hearings

If DOCCS tries to revoke your parole, you are entitled to a hearing. You may petition for habeas corpus if your preliminary parole revocation hearing was not conducted in accordance with the law. You are entitled to the following:

- (1) Written notice of the charges against you (including the conditions of presumptive release, parole, conditional release or post-release supervision that you allegedly violated), as well as the time and place of your hearing.¹⁴⁴ You are entitled to this notice within three days of the execution of the warrant for your retaking and temporary detention, or within five days of the execution of the warrant if you are detained in another state and were not in that state through an out-of-state parolee supervision agreement;¹⁴⁵
- (2) A hearing conducted within fifteen days of the warrant being executed;¹⁴⁶

142. See People ex rel. Rockey v. Krueger, 62 Misc. 2d 135, 136, 306 N.Y.S.2d 359, 360 (Sup. Ct. Nassau County 1969) (finding placement of a Muslim incarcerated person in solitary confinement because he would not shave his beard for religious reasons was unconstitutional discrimination, and ordering release of person from solitary confinement); see also JLM, Chapter 16, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law,” JLM, Chapter 18, “Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Proceedings,” and JLM, Chapter 27, “Religious Freedom in Prison.”

143. See, e.g., People ex rel. France v. Coughlin, 99 A.D.2d 599, 599, 471 N.Y.S.2d 695, 696 (3d Dept. 1984) (denying habeas petition because administrative segregation of the incarcerated person was well within the terms of confinement ordinarily contemplated by a prison sentence, and petitioner failed to show that confinement violated his constitutional rights); People ex rel. Jacobson v. Warden of Brooklyn House of Det., 77 A.D.2d 937, 937, 431 N.Y.S.2d 114, 115 (2d Dept. 1980) (upholding warden’s denial of contact visits with person who allegedly helped in an earlier escape on grounds that such restriction is outside the scope of habeas corpus relief).

144. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(c)(iii) (McKinney 2018).

145. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(c)(iii) (McKinney 2018). However, even if you are not given notice of your parole violation within three days of your hearing, that is not necessarily a reason to grant a petition for habeas corpus. You must also show that the lack of notice somehow hurt your ability to prepare for the hearing. See People ex rel. Wise v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 50 A.D.3d 303, 303, 853 N.Y.S.2d 886, 886 (1st Dept. 2008) (denying writ of habeas corpus, even after assuming that the petitioner did not receive proper notice of the preliminary revocation hearing, when petitioner appeared for the hearing and did not object, request an adjournment to prepare, or argue that he lacked notice regarding the basis of the parole violation or was otherwise prejudiced); People ex rel. Washington v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 279 A.D.2d 379, 379–380, 720 N.Y.S.2d 22, 23 (1st Dept. 2001) (affirming dismissal of a habeas petition where there was no showing of prejudice caused by lateness of notice of hearing); People ex rel. Williams v. Walsh, 241 A.D.2d 979, 980, 661 N.Y.S.2d 371, 371 (4th Dept. 1997) (finding defendant was not entitled to restoration of parole or dismissal of parole violation warrant based on a one-day delay in serving statutory notice and failure to comply with three-day notice rule where the preliminary hearing was held in a timely manner, defendant did not request adjournment to prepare for the hearing or contend that he lacked adequate notice of a basis for parole violation, and did not contend that he was prejudiced by the one-day delay); see also People ex rel. Walker v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 98 A.D.2d 33, 33–35, 469 N.Y.S.2d 780, 782 (2d Dept. 1983) (holding that it is inappropriate for a court to decide factual issues concerning the presence or absence of timely notice until the final revocation hearing is conducted and where the final hearing has been scheduled within the statutory 90 day period).

146. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(c)(i) (McKinney 2018); see also, e.g., People ex rel. Richman v. Warden, Bronx House of Det., 122 Misc. 2d 957, 958, 472 N.Y.S.2d 291, 292 (Sup. Ct. Bronx County 1984) (vacating warrant and reinstating parole when parolee was not granted a preliminary parole revocation hearing within 15 days of service of notice of

- (3) Evidence introduced at your preliminary parole revocation hearing sufficient to provide probable cause¹⁴⁷ to believe that you had violated a condition of your parole;¹⁴⁸ and
- (4) To appear and speak on your own behalf, present witnesses, and cross-examine witnesses (question the witnesses against you).¹⁴⁹

Any denial of the above requirements may be grounds for a habeas petition in New York. Note that you are not entitled to a preliminary parole revocation hearing if you were convicted of a new crime.¹⁵⁰

(ii) Final Parole Revocation Hearings

You may petition for habeas corpus if your final parole revocation hearing was not conducted in accordance with the law. You are entitled to the following:

- (1) A hearing that is conducted within ninety days of the probable cause hearing;¹⁵¹

his parole violation). If the court finds that the delay is not the state's fault, it may dismiss the habeas corpus petition. See, e.g., People ex rel. Goldberg v. Warden, Rikers Island Corr. Facility, 45 A.D.3d 356, 356, 846 N.Y.S.2d 15, 16 (1st Dept. 2007) (denying petition for habeas where the preliminary parole revocation hearing was timely scheduled but “adjourned for the legitimate reason that petitioner was confined for medical reasons”); People ex rel. Hampton v. Warden, Rikers Is. Corr. Facility, 211 A.D.2d 566, 567, 621 N.Y.S.2d 580, 581 (1st Dept. 1995) (dismissing habeas petition where timely hearing was postponed a few days due to closure of courthouse during snowstorm and then rescheduled to allow probationer to attend). In addition, the law does not require that the hearing be completed within 15 days. See, e.g., Matter of Emmick v. Enders, 107 A.D.2d 1066, 1067, 486 N.Y.S.2d 559, 560 (4th Dept. 1985) (holding that the law requires only that the hearing be “scheduled to take place” within the statutory 15 day period, and that “[w]hen a preliminary parole revocation hearing has been timely scheduled, or held in whole or in part, and thereafter is adjourned for legitimate reasons, without prejudice to the petitioner, there is no violation of the 15-day limit”). Finally, a court may find that you have waived (given up) your right to a timely hearing. See People ex rel. Miller v. Walters, 60 N.Y.2d 899, 901, 458 N.E.2d 1251, 1251, 470 N.Y.S.2d 574, 575 (1983) (denying petition for writ of habeas corpus because petitioner waived preliminary hearing and thereby waived right to challenge board's failure to afford him a timely preliminary hearing). However, that waiver must be clearly made or it will be invalid. See People ex rel. Melendez v. Warden of Rikers Island Corr. Facility, 214 A.D.2d 301, 302-303, 624 N.Y.S.2d 580, 582 (1st Dept. 1995) (ruling that the state failed to prove that the petitioner had waived his right to a timely hearing, and ordering that petitioner be reinstated to parole).

147. “Probable cause” in this case means reasonable cause, or reasonable grounds for believing, based on existing facts, that you have violated your parole. Probable Cause, Black's Law Dictionary (11th ed. 2019).

148. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(c)(vi) (McKinney 2018); see also People ex rel. Davis v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 149 Misc. 2d 741, 744-745, 566 N.Y.S.2d 469, 471-472 (Sup. Ct. Westchester County 1991) (ruling that there was not probable cause to believe that the parolee violated a condition of his parole in an important respect where the parolee failed to notify parole officer of arrest for 95 hours despite the requirement that officer be notified immediately, when parolee had only a 50-minute window of opportunity to do so); People ex rel. Glenn v. Bantum, 132 Misc. 2d 676, 678, 505 N.Y.S.2d 359, 361 (Sup. Ct. Bronx County 1986) (holding that there was no legal evidence presented at the preliminary hearing to support probable cause that the parolee was in possession of drugs where the sole evidence was hearsay testimony of parole officer's conversations with arresting officer, and parole officer was unable to testify that the substances in question were recovered from the parolee).

149. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(c)(iii) (McKinney 2018); see also People ex rel. Deyver by Weinstein v. Travis, 172 Misc. 2d 83, 85–86, 657 N.Y.S.2d 306, 307 (Sup. Ct. Erie County 1997) (granting petitioner's habeas petition and finding that, to preserve petitioner's statutory right to effective cross-examination, petitioner was entitled to production of parole officer's notes, upon which parole officer had relied on in testifying at hearing).

150. See N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(c)(i) (McKinney 2018); People ex rel. Felder v. Warden of Queens House of Det. for Men, 173 Misc. 2d 1029, 1030, 662 N.Y.S.2d 729, 731 (Sup. Ct. Queens County 1997) (ruling that parolee was not entitled to preliminary parole hearing on his violation because he had been convicted of a new crime while released on parole).

151. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(f)(i) (McKinney 2018); see People ex rel. Brown v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 70 N.Y.2d 391, 402, 516 N.E.2d 194, 200, 521 N.Y.S.2d 657, 663 (1987) (vacating parole violation warrant and dismissing parole violation proceeding where revocation hearing was not held within 90 days). However, the court may find that the hearing was timely if the delay was due to the parolee. See, e.g., People ex rel. Williams v. Allard, 19 A.D.3d 890, 891, 798 N.Y.S.2d 153, 154-55 (3d Dept. 2005) (finding final parole revocation hearing was timely because 119 days of the delay were “attributable to petitioner's numerous requests for adjournments”). If you were incarcerated out of state, the court may also find that your hearing was timely even if it was held after 90 days from the probable cause determination. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(a)(iii) (McKinney 2018) (“Where the alleged violator is detained in another state ... the warrant will not be deemed to be executed until the alleged

- (2) Representation by a lawyer at the hearing;¹⁵²
- (3) Written notice of the date, place, and time of the hearing given to you and your attorney at least fourteen days prior to the scheduled hearing date;¹⁵³
- (4) An opportunity to cross-examine witnesses against you, unless there was good cause for witnesses not to attend the hearing (as determined by the hearing officer);¹⁵⁴ and
- (5) Proof of your parole violation by a preponderance of the evidence.¹⁵⁵ violator is detained exclusively on the basis of such. . . [parole] warrant. . ."); see also People ex rel. Johnson v. Warden, Manhattan House of Det., 178 A.D.2d 331, 331 579 N.Y.S.2d 1, 1 (1st Dept. 1991) (ruling defendant's final revocation hearing was not untimely, particularly as he was never detained "exclusively" on basis of parole revocation warrant).

152. N.Y. EXEC. LAW, § 259-i(3)(f)(v) (McKinney 2018); see also People ex rel. Brown v. Smith, 115 A.D.2d 255, 255, 496 N.Y.S.2d 123, 123–124 (4th Dept. 1985) (holding that a parolee has the right to counsel in a final parole revocation hearing). You can waive (give up) this right if you decide that you do not want or need counsel. See People ex rel. Martinez v. Walters, 99 A.D.2d 476, 476–477, 470 N.Y.S.2d 56 (2d Dept. 1984) (finding that incarcerated person had waived his right to counsel at his revocation hearing because the decision was knowing, intelligent, and voluntary; finding that the right to counsel may be waived in the absence of counsel). However, a waiver must be knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily made in order to be valid. See, e.g., People ex rel. Perez v. Warden, 139 A.D.2d 477, 478, 527 N.Y.S.2d 233, 234 (1st Dept. 1988) (holding parolee's waiver of counsel ineffective as the hearing officer failed to conduct sufficient inquiry to reasonably ensure that parolee appreciated the dangers and disadvantages of waiving his right to counsel).

153. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(f)(iii) (McKinney 2018); see also People ex rel. Rivera v. N.Y. State Div. of Parole, 83 A.D.2d 918, 919, 442 N.Y.S.2d 511, 512 (3d Dept. 1981) (granting petitioner new final parole revocation hearing because notice of time and date of hearing was mailed five days before the hearing in violation of state law, which requires 14 days' notice). Note that an adjournment [postponement] of the final parole revocation hearing does not require a new 14-day notice to parolee. See People ex rel. Crooks v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 194 A.D.2d 376, 376, 598 N.Y.S.2d 263, 264 (1st Dept. 1993).

154. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(f)(v) (McKinney 2018); see also People ex rel. Rosenfeld v. Sposato, 87 A.D.3d 665, 666–667, 928 N.Y.S.2d 350, 352 (2d Dept. 2011) (finding that "the petitioner's due process rights were violated when he was afforded no opportunity to cross-examine the parole officer who prepared the report and who possessed personal knowledge of the alleged violations" when the State's only reason for the officer's absence "was that he was on vacation"); People ex rel. McGee v. Walters, 62 N.Y.2d 317, 322, 465 N.E.2d 342, 344, 476 N.Y.S.2d 803, 805 (1984) (ruling that a parolee's right to confront adverse witnesses at parole revocation hearings should not be "underestimated or ignored," and finding that there was no good cause given for declarant's absence but that "a hearing examiner may, nevertheless, upon a specific finding of good cause, permit the introduction of adverse hearsay statements without affording the parolee an opportunity to confront the declarant"); People ex rel. Martin v. Warden, Ossining Corr. Facility, 133 A.D.2d 134, 135, 518 N.Y.S.2d 669, 670 (2d Dept. 1987) (ruling that good cause existed for dispensing with production of New Jersey parole officer at parole hearing, where the state of New Jersey had an established and firm policy of refusing to allow its supervising parole officers to travel to other states for parole revocation hearings, and petitioner refused to submit interrogatories to New Jersey officer).

155. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(f)(viii) (McKinney 2018). You will waive this ground if you do not raise it in your habeas petition. In other words, if you do not state in your habeas petition that your parole violation was unproven, you cannot argue this point at a later time. People ex rel. McWhinney v. Smith, 219 A.D.2d 879, 879, 632 N.Y.S.2d 40, 40 (4th Dept. 1995). Also, even if you do not think that there is enough evidence for your parole to be revoked, you must wait until after the final revocation hearing before you file your habeas petition. See People ex rel. Wallace v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 111 A.D.2d 940, 941, 491 N.Y.S.2d 50, 50 (2d Dept. 1985) (dismissing a habeas petition because it was filed before the final revocation hearing).

Any denial of the above requirements may be grounds for a habeas petition. You may also petition if: (1) you were denied your fundamental constitutional right to be present at the hearing;¹⁵⁶ or (2) you requested a local parole revocation hearing, and your request was denied.¹⁵⁷

Note that you are not entitled to a final parole revocation hearing if your parole was revoked because of a new felony conviction.¹⁵⁸ You may not petition for a writ of habeas corpus for the above reasons if you would remain imprisoned for other convictions.¹⁵⁹

(k) Subject Matter Jurisdiction

In New York, supreme and county courts have jurisdiction to try felonies.¹⁶⁰ District, city, town, and village courts have jurisdiction over misdemeanors.¹⁶¹ If you are convicted by a court that does not have authority to try your offense, you may petition for habeas corpus.¹⁶² A court may also lack subject matter jurisdiction if the allegations made in your indictment are insufficient in some way.¹⁶³

156. See Wyche v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 66 A.D.3d 541, 542, 887 N.Y.S.2d 71, 72 (1st Dept. 2009) (affirming that a “parolee’s right to be present and be heard at a parole revocation hearing is a fundamental due process right” and reinstating parole for petitioner on grounds that he did not waive his right to be present at the hearing); In re Schwartz v. Warden, N.Y. State Corr. Facility at Ossining, 82 A.D.2d 870, 871, 440 N.Y.S.2d 270, 271-72 (2d Dept. 1981) (finding that parolee, who invoked his right to counsel and who refused to attend revocation hearing due to inability of his attorney to attend the hearing, did not waive his right to appear; and that it was therefore an error for hearing officer to conduct the hearing without parolee). Note, however, that a court may find that you have waived this right. If you are called to a hearing, you must appear even if you have applied for an adjournment. Otherwise, you have waived your appearance. See, e.g., People ex rel. Rodriguez v. Warden, 163 A.D.2d 206, 206-207, 558 N.Y.S.2d 59, 59 (1st Dept. 1990).

157. N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(e)(i) (McKinney 2018) (“If the alleged violator requests a local revocation hearing, he or she shall be given a revocation hearing reasonably near the place of the alleged violation or arrest if he has not been convicted of a crime committed while under supervision.”); see People ex rel. Campolito v. Portuondo, 248 A.D.2d 768, 769, 669 N.Y.S.2d 726, 727 (3d Dept. 1998) (finding that where an incarcerated person had not requested a local parole revocation hearing, he was not entitled to one); People ex rel. Starks v. Superintendent, Clinton Corr. Facility, 138 A.D.2d 818, 819, 525 N.Y.S.2d 739, 740 (3d Dept. 1988) (ordering new parole revocation hearing for petitioner whose request for a local revocation hearing was denied, on the grounds that Rikers Island is not “reasonably near” Syracuse).

158. See N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 259-i(3)(d)(iii) (McKinney 2018); see also O’Quinn v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 132 Misc. 2d 92, 94–95, 503 N.Y.S.2d 483, 484–485 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 1986) (noting statute which removes right to final revocation hearing where parolee has been convicted of felony while on parole does not violate due process).

159. See People ex rel. Linares v. Dalsheim, 107 A.D.2d 728, 728, 484 N.Y.S.2d 89, 90 (2d Dept. 1985) (noting that habeas corpus was not available since petitioner was incarcerated due to a subsequent felony conviction and would not have been entitled to immediate release). You may, however, bring an Article 78 proceeding to challenge Parole Board decisions even if you will remain incarcerated for other convictions. See People ex rel. Mack v. Reid, 113 A.D.2d 962, 963, 494 N.Y.S.2d 25, 26–27 (2d Dept. 1985) (stating that petitioner who had raised the issue of untimeliness before Parole Board should bring Article 78 proceeding after Board decides against him). Be aware that a four-month statute of limitations applies to Article 78 petitions. See, e.g., Soto v. N.Y. State Bd. of Parole, 107 A.D.2d 693, 694–696, 484 N.Y.S.2d 49, 50–52 (2d Dept. 1985) (dismissing Article 78 petition filed three years after the parole revocation hearing because it violated four-month statute of limitations for Article 78 proceedings). See Chapter 22 of the JLM “How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules” for a discussion of Article 78 proceedings.

160. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 10.20(1)(a) (McKinney 2018 & Supp. 2020) (superior courts have exclusive jurisdiction over felonies); N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 10.10(2) (McKinney 2018 & Supp. 2020) (supreme court and county courts are the superior courts). Felonies are offenses that are punishable by a prison term of more than one year. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 10.00(5) (McKinney 2009).

161. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 10.30(1) (McKinney 2018 & Supp. 2020). Misdemeanors are offenses punishable by fine and/or a jail sentence of more than 15 days, but less than a year. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 10.00(4) (McKinney 2009).

162. See People ex rel. Clifford v. Krueger, 59 Misc. 2d 87, 93, 297 N.Y.S.2d 990, 996–997 (Sup. Ct. Nassau County 1969) (granting petitioner’s writ of habeas corpus, finding the conviction illegal because the crime of which he was convicted was an offense over which Family Court had exclusive original jurisdiction, and transferring the matter to Family Court).

163. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 20.20 (McKinney 2018).

This issue should normally be raised on appeal or in an Article 440 motion. However, if you give a compelling reason why the court should depart from regular procedure, you may petition for habeas corpus if:

- (1) An indictment or information was not filed against you;¹⁶⁴
- (2) Your indictment failed to state facts that made up every necessary element, or part, of your crime, and the court was entirely stripped of jurisdiction as a result;¹⁶⁵ or
- (3) The court convicted you of a crime not included in the indictment (this does not include lesser included offenses of the offenses¹⁶⁶ charged in your indictment). If you failed to object to the submission of the offense at your trial, however, you may have waived this claim.¹⁶⁷

In the above circumstances, a court will review your habeas corpus petition only if the issue is very important and would invalidate your conviction.¹⁶⁸ In one case, for example, an incarcerated person petitioned for habeas corpus on the ground that attempted escape could not serve as the basis for a felony murder conviction because attempted escape was only classified as a misdemeanor, not a felony.¹⁶⁹ Though the person had not raised this issue in a second appeal from his conviction (he did raise it in his first appeal), the court heard his argument for granting a writ of habeas corpus due to the importance of the issue and its impact upon the validity of the conviction and sentence for murder. The court believed that the issue needed to be resolved and noted that it would have to reverse the incarcerated person's murder conviction if the court resolved the issue in his favor.¹⁷⁰

164. See People ex rel. Battista v. Christian, 249 N.Y. 314, 321, 164 N.E. 111, 113 (1928) (granting habeas corpus petition because there was no presentment or indictment of a grand jury). Note that an indictment no longer has to be filed for every crime; the prosecutor may file an information instead. In November 1973, the New York Constitution was amended to provide an exception to the indictment requirement where the accused is charged with an offense that is not punishable by death or life imprisonment. N.Y. Const. art. I, § 6. This amendment is explained in People v. Trueluck, 88 N.Y.2d 546, 548–549, 670 N.E.2d 977, 978, 647 N.Y.S.2d 476, 477 (1996) (noting that “a defendant may waive an indictment and consent to be prosecuted ... by a superior court information where (1) the local criminal court has held the defendant for the action of a Grand Jury, (2) the defendant is not charged with a class A felony, and (3) the District Attorney consents to the waiver of indictment.” (citing N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 195.10(1) (McKinney 2018 & Supp. 2020))).

165. For example, if your indictment for 1st degree murder fails to describe acts that showed that you intended to kill another person, the court does not have jurisdiction to convict you of 1st degree murder, because intent to kill is a necessary element of 1st degree murder. However, the court does have jurisdiction to convict you of 2nd degree murder, since intent is not a necessary element of 2nd degree murder. Therefore, in this case, you could challenge your conviction for 1st degree murder, but not 2nd degree murder, in a petition for habeas corpus. See People ex rel. Williams v. La Vallee, 30 A.D.2d 1034, 1034, 294 N.Y.S.2d 824, 826 (4th Dept. 1968). But see People ex rel. Wysokowski v. Conboy, 19 A.D.2d 663, 664, 241 N.Y.S.2d 245, 246 (3d Dept. 1963) (denying habeas corpus petition because a simplified form of indictment that omitted certain facts did not deprive the court of jurisdiction).

166. See JLM, Chapter 9, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence,” for an explanation of lesser included offenses.

167. For example, if your indictment charged you with murder, but the judge announced that he or she also would consider whether you were guilty of robbery (which is not a lesser included offense within the crime of murder), and you were subsequently convicted of robbery, you may challenge your conviction only if you objected at your trial to the judge's intention to consider robbery. See People ex rel. Tanner v. Vincent, 44 A.D.2d 170, 173–174, 354 N.Y.S.2d 145, 148 (2d Dept. 1974) (denying habeas corpus petition where the petitioner failed to raise an objection on appeal to a robbery conviction when the petitioner had been indicted for common law murder, felony murder, and possession of a weapon, but was instead convicted of robbery, which is not a lesser included offense within the crime of felony murder).

168. See People ex rel. Keitt v. McMann, 18 N.Y.2d 257, 262–263, 220 N.E.2d 653, 655, 273 N.Y.S.2d 897, 899–900 (1966) (“traditional orderly proceedings” other than habeas corpus should be followed unless habeas corpus is required by “reason of practicality and necessity.”); People ex rel. Culhane v. Sullivan, 139 A.D.2d 315, 321–322, 531 N.Y.S.2d 287, 291 (2d Dept. 1988) (refusing to grant a writ of habeas corpus where the information included sufficient showings of intent and overt acts constituting a crime under state law).

169. Felony murder is a rule of criminal law which holds that a defendant is responsible for any killing that occurred during the commission of a felony.

170. People ex rel. Culhane v. Sullivan, 139 A.D.2d 315, 317, 531 N.Y.S.2d 287, 288 (2d Dept. 1988); see also

3. How to File Your Habeas Corpus Petition

(a) When to File

In New York, before you file your habeas corpus petition, make sure you cannot bring any of these proceedings:

- (1) Appeal (refer to JLM, Chapter 9, “Appealing Your Conviction or Sentence”),
- (2) Article 440 (refer to JLM, Chapter 20, “Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence”), or
- (3) Article 78 (refer to JLM, Chapter 22, “How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules”).

(b) Where to File

In New York, you may petition any of the following courts or judges for a writ of habeas corpus:

- (1) The supreme court in the judicial district in which you are imprisoned;
- (2) The appellate division of the department in which you are imprisoned;
- (3) Any justice of the supreme court; or
- (4) A county judge within the county in which you are imprisoned, or a county judge from an adjoining county, if no judge within the county can or will issue a writ.¹⁷¹

Appendix II of the JLM provides the addresses for New York courts.

(c) What to Include in Your Petition

The habeas corpus petition you submit should include the following information:

- (1) The name of your prison and of the warden or official imprisoning you, if you know their names;
- (2) A copy of the mandate by which you are detained or an explanation of why you could not obtain a copy of the mandate;¹⁷²
- (3) The reason you are imprisoned, to the best of your knowledge;
- (4) An explanation of why your imprisonment is illegal;¹⁷³
- (5) The result of any appeal from the trial court’s judgment, or a statement that you did not take an appeal, if that is the case;
- (6) The date, result, and name of the court or judge to whom you previously petitioned for a writ of habeas corpus, plus a statement of any new facts in your current petition that you did not raise in earlier petitions. If you have not petitioned for a writ of habeas corpus before, state this fact in your petition;¹⁷⁴ and

People ex rel. Bartlam v. Murphy, 9 N.Y.2d 550, 553–554, 175 N.E.2d 336, 337–338, 215 N.Y.S.2d 753, 755–756 (1961) (ruling in favor of a relator in a habeas corpus petition and ordering a hearing on whether the relator was denied the right to be present when the jury received further instructions, which is an issue essential to the court’s jurisdiction to proceed with trial). But see People ex rel. Lupo v. Fay, 13 N.Y.2d 253, 257, 196 N.E.2d 56, 58–59, 246 N.Y.S.2d 399, 402 (1963) (denying writ of habeas corpus and holding that the defendant’s absence when counsel made a motion to discharge the jury did not affect any substantial rights).

171. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7002(b)(1)–(4) (McKinney 2013 & Supp. 2020). Note that if you are being held in a New York City detention center, you may also file with any justice of the supreme court of the county in which your charge is pending, in addition to the above-listed options. For example, a person being held on Rikers Island in the Bronx may file a writ of habeas corpus with a justice of the Supreme Court in New York County (Manhattan) if he has a charge pending there. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7002(b)(5) (McKinney 2013 & Supp. 2020).

172. A mandate is a written order of the court directing the warden to enforce the sentence against you. N.Y. GEN. CONSTR. LAW § 28-a (McKinney 2018). Under N.Y. PUB. OFF. LAW § 89(3)(a) (McKinney 2008), the superintendent or warden of your prison should make the mandate available to you upon your written request.

173. You should support your claim that your imprisonment is illegal with as many facts as possible. If you merely state that your imprisonment is illegal without detailing why, a court will dismiss your petition. See People ex rel. Boyd v. LeFevre, 92 A.D.2d 1042, 1042, 461 N.Y.S.2d 667, 667 (3d Dept. 1983) (upholding dismissal of habeas corpus petition where the petition contained only bare, conclusory assertions that the defendant’s rights were violated without any facts alleged to support such claims).

174. If you fail to detail prior applications for a writ of habeas corpus, the court may dismiss your petition.

- (7) The facts that authorize the judge to act, if the petition is made to a county judge outside of the county where you are detained.

This is not a complete list. You should consult New York Civil Practice Law and Rules 7002(c) for other information that you must include in your habeas corpus petition. If you do not include the required information, a court will dismiss your petition, unless you can show some convincing reason why you could not include the required information.¹⁷⁵ For example, one reason might be that you were deprived of legal material and writing instruments.¹⁷⁶

Write out and then type a petition and a writ. Sign the petition in the presence of a notary public, who will put his seal on the papers. By “notarizing” the petition, you are swearing that all statements in the document are true.¹⁷⁷ Send the documents to the court specified above in Section 2, “Where to File.” Appendix II of the JLM provides the addresses for New York courts.

4. Your Right to Counsel for Your Petition

The U.S. Supreme Court has held that you have no federal constitutional right to counsel for state habeas corpus proceedings.¹⁷⁸ However, New York state law may provide you the right to counsel. If you lack the financial means to obtain your own lawyer, you often have the right to a court-appointed lawyer for a hearing on your habeas corpus petition, provided that you request that the court appoint a lawyer.¹⁷⁹ To do so, you must complete “poor person’s papers” (known as proceeding in forma pauperis). JLM Chapter 22, “How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules,” contains sample poor person’s papers in its Appendix A for use in obtaining a lawyer for an Article 78 proceeding. You may use the same forms to obtain a lawyer for a habeas corpus proceeding if you: (1) substitute “Article 70” wherever the forms say “Article 78,” (2) delete any references to the Attorney General, and (3) substitute “writ of habeas corpus” wherever the papers read “order to show cause” or “verified petition.”

You may also use poor person’s papers to request a reduction or waiver of the filing fees. You should read Part D of JLM, Chapter 22, on Article 78 for a detailed description of filing fees. Sentenced

See People ex rel. Christianson v. Berry, 165 A.D.2d 961, 961, 561 N.Y.S.2d 848, 849 (3d Dept. 1990) (citing N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7002(c)(6)) (denying petitioner’s application for writ of habeas corpus because it was fatally defective where, among other things, it failed to indicate the petitioner’s previous applications for habeas corpus relief). If you have already petitioned for habeas corpus unsuccessfully and your current petition does not contain any new grounds for relief, a court will only issue a writ in the extremely rare circumstances when the “ends of justice” require it. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7003(b) (McKinney 2013); see People ex rel. Taylor v. Jones, 171 A.D.2d 906, 906, 566 N.Y.S.2d 779, 780 (3d Dept. 1991) (denying petitioner’s application for writ of habeas corpus because it failed to indicate his previous applications for such relief).

175. See Matter of Tullis v. Kelly, 154 A.D.2d 926, 926, 547 N.Y.S.2d 259, 259 (4th Dept. 1989) (dismissing habeas corpus petition because it failed to comply with the procedural requirements of N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7002(c)); People ex rel. Kagan v. La Vallee, 49 A.D.2d 986, 986, 374 N.Y.S.2d 408, 408 (3d Dept. 1975) (affirming dismissal of a habeas corpus petition where the application did not comply with the provisions of N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7002(c) and was therefore insufficient on its face).

176. See People ex rel. La Rocca v. Conboy, 40 A.D.2d 736, 736, 336 N.Y.S.2d 724, 725 (3d Dept. 1972) (noting that “deficiencies in the petition might be overlooked where compelling reasons appeared from the papers,” such as “a deprivation of legal material and writing material.”).

177. Notarizing your petition satisfies the “verification” requirement. See N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7002(c) (McKinney 2013); N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 135 (McKinney 2018) (explaining that a notary has the power to take acknowledgements wherein they verify having positively identified a document signer who personally appeared and admitted having signed the document).

178. See Pennsylvania v. Finley, 481 U.S. 551, 555, 107 S. Ct. 1990, 1993, 95 L. Ed. 2d 539, 545 (1987) (“[T]he right to appointed counsel extends to the first appeal of right, and no further.”).

179. See People ex rel. Brock v. La Vallee, 42 A.D.2d 629, 629–30, 344 N.Y.S.2d 513, 515 (3d Dept. 1973) (holding that at any hearing in connection with a habeas corpus petition filed by an “indigent prisoner” seeking to be released from custody, “the prisoner shall be entitled, upon request, to the assignment of counsel to represent him upon such hearing.”); see also People ex rel. Ferguson v. Campbell, 186 A.D.2d 319, 319, 587 N.Y.S.2d 798, 799 (3d Dept. 1992) (noting that the court did not abuse its discretion by not appointing counsel because the petitioner indicated that he did not want legal representation).

incarcerated people must usually pay between $15 and $50 of the filing fees to proceed with their claims.¹⁸⁰

If you have not been sentenced (for example, if you are filing a habeas corpus petition to challenge excessive bail), you should still be able to receive a full filing fee waiver under New York law if you are unable to pay the costs.¹⁸¹ To request a waiver of filing fees, you should replace all references to N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101(f) in the poor person's papers with N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101(d) and make sure the papers request a waiver, not a reduction, of the filing fees.

5. What to Expect After You File

A court will not issue a writ of habeas corpus if (1) it appears from your petition that your claim is plainly without merit, or (2) your petition does not contain any claim that was not already decided against you in a previous petition.¹⁸² However, if the court believes that your claim may have some merit, the court will issue you a writ.¹⁸³

After the court issues the writ, you must serve (deliver) the writ and a copy of your petition upon the warden.¹⁸⁴ Upon being served, the warden must respond by affidavit to the claims made in your petition within twenty-four hours.¹⁸⁵ The warden's response is known as the "return of the writ."¹⁸⁶ The warden should provide you with a copy of the return.¹⁸⁷ You have the right to make a reply to the return in order to deny any statements in the return or to state additional facts that support your claim.¹⁸⁸

The writ may specify a time and place for a hearing to which the warden must take you to determine whether you are being imprisoned illegally. If the writ orders a hearing, you must inform the District Attorneys of both the county in which you are imprisoned and the county in which you were convicted of the date and time of the hearing, in writing, at least eight days prior to the hearing.¹⁸⁹ Appendix III of the JLM provides the addresses of all the District Attorneys in New York. At the hearing, the court will consider your petition, the return, and your reply to the return. You will be allowed to produce evidence to support your claim and to cross-examine any witnesses against you.¹⁹⁰

6. Your Right to Appeal

If the judge hands down a judgment refusing to issue a writ of habeas corpus or denying your claim after a hearing or return of the writ, you may appeal the judgment to an intermediate appellate 180. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101(f)(2) (McKinney 2012) (expiring Sept. 1, 2021).

181. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101(d) (McKinney 2012) (effective Sept. 1, 2020).

182. Your petition must state one of the valid grounds for relief supported by factual allegations. If your petition does not contain both the grounds for relief and supporting facts, then it will be dismissed. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7003(a)–(b) (McKinney 2013); see also People ex rel. Sanchez v. Hoke, 132 A.D.2d 861, 862, 518 N.Y.S.2d 69, 70 (3d Dept. 1987) (dismissing habeas corpus petition without a hearing where the petition raised no new matter that had not already been raised and resolved against the petitioner).

183. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7003(a) (McKinney 2013).

184. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7005 (McKinney 2013).

185. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7006(a) (McKinney 2013); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7008(a) (McKinney 2013).

186. See, e.g., People ex rel. Delia v. Munsey, 26 N.Y.3d 124, 137, 41 N.E.3d 1119, 1127–1128, 20 N.Y.S.3d 304, 313–314 (2015) (Abdus-Salaam, J., dissenting) (challenging the majority's decision to affirm the release of a mentally ill patient upon "return of the writ" without a hearing to determine the status of his mental disability).

187. See Vincent C. Alexander, Practice Commentaries, N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7008 (McKinney 2013) (noting that "the court presumably will require service by personal delivery on the petitioner" because of the timeframe's urgency).

188. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7009(b) (McKinney 2013).

189. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7009(a)(3) (McKinney 2013). If you file poor person's papers, which is also known as proceeding in forma pauperis, a court officer will inform the District Attorneys for you.

190. See People ex rel. Cole v. Johnston, 22 A.D.2d 893, 255 N.Y.S.2d 388, 390 (2d Dept. 1964) (finding reversible error where the petitioner "was not allowed to produce evidence in his behalf or to cross-examine the only witness against him.").

court.¹⁹¹ In New York, this court is called the Appellate Division and is divided into four different Departments.¹⁹² The highest court in New York is called the Court of Appeals.

D. Michigan

This part explains some of the basic rules for filing a habeas corpus petition in Michigan.

1. Requirements

The Michigan writ of habeas corpus rules can be found in Chapter 43 of the Revised Judicature Act, as codified in state law 600.4301–4387, and in Rule 3.303 of the Michigan Court Rules of 1985.¹⁹³

(a) Custody

If you have been released from prison, a Michigan court cannot grant a writ of habeas corpus.¹⁹⁴ However, if you are in prison because of an alleged parole violation, you are eligible for habeas corpus.¹⁹⁵ You are also eligible for habeas corpus if you are being civilly confined in a mental institution.¹⁹⁶

(b) Immediate Release

If your habeas petition is successful, you may be released immediately.¹⁹⁷ However, Michigan courts may grant you a conditional writ of habeas corpus that will require your release from prison only if the state does not start new proceedings within a time period set by the court.¹⁹⁸ If this time period passes, Michigan is still allowed to arrest you again for the same crime.¹⁹⁹

(c) Incarcerated Within the State

You must be an incarcerated person in Michigan.²⁰⁰

(d) No Other Options

A Michigan court will not grant your petition for a writ of habeas corpus if there are other procedures available.²⁰¹ For example, a writ of habeas corpus cannot be used when a writ of error or a

191. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7011 (McKinney 2013). The rules that govern civil appeals, rather than criminal appeals, govern habeas corpus proceedings because habeas corpus is considered a civil remedy.

192. See JLM, Chapter 2, “An Introduction to Legal Research,” for a description of New York courts.

193. Revised Judicature Act of 1961. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 600.4301–4387 (West 2000). MICH. CT. RULES OF 1985, Rule 3.303.

194. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 600.4322 (West 2000).

195. See Triplett v. Deputy Warden, Jackson Prison, 371 N.W.2d 862, 865, 142 Mich. App. 774, 779 (Mich. Ct. App. 1985) (“[R]eview of a parole revocation decision is permissible upon a complaint for habeas corpus.”).

196. See MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 600.4322 (West 2000); see also Silvers v. People, 176 N.W.2d 702, 703, 22 Mich. App. 1, 3 (Mich. Ct. App. 1970) (holding that the Michigan circuit court is an appropriate venue to adjudicate the question of whether not receiving adequate treatment at a mental health facility is a violation of habeas corpus).

197. Ex parte Sawyer, 19 N.W.2d 113, 113, 311 Mich. 602, 604 (Mi. 1945) (providing that an order for release may be entered upon granting of a habeas petition).

198. See People v. Scott, 739 N.W.2d 702, 704, 275 Mich. App. 521, 523 (Mich. Ct. App. 2007) (finding that the conditional writ of habeas corpus granted to the defendant, stating that he be retried in 90 days or released, was legitimate, but that the state does not lose its right to re-prosecute if it does not retry within the allotted time).

199. See People v. Scott, 739 N.W.2d 702, 704, 275 Mich. App. 521, 523 (Mich. Ct. App. 2007) (“[I]n a typical case in which an incarcerated person is released because a state fails to retry the incarcerated person by the deadline set in a conditional writ, the state is not precluded from rearresting [the] petitioner and retrying him under the same indictment, unless . . . the state’s delay prejudices the petitioner’s ability to defend himself.”) (internal quotation marks omitted) (alteration in original) (quoting Satterlee v. Wolfenbarger, 453 F.3d 362, 370 (6th Cir. 2006)).

200. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 600.4307 (West 2000).

201. See In re Abbott, 255 N.W. 603, 603, 267 Mich. 703, 704 (Mich. 1934) (finding that the court could not writ of certiorari would be more appropriate.²⁰² The writ of habeas corpus is only used to raise defects so radical that will they render the conviction absolutely void and allow you to be released from prison.²⁰³

2. What You Can Complain About in Your Habeas Petition

(a) Before Trial

(i) Extradition

In Michigan, you have the right to challenge your extradition through the writ of habeas corpus.²⁰⁴ The court will only engage in a very limited review in these cases.²⁰⁵ The court will take the Governor's warrant and supporting papers as prima facie evidence supporting your extradition.²⁰⁶ The court will only look at whether the papers are in order, whether you have been charged with a crime in the demanding state, whether you are the person named in the request for extradition, and whether you are a fugitive.²⁰⁷ Once you are outside of Michigan, you have no right to habeas review in a Michigan court.²⁰⁸

(ii) Bail

You may ask for habeas relief on the ground that you were denied bail or that the bail you were granted is excessive.²⁰⁹ The court will be reluctant to second-guess the judge that denied bail, and the petition will only be granted if the judge acted in an arbitrary, unjust, or oppressive manner, or if the judge was clearly wrong.²¹⁰

(b) After Your Conviction

(i) Confinement Beyond Sentence

You may petition for habeas corpus relief if you have already served your sentence and are still being detained.²¹¹ As explained in Part A(2)(b) of this Chapter, you must be eligible for immediate release if your petition is granted. If you believe that the sentence imposed on you was incorrect or hear the petitioner's writ for habeas corpus since he could have filed a writ of error or certiorari instead).

202. See In re Abbott, 255 N.W. 603, 603, 267 Mich. 703, 705 (Mich. 1934) (“[H]abeas corpus may not be employed to serve in any instance where review could and should have been had by writ of error or certiorari.”).

203. See Triplett v. Deputy Warden, Jackson Prison, 371 N.W.2d 862, 866, 142 Mich. App. 774, 780 (Mich. Ct. App. 1985) (outlining that habeas corpus only deals with such radical defects in a decision, and that incorrect judgments are only subject to review on appeal).

204. MICH. COMP. LAWS. ANN. § 780.9 (West 2007).

205. People v. Wendt, 309 N.W.2d 230, 233, 107 Mich. App. 269, 273 (Mich. Ct. App. 1981) (“The court in an asylum state has limited scope of review after the governor of the state has granted extradition”).

206. People v. Wendt, 309 N.W.2d 230, 233, 107 Mich. App. 269, 274 (Mich. Ct. App. 1981).

207. People v. Wendt, 309 N.W.2d 230, 233, 107 Mich. App. 269, 274 (Mich. Ct. App. 1981) (quoting Michigan v. Doran, 439 U.S. 282, 289, 99 S. Ct. 530, 535, 58 L. Ed. 2d 521 (1978)) (stating that a court may only look at these readily verifiable historical facts).

208. See Trayer v. Kent County Sheriff, 304 N.W.2d 11, 12, 104 Mich. App. 32, 34–35 (Mich. Ct. App. 1981) (finding that even though petitioner had been granted a writ of habeas corpus, the writ was rendered moot as the petitioner had been moved out of Michigan and into Pennsylvania and was therefore subject to Pennsylvania's jurisdiction).

209. See In re Peoples, 14 N.W. 112, 116, 47 Mich. 626, 633 (Mich. 1882) (finding that a defendant denied bail warranted, under these circumstances, granting the writ of habeas corpus).

210. In re Tubbs, 102 N.W. 626, 626, 139 Mich. 102, 103 (Mich. 1905) (holding that appellate courts will generally not interfere with a lower court's decision to deny bail, except when the refusal is made in an unjust manner or is obviously erroneous).

211. See Cross v. Dept. of Corr., 303 N.W.2d 218, 220–221, 103 Mich. App. 409, 415–416 (Mich. Ct. App. 1981) (finding that a plaintiff whose state sentence was to run concurrently with his federal sentence, upon being released from federal prison, should not have been re-incarcerated in Michigan prison).

excessive, you are not entitled to habeas review, but you may challenge the sentence on appeal or in a writ of error.²¹²

(ii) Fundamental Rights

Michigan courts do not use the language of fundamental rights. Instead, the courts refer to “radical defects rendering a judgment or proceeding absolutely void.”²¹³ If the court finds that your fundamental rights have been violated in your trial or sentencing, they may find that the judgment or proceeding is void and grant your habeas petition. For example, when a defendant was not given an opportunity to present his case, the court found that habeas corpus was the proper remedy to inquire into the reason of the detention.²¹⁴

(iii) Ineffective Counsel

You may petition the court for habeas relief on the ground that your lawyer was ineffective.²¹⁵ Proving a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel is very difficult. The court will only grant relief when “the trial was a farce, or a mockery of justice, or was shocking to the conscience of the reviewing court, or the purported representation was only perfunctory, in bad faith, a sham, a pretense, or without adequate opportunity for conference and preparation.”²¹⁶

(iv) New Evidence

In Michigan, if you wish to raise the issue of new evidence, you must file a motion for a new trial. Habeas relief will not be granted because of new evidence.

(c) Probation or Parole

Michigan courts have held that habeas corpus is the correct procedure by which you can challenge errors in parole revocation proceedings.²¹⁷ However, if you are accused of a parole violation and a fact-finding hearing (a process similar to a trial) on the charge is not held within forty-five days, as required by law, habeas corpus is not available to you.²¹⁸ Instead, you should apply for a writ of mandamus to force the government to give you your hearing.²¹⁹

212. See In re Franks, 297 N.W. 521, 522, 297 Mich. 353, 355 (Mich. 1941) (holding that a petitioner challenging the length of his sentence and the method of sentencing should have appealed instead of having filed a writ of habeas corpus). But see Ex parte Wall, 47 N.W.2d 682, 685, 330 Mich. 430, 435 (Mich. 1951) (finding that while a petitioner should normally challenge a sentence length through other means, habeas corpus was appropriate here because the trial court sentenced for longer than the statutory maximum).

213. Triplett v. Deputy Warden, Jackson Prison, 371 N.W.2d 862, 866, 142 Mich. App. 774, 780 (Mich. Ct. App. 1985) (outlining that habeas corpus only deals with radical defects that render a decision void, whereas judgments that are merely incorrect can only be reviewed on appeal).

214. In re Bobowski, 21 N.W.2d 838, 839, 313 Mich. 521, 522 (Mich. 1946) (holding that where the defendant was not allowed to make his case, habeas corpus was the correct method to look at the reason for the detention).

215. See People v. Wynn, 165 N.W.2d 493, 495, 14 Mich. App. 268, 269 (Mich. Ct. App. 1968) (quoting Williams v. Beto, 354 F.2d 698, 704 (5th Cir. 1965)) (outlining the requirements for a habeas challenge based on ineffective counsel).

216. See People v. Wynn, 165 N.W.2d 493, 495, 14 Mich. App. 268, 269 (Mich. Ct. App. 1968) (quoting Williams v. Beto, 354 F.2d 698, 704 (5th Cir. 1965)).

217. Triplett v. Deputy Warden, Jackson Prison, 371 N.W.2d 862, 865, 142 Mich. App. 774, 779 (Mich. Ct. App. 1985) (holding that “review of a parole revocation decision is permissible upon a complaint for habeas corpus”).

218. Jones v. Dept. of Corr., 664 N.W.2d 717, 721–722, 468 Mich. 646, 653–655 (Mich. 2003) (holding that the appropriate procedure is to file a writ of mandamus in a situation where a fact-finding hearing failed to occur within the allotted 45 days).

219. Jones v. Dept. of Corr., 664 N.W.2d 717, 724, 468 Mich. 646, 658 (Mich. 2003).

(d) Subject Matter Jurisdiction

Habeas corpus is available when “the convicting court was without jurisdiction to try the defendant for the crime in question.”²²⁰ This defect of lacking jurisdiction must be “radical” such that it would render a conviction void.²²¹ However, if you have been convicted of a crime by a court which had jurisdiction and did not abuse its power, habeas corpus is not available to you.²²²

3. How to File Your Petition

(a) When to File

In Michigan, before you file your petition, be sure that you cannot appeal your conviction or apply for administrative relief. If there are other options for redress, the court will generally not consider your habeas corpus petition.²²³

(b) Where to File

In Michigan, you may petition any of the following courts or judges for a writ of habeas corpus:

- (1) The supreme court, or a justice of that court;
- (2) The courts of appeals, or a judge of those courts;
- (3) The circuit courts, or a judge of those courts;
- (4) The municipal courts of record, including (but not limited to) the recorder’s court of the city of Detroit, common pleas court, or a judge of those courts; or
- (5) The district courts, or a judge of those courts.²²⁴

You must file with the judge or court in the county where you are detained.²²⁵ However, if there is no judge in that county capable of issuing the writ, or if the judge has refused to issue the writ, you can apply for habeas corpus at the court of appeals.²²⁶ You may file with either the judge or the court, but if you file with a judge you must later file the petition with the court.²²⁷

(c) What to Include in Your Petition

The petition for habeas corpus (also known as the complaint) must state:

- (1) that you (the incarcerated person) are restrained of your liberty;
- (2) your name, or if the petition is being written on the behalf of someone else and his name is not known, you can provide a description of the incarcerated person;
- (3) the name, if known, or the description of the officer or person by whom the incarcerated person is restrained;
- (4) the place of restraint, if known;
- (5) that you or your representative is not barred from seeking habeas corpus;
- (6) the cause or pretense of the restraint, according to your best knowledge and belief; and

220. People v. Price, 179 N.W.2d 177, 180, 23 Mich. App. 663, 670 (Mich. Ct. App. 1970).

221. People v. Price, 179 N.W.2d 177, 180, 23 Mich. App. 663, 671 (Mich. Ct. App. 1970) (defining a “radical defect in jurisdiction” as “an act or omission by state authorities that clearly contravenes an express legal requirement in existence at the time of the act or omission”).

222. See Krause v. Weideman, 80 N.W.2d 481, 483, 347 Mich. 567, 572 (Mich. 1957) (“[Habeas corpus] is not available to one convicted of a crime and committed by a court which has acquired jurisdiction and has not abused its power.”).

223. See In re Abbott, 255 N.W. 603, 603, 267 Mich. 703, 705 (Mich. 1934) (finding that the court could not hear the petitioner’s writ for habeas corpus since he did not exhaust all his other options such as a writ of error or certiorari instead). But see Walls v. Dir. of Institutional Servs. Maxie Boy’s Training Sch., 269 N.W.2d 599, 601, 84 Mich. App. 355, 357 (Mich. Ct. App. 1978) (finding that though there were other avenues the juvenile could have taken to seek redress, there was a “radical defect in jurisdiction” and so filing a habeas petition was warranted).

224. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 600.4304 (West 2011).

225. MICH. CT. RULES OF 1985, Rule 3.303(A)(2).

226. MICH. CT. RULES OF 1985, Rule 3.303(A)(2).

227. MICH. CT. RULES OF 1985, Rule 3.303(F)(3).

(7) why the restraint is illegal.²²⁸

(d) How to File

After you have created your petition for habeas corpus including all the items in Part (C)(3)(c) of this Chapter, “What to Include in Your Petition,” you should send your petition and any supporting documents to the court specified above in Part (C)(3)(b) of this Chapter, “Where to File.” You can file the petition yourself, or someone may file the petition on your behalf.²²⁹

4. Your Right to Counsel for Your Petition

The U.S. Supreme Court has held that you have no federal constitutional right to be provided counsel in state habeas corpus proceedings.²³⁰ However, in Michigan, the state law entitles you to counsel at your habeas corpus hearing.²³¹ In addition, if you are applying for relief because you are about to be extradited (to be handed over to a foreign state for criminal prosecution), you do have a further, limited, right to counsel.²³²

5. What to Expect After You File

In Michigan, the court may issue a preliminary writ of habeas corpus (or an order to show cause) which would entitle you to release, unless the party applying is not entitled to the writ.²³³ When the court issues the preliminary writ (or an order to show cause), it may set a date and place for a hearing where the person who has you in custody must take you to determine whether you are being imprisoned illegally.²³⁴

After the court issues the writ, you must serve (deliver to) the person who has you in custody with the writ and a copy of your petition.²³⁵ Upon the service of the writ and the petition, the person who has you in custody must follow the writ unless you are too sick to be moved.²³⁶ If you are too sick to be moved, the person who has you in custody should state that in the answer to your complaint.²³⁷ The person who has you in custody must file an answer to the writ, in which he will tell the judge why he thinks you should be in custody.²³⁸ You may respond to the answer, either in a written reply on oath or in the hearing on your petition.²³⁹

At the hearing, the court will consider your petition, the return, and your reply to the return. The defendant, or the person holding you in custody, will be allowed to provide evidence to support the cause of detention.²⁴⁰ The judge will then rule on your petition based on his assessment of the truth of your complaint and the sufficiency of the answer (to your complaint) from the person who has you in custody.²⁴¹

228. MICH. CT. RULES OF 1985, Rule 3.303(C).

229. MICH. CT. RULES OF 1985, Rule 3.303(B).

230. See Pennsylvania v. Finley, 481 U.S. 551, 555, 107 S. Ct. 1990, 1993, 95 L. Ed. 2d 539, 545 (1987) (“[T]he right to appointed counsel extends to the first appeal of right, and no further.”).

231. MICH. CT. RULES OF 1985, Rule 3.303(Q)(3).

232. MICH. COMP. LAWS § 780.9 (West 2011). But see People v. Donaldson, 302 N.W.2d 592, 595, 103 Mich. App. 42, 48–49 (Mich. Ct. App. 1981) (limiting application of the Uniform Criminal Extradition Act by excluding the right to counsel at an initial arraignment on a fugitive warrant and at a hearing before the governor because they are not considered critical stages of the proceedings).

233. MICH. COMP. LAWS § 600.4316 (West 2011).

234. MICH. COMP. LAWS § 600.4304 (West 2011) (granting certain court the power to issue the writ); MICH. COMP. LAWS § 600.4325 (West 2011) (requiring production of person in custody).

235. MICH. CT. RULES OF 1985, Rule 3.303(I)(1).

236. MICH. COMP. LAWS § 600.4325–4328 (West 2011).

237. MICH. COMP. LAWS § 600.4328 (West 2011).

238. MICH. CT. RULES OF 1985, Rule 3.303(N).

239. MICH. CT. RULES OF 1985, Rule 3.303(O).

240. MICH. CT. RULES OF 1985, Rule 3.303(Q)(2)(b).

241. MICH. CT. RULES OF 1985, Rule 3.303(Q).

6. Your Right to Appeal

In Michigan, if your habeas petition is successful, you have the right to be released immediately. However, if the petition is not successful, you may appeal the denial of your writ of habeas corpus.²⁴² If you do so, you must make sure that the writ has been properly filed with the court where you originally brought the petition. You may also bring a new petition for habeas corpus to an appellate court or the Supreme Court of Michigan.

E. Conclusion

You must meet certain elements in your petition for a writ of habeas corpus to be granted. These include custody (confinement by the state), entitlement to immediate release, imprisonment by the state, and lack of other available procedures, such as administrative and grievance procedures. Your petition can complain about a variety of issues post-conviction, parole or probation revocation, or jurisdiction. Remember that the details of this process vary from state to state. You should research the rules in the state where you are imprisoned before petitioning for a writ of state habeas corpus.

242. See People v. Wendt, 309 N.W.2d 230, 233, 107 Mich. App. 269, 274 (Mich. Ct. App. 1981) (finding that the denial of the writ of habeas corpus is reviewable though the scope of review is limited).

CHAPTER 22

HOW TO CHALLENGE ADMINISTRATIVE DECISIONS USING ARTICLE 78 OF THE NEW YORK CIVIL PRACTICE LAW AND RULES*

A. Introduction

This Chapter is about a New York State law that provides a procedure for you to challenge decisions that were made by a New York State official or administrative body. The law is called Article 78 because it can be found starting at Section 7801 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules.² This Chapter explains when and how to bring an Article 78 proceeding. There are very strict rules and time limits when bringing an Article 78 proceeding, so please read the requirements carefully.

Part B of this Chapter explains what you can complain about in an Article 78 petition. Part C describes when you can get relief under Article 78. Part D explains the procedure for filing an Article 78 petition. Part E describes how to bring an Article 78 proceeding, and the Appendix has a sample Article 78 petition and supporting papers.

Article 78 is New York State law, and it does not apply in other states. Some other states have similar laws to review decisions of officials and administrative agencies. But, if you are in another state, you will have to research what your state's law is and how it differs from New York's Article 78.

1. What is an Article 78 Proceeding?

In an Article 78 proceeding, you ask a state court to review a decision or action of a New York state official or administrative agency that you believe was unlawful. An example of a New York state official is a prison official. An example of an administrative agency is the Board of Parole. You can use Article 78, for example, to attack the state's calculation of your good time, a decision to place you in solitary confinement, or a decision to deny you parole. In addition to claiming a violation of a law or regulation in an Article 78 petition, you must also explain how you were injured by the action or inaction you are challenging. For example, if you were denied parole, your injury would be that you are suffering a longer incarceration. If you were not given a fair disciplinary hearing, your injury would be the punishment you received and the record of your alleged violation. If you were wrongfully denied medication, your injury would be pain or sickness.

On the other hand, you cannot challenge your conviction and sentence in an Article 78 proceeding.³ For information on challenging convictions and sentences, see Chapter 9 of the JLM ("Appealing Your

* This Chapter was revised by Kristin Jamberdino and written by Sami Farhad, based in part on previous versions by Nicholas Corson, Robert Linn, Joseph Noga, and Erik Schryve. Special thanks to Laura Johnson of The Legal Aid Society, Criminal Defense Division and Ken Stephens of The Legal Aid Society, Prisoners' Rights Project for their valuable comments. The most recent version of this Chapter was revised in 2004 and is based largely on a publication by The Legal Aid Society, Prisoners' Rights Project, entitled, "How to Litigate an Article 78 Proceeding." You may obtain this document by contacting The Legal Aid Society, Prisoners' Rights Project, at 199 Water Street, 6th Floor, New York, NY 10038 (tel. (212) 577-3530). The Section on appealing an Article 78 petition is based largely on a publication by Prisoners' Legal Services of New York, entitled "Appealing an Article 78 Proceeding."

2. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7801 (McKinney 2008). The standard way of citing this statute, which you may use when you are writing a legal paper and do not want to write "New York Civil Practice Law and Rules," is: N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7801 (the number indicates the section or rule to which you are referring). Article 78 can be found in §§ 7801–7806 of the N.Y. C.P.L.R. You should also look at §§ 401–411 of the N.Y. C.P.L.R., which describe some of the rules for "special proceedings," because Article 78 is a type of special proceeding.

3. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7801(2) (McKinney 2008). Article 78 may also be used to prevent a judge from hearing a case, or prevent a public prosecutor from taking certain actions, if it is beyond his authority to do so. See Schumer v. Holtzman, 60 N.Y.2d 46, 51, 454 N.E.2d 522, 524, 467 N.Y.S.2d 182, 184 (1983) (holding that a remedy of prohibition under Article 78 is only available "to prevent or control a body or officer acting in a judicial or quasi-judicial capacity from proceeding or threatening to proceed without or in excess of its jurisdiction [citations omitted] and then only when the clear legal right to relief appears and, in the court's discretion, the remedy is Conviction or Sentence”); Chapter 20 of the JLM (“Using Article 440 of the New York Criminal Procedure Law to Attack Your Unfair Conviction or Illegal Sentence”); Chapter 13 of the JLM (“Federal Habeas Corpus”); and Chapter 21 of the JLM (“State Habeas Corpus”).

You start an Article 78 proceeding by filing a petition. Therefore, throughout the proceeding you are referred to as the “petitioner.” Your petition will name the agency or official whose decision you are challenging as the “respondent,” and will state why you are complaining about the decision and what you would like the court to do about it. (Note that you can name more than one respondent in the same petition.) After the agency or official files its “answer” responding to the claims you make in your petition, you can file another document called the “reply.”⁴

2. Who Hears Article 78 Proceedings?

Article 78 petitions are heard by New York Supreme Courts,⁵ which are the trial courts in New York.⁶ Some Article 78 cases that begin in a supreme court will eventually be transferred by that court to the appellate division (the next highest court) if they involve a question of “substantial evidence.”⁷ Generally, a question of substantial evidence means the original decision you are asking the court to review was not supported by enough evidence.⁸ This will be explained in greater detail in Part B(3).

After the judge reads the papers that you and the respondent (state agency or official) have submitted, he will make a decision.⁹ Although Article 78 permits the judge to hold a hearing, this is extremely rare. As a result, incarcerated people who file Article 78 actions almost never actually appear in court. It is very likely that the judge will make his decision based on the papers that you and the respondent (state agency or official) file with the judge.

You should note that the law gives agencies a great deal of discretion (freedom to use their own judgment). This means a judge needs a very good reason to overturn a decision by a state agency or official. You (as the person challenging the decision) will lose when it is unclear if you or the respondent has a better argument.

3. What Can You Ask the Court to Do in an Article 78 Proceeding?

When you prepare your Article 78 petition, you can only ask the court to consider the following types of issues:

- (1) Whether the state official or agency failed to perform a duty that is required by law;
- (2) Whether the state official or agency acted beyond its authority or violated the law; or
- (3) Whether a decision made by the officer or agency was (a) obviously incorrect or unreasonable, (b) based upon an error of law, or (c) based upon insufficient evidence.¹⁰

If you are successful in your Article 78 challenge, the original decision will be annulled (declared invalid) either entirely or partially. The court may also modify, or change, the original decision or order the respondent (the agency or official you are challenging) to act (or not act) in specific ways.¹¹ The court will sometimes send an administrative decision back to the agency or officer for more review.¹² You should be aware that in Article 78 proceedings, money damages are generally not warranted [citations omitted].”). In other words, it is not available to correct common procedural or substantive errors.

4. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7804(c) (McKinney 2008).

5. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7804(b) (McKinney 2008).

6. For a list of the addresses of the supreme courts in each county, see Appendix II at the end of the JLM.

7. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7804(g) (McKinney 2008).

8. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7803(4) (McKinney’s 2008 & Supp. 2018).

9. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7806 (McKinney 2008).

10. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7803 (McKinney 2008).

11. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7806 (McKinney 2008).

12. See Police Benevolent Ass’n of the New York State Troopers, Inc. v. Vacco, 253 A.D.2d 920, 921, 677 N.Y.S.2d 808, 809 (3d Dept. 1998) (holding that the court retains the right to remit (send back) a decision for further proceedings if “further agency action is necessary to cure deficiencies in the record”).

awarded. The law states that money damages will only be awarded in Article 78 proceedings if they are “incidental” (secondary) to the main remedy (what you want the court to do).¹³

There are some kinds of relief (solutions) you can ask the court to give you even before it hears your Article 78 petition. You may ask the court to stop the official or agency from taking further action until your Article 78 petition has been heard and decided by the court.¹⁴ For example, if you are challenging a decision that would result in you being placed in maximum security or being transferred to another institution, the court might order the official or agency to leave you where you are until the court has made its decision on your Article 78 petition.

However, you should be aware that courts normally do not grant such delays in proceedings (further actions). Courts will only “stay” (delay) the proceedings if you can show three things: (1) you are likely to win, (2) you will suffer permanent harm if the court does not delay the proceedings, and (3) the harm you will suffer is greater than the benefits of continuing with the proceedings.¹⁵

B. What You Can Complain About Under Article 78

In an Article 78 proceeding, you can raise only certain specific complaints about the state agency or official's action or failure to act. Possible complaints include the following:

- (1) that the agency or official failed to do something the law requires;¹⁶
- (2) that the agency or official did something, is doing something, or is about to do something that is beyond its lawful authority;¹⁷
- (3) that the agency or official made a decision that was unreasonable and irrational, did not follow the law, or did not follow lawful procedure;¹⁸ or
- (4) that the agency or official made a decision at a hearing that was not based on substantial evidence.¹⁹

You can choose to bring one claim or more than one claim at a time. If you make more than one claim in the same Article 78 proceeding, you may want to distinguish procedural claims (claims about the established or official way of doing something) from other types of claims. If you can show that an agency has failed to follow its own procedures, you may be successful in your Article 78 proceeding. You might challenge a parole decision or sentence calculation or the action of a Work Assignment Committee or Time Allowance Committee. It may also be helpful to read New York Civil Practice Law and Rules § 7803 (to see what the law says you can challenge using Article 78), and the annotated version of New York Civil Practice Law and Rules § 7803 in McKinney's,²⁰ which lists the decisions of Article 78 cases, including cases regarding incarcerated people.²¹

In the documents you file with the court, you do not need to identify which type of claim or claims (also called “action” or “actions”) you are filing. Historically, you simply need to state that it is an Article 78 action.²² Of course, the more detailed your petition is, the easier it will be for the court to 13. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7806 (McKinney 2008) (stating that “[a]ny restitution or damages granted to the petitioner must be incidental to the primary relief sought by the petitioner”). See Gross v. Perales, 72 N.Y.2d 231, 236, 527 N.E.2d 1205, 1207, 532 N.Y.S.2d 68, 70–71 (1988) (holding that a claim for damages was incidental where damages were required by law once petitioner won his or her Article 78 claim; “[w]hether the essential nature of the claim is to recover money, or whether the monetary relief is incidental to the primary claim, is dependent upon the facts and issues presented in a particular case”); David D. Siegel & Patrick M. Connors, New York Practice 1093–1094 (6th ed. 2018); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7806, Practice Commentaries (McKinney 2008).

14. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7805 (McKinney 2008).

15. You have to show that you will suffer immediate and serious harm if the stay is not granted. The court will only grant a stay if it decides that the harm you face is greater than the cost of granting the stay. See N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7805, Practice Commentaries (McKinney 2008).

16. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7803(1) (McKinney 2008).

17. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7803(2) (McKinney 2008).

18. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7803(3) (McKinney 2008).

19. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7803(4) (McKinney 2008).

20. See Chapter 2 of the JLM, “Introduction to Legal Research,” for an explanation of McKinney's.

21. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7803 (McKinney 2012 & Supp. 2018).

22. David D. Siegel & Patrick M. Connors, New York Practice 1066 (6th ed. 2018).

understand the reasons you seek legal relief. The following Sections address the different types of claims that are allowed in Article 78 proceedings.

1. Compel Required Action (Mandamus to Compel)

The first type of action you can bring occurs when an official has failed to do something that is required by law. This action is called a “mandamus to compel.” When you bring this type of action, you are asking the court to order an official to do something that is his duty to do.²³ In this type of action, the duty to be performed must be required by the law and may not be “discretionary” (meaning that the official can decide whether to perform that duty).²⁴ This type of Article 78 proceeding is very important because it can force officials to follow the regulations that protect your rights as a person who is either incarcerated or on parole. For example, you can bring an Article 78 proceeding to challenge improper restrictions on your mail,²⁵ to correct inaccurate or unfair disciplinary records,²⁶ or to make the State Board of Parole act on your application for parole when the Board is required to act on it but has ignored it.²⁷ You can also bring an Article 78 proceeding to make the Board of Parole give you the reasons why your parole was denied.²⁸ Note that in this last type of proceeding, the remedy, or solution, provided by the court would be to order the Board of Parole to decide your parole application,²⁹ or to make the Board give you the reasons for denying your parole.³⁰ Since the authority to grant parole is given to the Board of Parole, a court cannot order a certain result or decision.³¹

23. See Gore v. Corwin, 185 Misc. 2d 825, 826, 714 N.Y.S.2d 427, 428 (Sup. Ct. Ulster County 2000) (“Mandamus is a proceeding to compel a public body or officer to act in accordance with the law”).

24. See Citywide Factors, Inc. v. N.Y. City Sch. Constr. Auth., 228 A.D.2d 499, 500, 644 N.Y.S.2d 62, 63 (2d Dept. 1996) (“Mandamus relief is appropriate only where the right to relief is clear, and the duty sought to be compelled is the performance of an act which is required by law and involves no exercise of discretion”).

25. See Hicks v. Russi, 219 A.D.2d 851, 851, 632 N.Y.S.2d 341, 342–343 (4th Dept. 1995) (reversing lower court’s dismissal of parolee’s Article 78 petition and holding that parole authorities could not prevent parolee from advertising or selling his book to prison inmates by mail and replying to mail orders or acting as a paralegal on criminal cases since these activities do not place the parolee in the “company” of known criminals or constitute fraternization with criminals). But see Raqiyb v. Goord, 28 A.D.3d 892, 893–894, 813 N.Y.S.2d 251, 253 (3d Dept. 2006) (refusing an incarcerated person’s claim that regulation of his mail correspondence with his incarcerated nephew and opening of his outbound mail with insufficient postage was improper).

26. See Hilton v. Dalsheim, 81 A.D.2d 887, 887–888, 439 N.Y.S.2d 157, 157–159 (2d Dept. 1981) (granting incarcerated person’s Article 78 motion to compel the removal from his disciplinary record of an alleged disciplinary violation, which was decided in a proceeding where he was not provided assistance in investigating the claim made against him and the hearing officer did not interview witnesses, both required by regulations, and because he was not given a written statement from the hearing officer outlining the evidence she relied upon and the reason for the actions she took, which violated his due process rights). For an example of mixed petition for mandamus to review and to compel, see McDermott v. Coughlin, 135 Misc. 2d 659, 661–662, 516 N.Y.S.2d 834, 836–837 (Sup. Ct. Chemung County 1987) (granting an Article 78 motion to void a disciplinary hearing which decided that an incarcerated person had violated disciplinary rules when those rules were not yet filed with the New York Secretary of State at the time of the incident, giving back the privileges and good behavior allowances to the incarcerated person, and removing the disciplinary action from his record).

27. See Hines v. State Bd. of Parole, 267 A.D. 99, 101, 44 N.Y.S.2d 655, 656–657 (3d Dept. 1943) (noting that an application for a mandamus to compel was the proper remedy to force the State Board of Parole to take action on incarcerated person’s application for parole); see also Utica Cheese v. Barber, 49 N.Y.2d 1028, 1030, 406 N.E.2d 1342, 1343, 429 N.Y.S.2d 405, 406 (1980) (granting an Article 78 claim to force an agency to hold a hearing, as required by law, to decide petitioner’s application for a license).

28. See Van Luven v. Henderson, 52 A.D.2d 1042, 1042, 384 N.Y.S.2d 898, 899 (4th Dept. 1976) (noting that an Article 78 proceeding is the proper remedy when the Board of Parole does not give the incarcerated person the reasons for denial of parole); see also People ex rel. Cender v. Henderson, 51 A.D.2d 683, 683, 378 N.Y.S.2d 205, 206 (4th Dept. 1976) (holding that an Article 78 proceeding is the proper remedy to force the Board of Parole to provide an incarcerated person with the reasons why his parole was denied).

29. See Vulpis v. Dept. of Corr., 154 Misc. 2d 625, 629, 585 N.Y.S.2d 954, 956 (Sup. Ct. Kings County 1992) (ordering Department of Correction to release an incarcerated person who had been denied parole after approving his temporary release or to process his application with “all due speed” if additional approvals were needed for his release).

30. See Van Luven v. Henderson, 52 A.D.2d 1042, 1042, 384 N.Y.S.2d 898, 898–899 (4th Dept. 1976) (ordering Board to notify an incarcerated person of the reasons for denying him parole).

31. Hines v. State Bd. of Parole, 181 Misc. 280, 282, 46 N.Y.S.2d 569, 570–571 (Sup. Ct. Westchester County 1943) aff’d, Hines v. State Bd. Of Parole, 267 A.D. 881, 46 N.Y.S.2d 572 (2d Dept. 1944) (“The authority to release on parole has been confided to the Board of Parole and not to the courts. Parole cannot be compelled by a

Another example of a proceeding to compel action would be claiming that you are entitled to credit against the length of your sentence for time you spent in custody.³² In such a case you would be asking the court to order the agency (if you are in a New York State prison, this would be the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision) to recalculate your sentence.³³

When you bring this type of proceeding, if possible, you should state in your petition the law, regulation, or case you believe states the official's duty. If you seek relief because the agency did not follow proper procedures, you should try to show that the mistakes led to or helped lead to the agency's decision(s). If you do not show this connection, the court might rule that the failure to follow appropriate procedures was only harmless error (meaning the agency's decision would have been the same even if it had followed proper procedures).

2. Review of Discretionary Administrative Decision—"Arbitrary and Capricious" Standard (Mandamus to Review)

A second type of action under Article 78 is a claim that asks the court to review a discretionary administrative decision or action (as opposed to the failure of an official to do something required by law, explained above in Part B(1)). If you want the court to review a discretionary administrative action or decision, you will have to claim it was against the law because the action or decision was made without a sound, or good, reason. The law calls such decisions and actions "arbitrary and capricious."³⁴ An arbitrary and capricious decision or action is one taken "without sound basis in reason and ... without regard to the facts."³⁵

The arbitrary and capricious standard can be used to challenge decisions made by agency officials. It can be used, for example, to challenge a disciplinary decision that was made without following the procedures required by law.³⁶ If an agency harmed you by violating its own legally required procedures (the law or their own regulations) in making an administrative decision, you can argue that such an action is arbitrary and capricious.³⁷ mandatory order").

32. See People v. Pugh, 51 A.D.2d 1047, 1048, 381 N.Y.S.2d 417, 419 (2d Dept. 1976) (noting that an Article 78 proceeding is the proper course by which a defendant can obtain credit against his sentence for time spent in custody prior to sentencing); see also People v. Searor, 163 A.D.2d 824, 824, 559 N.Y.S.2d 840, 840–841 (4th Dept. 1990) (noting that an Article 78 proceeding is the proper way to challenge the prison authorities' calculation of jail time credit); People v. Blake, 39 A.D.2d 587, 587, 331 N.Y.S.2d 851, 852 (2d Dept. 1972) (noting that if the Department of Correctional Services miscalculated defendant's jail term, his proper remedy would be an Article 78 proceeding); People v. Person, 256 A.D.2d 1232, 1233, 685 N.Y.S.2d 367, 368 (4th Dept. 1998) (noting that an Article 78 proceeding is the proper way to review the prison authorities' calculation of defendant's jail time credit).

33. See, e.g., Maccio v. Goord, 194 Misc. 2d 805, 808, 756 N.Y.S.2d 412, 414–415 (Sup. Ct. Albany County 2003), aff'd, Maccio v. Goord, 4 A.D.3d 688, 772 N.Y.S.2d 745 (3d Dept. 2004) (granting in part an incarcerated person's Article 78 petition and directing the Department of Correctional Services to credit him with jail time served); Grier v. Flood, 84 Misc. 2d 4, 8, 375 N.Y.S.2d 506, 509 (Sup. Ct. Nassau County 1975) (granting an incarcerated person's Article 78 petition and directing the Department of Correctional Services to credit him with jail time served).

34. Pell v. Bd. of Educ., 34 N.Y.2d 222, 231, 313 N.E.2d 321, 325, 356 N.Y.S.2d 833, 839 (1974) (discussing standards of judicial review of administrative agencies).

35. Pell v. Bd. of Educ., 34 N.Y.2d 222, 231, 313 N.E.2d 321, 325, 356 N.Y.S.2d 833, 839 (1974).

36. See Proctor v. Goord, 10 Misc. 3d 229, 232–233, 801 N.Y.S.2d 517, 519–520 (Sup. Ct. Albany County 2005) (holding that the Department of Corrections' action was "arbitrary and capricious" when it failed to remove from an incarcerated person's inmate record an "unusual incident report" for an alleged violation that he was later found not to have committed).

37. See People ex rel. Furde v. N.Y. City Dept. of Corr., 9 Misc. 3d 268, 274, 796 N.Y.S.2d 891, 896 (Sup. Ct. Bronx County 2005) ("Where an agency promulgates rules and extends greater due process rights than may be required by the Federal Constitution, it is without question that state law mandates that the agency follow its own rules. ... To do otherwise is to act arbitrarily and capriciously"); see, e.g., Liner v. Miles, 133 A.D.2d 962, 962, 520 N.Y.S.2d 470, 470 (3d Dept. 1987) (granting Article 78 petition and finding that the determination of the Commissioner of Correctional Facilities that the incarcerated individual did not follow a disciplinary rule was not supported by substantial evidence); Nesbitt v. Goord, 12 Misc. 3d 702, 705–706, 813 N.Y.S.2d 897, 900 (Sup. Ct. Albany County 2006) (granting Article 78 petition and requiring the Department of Correctional Services to follow its own rules in reviewing requests to award Temporary Work Release); People ex rel. Furde v. N.Y. City Dept. of Corr., 9 Misc.3d 268, 273–274, 796 N.Y.S.2d 891, 895 (Sup. Ct. Bronx County 2005) (holding that the Department of Corrections acted arbitrarily and capriciously in confining a pretrial detainee to his cell for 23 hours a day, and

Keep in mind that generally courts believe that administrative officials are in the best position to make decisions regarding incarcerated people. Thus, it is very difficult to prove that an agency or official acted arbitrarily or capriciously in making a decision that is left up to its, or his or her, judgment. The court will not substitute its own judgment for that of the official, unless you can show that the decision was so unreasonable as to require that it be overturned.³⁸

You can challenge as arbitrary and capricious most day-to-day prison decisions, such as decisions regarding furlough and temporary release,³⁹ appearances at disciplinary proceedings,⁴⁰ access to evidence,⁴¹ visitation rights, mail access, and transfers. But your chance of successfully challenging a transfer is very small because New York law gives the Commissioner of Corrections “almost unbridled authority to transfer inmates from one facility to another.”⁴² “Unbridled authority” means the complete power to take an action without interference by others (this means the courts cannot get involved). Challenges to transfers, however, were successful where: (1) an incarcerated person’s request for an appropriate transfer for medical reasons is unreasonably denied;⁴³ (2) an incarcerated person requires rehabilitative treatment that has been completely withheld;⁴⁴ and (3) a member of an inmate grievance committee, who represents other incarcerated people and abides by the rules of the institution, is transferred without a hearing or compelling emergency.⁴⁵ ordering that detainee be released into general prison population); Martinez v. Baker, 180 Misc. 2d 334, 336, 688 N.Y.S.2d 877, 879 (Sup. Ct. Albany County 1999) (finding that the Department of Correctional Services acted arbitrarily and capriciously in denying an incarcerated Spanish-speaking person participation in a family reunion program because he did not complete an alcohol and substance abuse program, even though he did not have access to a bilingual program or a translator for the existing program).

38. See Bd. of Visitors-Marcy Psychiatric Ctr. v. Coughlin, 60 N.Y.2d 14, 20, 453 N.E.2d 1085, 1088, 466 N.Y.S.2d 668, 671 (1983) (noting that the standard of judicial review of a determination by Commissioner of Department of Correctional Services is not whether the court would come to the same determination itself but instead whether the determination was irrational, arbitrary, or capricious).

39. See Lopez v. Coughlin, 139 Misc. 2d 851, 853, 529 N.Y.S.2d 247, 249 (Sup. Ct. Albany County 1988) (holding that the Department of Correctional Services’ decision to disapprove an application of an incarcerated person with AIDS for participation in a temporary release program was not rationally related to the Department’s interest in the health of incarcerated people).

40. See Boodro v. Coughlin, 142 A.D.2d 820, 822–823, 530 N.Y.S.2d 337, 339–340 (3d Dept. 1988) (holding that the Hearing Officer acted arbitrarily and capriciously in removing the incarcerated person from his disciplinary hearing because the Hearing Officer’s reasons for excluding him due to misbehavior were not supported by the record). But see Grant v. Senkowski, 146 A.D.2d 948, 950, 537 N.Y.S.2d 323, 325 (3d Dept. 1989) (affirming the dismissal of an Article 78 petition because removing the incarcerated person from the disciplinary hearing was not arbitrary or capricious because the removal was due to individual’s misbehavior and occurred only after warnings).

41. See Coleman v. Coombe, 65 N.Y.2d 777, 780, 482 N.E.2d 562, 562, 492 N.Y.S.2d 944, 944 (1985) (holding that where prison regulations allowed an incarcerated person to call witnesses on his behalf in disciplinary proceedings, and calling witness did not threaten safety or correction goals, the incarcerated person had the right to call his brother as a witness to give testimony to try to reduce the penalty to be imposed); see also Wilson v. Coughlin, 186 A.D.2d 1090, 1090–1091, 590 N.Y.S.2d 798, 798 (4th Dept. 1992) (granting an incarcerated person’s request to cancel the effect of an official’s determination in a disciplinary hearing because he had not been allowed to offer evidence of mitigating circumstances, which is a factor considered in prison disciplinary hearings). “Mitigating circumstance” means a fact or event that does not excuse behavior but may decrease the degree of punishment.

42. Johnson v. Ward, 64 A.D.2d 186, 188, 409 N.Y.S.2d 670, 672 (3d Dept. 1978); see also N.Y. Correct. Law § 23(1) (McKinney 2017) (“The commissioner shall have the power to transfer inmates from one correctional facility to another.”). But see Salahuddin v. Coughlin, 202 A.D.2d 835, 836, 609 N.Y.S.2d 105, 106 (3d Dept. 1994) (noting that the broad authority to transfer does not permit transfers that are made to deny an incarcerated person a constitutional right or in response to the exercise of such a right).

43. See Barnett v. Metz, 55 A.D.2d 997, 998, 390 N.Y.S.2d 701, 701–702 (3d Dept. 1977) (holding that while decisions about transfers are generally left to the agency’s discretion, where an incarcerated person could show that the prison arbitrarily abused this discretion by failing to consider medical evidence, the decision could be challenged through Article 78).

44. See People ex rel. Ceschini v. Warden, 30 A.D.2d 649, 649, 291 N.Y.S.2d 200, 201–202 (1st Dept. 1968) (holding that where a person sentenced to an institution for rehabilitation claims that he has not been given any rehabilitative treatment, the court should look into that claim).

45. See Johnson v. Ward, 64 A.D.2d 186, 189–190, 409 N.Y.S.2d 670, 673 (3d Dept. 1978) (holding that an incarcerated person serving as a member of the Inmate Grievance Resolution Committee may not be transferred to another facility without a prior hearing unless the member’s presence or conduct creates an emergency and

You can also file an Article 78 petition to claim that an agency abused its discretion by giving you a punishment that is too severe (because such punishments are usually the result of administrative hearings). These petitions claim an “abuse of discretion ... as to the measure or mode of penalty or discipline imposed.”⁴⁶ The court will only rule in your favor (and reject the agency’s punishment) if it is “so disproportionate to the offense, in the light of all the circumstances, as to be shocking to one’s sense of fairness.”⁴⁷ As a result, these Article 78 petitions are very hard to win.⁴⁸

The examples mentioned above challenge an agency’s or official’s decision. But you can also file a petition claiming that the agency or official gave “arbitrary and capricious” reasons when it originally made the decision. If the official’s original reasons are arbitrary and capricious, the court reviewing your Article 78 petition may rule in your favor (and reject the official’s decision) even though the official offers different reasons later on in the proceedings.⁴⁹

3. Review of Hearing Board Decision—“Substantial Evidence Test” (Certiorari to Review)

A third type of Article 78 action allows you to claim that a hearing board made a decision that was not supported by substantial evidence (“substantial evidence” is explained in more detail in the paragraphs below). In these cases, you challenge decisions that were made in hearings or in other formal, court-like settings. If you believe the evidence produced at the hearing was not enough to support the decision, you can use an Article 78 petition to ask a court to review the decision. A court can review the record (an official written report) from the hearing to see whether it supports the decision. You can challenge any sort of disciplinary hearing or parole board decision that is based on evidence and a record if there was not enough evidence to support the decision.⁵⁰ By bringing this type of claim, you are asking the court to review the record that the agency or official used for the decision.

When the court reviews an Article 78 challenge to agency decisions made after administrative hearings, they use a standard called the “substantial evidence test.” “Substantial” means there must be enough evidence that a reasonable person could make the same decision the agency made. This means that the court will look to see if there was enough evidence in the record for the agency official to decide as he did. It does not mean that most of the evidence supports the decision made by the agency. It also does not mean that the court will determine whether the official made the right decision. You cannot argue that the decision was wrong, because the court will not substitute its judgment for the agency’s judgment. Instead, you need to argue that the official did not have enough evidence to make its decision. If there were mistakes or errors in the evidence against you, the court may overturn the decision.

For example, some incarcerated people have successfully challenged disciplinary decisions where, during the hearing, a corrections officer used misbehavior reports that were based on “hearsay.”⁵¹ transfer is immediately necessary to protect the facility or its personnel, in which event, the hearing on his transfer shall be held as soon as practicable at the receiving facility).

46. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7803(3) (McKinney 2018).

47. Pell v. Bd. of Educ., 34 N.Y.2d 222, 233, 313 N.E.2d 321, 326, 356 N.Y.S.2d 833, 841 (1974) (quoting Stolz v. Bd. of Regents, 4 A.D.2d 361, 364, 165 N.Y.S.2d 179, 182 (3d Dept. 1957)).

48. See, e.g., Regan v. Coughlin, 86 A.D.2d 913, 913, 448 N.Y.S.2d 258, 259 (3d Dept. 1982) (concluding that punishment of 60 days of keeplock and loss of commissary privileges, loss of 30 days of good time, and 80 days of restricted visits was not disproportionate for an incarcerated person who threw a handkerchief to a visitor in the visiting room because there was substantial evidence that the individual violated the rules and the penalty was not so disproportionate as to be “shocking to [the court’s] sense of fairness”).

49. See Scherbyn v. Wayne-Finger Lakes Bd. of Coop. Educ. Serv., 77 N.Y.2d 753, 759, 573 N.E.2d 562, 567, 570 N.Y.S.2d 474, 479 (1991) (holding that the reasons an agency later offered for dismissing an employee could not be used because its original dismissal was based on arbitrary and capricious reasons); see also Tamulinas v. Bd. of Educ. of Jericho, 279 A.D.2d 527, 529, 719 N.Y.S. 2d 660, 662 (2d Dept. 2001) (holding that reliance on the forms was arbitrary and capricious, and did not consider the additional reasons given because “determination is limited to the ground invoked by the administrative body at the time of the decision.”)

50. See Chapter 18 of the JLM for an explanation of disciplinary proceedings, and Chapter 32 of the JLM for an explanation of parole.

51. See Rodriguez v. Coughlin, 176 A.D.2d 1234, 1234, 577 N.Y.S.2d 190, 191 (4th Dept. 1991) (finding that Hearsay is a type of evidence that comes from someone who did not actually see the event or action that he is describing. For example, if the only evidence the hearing officer uses to support a disciplinary decision against you comes from reports by people who did not actually see the behavior or activity they describe, the court may say that this hearsay evidence is not enough to support the finding of misconduct.

Many incarcerated people also challenge disciplinary decisions that use reports by informants. In general, courts recognize that it is important to protect informants' confidentiality, and will agree with decisions based on information from informants even where the incarcerated person has not been allowed to see or to cross-examine the informants. In a decision by the highest court of New York, an incarcerated person challenged a disciplinary hearing decision by arguing that the hearing officer should be required to interview the informants personally in order to determine their credibility.⁵² (Determining credibility means deciding how much to trust what an informant or witness says. If an informant is "credible," that means they are likely to tell the truth and their statements can be trusted.) The court rejected the individual's challenge, and said that even though a hearing officer must determine the informants' credibility, a face-to-face interview is not required.⁵³ Recently, incarcerated people have successfully challenged hearing decisions by arguing that corrections officers' reports of informants' statements were not detailed and specific enough for the hearing officer to determine the credibility of the informants.⁵⁴

Incarcerated people have also used Article 78 to challenge hearing decisions related to drug violations.⁵⁵ Some incarcerated people have successfully challenged drug-related decisions by showing that a drug test was not reliable or accurate enough to support the hearing decision, or the drug test was not conducted properly.⁵⁶ misbehavior reports did not provide substantial evidence to support findings that an incarcerated person was guilty because reports did not show that correction officers who signed them had personal knowledge of facts in the reports); see also Deresky v. Scully, 156 A.D.2d 362, 363, 548 N.Y.S.2d 318, 319 (2d Dept. 1989) (finding that the prison's conclusion that the incarcerated person started a fire in the cell of another individual was not sufficiently supported by evidence where the only evidence of guilt was hearsay testimony of an officer who was not present, and the incarcerated person offered credible testimony that contradicted such hearsay).

52. Abdur-Raheem v. Mann, 85 N.Y.2d 113, 118, 647 N.E.2d 1266, 1269, 623 N.Y.S.2d 758, 761 (1995).

53. Abdur-Raheem v. Mann, 85 N.Y.2d 113, 121, 647 N.E.2d 1266, 1271, 623 N.Y.S.2d 758, 763 (1995).

54. Milland v. Goord, 264 A.D.2d 846, 846–47, 698 N.Y.S.2d 245, 246 (2d Dept. 1999) (holding that a determination must be annulled because "testimony of the correction officer who interviewed the confidential informants was not sufficiently detailed and specific to enable the Hearing Officer to independently assess the credibility and reliability of the informants"); see also Agosto v. Goord, 264 A.D.2d 840, 698 N.Y.S.2d 244 (2d Dept. 1999) (holding that a determination must be annulled because "testimony of the correction officer who interviewed the confidential informants was not sufficiently detailed and specific to enable the Hearing Officer to independently assess the credibility and the reliability of the informants"). But see Medina v. Goord, 253 A.D.2d 973, 973, 678 N.Y.S.2d 919, 919 (3d Dept. 1998) (upholding the hearing officer's determination as supported by "sufficiently detailed information from which [the hearing officer] could independently assess [the informants'] reliability"); Valentin v. Goord, 259 A.D.2d 911, 912, 687 N.Y.S.2d 208, 208 (3d Dept. 1999) (upholding the hearing officer's determination as supported by "sufficiently detailed information from which [the hearing officer] could properly assess [the informants'] reliability").

55. See Venegas v. Irvin, 249 A.D.2d 982, 982, 672 N.Y.S.2d 200, 201 (4th Dept. 1998) (holding there was substantial evidence for determining that an incarcerated person possessed drugs, where the misbehavior report included correction officer's statement that he saw the individual throw a marijuana cigarette on the floor and that the cigarette later tested positive for marijuana, despite questions around when the cigarette was tested and when the report was filed); see also Rollison v. Scully, 181 A.D.2d 734, 735, 580 N.Y.S.2d 480, 480 (2d Dept. 1992) (holding that the Department of Corrections failed to produce substantial evidence that the wife of an incarcerated person had brought cocaine to the correctional facility because the Department had not introduced the required documents into evidence as required by regulations).

56. See Wisniewski v. Smith, 133 A.D.2d 541, 541, 519 N.Y.S.2d 908, 909 (4th Dept. 1987) (holding that correctional facility superintendent's determination that individual violated institutional rule by using marijuana was not supported by substantial evidence because the finding was based on tests that were not established as reliable on the record); see also Kalish v. Keane, 256 A.D.2d 343, 344, 681 N.Y.S.2d 336, 337 (2d Dept. 1998) (finding that there was no substantial evidence for drug violation by an incarcerated person where the person produced evidence that he was on prescription medication that could produce false positive drug tests. Hearing officer consulted with a representative of manufacturer of a different urine test than the one used by the prison, and representative did not know whether the medication at issue could cause a false positive test result); Kincaide v. Coughlin, 86 A.D.2d 893, 893, 447 N.Y.S.2d 521, 522 (2d Dept. 1982) (finding that there was not substantial

Also, in at least one case, an incarcerated person successfully challenged a determination that he had been in possession of a weapon because he showed that the evidence on the record was insufficient to support the decision.⁵⁷ In that case, the court ruled that there was not enough evidence to show that a weapon found in a cell belonged to an individual who had just been transferred to that cell.⁵⁸

Courts treat substantial evidence claims differently than other Article 78 claims. If you bring a substantial evidence claim, the state Supreme Court will first check to see whether there are other reasons to end your court proceeding.⁵⁹ For example, the court will check to see whether your claim is within the statute of limitations, which is the period of time between when the event occurred and when you must bring your claim. If you did not file your claim within that time limit, your claim will be dismissed. If the court does not dismiss your claim, it will transfer your case to the appellate court, which is called the Supreme Court, Appellate Division. This is unlike other Article 78 proceedings, which are heard in Supreme Court. This means that your substantial evidence claims will probably take longer to be decided than other Article 78 claims.

4. Challenge Legal Authority for State Action (Prohibition)

The fourth type of Article 78 proceeding arises when you challenge the state as acting beyond its lawful authority. In this type of proceeding, you ask the court to stop an official from acting beyond his authority or jurisdiction. This type of case is difficult to prove and rarely successful in court. Nevertheless, if you feel that an official is going to act in a way that will hurt or injure you, and the official is not allowed by law to act in such a way, this type of Article 78 proceeding can be a way to prevent the action.⁶⁰

C. When You Can Obtain Relief Under Article 78

There are three important limitations on the use of Article 78 that you should keep in mind, or your case may be dismissed. They are described below.

evidence to support superintendent's determination regarding an incarcerated person's marijuana possession because correction officer's testimony that a test showed substance to be marijuana did not include description of nature of the test or the procedures used); Moss v. Scully, 152 A.D.2d 577, 577–578, 543 N.Y.S.2d 161, 162 (2d Dept. 1989) (giving examples of how a test may be flawed, specifically, where there was no evidence introduced that (1) the breathalyzer and the ampoules used with it had been tested within a reasonable time in relation to the incarcerated person's test and found to be properly calibrated and in working order when the test was administered; (2) the chemicals used in conducting the test were of the proper kind and mixed in the proper portions; and (3) the breathalyzer was operated properly during the test). But see Holmes v. Coughlin, 182 A.D.2d 1121, 1121–1122, 583 N.Y.S.2d 703, 704 (4th Dept. 1992) (upholding superintendent's determination that the incarcerated person used illegal drugs as sufficiently supported by two positive Syva EMIT Drug Detection System Tests, and commenting on the tests' scientific reliability and validity).

57. Varela v. Coughlin, 203 A.D.2d 630, 631–632, 610 N.Y.S.2d 103, 104 (3d Dept. 1994) (holding that there was insufficient evidence to determine that a weapon hidden in an incarcerated person's cell was under the control of that person where he had been recently transferred to the facility, spent no more than six days in his cell (and some of that in keeplock), and there was no evidence his cell had been searched prior to his arrival or he had an opportunity to acquire the weapon). But see Patterson v. Senkowski, 204 A.D.2d 831, 832–833, 612 N.Y.S.2d 84, 85 (3d Dept. 1994) (finding that written misbehavior report by officer who searched an incarcerated person's jacket in a communal area was sufficient evidence to support finding by superintendent that the incarcerated person possessed a weapon, and that his claim that the jacket was not his merely created issue of credibility for the hearing officer to determine); Swindell v. Coughlin, 215 A.D.2d 855, 855, 626 N.Y.S.2d 329, 329 (3d Dept. 1995) (concluding that evidence of six ball bearings hidden in a dental floss container in an incarcerated person's cell substantially supported determination that he was guilty of possessing contraband classified as a weapon; the incarcerated person's claim that he found the ball bearings during his work detail and was waiting to turn them over to his supervisor was not supported by the supervisor, and was not enough to raise a doubt as to the sufficiency of the evidence supporting the decision).

58. Varela v. Coughlin, 203 A.D.2d 630, 631, 610 N.Y.S.2d 103, 103–104 (3d Dept. 1994). But see Torres v. Coughlin, 213 A.D.2d 861, 861, 624 N.Y.S.2d 67, 68 (3d Dept. 1995) (distinguishing Varela and holding that there was sufficient evidence that an incarcerated person possessed a weapon when he had been in the facility for 20 days and had been in the living area where the weapon was found for eight days).

59. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7804(g) (McKinney 2018).

60. See Schumer v. Holtzman, 60 N.Y.2d 46, 51, 454 N.E.2d 522, 524, 467 N.Y.S.2d 182, 184 (1983) (noting that a request for prohibition under Article 78 is only appropriate if you are asking the court to prevent an official from acting beyond his or her authority).

1. You May Only Challenge Administrative Decisions

You can only use Article 78 to challenge administrative determinations of a New York state officer or agency. You generally cannot use it to challenge the decisions of a judge or a court, such as criminal convictions or criminal sentences. However, you can use Article 78 to challenge some types of actions by a judge, such as a punishment given by a judge for contempt of court.⁶¹ You can also use Article 78 if the judge made a decision that exceeded his authority (this is called “prohibition”—see Part B(4) above), or the judge failed to act in some way that was legally required (called “mandamus”—see Part B(1) above).

2. You Must Exhaust All Administrative Remedies

The administrative determination that you challenge must be final.⁶² This means that a decision-maker must have caused you an actual injury of some sort.⁶³ There have been many cases dealing with the question of what kinds of decisions are considered final. If possible, you should read the Practice Commentary and Notes of Decisions of Section 217 of N.Y. C.P.L.R. to see how courts have decided the issue.

In addition to the decision being final, there must be no way for you to appeal the decision any further within the administrative agency.⁶⁴ If it is possible for you to appeal the decision to a higher state officer in the prison system, you must do so before using Article 78. In other words, you must go through every normally available step in the administrative process before using Article 78. This is called “exhaustion of remedies.” If you have failed to follow the normal administrative procedure to the fullest extent possible, the court may refuse to hear your Article 78 petition.⁶⁵ This means that it is important to be aware of the ways you can challenge or appeal the decisions of prison officials within the prison or corrections system.⁶⁶

There are specific time limits for bringing appeals at each level of the administrative appeals process. You should be aware that many administrative appeals require you to act quickly. For example, you must bring a grievance within twenty-one days of the event that gives rise to the grievance.⁶⁷ For more information on Inmate Grievance Procedures, see Chapter 15 of the JLM. If you

61. See Williams v. Cornelius, 76 N.Y.2d 542, 546, 563 N.E.2d 15, 17, 561 N.Y.S.2d 701, 703 (1990) (holding that Article 78 petitions may be used to challenge a summary contempt order, where a summary contempt order is one in which there is no “right to an evidentiary hearing, the right to counsel, or the opportunity for adjournment to prepare a defense.” This challenge to a summary contempt order may only be issued when the actions giving rise to the contempt order take place in the “immediate view and presence” of the judge and the action disrupts the court proceeding); see also Loeber v. Teresi, 256 A.D.2d 747, 748–749, 681 N.Y.S.2d 416, 418 (3d Dept. 1998) (holding that an Article 78 petition can be used to challenge a judge’s summary contempt order).

62. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7801(1) (McKinney 2018).

63. See, e.g. Matter of Adirondack Wild: Friends of The Forest Preserve v. New York State Adirondack Park Agency, 161 A.D.3d 169, 75 N.Y.S.3d 681 (3d Dept. 2018) (referring to an Article 78 proceeding and stating that “[w]e have previously held that an administrative action is final and ripe for review only when a pragmatic evaluation reveals that the decision-maker has arrived at a definitive position on the issue that inflicts an actual, concrete injury”) (citing Matter of Adirondack Council, Inc. v Adirondack Park Agency, 92 AD3d 188, 190, 936 NYS2d 766 (2012)).

64. See Essex County v. Zagata, 91 N.Y.2d 447, 453, 695 N.E.2d 232, 235, 672 N.Y.S.2d 281, 284 (1998) (holding under New York Civil Practice Law and Rules 7801 that an agency determination is final when: (1) the agency’s position is definitive; (2) the position inflicts actual injury; and (3) no further agency action can remove or lessen the injury).

65. See Alamin v. N.Y. State Dept. of Corr. Services, 241 A.D.2d 586, 587, 660 N.Y.S.2d 746, 747 (3d Dept. 1997) (dismissing Article 78 petition because petitioner had not exhausted administrative remedies available under Public Health Law); McCloud v. Coughlin, 102 A.D.2d 854, 854, 476 N.Y.S.2d 630, 631 (2d Dept. 1984) (dismissing Article 78 petition because petitioner had not appealed superintendent’s disciplinary ruling to the Commissioner of the Department of Correctional Services).

66. See Farinaro v. Leonardo, 143 A.D.2d 492, 492–493, 532 N.Y.S.2d 601, 602 (3d Dept. 1988) (holding that an incarcerated person who was informed of the proper administrative procedure to challenge the decision of prison officials to withhold a martial arts catalog from him, and who did not follow that procedure, had failed to exhaust administrative remedies and could not obtain judicial relief).

67. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(a)(1) (2018).

are appealing the outcome of a disciplinary hearing, you must submit an appeal in writing to the superintendent within seventy-two hours of the decision, and the superintendent must then issue a decision within fifteen days of receiving the appeal.⁶⁸ If you are appealing a superintendent's hearing decision, you must appeal to the Commissioner within thirty days of the decision, and the Commissioner must issue a decision on your appeal within sixty days.⁶⁹

If you fail to meet a deadline for an appeal, you may be prevented from bringing an Article 78 petition on the same claim. If you do not receive a response by the time limit, you can proceed to the next level of appeal.⁷⁰

There are a couple of exceptions to the general rule that requires you to exhaust all administrative remedies before you can bring an Article 78 petition. Because the courts rarely grant these exceptions, you should not rely on them. Instead, you should assume that you must first exhaust all administrative remedies.

The first possible exception is when your appeal for an administrative remedy would have no chance of succeeding. In one New York state case, the court said that the finality requirement of N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7801(1) may be relaxed if trying to obtain an administrative remedy "reasonably appears to be futile."⁷¹ But you should be aware that it is not common for courts to find that an appeal "reasonably appears to be futile," or unlikely to succeed.

The second possible exception is when an order is made that could harm you without the court stepping in to protect you. This is when a "non-final order" will result in "irreparable harm" without court intervention (without the court taking some kind of action).⁷² "Irreparable harm" is harm that cannot be changed or reversed after it happens. A "non-final order" is a court order that does not end or get rid of a case or issue. If irreparable harm from a non-final order is going to happen before you can try to appeal, you can ask the court to step in under Article 78. For example, if a decision by the disciplinary board was going to take place before you could appeal it, the court could intervene by taking you out of your facility. Or if you were not receiving medical benefits that should be provided under state or federal law, the court could intervene before the appeal by providing those benefits to you (to avoid "unnecessary hardship" on "poor, needy individuals" in the words of one court).⁷³

The third possible exception is when an agency does something that is unconstitutional or does something it does not have the power to do.⁷⁴ This exception is a limited one and, as one court has pointed out, "[t]he mere assertion that a constitutional right is involved will not excuse the failure to pursue established administrative remedies that can provide the requested relief."⁷⁵ This means that you cannot simply claim that something is unconstitutional to try to get around the requirement of exhausting the remedies available from the administrative agency. It also could be a problem to bring a constitutional claim that would require the court to review facts made on the record by the administrative agency. In one case the court declined the exception for this reason.⁷⁶

68. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 253.8 (2018).

69. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 254.8 (2018).

70. See, e.g., N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8006.4(c) (2018) (if you appeal a parole decision and the appeal unit does not issue its findings within four months of receiving your appeal, you are considered to have exhausted your administrative remedies and may bring your appeal to the courts through an Article 78 petition).

71. Martin v. Ambach, 85 A.D.2d 869, 870, 446 N.Y.S.2d 468, 470 (3d Dept. 1981) (noting that the lower court had relied upon such reasoning).

72. Martin v. Ambach, 85 A.D.2d 869, 871, 446 N.Y.S.2d 468, 470 (3d Dept. 1981).

73. See Lutsky v. Shuart, 74 Misc.2d 436, 438, 342 N.Y.S.2d 709, 712 n.2 (Sup. Ct. Nassau County 1973), aff'd, 43 A.D.2d 1016, 351 N.Y.S.2d 946 (2d Dept. 1974) (holding that welfare recipient seeking medical benefits does not have to exhaust administrative remedies before bringing an Article 78 petition); see also Valdes v. Kirby, 92 Misc.2d 367, 371, 399 N.Y.S.2d 972, 974–975 (Sup. Ct. Suffolk County 1977) (holding exhaustion not required for petitioner seeking housing shelter allowance and facing possible eviction before proceedings).

74. Dineen v. Borghard, 100 A.D.2d 547, 548, 473 N.Y.S.2d 247, 249 (2d Dept. 1984) (holding plaintiff was not required to exhaust administrative remedies since he was alleging violations of his statutory and constitutional rights).

75. Levine v. Bd. of Educ. of N.Y., 186 A.D.2d 743, 744, 589 N.Y.S.2d 181, 183 (2d Dept. 1992).

76. Levine v. Bd. of Educ. of N.Y., 186 A.D.2d 743, 744, 589 N.Y.S.2d 181, 183 (2d Dept. 1992); see also Timber Ridge Homes at Brookhaven v. State of N.Y., 223 A.D.2d 635, 636, 637 N.Y.S.2d 179, 180 (2d Dept. 1996)

So, it is possible that a court might allow you to proceed with an Article 78 motion even if you have not exhausted all of the administrative remedies if you can demonstrate: (1) your appeal for an administrative remedy has no chance of succeeding, (2) you would suffer irreparable harm without some judicial (court) intervention, or (3) an unconstitutional action or action beyond an agency's powers is taken against you. Remember that these exceptions rarely work, and it is safest to pursue all possible appeals within the agency or prison system before filing an Article 78 proceeding in court.

3. Your Article 78 Petition Must Be Filed Within Four Months After the Administrative Decision Becomes Final

Your Article 78 petition must be filed with the court no later than four months after the date that the administrative determination that you want to challenge becomes final.⁷⁷ This four-month period is called the "statute of limitations." As soon as you have exhausted your administrative appeals, you should get to work on writing and filing your petition. If you wait longer than four months to do this, the court will dismiss your petition. Part D(8) explains how you can file and serve your petition.

To find out the deadline for filing your papers, you must first determine when the decision you are challenging became final. The statute of limitations will usually run from the date when you receive notice of the determination you are challenging. It will not begin to run until you receive final notice from the highest possible administrative authority. Sometimes the authority may not notify you. If the authority has not notified you and the time when you were supposed to be notified has passed, you can assume your appeal has been denied.⁷⁸

If you apply for a rehearing (instead of another appeal) by the highest agency or prison board, the courts will not extend the statute of limitations period to cover the rehearing application period (unless the law gives you the right to a rehearing).⁷⁹ So, unless a rehearing is required by law, you should treat the notice of the final appeal decision as the time when the four-month statute of limitations period begins. The law on statute of limitations is complicated. If you are confused about when you need to file your papers, it is a good idea to plan on filing them within four months of the date you receive the order or decision about which you are complaining.⁸⁰

Following "service" (delivery of the papers to the Attorney General and the respondents), be sure to send "proof of service" to the court clerk. Proof of service should include an affidavit of service (which states that the papers were served on the Attorney General, the Attorney General's Office, and the respondents).

D. Procedures for Filing an Article 78 Petition

In the past few years, New York State has changed its civil procedure law (the law that tells you when, where, and how to file claims). Even though the new rules are similar to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, there are still significant differences. Even if you are familiar with the Federal Rules, you should still review New York's rules carefully.⁸¹

(holding that constitutional challenge that depends on the facts cannot be brought until the factual record is developed by the agency).

77. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 217(1) (McKinney 2007 & Supp. 2013).

78. See, e.g., N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 8006.4(c) (if an appeal of a parole decision does not result in the appeal unit issuing its findings within four months of receiving the appeal, administrative remedies are deemed to have been exhausted and an appeal may be brought before the courts).

79. See De Milio v. Borghard, 55 N.Y.2d 216, 220, 433 N.E.2d 506, 507–508, 448 N.Y.S.2d 441, 442–443 (1982) (holding that the four-month statute of limitations in an Article 78 action brought by a government employee to challenge his discharge (firing) from work begins to run on the termination date or effective termination date of his employment and not on the later date when his request for reconsideration of discharge was denied); see also Loughlin v. Ross, 208 A.D.2d 631, 631, 618 N.Y.S.2d 231, 232 (2d Dept. 1994) (finding that in an Article 78 proceeding to review a Commissioner's determination following disciplinary hearing, the statute of limitations began to run when the determination sustaining the disciplinary charges against the incarcerated person was affirmed on administrative appeal; the attempt by the petitioner to secure a reconsideration of the determination did not extend the statute of limitations).

80. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7801: 7 Practice Commentary (McKinney 2008).

81. If you are going to look through the procedure code yourself, remember the rules are applicable to special

The Appendix of this Chapter contains examples of the legal papers that you must file with the court in order to use Article 78. This Chapter provides the essential information that you will need to use these legal papers. Do not tear the papers out of the book. Copy the printed language on your own paper, fill in the blanks, and replace any italicized words with the facts that apply to your case. The court might reject your papers if you tear them out of this book.

Under the current law, you need to send an original copy and one extra copy of each of the following (explained below) to the county supreme court clerk, the respondents, and the Attorney General of the state:

- (1) A Notice of Petition or an Order to Show Cause;
- (2) A Verified Petition;
- (3) All exhibits and supporting affidavits attached to the petition;
- (4) Either the full filing fee or a reduced fee with an affidavit that supports your claim that you are too poor to pay the full filing fee.⁸² The full filing fee is $190.⁸³ Caution: If you fail to enclose either the fee, or the poor person's motion and affidavit, you will not get an index number. Without the index number, you cannot proceed with your claim;
- (5) A "Request for Judicial Intervention" ("RJI");⁸⁴ and
- (6) A "Request for an Index Number."

If possible, you should try to keep a copy yourself of all papers you file during the Article 78 proceeding.

1. Starting the Proceeding

You begin an Article 78 proceeding by filing either a Notice of Petition or an Order to Show Cause (described below). Whichever you choose, you will also need to file supporting affidavit(s), a Verified Petition, the filing fee, the Request for Judicial Intervention, and the Request for an Index Number.⁸⁵ The following sections will explain how to do each of these steps.

"Filing" in an Article 78 proceeding means delivery of the Verified Petition to the court clerk with the required fee.⁸⁶

You should file your Article 78 petition in the supreme court for the county where either: the administrative decision you are challenging was made, the administrative appeal was decided, the material events took place, or the respondent has his main office (this is usually Albany County).⁸⁷ This rule applies even if you have been transferred or released. See Appendix II at the end of the JLM for a list of the addresses of the supreme courts for all of the counties.

By filing, you begin the proceeding and automatically "interpose" the claim. This means that if you file before the statute of limitations runs out, the respondent cannot later argue that it took you too long to file successfully. You must file within four months of a final decision.

There are still some drawbacks at this stage, even if you file within the statute of limitations. Your case can still be dismissed unless service is completed and proof of service is filed within four months and fifteen days after you receive the challenged decision.

Filing your petition will get you an index number.

proceedings such as Article 78 proceedings through the definitional section of N.Y. C.P.L.R. 105(b), unless another section provides otherwise.

82. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101 (McKinney 2012); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 8018 (McKinney 1981).

83. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 8018 (McKinney 1981).

84. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 22, § 202.6. See Appendix A of this Chapter for a sample of a Request for Judicial Intervention.

85. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7804 (McKinney 2008 & Supp. 2012); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 304 (McKinney 2010 and Supp. 2014); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 8018 (McKinney 1981 and Supp. 2012).

86. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 304 (McKinney 2010 and Supp. 2014).

87. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 506(b) (McKinney 2006).

2. Notice of Petition or Order to Show Cause

(a) Notice of Petition

A Notice of Petition gives notice to the all parties. It includes the name of the respondents (the opposite parties), the nature of your claim (the type of claim you are bringing forward), and the date and place of the hearing where you want your petition heard. It should be directed (addressed) to the respondent and clearly identify who he is. The Notice of Petition should state where and when it is to be submitted to a judge. It should also identify all the papers the Article 78 challenge is based upon.

A Notice of Petition must be served (delivered) in person to the respondents and the Attorney General's Office, or the case may be dismissed. Unlike an Order to Show Cause, if you file a Notice of Petition, you must serve it at least twenty days before the date you put down as the date of the hearing.⁸⁸ Note that if you are serving by mail, you must file an Order to Show Cause, not a Notice of Petition. See the example of a "Notice of Petition" in Appendix A to this Chapter.

(b) Order to Show Cause

An Order to Show Cause also gives notice to all parties, but differs slightly. It is different from a Notice of Petition because it is presented to a judge and signed by him before it is served (delivered or mailed) to other parties to the case. You might use it because you need an immediate hearing or because you cannot physically serve a Notice of Petition. (Since you are in prison, you would need someone else like a friend, relative, or a private service to help you serve a Notice of Petition in person.) Note that an Order to Show Cause pauses an official threatened action until your claim is heard.

An Order to Show Cause is an order signed by the judge directing that a petition be heard. Normally, a period of twenty days (advance notice) is given to the respondent before a hearing can happen. With an Order to Show Cause, the judge can speed up the hearing date so that it happens in less than the usual twenty days—it can even happen immediately.

In your Order to Show Cause, you should ask the court to allow you to serve the respondents and the Attorney General by mail. Be sure to include this request.

You should also explain why you need an Order to Show Cause in the affidavit (sworn written statement) attached to your Order to Show Cause. The reason can be because you are in prison and cannot carry out "personal service," meaning that you cannot deliver your petition directly to the respondent in person. Another reason you could list is that the situation that your Article 78 petition is trying to prevent is likely to happen in the next twenty days. For example, if you are scheduled to be removed from a work release program in less than twenty days, you may want to use an Order to Show Cause to try to stop this from happening. See the example of an "Order to Show Cause" in Appendix A of this Chapter.

To give notice to government agencies, papers should be served to either: the county attorney (County), the corporation counsel (City), or to any person designated to receive service in a writing. The papers should also be filed in the County Clerk's Office.

You should attach a copy of your petition to the Order to Show Cause or Notice of Petition (as appropriate). The petition should contain a written statement explaining the facts and your reasons for requesting the relief you seek. For more information on writing your petition, see below.

(c) The Return Date

If you file an Order to Show Cause, the court will set the "return date." This is the date when the case will be heard by the court. The court will sign the Order and mail it to you, and it will have the return date.

You can pick a date for the hearing when you send the Order to the court. You should pick a date that will be a week or two from the date on which you think the court will receive your papers. If the court cannot schedule a hearing on that day, the court clerk will cross out the date that you selected and write another one on the Order. The clerk will let you know if this has happened.

88. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7804(c) (McKinney 2008 & Supp. 2012). You should send your papers to the Attorney General by sending it to the address of the assistant attorney general in the county in which the court sits. Your prison library should have the address; otherwise, you should write to the Court Clerk.

In your Order to Show Cause, you must indicate the date by which you will serve (deliver or mail) copies of the papers to the respondent and to the appropriate Attorney General's office. You should give the respondent two to three weeks between the date on which he receives the papers and the date that you set for the court appearance. You should consider the time that it will take for the papers to go through the mail after you send them out.

If you file a Notice of Petition, you must specify the return date (the date when the case will be heard by the court). The return date must normally be at least twenty days after the date on which the respondent has been served.⁸⁹ Therefore, you should choose a date that is more than twenty days from the date by which you will have served the respondents. If the court wants to hear your Article 78 action on another day, it can change the date. The court should notify you if it changes the return date. If you forget to provide a return date on your Notice of Petition, the court should give you a chance to correct the mistake or disregard it if neither party is hurt by the mistake.⁹⁰ Remember, an Order to Show Cause can speed up the hearing date so that your case can be heard in less than 20 days.

(d) The Respondents

You should name as the respondent the official or agency whose action or inaction you are challenging. If you name the official, you should also include his or her formal title. You will need to substitute the name of a new official if someone new takes that job.⁹¹ If your case involves prison records, you may want to name the Commissioner of the Department of Correctional Services ("DOCS") as a respondent.

Bear in mind that you will have to serve documents on all of the parties you list as respondents. The more parties you list as respondents, the more parties you have to serve with documents. Thus, it is generally wise only to list the officials involved and the Commissioner of the Department of Correctional Services. For example, in cases challenging disciplinary actions, it is usually enough to name the Commissioner of the Department of Correctional Services, the superintendent of the facility where the hearing was held, or the state director of disciplinary programs (the person responsible for reviewing administrative appeals).

(e) Stay

If you request a stay against the respondent (a pause in the proceedings) and the judge grants it, then your petition has to be heard before the decision you are challenging can be enforced.⁹² For example, if you are challenging a decision to place you in solitary confinement, you might ask the judge for an Order that you not be placed there while you are waiting for a decision on your petition. If you want a stay, you must ask for it in the Order to Show Cause that you send to the court, like the sample order at the end of this Chapter.

89. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7804(c) (McKinney 2008 & Supp. 2012).

90. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 2001 (McKinney 2012); see also Matter of Oneida Pub. Library Dist. v. Town Bd. of the Town of Verona, 153 A.D.3d 127, 129–30, 59 N.Y.S.3d 524, 526 (3d Dept. 2017) (holding that the latest version of C.P.L.R. 2001 was specifically changed so that courts would no longer dismiss petitions for mistakes like forgetting to put a return date on the Notice of Petition). Your petition may still be dismissed for larger mistakes like not serving a Notice of Petition at all. See Grover v. Wing, 246 A.D.2d 813, 814, 667 N.Y.S.2d 785, 786 (3d Dept. 1998) (determining that a petition was an Article 78 claim, and that failure to serve defendants with a Notice of Petition or Order to show cause without a proper return date made dismissal appropriate).

91. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1019 (McKinney 2012 & Supp. 2012).

92. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7805 (McKinney 2008 & Supp. 2012). Section 7805 states: "On the motion of any party or on its own initiative, the court may stay further proceedings, or the enforcement of any determination under review..."

3. Article 78 Petition

The core of your Article 78 papers is the petition. The petition identifies the parties, explains the basis for “venue” in a particular county (the place where the lawsuit is filed or heard), and states the facts of your case, your legal claims, and the relief you are asking the court to give you. Relief simply means what you are asking the judge to do. You should submit an affidavit (a sworn statement by you or another person) to support the facts in the petition. You can also attach copies of documents relating to your case.

Be sure that you think carefully in advance and make the strongest arguments possible when you draft your petition. For example, if the Board of Parole has treated you differently from other incarcerated people, emphasize that it is unfair for the Board to treat you differently. Also, if there are standard procedures or regulations that you know were not followed in your case, you should point that out. If you claim that the agency did not follow its procedures, you should also claim that the decision the agency reached may be wrong because of this.

4. Verification of Petition

Your petition must also include a “verification.” A verification is a short statement in which you swear to the truth of the statements in your petition. It must include the statement that what is written in your petition “is true ... except as to those matters alleged on information and belief and that as to those matters [insert your name] believes them to be true.”⁹³ You should use this exact language and sign your petition in front of a notary. You can find a sample verification in the Appendix at the end of this Chapter.

5. Discovery: Use of the “Notice to Admit”

An Article 78 proceeding usually does not involve discovery (the part of a lawsuit where the parties exchange facts). Formal discovery tools, such as “depositions” (official interviews of people) and “interrogatories” (written questions submitted to people who may have relevant information), can only be used if the court gives you permission. If the court finds there are issues of fact that need to be resolved, it may grant you permission to carry out discovery. An example of an issue of fact is a dispute over whether someone was present at the administrative hearing. See Chapter 8 of the JLM, “Obtaining Information to Prepare Your Case: The Process of Discovery,” for more information on discovery.

The one form of discovery that you can use without getting permission from the court is the “Notice to Admit.” It can be used only if the respondent is an individual, not the state. You can use a Notice to Admit to ask the respondent to admit:

- (1) The genuineness of any paper or document,
- (2) The correctness or accuracy of a photograph, or
- (3) The truth of any matters of fact about which you believe there can be no dispute and which are within the knowledge of the respondent or can easily be found by him on reasonable inquiry.⁹⁴

The Notice to Admit is particularly useful in cases where you are making factual allegations or where no transcript of the administrative proceedings exists. The Notice to Admit should be a separate document. This document should be a list of questions. Each question should be divided into short parts answerable with yes or no. Do not write long questions with many parts because then the respondent could say false to all of them, even though most or part of a question was true. Also, be sure to list and number your questions. You should send these questions to the respondent, the Attorney General’s Office, and the court with your petition.

93. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3020(a) (McKinney 2010 & Supp. 2012).

94. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3123(a) (McKinney 2018) (stating that the Notice to Admit may be served at any time after service of the answer, but not later than 20 days before trial).

6. Filing Fees

Before December 1999, incarcerated people could file for poor person status (“in forma pauperis”) in New York State courts, which meant they did not have to pay filing fees for claims made in state court. In 1999, the State Legislature made changes to the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules. Now incarcerated people must pay filing fees whenever they bring claims in state courts.⁹⁵ So, even if you or someone you know once filed an Article 78 proceeding without paying a filing fee, or if you have looked at a prior edition of the JLM that reflects the old law, you now will most likely be required to pay a filing fee in order to begin your Article 78 proceeding and receive your index number.⁹⁶ The only exception is for incarcerated people bringing Article 78 petitions in relation to jail time credit. If you are filing this kind of Article 78 petition, you do not have to pay a filing fee.⁹⁷

Incarcerated people are eligible for a reduced filing fee, which may be between fifteen and fifty dollars⁹⁸ (the full filing fee is $190).⁹⁹ In order to get the reduced filing fee, you must submit an affidavit (sworn statement) to the court stating why you cannot afford the full filing fee and asking for a reduced filing fee.¹⁰⁰ If you are not able to pay the full filing fee, you should include as much detailed information as possible about your financial situation in your affidavit. For example, you should tell the court if you cannot work because you are medically or mentally ill, because you are in protective custody due to danger, or because no jobs are available to you. Also, explain any outstanding obligations you have such as child support or restitution. See Appendix A for a sample affidavit to request a reduced filing fee. If the court denies your request for the reduced filing fee, it will notify you. You will then have 120 days to pay the full fee ($190) or your case will be dismissed.¹⁰¹ If you win your case, the court will refund any filing fee that you have paid.

In the affidavit, you must provide the name and mailing address of the facility where you are currently confined as well as all other facilities you have been confined in during the last six months.¹⁰² The court will then get a copy of your inmate trust fund account statement for the six months before you filed the affidavit. If you have been incarcerated in the same facility for six months before you filed the affidavit, the court will get a copy of your inmate trust fund account from the prison superintendent of your facility. If you have been confined for less than six months at that facility at the time you file

95. The requirements that all inmates pay at least a small filing fee can be found in N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101(d) and N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101(f) (McKinney 2012). The fees for each piece of the application can be found on the NY courts website. See Filing Fees, NYCOURTS.GOV, <https://www.nycourts.gov/forms/filingfees.shtml> (last visited Feb. 23, 2020). As explained above in Part D, to file an Article 78 motion you need to file a Request for Judicial Intervention (RJI) and a Request for an Index Number. Both of these documents come with a fee. If you make an application to file as a poor person (poor person relief) and your application is granted, the fee for the RJI will be waived, meaning you do not have to pay it. The fee to get an index number will not be fully waived but it may be reduced. Based on the evidence of your inability to pay that you give to the court in your application for poor person relief, the court will decide how much you have to pay to file and get an index number. This amount will be between fifteen and fifty dollars. There is no fee associated with the request to proceed as a poor person (referred to above and in general as fee waiver application, application to proceed as a poor person, poor person relief, or motion to proceed in forma pauperis. All of these phrases mean the same thing.).

96. Gomez v. Evangelista, 290 A.D.2d 351, 352, 736 N.Y.S.2d 365, 366 (1st Dept. 2002) (holding that the requirement that incarcerated people pay a non-waivable fee of at least $15, while other non-incarcerated people can get their fees completely waived, does not violate the Equal Protection Clause of the 14th Amendment, and is therefore constitutional); see also Berrian v. Selsky, 306 A.D.2d 771, 772, 763 N.Y.S.2d 111, 113 (3d Dept. 2003) (holding that the fee requirement for an Article 78 challenge “is rationally related to the legitimate governmental interest of deterring frivolous prisoner litigation”); Bonez v. McGinnis, 305 A.D.2d 814, 815, 758 N.Y.S.2d 543, 544 (3d Dept. 2003) (same holding as Berrian). N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101(d) (effective Sept. 1, 2015, a plaintiff may seek to commence an action without payment of the fee required by filing the form affidavit, attesting that he is unable to pay the costs, fees and expenses necessary for the action, and if the court denies the application and does not grant a fee waiver, the case will be dismissed if the fee is not paid within 120 days of the date of the order).

97. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101(f)(5) (McKinney 2012).

98. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101(f)(2) (McKinney 2012).

99. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 8018(a) (McKinney 1981). In addition, $125 may be charged if a trial or inquest (hearing) is scheduled. The charge is called a “Request for Judicial Intervention” fee. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 8020(a) (McKinney 1981).

100. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101(d) (McKinney 2012), 1999 N.Y. SESS. LAWS 412 Pt. D. § 1 (McKinney 2000).

101. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101(d) (McKinney 2012); 1999 N.Y. SESS. LAWS 412 Pt. D. § 1 (McKinney 2000).

102. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101(f)(1) (McKinney 2012).

your affidavit, the court will either: (1) get an inmate trust fund account statement for the last six months from the Central Office of DOCS in Albany if you are a person incarcerated by the state who was transferred from another state correctional facility; or (2) get an inmate trust fund statement from a federal or local correctional facility if you were transferred from such a facility.¹⁰³ If the court decides that you cannot afford to pay the full filing fee, it may allow you to pay a reduced filing fee that is no less than fifteen and no more than fifty dollars.¹⁰⁴ The court will then require you to pay an initial part of the reduced filing fee that you can reasonably afford.¹⁰⁵ Only in exceptional circumstances may the court decide that you do not have to pay this initial filing fee.¹⁰⁶ The rest of the reduced filing fee (the difference between the total amount of the reduced filing fee and the amount paid as the initial part of the filing fee) will be collected by your facility.¹⁰⁷ This means that if you are a person incarcerated by the state, DOCS will collect a portion of your weekly wages and outside receipts until the reduced filing fee is fully paid.

7. The Index Number and Filing Date

The court will tell you your index number after you file the documents listed in Part E(2) below. Once the court tells you the index number, you must write it on the line next to where it says “Index No.”, on all the documents that you serve to the respondent or submit to the court.¹⁰⁸ If you serve your Notice of Petition or Order to Show Cause and Verified Petition without an index number or filing date (for example, because filing has not occurred), the paper has no legal weight. The court will act as if you never did anything. However, the court might allow you to fix your petition if you made a mistake in the filing process (for example, if you purchased the index number but forgot to put it on your other documents).¹⁰⁹ On the other hand, if you make a mistake in the filing process, the court might dismiss the entire proceeding. You could still refile, but only after obtaining a new index number. You can do this either by filing a new motion for poor person status or paying the fee again. If you must refile, you should be aware of statute of limitations concerns. See Part C(3) above for a discussion of statute of limitations.

8. Serving the Respondents and the Attorney General

“Serving” means giving the respondents and the Attorney General’s Office a copy of every document and exhibit that you sent to the court clerk. Remember that for Article 78 proceedings, you must serve both the official (person or people) or agency you have named AND the correct office of the New York State Attorney General. Unless the court directs otherwise, the Attorney General must be served by personal service and the official or agency by personal service or certified mail, return receipt requested, with “URGENT LEGAL MAIL” written on the front of the envelope in capital letters.

You may not serve the respondents until you receive an index number from the court. You must write the index number and the court’s designated date of filing (which you can find in the information that the clerk sends you) on the first page of every item that you send to the respondents. You must also tell the Attorney General the name of the judge and the date of the hearing if available. You should include the date of the hearing and the name of the judge on every paper that you send to the respondent if the court clerk sends you this information.

103. N.Y.C.P.L.R. 1101(f)(1) (McKinney 2012).

104. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101(f)(2) (McKinney 2012).

105. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101(f)(2) (McKinney 2011).

106. However, please note that the statute states that “in no event shall an inmate be prohibited from proceeding for the reason that the inmate has no assets and no means by which to pay the initial partial filing fee.” N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101(f)(2)(ii) (McKinney 2011).

107. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101(2) (McKinney 2012).

108. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 2101(c) (McKinney 2012).

109. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 2001 (McKinney 2010); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 305(c) (McKinney 2010) (“At any time, in its discretion and upon such terms as it deems just, the court may allow any summons or proof of service of a summons to be amended, if a substantial right of a party against whom the summons issued is not prejudiced.”). In other words, if fixing a mistake would not be unfair to the other party’s ability to present their argument against you, then you will most likely be able to amend the mistake.

You must be careful to serve your petition on the official or agency you have named as respondent and to the New York State Attorney General.¹¹⁰ (The Attorney General will represent the state in the proceeding.)

To recap, if you are using an Order to Show Cause, the respondents must receive these items before the time specified by the court in the Order to Show Cause when the judge signs and mails it back to you. If you are using a Notice of Petition, the respondents must receive these items at least twenty days before the court date.¹¹¹ A Verified Petition, supporting affidavits, and either an Order to Show Cause or a Notice of Petition must be served within four months and fifteen days after you receive the decision.¹¹² It is important to serve papers far enough ahead so that there is time to complete the proof of service requirement, which also must be completed in four months and fifteen days.¹¹³ You must serve the Attorney General by personal service unless you get special permission to do otherwise.¹¹⁴ You can get this special permission by making a request for it in your Order to Show Cause. If you are serving a state agency, you can serve either the chief executive officer or a person assigned by him to receive service. You have two options for serving the state officer: personal delivery or certified mail, return receipt requested. If you choose certified mail, you must write “URGENT LEGAL MAIL” on the front of the envelope in capital letters.¹¹⁵ Service is not complete until the certified mail is received by the agency to which it is sent.

While incarcerated, you may have a great deal of trouble accomplishing service. The two most common means of service are personal service and mail.¹¹⁶ Each can cause problems for incarcerated people.

(f) Personal Service

Personal service is when someone (the “server”) actually approaches, identifies, and personally hands a person the paperwork. The server then describes and swears in an affidavit to exactly what she did, and this affidavit is turned over to the court to demonstrate proof of service. An incarcerated person could serve the agency personally either by asking anyone on the outside who is not a party and is over eighteen years of age to hand over the paperwork, or by hiring a professional service agency (which can be expensive).¹¹⁷

(g) Service by Mail

Service by mail is allowed in many situations, but not when suing the government. For example, you are required to personally serve the Attorney general. If you are not able to personally serve the Attorney General, you should include an Order to Show Cause requesting authorization to serve on the Attorney General by mail the material that you originally send the court.¹¹⁸ If you cannot serve the state agency by certified mail, you should also include an Order to Show Cause asking to serve the

110. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7804(c) (McKinney 2008).

111. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7804(c) (McKinney 2008).

112. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 306-b (McKinney 2010) (effectively sets time limit for service); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7804(c) (McKinney 2008) (stating that Notice of Petition, petition, and supporting affidavits all need to be served); see also Long Island Citizens Campaign, Inc. v. Cnty. of Nassau, 165 A.D.2d 52, 55, 565 N.Y.S.2d 852, 855 (2d Dept. 1991) (holding that the petition must be served along with the Notice of Petition or Order to Show Cause).

113. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 306-b (McKinney 2010).

114. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 307(1) (McKinney 2010); see also Lowrance v. Coughlin, 190 A.D.2d 915, 915, 593 N.Y.S.2d 597, 598 (3d Dept. 1993) (holding that without a court order, personal jurisdiction may not be obtained over an Attorney General by serving him or her via mail).

115. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 307(2) (McKinney 2010 & Supp. 2014).

116. Electronic means and overnight delivery service have also become possibilities in some circumstances. See N.Y. C.P.L.R. 2103(b)(6)–(7) (McKinney 2012 & Supp. 2014).

117. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 2103(a) (McKinney 2012 & Supp. 2014).

118. Onorato v. Scully, 170 A.D.2d 803, 805, 566 N.Y.S.2d 408, 409 (3d Dept. 1991) (noting that “service by mail, absent issuance of an order to show cause authorizing service by mail in lieu of personal service, is jurisdictionally defective”) (quoting Matter of Dello v. Selsky, 135 A.D.2d 994, 995, 522 N.Y.S.2d 716, 717 (3d Dept. 1987)). See Appendix A at the end of this Chapter for a general example of an Order to Show Cause. Model your request on the example.

state agency in an alternative manner. In the Order to Show Cause, you should specifically explain the process you must go through at your institution to mail the documents so that the court will authorize that particular process. If there are any other difficulties in serving process that make it very difficult or impossible to accomplish in time, tell the court right away and ask for additional time.¹¹⁹ In the past, courts have allowed incarcerated people to use whatever mail services are available to them. In fact, courts sometimes give incarcerated people special permission to use mail to serve the Attorney General, who normally must be served by personal service.¹²⁰ It is very important that you ask the court clerk about serving process and describe the procedure for mailing at your institution. Write a note asking the clerk to provide specific instructions on exactly what you have to do to serve.

(h) Service by Filing

A final possibility is to ask if you can serve by filing pursuant to New York Civil Practice Law and Rules 2103(d).¹²¹ This rule is basically a catchall provision that says if no other means are available, service can be fulfilled by filing the documents you need to serve by mailing them to the court clerk. Just being in prison is not enough to trigger this provision. You would have to state a compelling reason why you could not serve in any other manner.

(i) Proof of Service

Proof of Service is evidence for the court that you have notified respondents that you are suing them. It is a form that you send the court stating that you served process. If someone else has served personally for you, that person must provide you with an “affidavit of service,” which is an affidavit explaining the time, date, and circumstances surrounding the event. Some professional servers may have a certificate that they send to you. If you serve by mail, you may have to sign an affidavit saying that you mailed it, or you may have to include a copy of the receipt from certified mail. If you are allowed to use regular mail, another possibility is to send the court a receipt signed by the respondent indicating that the respondent received the package. This is called an acknowledgment. Whatever proof of service you have, you should submit it to the court.

9. The “Answer” by the Government and Your “Reply”

The document that the administrative official or agency files with the court in opposition to your petition is called the answer. The answer is a document that replies to each point in your petition by admitting, denying, or claiming lack of knowledge about each point. With the answer, the respondent can also submit any affidavits or other documents to the court. The respondent is required to serve you with a copy of his answer and all attached documentary evidence no later than five days before the hearing date.¹²²

When you receive the answer, you should read it carefully to see what arguments the government is making in response to your claim. Usually, the Attorney General’s Office, rather than the

119. The main problem is that “mailing” has a specific legal definition under New York’s Civil Practice Law and Rules: “Mailing” means the deposit of a paper enclosed in a first class postpaid wrapper, addressed to the address designated by a person for that purpose or, if none is designated, at that person’s last known address, in a post office or official depository under the exclusive care and custody of the United States Postal Service within the state N.Y. C.P.L.R. 2103(f)(1) (McKinney 2012 & Supp. 2014) (emphasis added). A person who is currently incarcerated generally does not have access to a depository under the exclusive care of the United States Postal Service and, therefore, cannot “mail” within the meaning of the statute. However, as noted above, courts commonly allow incarcerated people to serve by mail.

120. See Onorato v. Scully, 170 A.D.2d 803, 805, 566 N.Y.S.2d 408, 409 (3d Dept. 1991) (finding, in certain circumstances, a court may treat an incarcerated person’s letter as an application to permit alternative service even where there is no order to show cause authorizing service by mail); Matter of Hanson v. Coughlin, 103 A.D.2d 949, 949, 479 N.Y.S.2d 767, 768 (3d Dept. 1984) (interpreting an incarcerated person’s attempt to mail petition as an application for an order permitting alternative service, and remitting the case to the trial court such that the incarcerated person could submit an order to show cause).

121. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 2103(d) (McKinney 2012 & Supp. 2014).

122. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7804(c), (e) (McKinney 2008).

respondent(s), writes the answer. If the respondent fails to file an answer within the allowed time, you can ask the court to rule in your favor.

You might want to submit an additional document, called a reply, once you read the government's answer. If you think the transcript or other documents submitted by the respondent were inaccurate, you will want to say that in a reply. If the respondent has added allegations about you that were not included in your petition, you will need to address those in the reply by either denying them or saying you do not know whether they are true. If you do not, the court can view those facts as if you have admitted that they are true.¹²³ And, if the respondent has made a claim against you (a counterclaim) you will want to address this claim against you in a reply. You must serve the respondent with your reply at least one day before the hearing.¹²⁴

If you are seeking review of a discretionary decision made by an official or agency after a hearing, the respondent is required to submit a copy of the transcript of the hearing to the court with its answer. While the respondent is not required to serve you with a copy of the transcript, several courts have ruled against respondents who failed to provide the courts with administrative hearings transcripts.¹²⁵

E. How to Bring an Article 78 Proceeding

To bring an Article 78 proceeding, you must complete the following steps before the deadlines:

- (1) File the items listed below with the clerk of the court where you are bringing the proceeding;
- (2) Serve the respondent and the Attorney General's Office; and
- (3) File proof of service with the court during the appropriate time period.

1. Deadlines

Four-month deadline for filing in court (step 1 above): You must file with the court within the statute of limitations period. If you do not, you will automatically lose your case. Remember, you cannot serve the respondent (step 2) until you receive an index number. The court sends you an index number after you have completed step 1. Plan your time accordingly.

Deadline for service and filing proof of service (steps 2 and 3 above): You must serve both the respondent(s) and the Attorney General and file "proof of service" with the appropriate court within four months and fifteen days after you receive the decision you are challenging. It will take some time to file proof of service, so remember to leave enough time after service to get this accomplished.

Example: If you receive a decision on December 1, 2018, you must file your appeal with the appropriate court before April 1, 2019. You must serve the respondent(s) and the Attorney General's Office and file proof of service with the court before April 16, 2019.

2. Procedure

(a) Filing with the Court

As mentioned above, you need to send to the county Supreme Court clerk one original and one copy of each of the following:

- (1) A Notice of Petition or an Order to Show Cause;
- (2) A Verified Petition;
- (3) All exhibits and supporting affidavits attached to the petition;

123. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3018(a) (McKinney 2010).

124. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7804(c) (McKinney 2008 & Supp. 2014).

125. See Gittens v. Sullivan, 151 A.D.2d 481, 481, 542 N.Y.S.2d 272, 273 (2d Dept. 1989) (ordering respondent to produce transcript of disciplinary hearing, and if no transcript existed, agency's determination had to be voided and a new administrative hearing conducted); Matter of Arnot-Ogden Memorial Hosp. v. Axelrod, 95 A.D.2d 947, 948-49, 463 N.Y.S.2d 927, 929-930 (3d Dept. 1983) (holding that default judgment was proper, as respondent had repeatedly failed to produce transcript as ordered by the court).

- (4) the full filing fee of $190 or an affidavit that supports your claim that you cannot afford to pay the full filing fee. See discussion in Part D(6) above. Starting on September 1, 2019, if the court approves your request, it will not charge you anything;

Caution: If you fail to enclose either the full fee or the poor person's motion and affidavit, you will not get an index number. Without the index number, you cannot proceed with your claim.

- (5) A "Request for Judicial Intervention" ("RJI"). Different courts apply different rules on these, so check with your court clerk to make sure you have complied with the RJI rules for your court;¹²⁶ and
- (6) A "Request for an Index Number."

Mail these items to the correct court clerk and wait for an index number. After you receive the number, serve the respondents and Attorney General with the proper paperwork. You can make the copies by hand.

(b) Serving the Respondents and the Attorney General's Office

If you are using an Order to Show Cause, the respondent(s) must receive these items before the time specified in the Order. If you are using a Notice of Petition, the respondent(s) must receive the items at least twenty days before the court date. NOTE: If you are permitted to serve papers by mail, you must add five days to the deadline. So, you would mail your papers at least twenty-five days before the court date.¹²⁷

(c) Proof of Service

It is important that you file proof of service on each respondent and the Attorney General on time. Without a timely filing, the court will dismiss your case.

(d) Refiling Your Petition

If your case is dismissed because you did not file proof of service on time, you have fifteen days from the date of dismissal to refile your petition and serve the respondents and the Attorney General. Note that, not only will you have to pay the filing fee again, but you will also have to repeat the entire process.

3. How to Get Help from a Lawyer

Courts have the power, under Section 1102(a) of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules, to appoint a lawyer for you, but they do not have to.¹²⁸ If you would like a lawyer, include a request for a court-appointed attorney in your request for a fee reduction or waiver. You can also contact the agencies in JLM, Appendix IV, to see if they know a lawyer who will represent you for free. You should also read Chapter 4 of the JLM, "How to Find a Lawyer."

4. The Judgment

The court's decision about your Article 78 petition is called a judgment. The court has the power to render any judgment that it feels is appropriate. It can modify the decision of the administrative body, cancel it, make an entirely different decision, or send the case back to the administrative agency for a new hearing or decision (this is called a remand to the administrative agency).¹²⁹

126. See, e.g., N.Y. CT. RULES § 202.6(c) (describing procedures for judicial intervention in counties in New York City). For the general procedure on Requests for Judicial Intervention in New York, see N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 22, § 202.6 (2013 & Supp. 2014).

127. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 2103 (b)(2) (McKinney 2012 & Supp. 2014).

128. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1102(a) (McKinney 2012 & Supp. 2014).

129. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 7806 (McKinney 2008 & Supp. 2014).

F. How to Appeal Your Article 78 Decision

The Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court has four departments. Each of these departments covers a different portion of New York State. Your appeal will take place in the department of the Appellate Division that contains the county where your Article 78 petition was decided against you.¹³⁰ Each of the four departments can have specific rules about the time limits and process of filing and proceeding on an Article 78 appeal, so you must be sure to find out what, if any, specific documents or actions are required by your department for each step of your appeals process.¹³¹

1. Filing a Notice of Appeal (“Taking the Appeal”)

Your first step in appealing an Article 78 decision is serving a Notice of Appeal on the Attorney General and filing the Notice of Appeal with the Clerk of the county where your judgment was decided, with proof of service upon the Attorney General.

In your notice, you must explain five important things:

- (1) The decision that you are appealing;
- (2) Which judge made the decision;
- (3) The date on which the decision was made;
- (4) What date the judgment was filed with the County Clerk; and
- (5) What parts of the decision you want to appeal (you can appeal part of or the whole decision).¹³²

A filing fee of $315 may be required to file your notice, but you can request a reduced fee if you are unable to pay in full.¹³³ (You may serve your Notice of Appeal to the court and the Attorney General by mail; see Part D(8) above for information on serving documents.) Remember, you generally must serve and file the notice of appeal within thirty days of your petition’s denial, or the decision will be final and you will not be able to appeal.¹³⁴

2. Putting Together Your Record

In order for your appeal to go forward, you will need a record of your case so far. The record will include all of the information that has been filed in your case, except for any briefs that were filed. A record will likely have your original Article 78 petition, the answer from the Attorney General, your reply, if any, the evidence for both parties, and all decisions and judgments made by the court that heard your case. It may also contain the transcript of the proceedings.

You will also need to add a statement including the following information:

- (1) The index number of your case;
- (2) The full names of the original parties and any change in parties;
- (3) The court and county in which the proceeding began;

130. The four departments are as follows: 1st Department—Bronx, New York (Manhattan); 2nd Department—Dutchess, Kings (Brooklyn), Nassau, Orange, Putnam, Queens, Richmond (Staten Island), Rockland, Suffolk, Westchester; 3rd Department—Albany, Broome, Chemung, Chenango, Clinton, Columbia, Cortland, Delaware, Essex, Franklin, Fulton, Greene, Hamilton, Madison, Montgomery, Otsego, Rensselaer, St. Lawrence, Saratoga, Schenectady, Schoharie, Schuyler, Sullivan, Tioga, Tompkins, Ulster, Warren, Washington; 4th Department—Allegany, Cattaraugus, Cayuga, Chautauqua, Erie, Genesee, Herkimer, Jefferson, Lewis, Livingston, Monroe, Niagara, Oneida, Onondaga, Ontario, Orleans, Oswego, Seneca, Steuben, Wayne, Wyoming, Yates. Appellate Courts – Appellate Divisions, NYCOURTS.GOV (last visited Oct. 12, 2020), available at <https://www.nycourts.gov/courts/appellatedivisions.shtml>.

131. You can find this information by looking up your court and department rules in McKinney’s New York Rules of Court (2012). The relevant parts of the rules are as follows: N.Y. Ct. Rules Part 600 (1st Dept.); Part 670 (2nd Dept.); Part 850 (3rd Dept.); Parts 1000 (4th Dept.). You should also consult Part 1250 for general rules.

132. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 5515 (McKinney 2014).

133. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 8022(b) (McKinney 1981 & Supp. 2007). See N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101(f) (McKinney 2012) and Part D(6) of this chapter for more information about requesting a reduced filing fee. The rules are different for each department.

134. N.Y. C.P.L.R. §§ 5513 (rules about the time in which you need to file your notice of appeal), 5515 (procedure for how to file a notice of appeal) (McKinney 2014).

- (4) The date the proceeding started and the dates when you served your pleadings;
- (5) A brief description of what you are trying to do (appeal the decision in your case) and why;
- (6) Whether the appeal is from a judgment, an order, or both, the dates of whatever judgments or orders you are appealing from, and the name of the judge who made the decision; and
- (7) A statement about which method of appeal you are using, either a full-record appeal or an original record appeal (which means you will not have to put together the record for your case yourself).¹³⁵

While each of the four departments has adopted a uniform, statewide set of rules to handle appeals, you should also check their additional supplements to ensure that you have what is needed to be in the record for an appeal.¹³⁶ Generally, you should follow these two steps. First, assemble all documents listed above. Then, request the Appellate Court to subpoena your record from the lower court. (Though not all appellate courts are willing to obtain original records from the lower court, a court will usually do this for a pro se incarcerated person with poor person status.) Otherwise, you can read and follow the court rules for the specific department you are in.

3. Writing Your Brief

To proceed with your appeal, you will also have to write a brief, a document including all the legal reasons the court should not have decided against you in your Article 78 petition. You must be as specific as possible about your reasons and should cite the statutes, regulations, and cases supporting your decision. You must also be specific about why the judge made the wrong decision in your case. Your brief will likely need to contain a cover page with information about your case (such as the case name, docket number, lower court, and appellate court), as well as your name and address.¹³⁷ You are required to send the same number of copies of your brief and the record to the court and Attorney General.

4. “Perfecting the Appeal”: Submitting All Necessary Documents

To proceed in your appeal, you must do what is called “perfecting the appeal,” which means submitting every document required by the court in which you are appealing, including the record, brief, and any other document your department requires. Each department has a time limit to complete perfecting the appeal.¹³⁸

5. The Reply to Your Appeal

Once your brief is filed, the court will tell you when your case will be heard. When the court requires the Attorney General to file a brief on your case, you may file a reply brief, usually within a few days of receiving the Attorney General’s brief.¹³⁹ You only need to file a reply brief if there are any issues raised by the Attorney General’s brief that your first brief did not cover, or to show why the arguments and cases used by the Attorney General are weaker than your own. You do not need to restate the points you raised in your original brief. Some weeks after you have filed your reply brief, the court will inform you of its decision.

135. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 5531 (McKinney 2014).

136. See McKinney’s New York Rules of Court for general filing requirements: N.Y. Ct. Rules § 1250.3; each department’s additional particular rules: N.Y. Ct. Rules Part 600 (McKinney 2020); N.Y. Ct. Rules Part 670, (McKinney 2020); N.Y. Ct. Rules Part 850 (McKinney 2020); and N.Y. Ct. Rules Part 1000 (McKinney 2020).

137. For information and requirements for your brief, see McKinney’s New York Rules of Court. N.Y. Ct. Rules § 1250.8 (Form and content of briefs).

138. N.Y. CT. RULES § 1250.9 (McKinney 2020) (Time, number and manner of filing of records, appendices and briefs).

139. N.Y. CT. RULES § 1250.9(d) (McKinney 2020). You have ten days to file your reply unless you are within the First Judicial Department in which case you should check the court’s published term calendar.

G. Conclusion

Article 78 is available to appeal decisions by state officials or agencies but not courts. You may use it only when you have exhausted other remedies. Since Article 78 petitions are your last chance to challenge administrative decisions, pay attention to Part A's requirements and Part D's procedures for filing or appealing a petition. Remember, you can only challenge decisions or actions you think are illegal, not just unfair. If you are unsure what type of petition is available, read Part B's possible complaints and actions, and Part C's limits on what you can challenge. Appendix A's sample forms and instructions will help you prepare a petition.

APPENDIX A

SAMPLE ARTICLE 78 PETITIONS AND SUPPORTING PAPERS

This Appendix A contains the following documents:

A-1: Order to Show Cause

A-2: Affidavit in Support of Order to Show Cause

A-3: Notice of Petition

A-4: Article 78 Petition

A-5: Verification of Petition

A-6: Request for Judicial Intervention

A-7: Application for an Index Number

A-8: Affidavit in Support of Request for Reduction/Waiver of Fees

These documents are intended to guide you when you file your own petition. DO NOT TEAR THESE FORMS FROM THE JLM Copy them on your own paper and fill them out according to the facts of the administrative decision you are challenging.

A-1. ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE

At a Term of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, held in and for the County of _____ on the ____th day of _____, 20.¹⁴⁰

Present: Hon. _____, Justice¹⁴¹

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK

COUNTY OF _____

	X
In the Matter of the Application of	:
	:
_____	:
Petitioner,	:
	:	ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE
- against -	:
	:	Index No. _
_____	:
Respondent,	:
	:
For a Judgment Pursuant to Article 78	:
of the Civil Practice Law and Rules	:
_____	X

140. Name of the county in which the case will be filed, in all capital letters. When filling in county names, note that each borough of New York City is a county of New York State, but some of them have different names: Manhattan is New York County; Brooklyn is Kings County; and Staten Island is Richmond County. See N.Y. C.P.L.R. 506(b) (McKinney 2006). The court clerk will fill in the date. All roman numerals (small letters in superscript) throughout this Section refer to instructions for filling out documents. These instructions are provided after matching roman numerals presented at the end of this Chapter.

141. The clerk or judge will fill this in. You should leave this blank.

Upon the annexed affidavit in support of an Order to Show Cause of _____,¹⁴² verified on the ___th day of __, 20__,¹⁴³ the Verified Petition,¹⁴⁴ and _____¹⁴⁵ sworn to on the ___th day of __, 20__,¹⁴⁶ it is ORDERED that respondent _____¹⁴⁷ show cause at a Term of this Court, to be held in the County of _____¹⁴⁸ on the ___th day of __, 20__,¹⁴⁹ or as soon thereafter as counsel may be heard, why a judgment should not be made and entered in this matter pursuant to Article 78 of the Civil Practice Law and Rules:

VACATING and setting aside Respondent's determination of [mm/dd/yyyy] [assigning petitioner to 120 days confinement in the Special Housing Unit (solitary confinement, "SHU")] because [the underlying Superintendent's Hearing is null and void];¹⁵⁰

DIRECTING Respondent to [expunge all entries of said Superintendent's Hearing and the resulting disposition thereof from all of petitioner's records and restore petitioner in all respects to the status he enjoyed prior to the commencement of said Superintendent's Hearing];¹⁵¹

GRANTING such other and further relief as the Court may deem just and proper. It is further ORDERED that pending the hearing of this special proceeding and pursuant to section 7805 of the N.Y. Civil Practice Law and Rules, Respondent and all other officers, employees, agents, attorneys and persons working in active concert or participation with Respondent are stayed and prohibited from taking action related to or enforcing Respondent's determination of ____, 20__.¹⁵² It is further ORDERED that service of a copy of this order, together with the papers upon which it is granted, upon both the Respondent _____¹⁵³ and the Attorney General, by mail, on or before _____, 20__,¹⁵⁴ shall be deemed sufficient.

ENTER:

_____¹⁵⁵
JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT

142. Your name.

143. Here, you should give the date the petition was approved/verified. See Appendix A-4 for a sample petition and Appendix A-5 for a sample verification.

144. A sample petition is contained in Appendix A-4.

145. Insert any other papers you are submitting with this Order.

146. The date you signed your documents in front of a notary.

147. Print or type in all capital letters the name of the respondent.

148. County in which you are filing the petition.

149. Leave this blank. The judge will fill in the information about the date.

150. Do not copy the bracketed material. You should briefly explain in your own words exactly what the respondent did to you and why you think it was incorrect. You should also replace mm/dd/yyyy with the date of the determination you are challenging.

151. Do not copy the bracketed language. Explain in your own words what you want the court to do for you or what you want the court to make the respondent do.

152. This paragraph is the "stay" described in Part D. The "stay" will be in effect until the hearing date. The date you insert here is the date of the administrative decision you disagree with and want the court to reverse. Until the court decides your case, this order will prevent the respondent from enforcing the administrative decision you are challenging.

153. Respondent's name.

154. Leave this blank. The judge will fill in the date.

155. Leave this blank. The judge will sign on the line.

A-2. AFFIDAVIT IN SUPPORT OF ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK

COUNTY OF _____

_____ X In the Matter of the Application of : : _____, : Petitioner, : - against - : _____, : Respondent, : : For a Judgment Pursuant to Article 78 : of the Civil Practice Law and Rules : _____ X	AFFIDAVIT IN SUPPORT OF ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE Index No. _
---	---

STATE OF NEW YORK) COUNTY OF _____¹⁵⁶ ss:)

I, _____,¹⁵⁷ being duly sworn, depose and say:

1. I am the petitioner in the above-entitled proceeding.
2. I make this affidavit in support of my annexed application for an Order to Show Cause to prosecute the attached petition pursuant to Article 78 of the Civil Practice Law and Rules which challenges _____.¹⁵⁸
3. _¹⁵⁹

^{156.} Name of the county in which you are making this affidavit. This can be different than the county in which you are filing your appeal. Write in the county where you physically are while you are writing the affidavit.

^{157.} Your name.

^{158.} Write in the decision you are complaining about and the date of the decision.

^{159.} This paragraph should state the relevant facts and why the decision you disagree with is wrong. It should explain the statement of the claims you made in the Order to Show Cause. If there are many issues, organize your statements and arguments into several paragraphs, each dealing with a separate issue. Remember: this is a sworn statement, and it is a crime to include anything you know is a lie. If you want to include a statement you think is true, but you are not completely sure about it, you can say that you are making the statement "upon information and belief."

4. Petitioner seeks to proceed by Order to Show Cause rather than by Notice of Petition because _____.¹⁶⁰

5. Petitioner, being incarcerated, also cannot effect personal service of the within papers and respectfully requests that timely service by mail be deemed sufficient.

6. Petitioner designates _____¹⁶¹ County as the place of venue.

7. No previous application for the relief requested herein has been made.¹⁶²

8. I have moved by the annexed affidavit for a reduction/waiver of the filing fees.¹⁶³

WHEREFORE, petitioner respectfully requests that this Court enter an order directing Respondent to show cause why a judgment should not be made and entered pursuant to Article 78 of the Civil Practice Law and Rules __¹⁶⁴ and granting such other and further relief as the Court may deem just and proper.

_____¹⁶⁵

_____¹⁶⁶

Sworn to before me this

__th day of _____, 20__

_____¹⁶⁷

NOTARY PUBLIC

160. This paragraph should state why you are using an Order to Show Cause instead of a Notice of Petition. (See Part D(2) on the difference between an Order to Show Cause and Notice of Petition and the requirements for proceeding by Order to Show Cause.) You should be sure to explain: (1) why a hearing is needed as soon as possible, but within 20 days (for example, you may be worried about being placed in solitary confinement before 20 days are up); and (2) why a stay is needed (for example, you do not want to wrongfully be placed in solitary confinement before you have a chance for the court to review your case).

The reasons for these requests may be similar (as they are in the examples above), but you should explain them both. It is a good practice to argue that you will be “irreparably injured” if the court does not grant a stay and a speedy hearing—this means that you will be hurt in a way that the court will not be able to fix later if the officer’s or agency’s decision takes effect before you have had a chance to contest it in the hearing.

161. Name of the county in which you are filing.

162. Make sure you include this statement only if this is the first time you have asked for a review of the decision. If you have applied for similar relief, explain why it was inadequate or why changed circumstances have caused you to bring this action.

163. Include this statement if you are attaching an application to request for a reduction or waiver of fees. See Appendix A-8, Affidavit in Support of Request for Reduction/Waiver of Fees.

164. This paragraph basically states what you would like the court to do for you. You should copy the language of the paragraphs numbered 1 and 2 of the Order to Show Cause. See Appendix A-1. You can write them out as part of this sentence without separating them into paragraphs.

165. Sign your name here in the presence of a notary public.

166. Print or type your name and address.

167. This is where the notary public notarizes the affidavit by signing it and fixing his or her official seal to it. If you have difficulty obtaining the services of a notary public, you should have another incarcerated person witness your signature. (Use this technique only as a last resort.) If another incarcerated person is your witness, you should add at the bottom of the affidavit:

I declare that I have not been able to have this [affidavit] notarized according to law because [explain here your efforts to get the affidavit notarized]. I therefore declare under penalty of perjury that all of the statements made in this [affidavit] are true to my own knowledge, and I pray leave of the Court to allow this [affidavit] to be filed without notarization.

[Your signature]

A-3. NOTICE OF PETITION

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK

COUNTY OF _____

_____	X
In the Matter of the Application of	:
	:
_____	:
Petitioner,	:
	:
	: NOTICE OF PETITION
- against -	:
	:
	: Index No. _
_____	:
Respondent,	:
	:
For a Judgment Pursuant to Article 78	:
of the Civil Practice Law and Rules	:
_____	X

To _____;¹⁶⁸

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that upon the annexed petition of _____,¹⁶⁹ verified the [th day of [Month], [year]]¹⁷⁰ and the annexed affidavit of [NAME],¹⁷¹ sworn to on the [th day of Month], [year],¹⁷² petitioner will apply to this Court on the [th day of [Month], [year]],¹⁷³ or as soon thereafter as counsel may be heard, for a judgment granting the relief requested in the annexed Petition.

PLEASE TAKE FURTHER NOTICE that you must serve a verified answer, any supporting affidavits and documents, and a certified transcript of the record of the proceeding at least five days before this application is made.¹⁷⁴

168. Respondent's name in capital letters.

169. Your name.

170. Give the date you sign your petition.

171. List each affidavit (sworn statement) included in your papers. You can, for example, ask witnesses to the facts of your case to make affidavits to strengthen your petition.

172. This is the date on which the witness signed the affidavit.

173. Set a court date far enough ahead so that the respondent will have 20 days notice by the time he or she receives the Notice of Petition and petition.

174. The respondent is required to submit a certified transcript (written record) of any administrative hearing that was held. If you are seeking review of an official's or agency's failure to act or perform an Petitioner designates _____ County as the place of trial. The basis of venue is _____ 175

176

[Sign your name]

[Print your name]

Dated: __, 20__.

administrative duty, then there will be no transcript, so do not include the demand for one.

175. Here you should write in the name of the county that the court is in. You should also briefly explain why you chose this court. Generally all you need to say is you are filing in this county because the decision you are challenging was made in this county. “Venue” simply refers to the location of the court. See N.Y. C.P.L.R. 506(b) (McKinney 2003).

176. Sign here and print your name clearly underneath.

A-4. ARTICLE 78 PETITION

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK

COUNTY OF _____

_____	X
In the Matter of the Application of	:
	:
_____	:
Petitioner,	:
	:	PETITION
- against -	:
	:	Index No. _
_____	:
Respondent,	:
	:
For a Judgment Pursuant to Article 78	:
of the Civil Practice Law and Rules	:
_____	X

To THE SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK FOR _____ COUNTY:

The petition of _____,¹⁷⁷ complaining of the Respondent _____,¹⁷⁸ respectfully alleges:

1. Petitioner _____¹⁷⁹ is an inmate at _____,¹⁸⁰ _____,¹⁸¹ New York.
2. Respondent [Ronald R. Roe, Superintendent of Ossining Correctional Facility, is petitioner's legal custodian and is charged with the overall supervision and administration of Ossining].¹⁸²

177. Your name in capital letters.

178. Respondent's name(s) in capital letters.

179. Your name.

180. Name of prison in which you are incarcerated.

181. Address of prison.

182. Do not copy the bracketed words. Write the respondent's name and state his or her, or its duties that resulted in the decision or action you are challenging. If the respondent is the Board of Parole, for example, you could state that the New York State Board of Parole is responsible for deciding whether or not to parole an incarcerated person.

3. This petition challenges [disciplinary action taken on June 15, 2000], when respondent, [pursuant to a Superintendent's Hearing,] had determined to [place him in the Special Housing Unit ("SHU," solitary confinement) for a period of 120 days].¹⁸³

4. The within proceeding is brought pursuant to C.P.L.R. Article 78 to challenge the final determination of __, dated ____.¹⁸⁴

5. [On June 9, 2000, while confined to a private room/cell in the infirmary at Ossining Correctional Facility, petitioner began to feel claustrophobic and believed he was suffering from an asthmatic episode.]¹⁸⁵

6. [Corrections Officers Smith and Brown were called to the infirmary to restrain petitioner so that he could be given an injection to subdue him.]

7. [Petitioner was in an agitated state because he believed that he was going to be given a dose of anti-psychotic medication.]

8. [Once the officers arrived, they ordered petitioner to stand to the side of the room. He did not comply with this order.]

9. [Once the officers were in petitioner's room, he raised his hands and spoke to the officers to indicate that he did not want to receive medication. The officers reported, however, that when petitioner raised his hands, his fists were clenched.]

10. [The officers then grabbed petitioner and held him while the nurse administered an injection. Then they escorted petitioner to the Mental Health Unit where he was placed in a special observation cell ("dry cell").]

11. [On June 10, 2000, while in the observation cell, petitioner was served with a misbehavior report, charging him with violation of the following inmate rules: 100.11 (attempted assault) and 106.10 (refusing a direct order). A copy of the misbehavior report is attached as Exhibit 1.]

12. [The Superintendent's Hearing was commenced on June 15, 2000, while petitioner was still confined in the Mental Health Unit. Petitioner pleaded not guilty to the charges.]

13. [The hearing officer read into the record reports written by Correction Officers Smith and Brown. Neither report alleged that petitioner had attempted to assault either of the officers. (Copies of these reports are attached as Exhibits 2 and 3.)]

14. [The hearing officer then found petitioner guilty of both charges and imposed a penalty of 120 days confinement in the SHU, finding that the raising of hands with fists clenched constituted an attempt to assault.]

15. [Petitioner did not attempt to strike either officer, however. Neither officer's report said anything different. The reports only concluded that petitioner "raised his fists in an attempt to strike" the officers. Without further clarification or follow-up, this statement is insufficient to conclude that petitioner attempted to assault either officer. Petitioner was not given an opportunity to present witnesses on his behalf.]

16. [Furthermore, the hearing officer did not ask about petitioner's mental state at the time of the incident or at the time of the hearing, even though the incident arose because the staff had decided petitioner was out of control and would have to be medicated by force, and even though petitioner was

183. Again, do not copy the bracketed words. You should give the date when you were told about the decision that you are complaining of and briefly describe the decision. If you are requesting that the court order the respondent to do something required by law, you should explain that the respondent has not performed its duty.

184. In this paragraph, you should state how your administrative remedies have been exhausted.

185. Again, do not copy the bracketed words. State what happened in your own words, and be sure to include all of the facts the court might think are important. Then state why you think the decision was incorrectly made. If you know of a specific law that applies, you should include it in your statement. This section will usually run for several paragraphs; separate each issue or argument into different paragraphs to make your petition more understandable.

The sample facts and argument in this and following paragraphs have been shortened for reasons of space and clarity. You will want to go into more detail than is given here.

housed in the Mental Health Unit at the time of the hearing. Petitioner's mental state affected his responsibility for his actions and his ability to proceed at the hearing.]

17. Respondent's determination was [arbitrary, capricious, and an abuse of discretion] because [the hearing was held at a time when petitioner was incompetent to proceed on his own behalf, petitioner had no opportunity to present witnesses on his behalf, and respondent failed to determine petitioner's mental state. Because petitioner had suffered a claustrophobic attack and sudden involuntary medication, he cannot be held responsible for refusing the direct order.]¹⁸⁶

18. [No previous application has been made for the requested relief.]¹⁸⁷

WHEREFORE, petitioner respectfully requests that judgment be entered pursuant to Article 78 of the Civil Practice Law and Rules:

1. VACATING and setting aside Respondent's determination of June 15, 2000, assigning petitioner to 120 days confinement in the Special Housing Unit (solitary confinement, "SHU") because the underlying Superintendent's Hearing is null and void;

2. DIRECTING Respondent to expunge all entries of said Superintendent's Hearing and the resulting disposition thereof from all of petitioner's records and restore petitioner in all respects to the status he enjoyed prior to the commencement of said Superintendent's Hearing;

3. GRANTING such other and further relief as the Court may deem just and proper.]¹⁸⁸

_____¹⁸⁹

[your name]

Petitioner, pro se.¹⁹⁰

Dated: _____¹⁹¹

186. Here you should state the particular legal mistake that the respondent made in making the determination that you are challenging. Refer to Part B of this Chapter for a description of the basic legal reasons why decisions may be challenged in an Article 78 proceeding. They are:

- (1) That the respondent failed or refused to perform a duty required by law (this would include constitutional violations and violations of Department of Correctional Services regulations);
- (2) That the respondent exceeded his or her legal authority;
- (3) That the respondent's determination was arbitrary, capricious, or an abuse of discretion; or
- (4) That the respondent's determination was not supported by substantial evidence.

You can change these words to fit your case's facts, as long as your complaint falls within one of the Part B categories.

187. In this line, you should state whether you have or have not filed a previous challenge to the administrative determination that you want the court to review.

188. Here you should state what you want the court to do to correct the respondent's mistake. Be sure to request the court to declare the determination that you are challenging void (without legal force). You should also specifically request what needs to be done to set the situation right and undo the mistake, or prevent it from taking effect. For example, you could request that the court issue an order "DIRECTING respondent to restore petitioner's good-time credit," "ENJOINING (prohibiting) respondent from transferring petitioner to any other facility" (if your transfer has not yet taken place), etc.

189. Sign your name here and print your name underneath.

190. "Pro se" means that you are appearing by yourself, without a lawyer.

191. Write the date when you are signing the papers, followed by your complete mailing address. You must also include a verification, a sample of which follows.

A-5. VERIFICATION OF PETITION

VERIFICATION¹⁹²

STATE OF NEW YORK)

COUNTY OF _____¹⁹³ ss.:)

_____,¹⁹⁴ being duly sworn, deposes and says that deponent is the petitioner in the above-encaptioned proceeding, that [he/she] has read the foregoing petition and knows the contents thereof, that the same is true to deponent's own knowledge, except as to matters therein stated upon information and belief, which matters deponent believes to be true.

_____¹⁹⁵

Sworn to before me this

__th day of ___, 20__

NOTARY PUBLIC ¹⁹⁶

192. A verification is a brief affidavit in which you swear to the truth of the statements you make in a legal paper, such as an Article 78 petition. Your petition will not be accepted without a verification.

193. Name of the county in which the affidavit is signed, in capital letters.

194. Your name.

195. Sign your name here in the presence of a notary public.

196. This is where the notary public notarizes the affidavit by signing it and fixing his or her official seal to it. If you have difficulty obtaining the services of a notary public, you should have another incarcerated person witness your signature. (Use this technique only as a last resort.) If another incarcerated person is your witness, you should add at the bottom of the affidavit:

I declare that I have not been able to have this [verification] notarized according to law because [explain here your efforts to get the verification notarized]. I therefore declare under penalty of perjury that all of the statements made in this [verification] are true to my own knowledge, and I pray leave of the Court to allow this [verification] to be filed without notarization.

[Your signature]

A-6. REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INTERVENTION (RJI)

REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INTERVENTION

Index No. ¹⁹⁷

Supreme Court ¹⁹⁸ County

Date Purchased

PLAINTIFF(S):¹⁹⁹

IAS entry date: ²⁰⁰

Judge Assigned: ²⁰¹

DEFENDANTS(S):²⁰²

RJI Date: ²⁰³

NATURE OF JUDICIAL INTERVENTION:

☐²⁰⁴ Order to Show Cause

(Clerk enter return date)²⁰⁵

☐²⁰⁶ Notice of Petition (return)²⁰⁷

NATURE OF ACTION OR PROCEEDING

SPECIAL PROCEEDINGS

☐ Art. 78

Is this proceeding against a:

[Yes/No] Municipality: ²⁰⁸ [Yes/No] Public Authority: ²⁰⁹

[Yes/No] Does this proceeding seek equitable relief?²¹⁰

[Yes/No] Does this proceeding seek recovery for personal injury?²¹¹

[Yes/No] Does this proceeding seek recovery for property damage?²¹²

Estimated time period for case to be ready for trial: 0-12 months

Attorney for Plaintiff(s):

Name²¹³

Address

Phone

197. The court will fill in this blank.

198. Write the name of the county where you are bringing the action.

199. Write your name.

200. "IAS" is the Individual Assignment System, where a single judge is randomly assigned to supervise each part of the case. The court will fill in this blank.

201. The court will fill in this blank.

202. Write the name of the respondents (the people/institutions you are suing).

203. "RJI" stands for Request for Judicial Intervention. This is the date that you submit the request. The court will fill in this blank.

204. If you are filing an Order to Show Cause, check this box.

205. If you are filing an Order to Show Cause, write the date you suggest the case be heard.

206. If you are filing a Notice of Petition, check this box.

207. If you are filing a Notice of Petition, write the date you suggest the case be heard.

208. Write "no" unless you are suing a city.

209. Write "yes" if you are suing any public officials or government agencies.

210. Write "yes" if you are seeking to prevent an agency or official from acting in a way which is harmful to you.

211. Write "yes" if you want to recover for injuries suffered by you.

212. Write "yes" if you want to recover for property damage. If not, write "no."

213. Write your name and address.

Attorney for Defendant(s):

Name²¹⁴ Address Phone

RELATED CASES:

Title²¹⁵ Index Number Court Nature of Relationship

I affirm under penalty of perjury that, to my knowledge, other than as noted above, there are and have been no related actions or proceedings, nor has a request for judicial intervention previously been filed in this proceeding.

Dated: _____²¹⁶

(Signature)

(Print Name)

214. Write the name and address of the respondents.

215. If you have previously brought an Article 78 proceeding that is related to the Article 78 proceeding you are currently bringing, write the title, index number, court and nature of relationship of that proceeding.

216. Write the date.

A-7. APPLICATION FOR AN INDEX NUMBER

INDEX NUMBER

Application for INDEX NUMBER

Pursuant to section 8018, New York Civil Practice Law & Rules

Title of Action: ARTICLE 78²¹⁷

[David Smith

v.

William Jones, Commissioner of the Department of Correctional Services]

Name and address of Attorney for Plaintiff or Petitioner Telephone No.²¹⁸ (PRO SE)

Name and address of Attorney for Defendant or Respondent Telephone No.²¹⁹

A. Nature of Special Proceeding Article 78 Proceeding

B. Application for Index Number filed by: Plaintiff Defendant

C. Was a previous Third Party Action filed? Yes No

COMPLETE

Do Not Detach THIS STUB

Supreme Court, _____²²⁰ County

_____ ²²¹

v.

_____ ²²² INDEX NUMBER:²²³

217. Write the name of your action.

218. Write your name and address.

219. Write the name and address of the respondent (the person/institution you are suing).

220. Write the name of the county in which you are bringing the action.

221. Write your name as the petitioner.

222. Write the name and official title of the respondent or respondents.

223. Leave this blank. Do not write a number.

A-8. AFFIDAVIT IN SUPPORT OF REQUEST FOR REDUCTION/WAIVER OF FEES

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK

COUNTY OF _____

_____	X
In the Matter of the Application of _____,	:
	:
Petitioner,	:
	:
- against -	:
	:
_____	:
Respondent,	:
	:
For a Judgment Pursuant to Article 78	:
of the Civil Practice Law and Rules	:
_____	X

I, _____,²²⁴ being duly sworn, hereby declare as follows:

1. I am the petitioner in the above-entitled proceeding, I am an inmate in a state correctional facility [place of incarceration: _____]²²⁵, and I submit this affidavit in support of my application for a reduction of the filing fees pursuant to N.Y. C.P.L.R. 1101(f) (and that an attorney be assigned to represent me).²²⁶

2. I currently receive income from the following sources, exclusive of correctional facility wages:
_____.

3. I own the following valuable property (other than miscellaneous personal property):

[List property:]	[Value:]
------------------	----------

_____	_____
-------	-------

224. Your name.

225. Name and address of your correctional facility.

226. Include this part of the sentence if you would like to request that a lawyer represent you.

4. I have no savings, property, assets, or income other than as set forth herein.

5. I am unable to pay the filing fee necessary to prosecute this proceeding.

6. No other person who is able to pay the filing fee has a beneficial interest in the result of this proceeding.

7. The facts of my case are described in my claim and other papers filed with the court.

8. I have made no prior request for this relief in this case.

(signature)

Sworn to before me this ____ day of ___, 20__.

227

NOTARY PUBLIC AUTHORIZATION

I, _____, ²²⁸ inmate number _____, ²²⁹ request and authorize the agency holding me in custody to send to the Clerk of the Court certified copies of the correctional facility trust fund account statement (or the institutional equivalent) for the past six months.

I further request and authorize the agency holding me in custody to deduct the filing fee from my correctional facility trust fund account (or the institutional equivalent) and to disburse those amounts as instructed by the Court. This authorization is furnished in connection with the above entitled case and shall apply to any agency into whose custody I may be transferred.

I UNDERSTAND THAT I MAY HAVE TO PAY THE ENTIRE FEE IF THE COURT DENIES MY REQUEST FOR A FEE REDUCTION. MOREOVER, I UNDERSTAND THAT THE FEE DETERMINED BY THE COURT WILL BE PAID IN INSTALLMENTS BY AUTOMATIC DEDUCTIONS FROM MY CORRECTIONAL FACILITY TRUST FUND ACCOUNT EVEN IF MY CASE IS DISMISSED.

230

(signature)

227. This is where the notary public notarizes the affidavit by signing it and fixing his or her official seal to it. If you have difficulty obtaining the services of a notary public, you should have another incarcerated person witness your signature. (Use this technique only as a last resort.) If another incarcerated person is your witness, you should add at the bottom of the affidavit:

I declare that I have not been able to have this [affidavit] notarized according to law because [explain here your efforts to get the affidavit notarized]. I therefore declare under penalty of perjury that all of the statements made in this [affidavit] are true to my own knowledge, and I pray leave of the Court to allow this [affidavit] to be filed without notarization.

[Your signature].

228. Your name.

229. Your inmate number.

230. Your signature. By signing this section, you give permission for your facility to send the Court copies of your trust fund account statement. You also authorize the facility to withdraw the filing fee from your account and to send it to the Court. The entire filing fee will be withdrawn automatically from your account even if your case is dismissed.

CHAPTER 23

YOUR RIGHT TO ADEQUATE MEDICAL CARE*

A. Introduction

The U.S. Constitution requires prison officials to provide all state and federal incarcerated people, as well as pretrial detainees (people in jail waiting for trial,) with adequate medical care.¹ If you think your right to medical care has been violated, this Chapter will help you determine whether you have a legal claim for which you can get relief.

Part B of this Chapter explains your right to medical care under the U.S. Constitution and state law. Part C provides specific examples of when you may have medical care rights. Some examples include: when you have a diagnosed medical condition, when you want an elective procedure (a voluntary, non-emergency operation), when you need psychiatric care, when you are exposed to second-hand smoke, and when you need dental care. Part D is about special medical issues for women who are incarcerated, including the right to basic medical and gynecological care, abortions, and accommodations for pregnant women. Part E talks about your right to receive information about your medical treatment before being treated and your right to keep your medical information confidential in prison. Part F explains the possible ways to seek relief in state and federal courts if your rights have been violated.

This Chapter will focus on federal law and some New York state laws. If you are incarcerated in a state prison, your right to adequate medical care might also be protected by your state's statutes, regulations, and tort law.² The New York Correction Law and the Official Compilation of Codes, Rules, and Regulations of the State of New York explain the right to adequate medical care for people incarcerated in the state of New York.³ If you are in prison in another state, be sure to research the law in that state.

The rights of incarcerated people with mental illnesses, infectious diseases, or disabilities present special issues which are not included in this Chapter. For more information about the rights of incarcerated people with mental health concerns, see Chapter 29 of the JLM, "Special Issues for Incarcerated People with Mental Illness." For more information about the rights of incarcerated people with infectious diseases (and the rights of incarcerated people to avoid exposure to infectious diseases), see Chapter 26 of the JLM, "Infectious Diseases: AIDS, Hepatitis, Tuberculosis, and MRSA in Prisons." For more information on the rights of incarcerated people with disabilities, see Chapter 28 of the JLM, "Rights of Incarcerated People with Disabilities."

It is important that you speak up about any medical issue that you have while you are in prison and keep records of your requests for medical care. If you end up going to court to pursue your right to adequate medical care, a judge will ask for evidence that you tried to obtain medical care in a variety of ways within the prison first. Usually, you must prove "exhaustion" by showing that you went

* This Chapter was revised by Priya Cariappa, based in part on previous versions by Erin LaFarge, Leah Threatte, Helen Respass, Pamela Addison, Susan Kraham, Gail Huggins, Erik Moulding-Johnson, Emmanuella Souffrant, and Richard F. Storrow. This Chapter was generally informed by John Boston's very helpful "Overview of Prisoners' Rights" (Updated for Second Circuit, Staff Attorneys Orientation, Sept. 26, 2006). Special thanks to Milton Zelermyer of the Prisoners' Rights Project of the Legal Aid Society for his helpful comments.

1. See Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 103, 97 S. Ct. 285, 290, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 259 (1976) ("These elementary principles establish the government's obligation to provide medical care for those whom it is punishing by incarceration.").

2. As a person incarcerated in a state prison, you may bring a lawsuit under either state law or federal law. See Part F(1) of this Chapter for a discussion of your options.

3. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 45(3) (McKinney 2014) (detailing the responsibilities of the Commission of Corrections, including the duty to "visit, and inspect correctional facilities . . . and appraise the management of such correctional facilities with specific attention to matters such as safety, security, health of inmates, sanitary conditions" and other things that affect an incarcerated person's well-being).

through the grievance procedures of your prison system before going to court. It is a good idea to keep a record of all of your requests for medical care and complaints to guards and medical professionals. A record of your requests and complaints can help prove that prison officials ignored your medical needs, which can be important if you bring a claim of “deliberate indifference” (discussed in Part B(1)). Keeping a record will also allow you to show that prison officials were aware of your medical problems (the “subjective part,” discussed in Part B(1)(b)). In summary, be sure to tell the prison officials around you about your health concerns as soon as they come up and keep a log of everything you did to get the medical care you need.

If, after reading this Chapter, you think you are not receiving adequate medical care, you should first try to protect your rights through the administrative grievance procedures that your prison has set up for grievances (complaints). Courts are likely to dismiss your case if you do not “exhaust” (use up) all of the options available through your institution first.⁴ To learn more about inmate grievance procedures and the exhaustion requirement, see Chapter 15 of the JLM, “Inmate Grievance Procedures.” If you do not receive a favorable result through inmate grievance procedures, you can then do one of several things. You can bring a lawsuit under Section 1983 of Title 42 of the United States Code (42 U.S.C. § 1983); you can file a tort action in state court (or in the New York Court of Claims if you are in New York); or you can file an Article 78 petition in state court if you are in New York. More information on all of these types of cases can be found in Chapter 5 of the JLM, “Choosing a Court and a Lawsuit,” Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,” Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law,” Chapter 17 of the JLM, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions,” and Chapter 22 of the JLM, “How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules.”

If you decide to pursue any claim in federal court, you MUST read Chapter 14 of the JLM on the Prison Litigation Reform Act (“PLRA”). You should also be aware of the negative consequences of filing lawsuits that are deemed “frivolous” or “malicious” (lawsuits which are based on lies or filed for the sole purpose of harassing someone) under Section 1932 of Title 28 of the United States Code (28 U.S.C. § 1932).⁵

B. The Right to Adequate Medical Care

1. Constitutional Law

The Eighth Amendment of the Constitution protects incarcerated people from “cruel and unusual punishment.”⁶ In 1976, the Supreme Court said in Estelle v. Gamble that a prison staff’s “deliberate indifference” to the “serious medical needs” of incarcerated people is “cruel and unusual punishment”

4. Porter v. Nussle, 534 U.S. 516, 520–523, 122 S. Ct. 983, 985–987, 152 L. Ed. 2d 12, 18–20 (2002) (finding all complaints about conditions and incidents in a correctional facility must first be taken through the administrative remedy procedure available at the facility before being brought to court); see also Booth v. Churner, 532 U.S. 731, 739–741, 121 S. Ct. 1819, 1825, 149 L. Ed. 2d 958, 966–967 (2001) (finding that it is mandatory to bring civil rights claims through the correctional institution’s administrative procedures before bringing the claim to court); Custis v. Davis, 851 F.3d 358, 361 (4th Cir. 2017) (finding that prison officials may defend themselves from an incarcerated person’s suit by showing that the incarcerated person failed to exhaust their administrative remedies, and noting that a court may dismiss a complaint when the alleged facts in the complaint prove that the incarcerated person failed to exhaust his administrative remedies). Regardless of whether your complaint is about one incident, many incidents, or an ongoing condition, the court will not hear it if your prison’s grievance procedure provides a remedy for your problem but you have not used it.

5. 28 U.S.C. § 1932 states that for any civil action brought by an incarcerated person, the court may revoke earned good-time credit if the court finds that “(1) the claim was filed for a malicious purpose; (2) the claim was filed solely to harass the party against which it was filed; or (3) the claimant testifies falsely or knowingly presents false evidence or information to the court.”

6. U.S. CONST. amend. VIII (“Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.”).

forbidden by the Eighth Amendment.⁷ Therefore, if prison officials treated your serious medical needs with “deliberate indifference,” they violated your constitutional right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment.

You must prove two things to show that prison officials treated your serious medical needs with “deliberate indifference” (and therefore violated your constitutional rights). You must first prove that your medical needs were sufficiently serious (the “objective” part).⁸ Second, you must prove that prison officials knew about and ignored “an excessive risk to [your] health or safety” (the “subjective” part).⁹ Since deciding Estelle, courts have tried to clarify how incarcerated people can prove these two things.¹⁰ This Chapter explains each part separately below.

Note that the Constitution does not guarantee comfortable prisons; prison conditions may be “restrictive and even harsh.”¹¹ However, the medical care you receive should meet an acceptable standard of care in terms of modern medicine and beliefs about human decency.¹²

(a) The Objective Part: “Sufficiently Serious” Medical Need

To establish the first part (the “objective” part) of an Eighth Amendment claim based on prison officials’ deliberate indifference to your medical needs, you must show that your medical needs were sufficiently serious. Courts define “serious medical need” as “one that has been diagnosed by a physician as mandating treatment or one that is so obvious that even a lay person would easily

7. Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 104–105, 97 S. Ct. 285, 291, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 260 (1976) (“We therefore conclude that deliberate indifference to serious medical needs of prisoners constitutes the ‘unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain’ proscribed by the [8th] Amendment. This is true whether the indifference is manifested by prison doctors in their response to the prisoner’s needs or by prison guards in intentionally denying or delaying access to medical care or intentionally interfering with the treatment once prescribed.”).

8. Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 303–304, 111 S. Ct. 2321, 2326–2327, 115 L. Ed. 2d 271, 282–283 (1991) (holding that an incarcerated person can bring an 8th Amendment claim by applying the deliberate indifference standard to a condition of confinement that denies an obvious human need, such as “food, warmth or exercise,” and proving that a prison official was deliberately indifferent to that “identifiable human need”).

9. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 837, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 825 (1994) (deciding that for a prison official to violate the 8th Amendment, he must 1) know why a substantial risk of serious harm to an incarcerated person exists and 2) ignore that risk).

10. In 2011, the Second Circuit confirmed what an incarcerated person must show to establish deliberate indifference, and therefore, a violation of the Constitution. Cole v. Fischer, 416 F. App’x 111, 113 (2d Cir. 2011) (unpublished) (“Deliberate indifference has two necessary components, one objective and the other subjective.”). The Second Circuit also has defined a serious medical need as “a condition of urgency, one that may produce death, degeneration, or extreme pain.” Hathaway v. Coughlin, 37 F.3d 63, 66 (2d Cir. 1994) (quoting Nance v. Kelly, 912 F.2d 605, 607 (2d Cir. 1990) (Pratt, J., dissenting)). However, in Brock the Second Circuit rejected the notion that “only ‘extreme pain’ or a degenerative condition” meets the legal standard since “the [8th] Amendment forbids not only deprivations of medical care that produce physical torture and lingering death, but also less serious denials which cause or perpetuate pain.” Brock v. Wright, 315 F.3d 158, 163 (2d Cir. 2003) (quoting Todaro v. Ward, 565 F.2d 48, 52 (2d Cir. 1977)). More recently however, the court reemphasized the “death, degeneration, or extreme pain” formula. Johnson v. Wright, 412 F.3d 398, 403 (2d Cir. 2005). Still, the Brock standard for seriousness remains the law of the Second Circuit. For additional guidance, see Berry v. City of Muskogee, 900 F.2d 1489, 1495–1496 (10th Cir. 1990) (holding that deliberate indifference requires more than negligence, but less than intentional and malicious infliction of injury); Anderson v. City of Atlanta, 778 F.2d 678, 686 (11th Cir. 1985) (finding that a policy of inadequate staffing of medical personnel may raise a question of deliberate indifference); Woodall v. Foti, 648 F.2d 268, 272 (5th Cir. 1981) (determining deliberate indifference by weighing the seriousness of an incarcerated person’s mental illness and the length of his incarceration against the availability and expense of psychiatric care).

11. Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 347–349, 101 S. Ct. 2392, 2399–2400, 69 L. Ed. 2d 59, 69–70 (1981) (stating that placing two incarcerated people in a cell does not deprive incarcerated people of essential human needs or inflict needless pain such that the 8th Amendment would be violated).

12. Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 102, 97 S. Ct. 285, 290, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 259 (1976) (“Thus, we have held repugnant to the [8th] Amendment punishments which are incompatible with ‘the evolving standards of decency that mark the progress of a maturing society.’”) (citing Trop v. Dulles, 356 U.S. 86, 101, 78 S. Ct. 590, 598, 2 L. Ed. 2d 630, 642 (1958)).

recognize the necessity of a doctor's attention."¹³ To decide if a medical need is serious, the Second Circuit (the federal court which governs New York, Connecticut, and Vermont) considers several factors including, but not limited to, the following:

- whether a reasonable doctor or patient would perceive the medical need in question as "important and worthy of comment or treatment," whether the medical condition significantly affects daily activities, and
- whether "chronic and substantial pain" exists.¹⁴

Under the Prison Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA"), a medical need is only sufficiently serious if it involves physical injury.¹⁵ For example, in one case a patient with HIV was denied his medication for several days.¹⁶ His illness was clearly serious, but it was determined that missing a few days of medication caused him no physical harm. Generally, though, if your medical condition is extremely painful, your medical need could be considered "sufficiently serious." For example, in Hemmings v. Gorczyk, prison medical staff diagnosed a ruptured tendon as a sprain and, for two months, refused to send the incarcerated person to a specially trained doctor; however, the Second Circuit later found that the incarcerated person's condition was painful enough to be "sufficiently serious."¹⁷ The general trend seems to be that the courts will consider injuries to be sufficiently serious if they significantly change an incarcerated person's quality of life. The Second Circuit has held that the denial of care has to be objectively serious enough to create "a condition of urgency"—a situation where death, permanent injury, or extreme pain appears likely to occur or has occurred.¹⁸ Other circuits have similarly high requirements for what counts as a serious injury or denial of care.¹⁹

13. Brown v. Johnson, 387 F.3d 1344, 1350–1352 (11th Cir. 2004) (holding HIV and hepatitis are serious needs) (citing and quoting Hill v. Dekalb Reg'l Youth Det. Ctr., 40 F.3d 1176, 1187 (11th Cir.1994)); see also Carnell v. Grimm, 872 F. Supp. 746, 755 (D. Haw. 1994) ("A 'serious' medical need exists if the failure to treat the need could result in further significant injury or 'unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain.'" (quoting Estelle v. Gamble 429 U.S. 97, 104, 97 S. Ct. 285, 291, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 260 (1976)), appeal dismissed in part, aff'd in part, Carnell v. Grimm, 74 F.3d 977 (9th Cir. 1996)).

14. Brock v. Wright, 315 F.3d 158, 162 (2d Cir. 2003) (citing and quoting McGuckin v. Smith, 974 F.2d 1050, 1059–1060 (9th Cir. 1992)). The Second Circuit defined a serious medical need as "a condition of urgency, one that may produce death, degeneration, or extreme pain." Hathaway v. Coughlin, 37 F.3d 63, 66 (2d Cir. 1994) (quoting Nance v. Kelly, 912 F.2d 605, 607 (2d Cir. 1990) (Pratt, J., dissenting)). However, in Brock, the court rejected the notion that "only 'extreme pain' or a degenerative condition" meets the legal standard, since "the [8th] Amendment forbids not only deprivations of medical care that produce physical torture and lingering death, but also less serious denials which cause or perpetuate pain." Brock v. Wright, 315 F.3d 158, 163 (2d Cir. 2003) (citing Todaro v. Ward, 565 F.2d 48, 52 (2d Cir. 1977)). More recently, the court repeated the "death, degeneration, or extreme pain" formula. Johnson v. Wright, 412 F.3d 398, 403 (2d Cir. 2005). However, the Brock holding still seems to be the law of the Second Circuit.

15. See Chapter 14 of the JLM, "The Prison Litigation Reform Act," for more information on the limits the PLRA imposes on your ability to bring a lawsuit while in prison.

16. Smith v. Carpenter, 316 F.3d 178, 181 (2d Cir. 2003) (holding that a jury may consider the lack of adverse medical effects to the incarcerated person in determining whether a denial of medical care meets the objective serious medical need requirement).

17. Hemmings v. Gorczyk, 134 F.3d 104, 109 (2d Cir. 1998) (holding that incarcerated person's Eighth Amendment claim of "deliberate indifference" to his serious medical needs warranted further factual development).

18. See Brock v. Wright, 315 F.3d 158, 163–164 (2d Cir. 2003) (finding that failing to adequately examine painful swollen tissue from a knife wound could constitute deliberate indifference); Williams v. Vincent, 508 F.2d 541, 544 (2d Cir. 1974) (finding possible deliberate indifference when a portion of an incarcerated person's ear had been cut off during a fight and prison officials merely stitched a stump of the incarcerated person's ear instead of attempting to suture the severed portion back on); see also Salahuddin v. Goord, 467 F.3d 263, 280 (2d Cir. 2006) (defining sufficiently serious as "whether 'a reasonable doctor or patient would find it important and worthy of comment,' whether the condition 'significantly affects an individual's daily activities,' and whether it causes 'chronic and substantial pain'" (quoting Chance v. Armstrong, 143 F.3d 698, 702 (2d Cir. 1998))).

19. The Ninth Circuit held in Hunt v. Dental Dept., 865 F.2d 198, 200–201 (9th Cir. 1989), that failure to put an incarcerated person, who lost his dentures and suffered from bleeding and infected gums, on a soft food diet could be sufficient to state a claim of deliberate medical indifference. In Weeks v. Chaboudy, 984 F.2d 185,

Recent court decisions have emphasized pain and disability when evaluating incarcerated people's medical needs.²⁰ Drug or alcohol withdrawal is a serious medical need.²¹ Gender dysphoria has been recognized as a serious medical need in some cases.²² There might also be a "serious cumulative effect from the repeated denial of care" for minor problems.²³ Where medical treatment is delayed, courts

187 (6th Cir. 1993), the Sixth Circuit held that refusal to admit a paraplegic incarcerated person into an infirmary where he could use his wheelchair constituted deliberate indifference. The Fourth Circuit has held that the treatment must be so grossly incompetent, inadequate, or excessive that it shocks the conscience or is intolerable to fundamental fairness. See Miltier v. Beorn, 896 F.2d 848, 851 (4th Cir. 1990). The Seventh Circuit, in considering whether a medical need is "serious," considers such factors as the severity of the medical problem, the potential for harm if medical care is denied or delayed, and whether any such harm actually resulted from the lack of medical attention. See Gutierrez v. Peters, 111 F.3d 1364, 1370 (7th Cir. 1997). See also Rouse v. Plantier, 182 F.3d 192, 197 (3d Cir. 1999), Torraco v. Maloney, 923 F.2d 231, 234 (1st Cir. 1991).

20. Numerous courts have cited pain as an appropriate reason for finding that an incarcerated person's medical needs are serious. See, e.g., Blackmore v. Kalamazoo Cnty., 390 F.3d 890, 899–900 (6th Cir. 2004) (holding that a two-day delay in treatment of appendicitis caused pain sufficient to pose serious risk of harm, even though the appendix did not in fact rupture); Spruill v. Gillis, 372 F.3d 218, 236 (3d Cir. 2004) (holding that a claim alleging a back condition that resulted in pain so serious it caused the incarcerated person to fall down sufficiently created a serious need); Farrow v. West, 320 F.3d 1235, 1244–1245 (11th Cir. 2003) (holding that pain, bleeding, and swollen gums of an incarcerated person who needed dentures helped show serious medical need); Boretta v. Wiscomb, 930 F.2d 1150, 1154 (6th Cir. 1991) (holding that needless pain that does not lead to permanent injury is still actionable); Moreland v. Wharton, 899 F.2d 1168, 1170 (11th Cir. 1989) (finding that an allegation of a "significant and uncomfortable health problem" was a serious need); Johnson-El v. Schoemehl, 878 F.2d 1043, 1055 (8th Cir. 1989) (holding that delay in medical care for a condition that is "painful in nature" is actionable). Miller v. King, 384 F.3d 1248, 1261 (11th Cir. 2004) (holding that paraplegia with inability to control passing urine is a serious medical need), vacated and superseded on other grounds, Miller v. King, 449 F.3d 1149 (11th Cir. 2006); Koehl v. Dalsheim, 85 F.3d 86, 88 (2d Cir. 1996) (finding that loss of vision may not be "pain" but it is "suffering"); Johnson v. Bowers, 884 F.2d 1053, 1056 (8th Cir. 1989) (determining that prison must provide treatment when a "substantial disability" exists); Monmouth Cnty. Corr. Inst. Inmates v. Lanzaro, 834 F.2d 326, 347 (3d Cir. 1987) (finding that medical need is serious if it imposes a "life-long handicap or permanent loss").

21. See Stefan v. Olson, 497 F. App'x 568, 577 (6th Cir. 2012) (unpublished) ("[Plaintiff's] extremely elevated .349 blood-alcohol level and verbal communication of a history of alcoholism accompanied by withdrawal seizures communicated an objectively serious medical need possessing the 'sufficiently imminent danger' that is 'actionable under the [8th] Amendment'"); Morrison v. Washington Cnty., 700 F.2d 678, 686 (11th Cir. 1983) (referring to patient who died after experiencing alcohol withdrawal as "seriously ill"); Kelley v. Cnty. of Wayne, 325 F. Supp. 2d 788, 791–792 (E.D. Mich. 2004) (finding that heroin withdrawal is a "serious medical condition").

22. Gender dysphoria ("GD") is distress because your gender identity does not match your biological sex. Gender Dysphoria, American Psychiatric Association, available at <https://www.psychiatry.org/patients-families/gender-dysphoria/what-is-gender-dysphoria> (last visited November 6, 2020); see also Maggart v. Hanks, 131 F.3d 670, 671 (7th Cir. 1997). Many older cases will not use the term "gender dysphoria," but will state that "transsexualism" or "gender identity disorder" are serious medical needs. See, e.g., Praylor v. Tex. Dept. of Crim. Justice, 430 F.3d 1208, 1209 (5th Cir. 2005) (per curiam) (assuming that "transsexualism" constitutes a serious medical need but deciding the case on other grounds); Cuoco v. Moritsugu, 222 F.3d 99, 106 (2d Cir. 2000) (assuming that "transsexualism" constitutes a serious medical need but deciding the case on other grounds). Note, however, that courts differ over the extent of prison officials' obligations to provide hormone therapy and surgery. See Battista v. Clarke, 645 F.3d 449, 455 (1st Cir. 2011) (finding that an incarcerated person who attempted to castrate herself due to prison officials prolonged failure to provide hormone therapy was entitled to relief); Praylor v. Tex. Dept. of Crim. Justice, 430 F.3d 1208, 1209 (5th Cir. 2005) (per curiam) (determining that denial of hormone therapy was not deliberate indifference under the circumstances); De'Lonta v. Angelone, 330 F.3d 630, 635–636 (4th Cir. 2003) (finding that an incarcerated person with "Gender Identity Disorder" was entitled to treatment for compulsion to self-mutilate after her hormone treatment was stopped); Kosilek v. Maloney, 221 F. Supp. 2d 156, 193 (D. Mass. 2002) (finding that the 8th Amendment requires that treatment decisions for an incarcerated person with "Gender Identity Disorder" be based on individualized medical evaluation rather than a general treatment policy). Even though these cases do not use up to date language, they can help you argue for trans-affirming medical care.

23. Blackmore v. Kalamazoo Cnty., 390 F.3d 890, 898 (6th Cir. 2004) (citing Napier v. Madison Cnty., Ky., 238 F.3d 739, 742 (6th Cir. 2001) (A "plaintiff's 'deliberate indifference' claim is based on the prison's failure to treat a condition adequately, or where the prisoner's affliction is seemingly minor or non-obvious. In such circumstances, medical proof is necessary to assess whether the delay caused a serious medical injury."); Jones v.

look at whether the effects of the delay or interruption—not the underlying medical condition—are objectively serious enough to present an Eighth Amendment question.²⁴ Whether a medical need is “serious” should be determined on a case-by-case basis and not only by a prison’s “serious need list.”²⁵ Prisons are not allowed to have a rigid list of serious medical needs without allowing some flexibility in individual evaluations of incarcerated people.²⁶ In addition, a treatment that a hospital or prison considers to be elective (voluntary and non-emergency) may still be a “serious medical need.”²⁷

(b) The Subjective Part (Prison Officials “Knew of and Disregarded a Risk”)

After proving that your medical need was sufficiently serious, you must also prove that prison officials purposely allowed you to go without necessary medical help.²⁸ This is the second part of your Eighth Amendment claim (the “subjective” part). It is difficult to prove that prison officials knew about your serious medical need and meant to deny you necessary medical care. Section 3 of this Chapter explains the different ways you can prove that prison officials knew about and disregarded your serious medical need.

You have to prove two things to show that a prison official knew about and disregarded your serious medical need. First, the official has to have known facts that could have shown or proven that your health was in danger.²⁹ Second, after the official was aware of the threat to your health, the official must actually have believed that your health was in danger.³⁰ Courts have struggled to determine exactly how much knowledge a prison official must have in order to meet this standard. In general, the standard is very high, as you will see from the cases discussed below.

(c) The Deference Problem

It can be difficult to win a deliberate indifference claim when the incarcerated person and the prison officials have different opinions about what medical treatment is best for the incarcerated person. For example, a prison doctor might give an incarcerated person X medication for his medical condition, but the incarcerated person believes Y medication is better. As long as both X and Y

Evans, 544 F. Supp. 769, 775 n.4 (N.D. Ga. 1982) (finding that confiscating an incarcerated person’s medically prescribed back brace might have serious enough effects to constitute an 8th Amendment violation).

24. Kikumura v. Osagie, 461 F.3d 1269, 1292, 1295–1296 (10th Cir. 2006), overruled on other grounds as stated in Robbins v. Oklahoma, 519 F.3d 1242 (10th Cir. 2008) (holding delay must be shown to have caused “substantial harm” and that pain caused by delay can amount to substantial harm); Spann v. Roper, 453 F.3d 1007, 1008–1009 (8th Cir. 2006) (holding that no medical evidence was needed for a jury to find that a three-hour delay in treating an overdose was objectively serious).

25. Martin v. DeBruyn, 880 F. Supp. 610, 614 (N.D. Ind. 1995) (holding that “[c]ourts determine what constitutes a serious medical need on a case-by-case basis” and that incarcerated person’s ulcers were “serious” even though prison did not include ulcers in a list of serious medical needs).

26. Martin v. DeBruyn, 880 F.Supp. 610, 616 (N.D. Ind. 1995) (refusing to accept “an inelastic list of conditions which [a prison] considers ‘serious medical needs’” because “the definition of such a need is necessarily elastic”).

27. Johnson v. Bowers, 884 F.2d 1053, 1056 (8th Cir. 1989) (holding that a hospital’s “gratuitous classification” of a surgery as “elective” does not remove prison’s duty “to promptly provide necessary medical treatment”).

28. See Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 837, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 825 (1994) (“We hold instead that a prison official cannot be found liable under the [8th] Amendment for denying an inmate humane conditions of confinement unless the official knows of and disregards an excessive risk to inmate health or safety.”).

29. See Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 837, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 825 (1994) (holding that an inhumane treatment claim under the 8th Amendment requires that a prison official “knows of and disregards an excessive risk to inmate health or safety”) (emphasis added).

30. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 837, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 825 (1994) (“[T]he official must both be aware of facts from which the inference could be drawn that a substantial risk of serious harm exists, and he must also draw the inference”).

medications are approved for treating the incarcerated person's disease, the incarcerated person will probably not win in court because the court will defer to (respect) the prison doctor's professional medical judgment that X was best for the incarcerated person. Even if you have your own outside doctor who says something different from the prison doctor, prison officials may rely upon their own doctor's judgment.³¹

A difference in opinion over medical treatment, or even an error in medical judgment, is not likely to win a case.³² But that does not mean that you can never challenge a prison doctor's decisions; "a medical professional's erroneous treatment decision can lead to deliberate indifference liability if the decision was made in the absence of professional judgment."³³ Thus, the prison health official must actually use legitimate medical judgment.³⁴

While general prison medical procedures might be fine for most incarcerated people, forcing some incarcerated people to follow those procedures might establish deliberate indifference to those particular incarcerated people's medical conditions. For example, the Second Circuit has held that a statewide prison medical policy that denied Hepatitis C treatment to incarcerated people with any substance abuse problems within the past two years might lead to deliberate indifference if applied to a particular incarcerated person. The prison followed the policy despite "the unanimous, express, and repeated recommendations of plaintiff's treating physicians, including prison physicians," to move away from the policy in the plaintiff's particular case.³⁵

(d) Common Types of Deliberate Indifference

Listed below are some common situations in which courts have found prison medical staff to be deliberately indifferent to incarcerated people's serious medical needs. They include:

- (1) Ignoring obvious conditions;
- (2) Failing to provide treatment for diagnosed conditions;
- (3) Failing to investigate enough to make an informed judgment;
- (4) Delaying treatment;
- (5) Interfering with access to treatment;
- (6) Making medical decisions based on non-medical factors; and
- (7) Making a medical judgment so bad it falls below professional medical standards.

31. Vaughan v. Lacey, 49 F.3d 1344, 1346 (8th Cir. 1995) (holding that prison authorities can rely on prison doctors even where an incarcerated person's private physician holds a different medical opinion about appropriate treatment).

32. See Flores v. Okoye, 196 F. App'x 235, 236 (5th Cir. 2006) (unpublished) (per curiam) ("A doctor's failure to follow the advice of another doctor suggests nothing more than a difference in opinion . . . and is not evidence of deliberate indifference."); Smith v. Carpenter, 316 F.3d 178, 184 (2d Cir. 2003) (noting that "not every lapse in prison medical care will rise to the level of a constitutional violation").

33. Johnson v. Doughty, 433 F.3d 1001, 1013 (7th Cir. 2006); see also Greeno v. Daley, 414 F.3d 645, 654 (7th Cir. 2005) (finding that medical staff's stubborn refusal to change an incarcerated person's treatment, despite his reports that his medication was not working and his condition was worsening, could constitute deliberate indifference); McElligott v. Foley, 182 F.3d 1248, 1256–1257 (11th Cir. 1999) (finding that failure to inquire further into and treat severe pain, along with repeated delays in seeing the patient, could permit a jury to find deliberate indifference); Hunt v. Uphoff, 199 F.3d 1220, 1223–1224 (10th Cir. 1999) (finding that a doctor's denial of insulin and other treatments recommended by another doctor could constitute more than a mere difference of medical opinion, and that the incarcerated person could potentially prove deliberate indifference).

34. See Estate of Cole by Pardue v. Fromm, 94 F.3d 254, 261–262 (7th Cir. 1996) ("[D]eliberate indifference may be inferred based upon a medical professional's erroneous treatment decision only when the medical professional's decision is such a substantial departure from accepted professional judgment, practice, or standards as to demonstrate that the person responsible did not base the decision on such a judgment.").

35. Johnson v. Wright, 412 F.3d 398, 404, 406 (2d Cir. 2005) (noting that "a deliberate indifference claim can lie where prison officials deliberately ignore the medical recommendations of a prisoner's treating physicians") (citing Gill v. Mooney, 824 F.2d 192, 196 (2d Cir. 1987)).

(i) Ignoring Obvious Conditions

One way to prove that prison officials were deliberately indifferent to your serious medical needs is to show that the problem was so obvious that they should have been aware of a serious and substantial risk to your health. Even if the prison official did not notice the risk (injury, disease, physical condition, etc.), the official can be held liable (responsible) if the risk to the incarcerated person was very obvious. In Brice v. Virginia Beach Correction Center, the court found that a prison guard may have ignored a serious and substantial risk (and thus may have been deliberately indifferent) when an incarcerated person received no medical care after a fight, even though the incarcerated person's mouth was bleeding and he complained of horrible pain.³⁶ In Phelps v. Kapnolas, the court said that a prison official disregarded an obvious risk by putting an incarcerated person in solitary confinement with inadequate food. The court said the official should have known that not having enough food would cause pain and distress.³⁷

In Phillips v. Roane County, Tenn., the Sixth Circuit ruled that correctional officers at the Roane County Jail were responsible for the death of a female incarcerated person. Medical examiners testified that the incarcerated person died from untreated diabetes. According to the court, prison authorities were aware of her deteriorating condition during the two weeks before her death, as she complained of vomiting, chest pain, fatigue, nausea, and constipation. Their failure to take her to a hospital was considered deliberate indifference to her medical needs.³⁸

The risk to the incarcerated person must be very obvious because courts frequently find that the prison official is not responsible when he did not know enough about an incarcerated person's condition. In Reeves v. Collins, prison guards were not liable when they forced an incarcerated person to work, even after he had warned them that he had a previous back injury, was doubled over, and was complaining of excessive pain.³⁹ He was later taken to the infirmary and diagnosed with a double hernia. The court decided that the guards had not disregarded a substantial risk because even if the guards had checked the incarcerated person medical records (which they did not), they would not have learned of the incarcerated person's history of hernias due to a mistake in the records.

In Sanderfer v. Nichols, the court found that a prison doctor was not responsible for her failure to treat a patient's hypertension (even though the incarcerated person later died of a heart attack).⁴⁰ Although the plaintiff's medical records included a history of hypertension, the doctor was not liable because the plaintiff complained only of bronchitis when he met with the doctor. The incarcerated person never told the doctor that hypertension was a problem for him, and his blood pressure later was checked on three occasions and was normal. This means that it is very important that you speak up and tell prison officials about all of your health problems.

If you are making an Eighth Amendment claim that prison officials were deliberately indifferent to your serious medical needs, you should tell the court all of the reasons your medical needs should have been obvious to prison officials.

(ii) Failing to Provide Treatment for Diagnosed Conditions

The easiest way to establish prison officials' deliberate indifference to your medical needs is to prove that a prison doctor diagnosed you with a serious medical condition and prescribed treatment for you, but you never received that treatment. In Hudson v. McHugh, an incarcerated person was transferred from a halfway house to a county jail but was not given his medicine.⁴¹ After eleven days without it, despite repeated requests to the jail's medical personnel, he had a seizure. The Seventh 36. Brice v. Va. Beach Corr. Ctr., 58 F.3d 101, 103–106 (4th Cir. 1995).

37. Phelps v. Kapnolas, 308 F.3d 180, 186–187 (2d Cir. 2002).

38. Phillips v. Roane Cnty., Tenn., 534 F.3d 531, 540–541 (6th Cir. 2008).

39. Reeves v. Collins, 27 F.3d 174, 176–177 (5th Cir. 1994).

40. Sanderfer v. Nichols, 62 F.3d 151, 155 (6th Cir. 1995) (finding that even though the doctor probably should have checked the incarcerated person's medical records, her failure to do so was at most negligence, not deliberate indifference).

41. Hudson v. McHugh, 148 F.3d 859, 861 (7th Cir. 1998).

Circuit held that this was the most obvious kind of case in which an incarcerated person could raise a claim: “[T]his is the prototypical case of deliberate indifference, an inmate with a potentially serious problem repeatedly requesting medical aid, receiving none, and then suffering a serious injury.”⁴² It is important to note that not only was the incarcerated person denied his medicine, but he also requested it several times before he became dangerously ill. If you are making an Eighth Amendment claim that prison officials were deliberately indifferent to your serious medical needs, you should tell the court about your requests for medical treatment to show that officials knew of your needs.

(iii) Failing to Investigate Enough to Make an Informed Judgment

If a court finds that prison officials never made an informed decision about your medical care, you may be able to establish an Eighth Amendment claim of deliberate indifference to your medical needs.⁴³ Prison officials may not have made an informed decision about your medical care if, in response to your complaints of a medical problem, they did not properly treat you, did not investigate the cause of your medical condition, did not order diagnostic tests, did not send you to a specialist, or did not consult your medical records before stopping medication.⁴⁴

(iv) Delaying Treatment

You can also establish an Eighth Amendment claim of deliberate indifference to your serious medical needs by proving that (1) prison officials delayed your treatment, and (2) that delay caused serious consequences. Whether or not to delay treatment is sometimes an issue of professional opinion, but some delays are very serious and may prove deliberate indifference. If you suffered from a serious injury that prison officials knew about, but you had to wait a very long time before getting medical treatment, you may be able to bring a claim. Denial of or delay in access to medical personnel, or in providing treatment, can be deliberate indifference.⁴⁵ In determining whether or not a delay constitutes deliberate indifference, two factors are taken into account:

42. Hudson v. McHugh, 148 F.3d 859, 864 (7th Cir. 1998); see also Erickson v. Pardus, 551 U.S. 89, 92–95, 127 S. Ct. 2197, 2199–2200, 167 L. Ed. 2d 1081, 1085–1086 (2007) (holding that refusal to continue prescribed treatment because of alleged theft of syringe used for the treatment could amount to deliberate indifference).

43. Tillery v. Owens, 719 F. Supp. 1256, 1308 (W.D. Pa. 1989) aff’d, Tillery v. Owens, 907 F.2d 418 (3d Cir. 1990) (holding that if an informed judgment has not been made, the court may find an 8th Amendment claim). The 8th Amendment protects you from cruel and unusual punishment. U.S. CONST. amend. VIII (“[N]or [shall] cruel and unusual punishments [be] inflicted.”).

44. Gonzalez v. Feinerman, 663 F.3d 311, 314 (7th Cir. 2011) (holding that failure to properly treat plaintiff’s hernia can constitute deliberate indifference if refusing surgery substantially departs from professional judgment); Arnett v. Webster, 658 F.3d 742, 754 (7th Cir. 2011) (holding that a doctor choosing an easier and less effective treatment can reflect deliberate indifference, even though the doctor didn’t prescribe the proper medication for the medical condition because it wasn’t available); McElligott v. Foley, 182 F.3d 1248, 1252, 1256–1257 (11th Cir. 1999) (finding that failure to inquire about and treat plaintiff’s severe pain, and the doctor’s repeated delays in seeing the patient, could constitute deliberate indifference). Greeno v. Daley, 414 F.3d 645, 653–654 (7th Cir. 2005) (finding that a failure to investigate the cause of incarcerated person’s medical condition and the reasons why current treatment was not working could be deliberate indifference). See Perez v. Anderson, 350 F. App’x 959, 961–962 (5th Cir. 2009) (unpublished) (finding that deliberate indifference could exist where an incarcerated person didn’t receive pain relief or x-rays for several months despite repeated requests after a severe beating from a fellow incarcerated person); Miltier v. Beorn, 896 F.2d 848, 853 (4th Cir. 1990) (finding that deliberate indifference could exist where doctor failed to perform tests for cardiac disease on incarcerated person with symptoms that called for such tests). See Greeno v. Daley, 414 F.3d 645, 655 (7th Cir. 2005) (finding that a doctor could be deliberately indifferent for refusing to send an incarcerated person to a specialist or to order an endoscopy despite the incarcerated person’s complaints of severe pain, and noting that the doctor could not rely on lack of “objective evidence” since often there is no objective evidence of pain). See Steele v. Shah, No. 93-3396, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 23301 at *2–*4 (11th Cir. 1996) (unpublished) (denying summary judgment to prison doctor who discontinued psychiatric medication for an incarcerated person the doctor knew was at risk for suicide based on a cursory interview, without reviewing medical records).

45. See Tyler v. Smith, 458 F. App’x 597, 598 (9th Cir. 2011) (unpublished) (finding sufficient facts to allege deliberate indifference where an official knew of incarcerated person’s pain and mobility problems but delayed in referring him to an orthopedist); Estate of Carter v. City of Detroit, 408 F.3d 305, 310 (6th Cir. 2005) (noting that

- (1) the seriousness of the incarcerated person's medical need,⁴⁶ and
- (2) whether the delay was objectively serious enough to present an Eighth Amendment question.⁴⁷

Remember that prison officials may have had a valid reason for delaying your non-emergency medical treatment. For example, if no prison official who could properly take care of your non-emergency medical needs was on duty, a judge would probably find the delay justified.

A judge might also find that security concerns justify denying your request for a particular medical treatment. For instance, in Schmidt v. Odell, the court rejected the plaintiff's claim that failure to provide him with a wheelchair was a constitutional violation. The court found that having a wheelchair among the jail's population could pose a legitimate security risk. The court concluded that this was sufficient to show that the refusal to provide a wheelchair did not alone violate the Eighth Amendment.⁴⁸ However, the court noted that the prison's delay in providing a shower chair "appears to have resulted not only in the unnecessary infliction of pain, but also in a needless indignity that a jury could find was inconsistent with the Eighth Amendment."⁴⁹ an official who knew incarcerated person was exhibiting "the classic symptoms of a heart attack" and did not arrange transportation to a hospital could be found deliberately indifferent because of the immediate threat of the symptoms); Johnson v. Karnes, 398 F.3d 868, 875–876 (6th Cir. 2005) (finding that prison doctor's failure to schedule surgery for severed tendons despite knowing they were severed could constitute deliberate indifference); McElligott v. Foley, 182 F.3d 1248, 1256–1257 (11th Cir. 1999) (finding that a doctor's repeated delays in seeing a patient with constant severe pain, combined with a decision to continue ineffective medications and the doctor's failure to order diagnostic tests, could constitute deliberate indifference); Murphy v. Walker, 51 F.3d 714, 719 (7th Cir. 1995) (holding that a two-month failure to allow an incarcerated person with a head injury to see a doctor stated a sufficient claim for deliberate indifference); Smith v. Carpenter, 316 F.3d 178, 186 (2d Cir. 2003) (holding that delaying HIV medicine to an HIV-positive incarcerated person could state an 8th Amendment claim when the temporary interruption of medication causes significant harm). Wilhelm v. Rotman, 680 F.3d 1113, 1123 (9th Cir. 2012) (holding that a delay of more than one year for treatment of a diagnosed hernia due to the doctor's refusal to make a referral for surgery could amount to deliberate indifference); Cordero v. Ahsan, 452 F. App'x 150, 153–154 (3d Cir. 2011) (unpublished) (holding that deliberate indifference could exist where a doctor refuses to refer an incarcerated person to a specialist or to get an MRI, after the incarcerated person felt a "pop" in his shoulder); Spann v. Roper, 453 F.3d 1007, 1008–1009 (8th Cir. 2006) (finding that a nurse could be deliberately indifferent for leaving an incarcerated person in his cell for three hours when she knew he had taken an overdose of mental health medications intended for another); McKenna v. Wright, 386 F.3d 432, 437 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding that an extended delay in starting hepatitis C treatment constituted a valid claim of deliberate indifference).

46. See Gomez v. Randle, 680 F.3d 859, 865 (7th Cir. 2012) (holding that a condition is considered serious, even if not life threatening, if a lack of treatment would result in "further significant injury or unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain") (citation omitted); Roe v. Elyea, 631 F.3d 843, 857 (7th Cir. 2011) (holding that a medical condition is considered sufficiently serious if it has been diagnosed by a doctor as requiring treatment or if it is obvious to a layperson that a doctor's attention is needed)(citation omitted); Kikumura v. Osagie, 461 F.3d 1269, 1292 (10th Cir. 2006) (explaining that delay must be shown to have caused "substantial harm," including pain suffered while awaiting treatment), overruled on other grounds as stated in Robbins v. Oklahoma, 519 F.3d 1242 (10th Cir. 2008).

47. Snow v. McDaniel, 681 F.3d 978, 990 (9th Cir. 2012) (holding that for a condition to be sufficiently serious, the plaintiff must show that the delay in treatment of his hip injury led to further injury), overruled on other grounds as stated in Peralta v. Dillard, 744 F.3d 1076, 1083 (9th Cir. 2014); McClure v. Foster, 465 F. App'x 373, 375 (5th Cir. 2012) (unpublished) (holding that even if the incarcerated person could show deliberate indifference to his need for medical care for his cut wrist, the injury was not sufficiently serious nor did the delay cause sufficient injury to state a claim); Smith v. Knox Cnty. Jail, 666 F.3d 1037, 1040 (7th Cir. 2012) (holding that "even a few days' delay in addressing a severely painful but readily treatable condition suffices to state a claim of deliberate indifference"); Spann v. Roper, 453 F.3d 1007, 1008–1009 (8th Cir. 2006) (holding that a jury could find a three-hour delay in addressing a medication overdose to be objectively sufficiently serious). But see Smith v. Carpenter, 316 F.3d 178, 186–187 (2d Cir. 2003) (determining that brief interruptions of HIV medications, with no discernible adverse effects, did not present serious medical needs).

48. Schmidt v. Odell, 64 F. Supp. 2d 1014, 1029 (D. Kan. 1999).

49. Schmidt v. Odell, 64 F. Supp. 2d 1014, 1031 (D. Kan. 1999); see also Vines v. Buchler, No. 96-1677, 1996 U.S. App. LEXIS 28693, at *3–5 (7th Cir. Oct. 31, 1996) (unpublished) (explaining that an incarcerated

Even when there is no apparent reason for delay in treatment, a court might not find that officials acted with deliberate indifference if the delay does not cause a great deal of harm. In Smith v. Carpenter, the court said that it was proper for a jury to consider the fact that an incarcerated person did not suffer any bad effects after officials refused to give him treatment for his HIV-related illness for periods of five and seven days; the jury found no deliberate indifference.⁵⁰ In Jolly v. Badgett, the incarcerated person had epilepsy, a condition that causes seizures and high blood pressure. He took medication to prevent the life-threatening consequences of this disease, but officials refused to allow the incarcerated person to leave his cell to get water to take his medication until two hours after his prescribed time. The court found that officials did not act with deliberate indifference because there was no evidence that the officials knew the delay would have a dangerous effect.⁵¹

In general, if there is a reason for a delay in your treatment, or if you cannot prove officials knew that the treatment needed to be given to you immediately, you will have a hard time establishing deliberate indifference on the basis of delayed treatment.

(v) Interfering with Access to Treatment

You can also establish an Eighth Amendment claim of deliberate indifference to your serious medical needs by showing that prison officials interfered with your ability to obtain medical treatment. Prison guards and/or prison medical staff can prevent incarcerated people from getting treatment in many different ways, including:

- (1) Denying you access to medical specialists who are qualified to address your health problem;⁵²
- (2) Allowing you to see a specialist but then refusing to carry out the specialist's recommendations (or refusing to carry out the recommendations of a specialist who directed treatment before you were incarcerated);⁵³ or
- (3) Refusing to carry out or simply ignoring medical orders.⁵⁴ person who was denied his back brace for seven weeks and required to perform work on a sod-laying crew failed to show that prison officials were deliberately indifferent to his medical condition, since the back brace was prohibited for security reasons and prison officials did their due diligence to accommodate his health needs).

50. Smith v. Carpenter, 316 F.3d 178, 180, 189 (2d Cir. 2003).

51. Jolly v. Badgett, 144 F.3d 573, 573 (8th Cir. 1998).

52. See Mata v. Saiz, 427 F.3d 745, 756–759 (10th Cir. 2005) (finding that nurse's failure to refer an incarcerated person to a doctor after the incarcerated person showed symptoms of cardiac emergency could be deliberate indifference); Greeno v. Daley, 414 F.3d 645, 655 (7th Cir. 2005) (finding refusal to refer incarcerated person to a specialist or order an endoscopy for two years despite intense abdominal pain could be deliberate indifference); Hartsfield v. Colburn, 371 F.3d 454, 457–458 (8th Cir. 2004) (holding that six weeks' delay in sending an incarcerated person to a dentist that resulted in infection and loss of teeth raised an 8th Amendment claim); LeMarbe v. Wisneski, 266 F.3d 429, 440 (6th Cir. 2001) (determining that failure to make timely referral to a specialist or tell the patient to seek one out was deliberate indifference); Mandel v. Doe, 888 F.2d 783, 789–795 (11th Cir. 1989) (affirming an award of damages where a physician's assistant failed to diagnose a broken hip, refused to order an x-ray, and prevented the incarcerated person from seeing a doctor).

53. See Gil v. Reed, 535 F.3d 551, 557 (7th Cir. 2008) (finding that an incarcerated person stated a valid claim for deliberate indifference when prison staff prescribed the same medication that a prison specialist had warned against him taking); Miller v. Schoenen, 75 F.3d 1305, 1311 (8th Cir. 1996) (finding that prison officials not providing medical care that an outside doctor and outside hospitals said the incarcerated person needed supported a deliberate indifference claim); Starbeck v. Linn County Jail, 871 F. Supp. 1129, 1146–1147 (N.D. Iowa 1994) (explaining that when outside doctors had recommended surgery, prison officials who failed to provide the surgery must present evidence why they did not follow the outside doctors' recommendations).

54. Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 104–105, 97 S. Ct. 285, 291, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 260 (1976) (holding that "intentionally interfering with the treatment once prescribed" can constitute an 8th Amendment claim); see Lawson v. Dallas County, 286 F.3d 257, 263 (5th Cir. 2002) (affirming that disregard for follow-up care instructions for a paraplegic incarcerated person could be deliberate indifference); Koehl v. Dalsheim, 85 F.3d 86, 88 (2d Cir. 1996) (holding denial of prescription eyeglasses needed to avoid double vision and loss of depth perception that resulted from prior head injury enough to allege deliberate indifference); Erickson v. Holloway, 77 F.3d 1078, 1080–1081 (8th Cir. 1996) (finding that an officer's denial of an emergency room doctor's request to admit the incarcerated person and take x-rays could show deliberate indifference); Boretti v. Wiscomb, 930 F.2d

For example, in Brown v. Coleman, the court found deliberate indifference because, although the prison medical staff repeatedly recommended surgery for an incarcerated person, officials with no medical training ignored the recommendations.⁵⁵ In Martinez v. Mancusi, the court found that the incarcerated person could bring a claim against prison officials who had used force to remove him from a hospital where he was recovering from leg surgery.⁵⁶ Prison officials ignored the doctor's instructions that the incarcerated person could not walk and removed the incarcerated person, who was partially paralyzed, without the doctor's permission. This caused the surgery to be unsuccessful. The incarcerated person was also denied the pain medication his surgeon prescribed him, and thus was left in constant pain. In Woodall v. Foti, an incarcerated person with suicidal tendencies had received treatment for manic depression before being incarcerated.⁵⁷ The incarcerated person's diagnosis was confirmed by the prison doctor. The incarcerated person claimed his condition worsened when he was denied treatment by the sheriff, who placed him in solitary confinement. On appeal, the court found that if these facts were true, the sheriff's actions could establish deliberate indifference because he interfered with the incarcerated person's access to medical treatment.

Refusing to treat an incarcerated person unless the incarcerated person complies with an official's order can also be considered deliberate indifference. In Harrison v. Barkley, a prison dentist refused to fill an incarcerated person's cavity unless the incarcerated person allowed the dentist to pull another one of the incarcerated person's teeth because the policy of the prison was to pull teeth that were in poor condition. Although the tooth was rotten, the incarcerated person did not want it removed because it was not painful and he only had a few teeth left.⁵⁸ The court said that in a situation like this one, the dentist's actions constituted deliberate indifference.⁵⁹ Similarly, in Benter v. Peck, a district court in Iowa found that doctors treating incarcerated people have a responsibility to provide them the medical care that they need.⁶⁰ In that case, the doctor had allowed the prison to withhold eyeglasses from an incarcerated person who could not function without them in order to force him to pay for the glasses. The court held that withholding the prescription glasses from the incarcerated person rose to the standard of deliberate indifference.

(vi) Making Medical Decisions Based on Non-Medical Factors

If the prison health staff is making medical decisions about you based on non-medical factors, you may also be able to establish an Eighth Amendment claim of deliberate indifference to your serious medical needs.⁶¹ Prisons should not decide what medical treatment you get based on factors like the prison's lack of staff or lack of interpreters, the prison's budgetary restrictions, because you are about to be released, or because they want to punish you.⁶² In particular, widespread "deficiencies in staffing, 1150, 1156 (6th Cir. 1991) (finding a prison nurse's refusal after several direct requests to change the incarcerated person's wound dressings raised "a genuine issue" for trial); McCorkle v. Walker, 871 F. Supp. 555, 558 (N.D.N.Y. 1995) (finding the allegation that prison officials failed to obey a medical order to house an asthmatic incarcerated person on a lower tier was sufficient to state a claim).

55. Brown v. Coleman, No. 94-7183, 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 16928, at *4-5 (10th Cir. July 12, 1995) (unpublished).

56. Martinez v. Mancusi, 443 F.2d 921, 924 (2d Cir. 1970).

57. Woodall v. Foti, 648 F.2d 268, 271-272 (5th Cir. 1981).

58. Harrison v. Barkley, 219 F.3d 132, 134 (2d Cir. 2000).

59. Harrison v. Barkley, 219 F.3d 132, 138 (2d Cir. 2000).

60. Benter v. Peck, 825 F. Supp. 1411, 1417 (S.D. Iowa 1993). But see Martin v. DeBruyn, 880 F. Supp. 610, 614 (N.D. Ind. 1995) (determining that the 8th Amendment does not require the state to provide an incarcerated person with a necessary commodity that would not be free outside of the prison and which the incarcerated person has sufficient funds to purchase).

61. See Hartsfield v. Colburn, 371 F.3d 454, 457 (8th Cir. 2004) (finding that withholding a dental referral for incarcerated person's behavioral problems could be deliberate indifference); Ancata v. Prison Health Servs., Inc., 769 F.2d 700, 704 (11th Cir. 1985) (finding prison's refusal to provide treatment without a court order was deliberate indifference).

62. Casey v. Lewis, 834 F. Supp. 1477, 1547-1548 (D. Ariz. 1993) (finding that a lack of staff to "diagnose and treat the serious mental health needs" of an incarcerated person constituted deliberate indifference).

facilities, or procedures [that] make unnecessary suffering inevitable” may support a finding of deliberate indifference.⁶³ In other words, you can establish that prison officials were deliberately indifferent to your medical needs even if they ignored your needs because of problems that were part of the prison system (its staffing, facilities, or other non-medical policies). Interestingly, a San Francisco judge refused to send a convicted robber to jail, citing the poor medical care the man would receive and equating a prison sentence to a death sentence.⁶⁴ While this was an extremely unusual situation, the case law may still help you develop a lawsuit based on problems that are affecting everyone’s medical care at your prison.

(vii) “Medical” Judgment So Bad It’s Not Medically Acceptable

You also can establish that prison officials were deliberately indifferent to your serious medical needs if you believe that your prison’s health staff is making medical decisions that are so bad that no trained health professional would ever make the same decisions.⁶⁵ For example, in 2004, a federal court in California ordered a prison to arrange for a medical evaluation of an incarcerated person’s eligibility for a liver transplant. Prison officials had refused to allow the evaluation, but the incarcerated person would die without a transplant. The court stated that the prison’s failure to identify any alternative treatment that would save the incarcerated person’s life supported the incarcerated person’s deliberate indifference claim.⁶⁶ The court noted that:

In order to prevail on a claim involving choices between alternative courses of treatment, a prisoner must show that the course of treatment the doctors chose was medically unacceptable in light of the circumstances and that they chose this course in conscious disregard of an excessive risk to plaintiff’s health.⁶⁷

Anderson v. County of Kern, 45 F.3d 1310, 1316 (9th Cir. 1994), opinion amended on denial of reh’g, Anderson v. County of Kern, 75 F.3d 448 (9th Cir. 1995) (explaining that failure to provide a translator for medical encounters can constitute deliberate indifference). Jones v. Johnson, 781 F.2d 769, 771 (9th Cir. 1986) (holding that budget constraints could not justify deliberate indifference to an incarcerated person’s serious medical needs); Peralta v. Dillard, 744 F.3d 1076 (9th Cir. 2014) (this case limits Jones by holding that only budgetary officials can be held accountable for indifference to an incarcerated person’s medical needs); Starbeck v. Linn Cnty. Jail, 871 F. Supp. 1129, 1146 (N.D. Iowa 1994) (holding that refusal to allow an incarcerated person surgery because the State of Iowa did not want to pay the costs of guards during the incarcerated person’s recovery could rise to deliberate indifference to the incarcerated person’s serious medical need). McKenna v. Wright, 386 F.3d 432, 437 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding that an allegation that an incarcerated person was “denied urgently needed treatment for a serious disease because he might be released within twelve months of starting the treatment” was enough for a claim of deliberate indifference). Hartsfield v. Colburn, 371 F.3d 454, 457 (8th Cir. 2004) (finding that withholding a necessary dental referral because of an incarcerated person’s behavioral problems could give rise to a finding of deliberate indifference).

63. Todaro v. Ward, 565 F.2d 48, 52 (2d Cir. 1977) (citing Bishop v. Stoneman, 508 F.2d 1224, 1226 (2d Cir. 1974)); see also Harris v. Thigpen, 941 F.2d 1495, 1505 (11th Cir. 1991) (“In institutional level challenges to prison health care . . . systemic deficiencies can provide the basis for a finding of deliberate indifference.”); DeGidio v. Pung, 920 F.2d 525, 529 (8th Cir. 1990) (holding that lack of “adequate organization and control in the administration of health services” could constitute an 8th Amendment violation); see also Marcotte v. Monroe Corr. Complex, 394 F. Supp. 2d 1289, 1298 (W.D. Wash. 2005) (explaining that failure to remedy deficient infirmity nursing procedures and other health department citations, of which the prison was aware, was deliberate indifference).

64. Andy Furillo, Ill. Man’s Prison Term Blocked, S.F. Judge Cites Findings of Poor Medical Care, Says Move from Local Jail Could Equal a Death Sentence, Sacramento Bee, Mar. 20, 2007, at A3; United States v. Kulwant Singh Sandhu, No. 2:15-cr-0231-GEB, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105840, at *1 (E.D. Cal. Aug. 10, 2016) (unpublished).

65. See Estate of Cole v. Fromm, 94 F.3d 254, 261–262 (7th Cir. 1996) (“[D]eliberate indifference may be inferred based upon a medical professional’s erroneous treatment decision only when the medical professional’s decision is such a substantial departure from accepted professional judgment, practice, or standards as to demonstrate that the person responsible did not base the decision on such a judgment.”).

66. Rosado v. Alameida, 349 F. Supp. 2d 1340, 1346 (S.D. Cal. 2004).

67. Rosado v. Alameida, 349 F. Supp. 2d 1340, 1344–1345 (S.D. Cal. 2004) (emphasis added).

A “medically unacceptable” treatment may be “an easier and less [effective] treatment” or simply no treatment at all.⁶⁸ Showing that prison health staff failed to follow professional medical standards or prison medical care procedures can help you make this deliberate indifference claim. These standards or protocols can serve as evidence that the prison official knew of the risk posed by particular symptoms or conditions and deliberately ignored that risk.⁶⁹

2. Medical Negligence

(a) Medical Negligence Is Not Unconstitutional

You cannot win a federal constitutional claim of deliberate indifference by alleging only that prison medical staff acted negligently, no matter how often or repeatedly they were negligent. However, you still may be able to make a state tort claim of negligence, which is described in the next Subsection. “Negligence” is when a person fails to exercise care that a “reasonable person” would exercise to protect someone at risk.⁷⁰ Medical negligence is often called medical “malpractice.” Again, “the Eighth Amendment does not protect prisoners from medical malpractice.”⁷¹

At one time, negligence was grounds for liability.⁷² After the Supreme Court’s holding in Farmer v. Brennan, however, negligence—even repeated negligence—cannot by itself constitute deliberate indifference.⁷³ Therefore, in a class action suit brought by incarcerated people in Ohio, the court held that if the incarcerated people could only prove the prison doctor was repeatedly negligent in his treatment, but not that he was “subjectively aware of a substantial risk of serious harm,” then the 68. Williams v. Vincent, 508 F.2d 541, 544 (2d Cir. 1974) (holding that refusing an incarcerated person’s request to reattach his ear and instead only sewing up the stump may constitute indifference if the procedure was medically possible); see also McElligott v. Foley, 182 F.3d 1248, 1256–1257 (11th Cir. 1999) (determining that medical staff’s failure to examine and treat patient’s severe pain, and repeated delays in examination of the patient, could support a finding of deliberate indifference).

69. Mata v. Saiz, 427 F.3d 745, 757 (10th Cir. 2005) (explaining that violation of prison medical protocols was circumstantial evidence that the nurse “knew of a substantial risk of serious harm”).

70. See Negligence, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019) (defining negligence as the “[t]he failure to exercise the standard of care that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in a similar situation”).

71. Rosado v. Alameida, 349 F. Supp. 2d 1340, 1344 (S.D. Cal. 2004) (emphasis added). This proposition was suggested earlier by Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 105–106, 97 S. Ct. 285, 291–292, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 260–261 (1976). But note that an allegation of medical malpractice does not prevent a finding of deliberate indifference. Hathaway v. Coughlin, 99 F.3d 550, 553 (2d Cir. 1996).

72. For example, in Todaro v. Ward, 565 F.2d 48, 52 (2d Cir. 1977), the court held that “while a single instance of medical care denied or delayed, viewed in isolation, may appear to be the product of mere negligence, repeated examples of such treatment [indicate] a deliberate indifference by prison authorities.” There are also three pre-Farmer cases finding that repeated negligence can indicate deliberate indifference: Harris v. Thigpen, 941 F.2d 1495, 1505 (11th Cir. 1991) (noting that although “[m]ere incidents of negligence or malpractice do not rise to the level of constitutional violations . . . systemic deficiencies can provide the basis for a finding of deliberate indifference”); DeGidio v. Pung, 920 F.2d 525, 533 (8th Cir. 1990) (holding that a “consistent pattern of reckless or negligent conduct” establishes deliberate indifference); Ramos v. Lamm, 639 F.2d 559, 575 (10th Cir. 1980) (observing that in class action suits, “deliberate indifference to inmates’ health needs may be shown [either] by proving repeated examples of negligent acts which disclose a pattern of conduct by the prison medical staff . . . or by proving there are such systemic and gross deficiencies in staffing, facilities, equipment, or procedures that the inmate population is effectively denied access to adequate medical care”). For more information, see Part B(1)(d)(vi) of this Chapter, “Making Medical Decisions Based on Non-Medical Factors.”

73. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 835–837, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1977–1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 824–825 (1994) (holding deliberate indifference does not include negligence, even repeated acts of negligence, and to prove deliberate indifference, an incarcerated person must show the prison official actually knew about a “substantial risk of serious harm”). This proposition was suggested earlier by Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 105–106, 97 S. Ct. 285, 291–292, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 260–261 (1976) (stating that “a complaint that a physician has been negligent” does not support an 8th Amendment claim and that “a prisoner must allege acts or omissions sufficiently harmful to evidence deliberate indifference to medical needs”).

incarcerated person had not stated an Eighth Amendment claim.⁷⁴ Even if it is possible that an official's action led to the death of a incarcerated person, negligence alone is not enough to bring a federal constitutional claim.⁷⁵ Repeated acts of negligence can be evidence that a prison official is ignoring a substantial risk, but acts of negligence by themselves, without any other claim, cannot count as deliberate indifference.⁷⁶

(b) State Law Negligence Claims Are Possible

If you believe that you were injured because prison medical staff acted negligently, you cannot make an Eighth Amendment deliberate indifference claim, but you can still make a negligence claim under state law. To prove negligence under state law, you must prove that (1) the defendant (your prison) owed a duty of care to you; and (2) that this duty was “breached,” meaning that the prison was responsible for some aspect of your well-being and did not honor its responsibility.⁷⁷ Therefore, you must ask whether the prison's medical practitioner did for you what a reasonable health professional would have done for you in the same circumstances.⁷⁸

You can find many of the duties a prison owes its incarcerated people listed in state laws. Thus, a person incarcerated in New York could use the state corrections law to prove that New York prisons have a duty to “provide reasonable and adequate medical care to incarcerated people.”⁷⁹ State case law also provides clear definitions of what duties a prison owes to people who are incarcerated in that facility. In New York, in order to prove a medical malpractice claim, the incarcerated person must prove a departure from accepted practice and that this departure was the “proximate cause” of the injury. To prove proximate cause, you must show that the injury would not have occurred without the departure from accepted practice.⁸⁰ The court of claims also recognizes medical negligence as a cause of action. A state may be liable for “ministerial neglect” if employees fail to comply with the prison's

74. Brooks v. Celeste, 39 F.3d 125, 129 (6th Cir. 1994) (making a clear distinction between the doctor being “merely repeatedly negligent” and acting with “deliberate indifference”); see also Hathaway v. Coughlin, 37 F.3d 63, 66 (2d Cir. 1994) (quoting Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 837, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 825 (1994)) (“Deliberate indifference requires more than negligence . . . [A] prison official does not act in a deliberately indifferent manner unless that official ‘knows of and disregards an excessive risk to inmate health or safety’”).

75. Howard v. Calhoun Cnty., 148 F. Supp. 2d 883, 889–890 (W.D. Mich. 2001) (concluding that although it was possible that the official was negligent in the way she handled the collapse of an incarcerated person who then died of a heart attack, negligence alone did not meet the standard of deliberate indifference).

76. Judge Posner offers a long discussion of the difference in Sellers v. Henman, explaining, “[i]t is vital to keep negligence and deliberate indifference apart. It may be . . . that repeated acts of negligence are some evidence of deliberate indifference.” Thus, “[t]he more negligent acts [prison officials] commit in a circumscribed interval, the likelier it is that they know they are creating some risk, and if the negligence is sufficiently widespread relative to the prison population[,] the cumulative risk to an individual prisoner may be excessive.” Despite this, “the presence of multiple acts of negligence [merely offers some evidence to support a claim]; it is not an alternative theory of liability.” Sellers v. Henman, 41 F.3d 1100, 1102–1103 (7th Cir. 1994); see also Brooks v. Celeste, 39 F.3d 125, 128 (6th Cir. 1994) (“[R]epeated acts, viewed singly and in isolation, would appear to be mere negligence; however, viewed together and as a pattern, the acts show . . . that each act was committed with deliberate indifference.”).

77. See Part B(2) of Chapter 17 of the JLM, “The State's Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions,” to learn more about negligence and negligence-based torts.

78. See Negligence, Black's Law Dictionary (11th ed. 2019) (defining negligence as the “[t]he failure to exercise the standard of care that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in a similar situation”).

79. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 70(2)(c) (McKinney 2014) (stating that correctional facilities must be established and maintained with due regard to the “health and safety of every person in the custody of the department.”); N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 23(2) (McKinney 2014) (permitting transfer of incarcerated people to outside hospital facilities for medical care); see also Rivers v. State, 159 A.D.2d 788, 789, 552 N.Y.S.2d 189, 189 (3d Dept. 1990) (noting that the state has a duty to provide reasonable and adequate medical care to incarcerated people); La Rocca v. Dalsheim, 120 Misc. 2d 697, 708, 467 N.Y.S.2d 302, 310 (Sup. Ct. Dutchess Cnty. 1983) (noting that the state has a duty to “provide a safe and humane place of confinement for its inmates”).

80. Brown v. State, 192 A.D.2d 936, 938, 596 N.Y.S.2d 882, 884 (3d Dept. 1993) (emphasizing that plaintiff must establish that his injuries were “caused” by the prison's negligence).

own administrative procedures for providing medical care to incarcerated people.⁸¹ If you want to make a state tort claim of medical negligence or medical malpractice, see Chapter 17 of the JLM, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions.” You should note there is a difference between medical negligence and medical malpractice claims. A medical malpractice claim means a person believes their injury was a medical practitioner’s fault. A medical negligence claim means a person had a prior injury or medical problem that was not treated or was not treated properly.

C. Specific Health Care Rights

This Part covers different situations in which you may have a right to medical treatment and includes examples of cases that might be useful to you. If you have specific questions about the rights of incarcerated people with mental illnesses or infectious diseases, make sure you also look at Chapter 29 of the JLM, “Special Issues for Incarcerated People with Mental Illness” and Chapter 26 of the JLM, “Infectious Diseases: AIDS, Hepatitis, Tuberculosis, and MRSA in Prisons.” If you need to learn more about disability discrimination, see Chapter 28 of the JLM, “Rights of Incarcerated People with Disabilities.”

1. Treatment for Diagnosed Conditions

Whether you have a viable (winnable) Eighth Amendment claim for lack of treatment for diagnosed medical illnesses and conditions depends on several factors. As discussed above, you must prove both the objective and subjective parts of “deliberate indifference.” For the objective requirement, you must prove that your medical condition was “sufficiently serious.” For the subjective requirement, you must prove that prison officials knew about the risk to your health and ignored it.

In the following examples, courts found that diagnosed medical conditions were “sufficiently serious.” In Montalvo v. Koehler, the court found that a prison’s failure to provide shower and sleeping facilities to an incarcerated person confined to a wheelchair was sufficiently serious. This was sufficiently serious because it posed a risk of serious bodily injury to the incarcerated person.⁸² In Koehl v. Dalsheim, the court ruled that prison officials acted with deliberately indifference when they confiscated an incarcerated person’s eyeglasses.⁸³ The double vision, headaches, and severe pain that the incarcerated person experienced without his eyeglasses were sufficiently serious. Failure to treat a serious hip condition requiring surgery, an infected and impacted wisdom tooth, and a hernia have all been found to establish a prison’s deliberate indifference to incarcerated people’s serious medical needs.⁸⁴

The following are examples of harm that the courts did not consider to be sufficiently serious. In Holmes v. Fell, the court held that an incarcerated person’s allergic reaction to a tuberculosis test, which caused swelling and a scar on the incarcerated person’s arm, was not “sufficiently serious.”⁸⁵ In fact, simple exposure to tuberculosis does not meet the standard when there is no reason to believe that the incarcerated person will actually catch the disease.⁸⁶ In McGann v. Coombe, the court ruled

81. Kagan v. State, 221 A.D.2d 7, 9-10, 646 N.Y.S.2d 336, 337-338 (2d Dept. 1996) (finding that the prison’s breach of protocols governing medical standards caused the incarcerated person to lose her hearing and constituted ministerial neglect).

82. Montalvo v. Koehler, No. 90 Civ. 5218 (LJF), 1993 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 11785, at *4 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 20, 1993) (unpublished). Note, however, that this incarcerated person lost his case because he failed to meet the subjective standard for deliberate indifference.

83. Koehl v. Dalsheim, 85 F.3d 86, 88 (2d Cir. 1996).

84. Hathaway v. Coughlin, 37 F.3d 63, 67 (2d Cir. 1994). Boyd v. Knox, 47 F.3d 966, 968-969 (8th Cir. 1995) (explaining that not all dental work meets the sufficiently serious standard, but in this case, the incarcerated person’s mouth was so infected that “he could barely open it” and “pus regularly oozed from the infection”). Brown v. Coleman, 60 F.3d 837, 837 (10th Cir. 1995), opinion reported in full at Brown v. Coleman, No. 94-7183, 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 16928, at *4-5 (10th Cir. July 12, 1995) (unpublished).

85. Holmes v. Fell, 856 F. Supp. 181, 183 (S.D.N.Y. 1994).

86. McCorkle v. Walker, 871 F. Supp. 555, 558 (N.D.N.Y. 1995) (noting that the incarcerated person “has not suffered” and was “unlikely . . . to suffer, an active case of TB” because he received preventive medication that prison officials were not deliberately indifferent for prescribing medication for a condition that caused arthritis and gout in an incarcerated person's feet, even though they refused to provide orthopedic footwear.⁸⁷ In addition, courts have ruled that incarcerated people do not have Eighth Amendment claims when prison officials refuse to treat penile warts⁸⁸ or an old injury that has healed but still causes pain.⁸⁹

2. Elective Procedures

Generally, you cannot win a claim that prison officials violated your Eighth Amendment rights based on their refusal to perform an elective procedure on you.⁹⁰ An elective procedure is an optional procedure. Although you would benefit from an elective procedure, it is not immediately necessary for your survival or relative well-being. The Supreme Court has held that the Constitution does not promise comfortable prisons and that conditions may be “restrictive and even harsh.”⁹¹

However, prison officials cannot call a necessary procedure “elective” to avoid having to provide it.⁹² Furthermore, if your condition gives you continual pain or discomfort for a long period of time, you may be able to bring a claim that your condition is sufficiently serious to warrant an elective procedure, even though the condition may not require immediate attention. Lengthy delays in providing incarcerated people with elective surgery for certain medical conditions can be unacceptable.⁹³ Courts recognize that there are some situations that are too serious to be considered elective, even though they are not serious enough to be considered emergencies. However, you may have to get a court order before you are allowed to be treated in such a situation.⁹⁴ after exposure).

87. McGann v. Coombe, decision reported at 131 F.3d 131, 131 (2d Cir. 1997), opinion reported in full at McGann v. Coombe, No. 97-2139, 1997 WL 738569, at *2 (2d Cir. Nov. 21, 1997) (unpublished).

88. Stubbs v. Wilkinson, decision reported at 52 F.3d 326, 326 (6th Cir. 1995), opinion reported in full at Stubbs v. Wilkinson, No. 94-3620, 1995 U.S. App. LEXIS 9471, at *6 (6th Cir. Apr. 20, 1995) (unpublished).

89. Banuelos v. McFarland, 41 F.3d 232, 235 (5th Cir. 1995) (finding that although the incarcerated person's work boots hurt his ankle, his medical report identified an “Old Ankle Injury” that doctors did not expect to produce very much pain, and x-rays proved that the bone was not broken or deformed and therefore the injury was not sufficiently serious).

90. See Grundy v. Norris, 26 F. App'x 588, 588-589 (8th Cir. 2001) (per curiam) (unpublished) (holding prison officials were not deliberately indifferent in delaying surgery for incarcerated person's injured shoulder in part because medical evidence showed the surgery was elective); Victoria W. v. Larpenter, 205 F. Supp. 2d 580, 601 (E.D. La. 2002) (holding that a “non-therapeutic abortion sought due to financial and emotional reasons” rather than medical necessity is not a “serious medical need” for 8th Amendment purposes), aff'd, Victoria W. v. Larpenter, 369 F.3d 475 (5th Cir. 2004).

91. Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 347, 101 S. Ct. 2392, 2399, 69 L. Ed. 2d 59, 69 (1981).

92. Johnson v. Bowers, 884 F.2d 1053, 1056 (8th Cir. 1989) (“The hospital's gratuitous classification of [the prisoner's] surgery as ‘elective’ . . . does not abrogate the prison's duty, or power, to promptly provide necessary medical treatment for prisoners.”) (internal citation omitted); Baker v. Blanchette, 186 F. Supp. 2d 100, 105 n.4 (D. Conn. 2001) (stating that although the incarcerated person could wait to have surgery, merely classifying the surgery as elective does not abolish the prison's duty to provide treatment for a serious medical need); Delker v. Maass, 843 F. Supp. 1390, 1399 (D. Or. 1994) (holding that prison officials may not simply characterize a surgery as elective in order to avoid performing the procedure).

93. See Johnson v. Bowers, 884 F.2d 1053, 1056 (8th Cir. 1989) (holding that an incarcerated person who had to wait nine years for elective arm surgery had suffered a constitutional violation); West v. Keve, 541 F. Supp. 534, 539-540 (D. Del. 1982) (finding that a 17-month delay between recommendation and performance of elective surgery was unacceptable, but that defendants were not ultimately liable since their actions were in good faith).

94. See Victoria W. v. Larpenter, 369 F.3d 475, 484-485 (5th Cir. 2004) (upholding policy of requiring incarcerated people to obtain a court order to receive an elective medical procedure because the policy was “reasonably related to a legitimate penological interest”). Note this case involved seeking an abortion, which has its own case law—see Section D(1)(a) below.

3. Exposure to Second-Hand Smoke

Incarcerated people have the right to be free from exposure to excessive second-hand smoke.⁹⁵ Previously, courts rejected incarcerated people's claims for exposure to environmental tobacco smoke ("ETS").⁹⁶ The courts noted that the incarcerated people had not yet suffered serious injuries. However, in Helling v. McKinney, the Supreme Court rejected the argument that "only deliberate indifference to current serious health problems of inmates is actionable under the Eighth Amendment" by comparing forced exposure to ETS to live electrical wires, or communicable diseases.⁹⁷ The Court concluded that prison officials may violate the Eighth Amendment's prohibition of cruel and unusual punishment if they deliberately expose incarcerated people to high levels of ETS.⁹⁸

To satisfy the objective requirement in a claim for a violation of the Eighth Amendment under Helling ("objective part" is discussed above, in Part B(1)(a)), you will have to show you are exposed to ETS levels that "pose an unreasonable risk of serious damage to [your] future health."⁹⁹ The ETS levels must violate contemporary standards of decency.¹⁰⁰ To obtain an injunction against further ETS exposure, you do not need to demonstrate any actual physical injury.¹⁰¹

Note that claiming prison officials are deliberately indifferent to the risk of future harm is different from claiming deliberate indifference to a current, ongoing harm.¹⁰² You can claim that ETS exposure affects your current health, but you have to prove that the exposure is making a serious medical problem worse.¹⁰³ In Talal v. White, the Sixth Circuit ruled that a state prison violated the objective component of the Helling test by forcing a non-smoking incarcerated person with a serious medical need to share a cell with an incarcerated person who smoked.¹⁰⁴ However, the non-smoking incarcerated person had to provide a lot of evidence. For example, he documented that he suffered

95. Helling v. McKinney, 509 U.S. 25, 34–35, 113 S. Ct. 2475, 2481–2482, 125 L. Ed. 2d 22, 32–33 (1993) (holding that an incarcerated person may prove that his involuntary exposure to environmental tobacco smoke is significant enough that his future health is unreasonably endangered).

96. See Grant v. Coughlin, No. 91 Civ. 3433 (RWS), 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8003, at *9 (S.D.N.Y. June 9, 1992) (unpublished) (explaining that throat and lung irritation and a risk of serious medical harm do not meet the serious medical requirement necessary for an 8th Amendment violation).

97. Helling v. McKinney, 509 U.S. 25, 33–34, 113 S. Ct. 2475, 2480–2481, 125 L. Ed. 2d 22, 31–32 (1993) (emphasis added).

98. Helling v. McKinney, 509 U.S. 25, 35, 113 S. Ct. 2475, 2481, 125 L. Ed. 2d 22, 33 (1993).

99. Helling v. McKinney, 509 U.S. 25, 35–36, 113 S. Ct. 2475, 2481–2482 125 L. Ed. 2d 22, 32–33 (1993) (finding that an incarcerated person whose cellmate smoked five packs of cigarettes a day, stated an 8th Amendment deliberate indifference cause of action against prison officials by alleging they "exposed him to levels of ETS that pose an unreasonable risk of serious damage to his future health"). Note that Helling provides for injunctive relief, not monetary damages; see also Fontroy v. Owens, 150 F.3d 239, 244 (3d Cir. 1998) (holding that no damages are available "for emotional distress allegedly caused by exposure to asbestos without proof of physical injury").

100. Helling v. McKinney, 509 U.S. 25, 32, 113 S. Ct. 2475, 2480, 125 L. Ed. 2d 22, 29 (1993).

101. Shepherd v. Hogan, 181 F. App'x 93, 95 (2d Cir. 2006) (unpublished) (finding that future risk can constitute a substantial risk of serious harm, even if no symptoms are currently present); Smith v. Carpenter, 316 F.3d 178, 188 (2d Cir. 2003) ("[A]n Eighth Amendment claim may be based on . . . exposing an inmate to an unreasonable risk of future harm and . . . actual physical injury is not necessary in order to demonstrate an Eighth Amendment violation.").

102. Lehn v. Holmes, No. 99-919-GPM, 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22653, at *11–13 (S.D. Ill. Sept. 28, 2005) (unpublished) (noting that the incarcerated person's ongoing symptoms, headaches, and burning eyes would be insufficient to meet the objective standard in a claim for current injury, but sufficient in a claim for future harm).

103. Goffman v. Gross, 59 F.3d 668, 671–672 (7th Cir. 1995) (ruling that prison officials had not acted with deliberately indifferent when they refused to give an incarcerated person a non-smoking cellmate because the incarcerated person had not shown a serious medical condition made worse by exposure to second-hand smoke—even though he had only one lung because of lung cancer); Grant v. Coughlin, No. 91 Civ. 3433 (RWS), 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8003, at *9 (S.D.N.Y. June 9, 1992) (unpublished) (holding that irritation of the throat and lungs caused by ETS was not a serious medical condition).

104. Talal v. White, 403 F.3d 423, 427 (6th Cir. 2005).

from ETS allergy, sinus problems, and dizziness.¹⁰⁵ Additionally, he showed that the prison medical staff had recommended that he have a non-smoking cell partner.¹⁰⁶ Two issues relevant to the subjective standard of deliberate indifference are whether your prison has adopted a smoking policy and how that policy is administered.¹⁰⁷

4. Other Environmental Health and Safety Cases

Courts have ruled that other environmental and safety conditions can violate the Eighth Amendment. For example, courts have ruled that inadequate ventilation and deprivation of outdoor exercise can be unconstitutional.¹⁰⁸ In addition, courts have found that excessive heat, excessive cold, polluted water, toxic or noxious fumes, exposure to sewage, lack of fire safety, inadequate food or unsanitary food service, inadequate lighting or constant lighting, exposure to insects, rodents and other vermin, exposure to asbestos, and exposure to the extreme behavior of severely mentally ill incarcerated people violate incarcerated people's Eighth Amendment rights.¹⁰⁹

105. Talal v. White, 403 F.3d 423, 427 (6th Cir. 2005).

106. Talal v. White, 403 F.3d 423, 427 (6th Cir. 2005); but see Henderson v. Sheahan, 196 F.3d 839, 846 (7th Cir. 1999) (ruling that the plaintiff did not show a serious medical need when he alleged the "relatively minor" injuries of "breathing problems, chest pains, dizziness, sinus problems, headaches and a loss of energy").

107. Helling v. McKinney, 509 U.S. 25, 35–36, 113 S. Ct. 2475, 2481–2482, 125 L. Ed. 2d 22, 33–34 (1993) (ruling that an incarcerated person whose cellmate smoked five packs of cigarettes per day could have a cognizable claim under the 8th Amendment and that the subjective element of the claim (deliberate indifference) should be evaluated in light of prison policies on smoking); see also Shepherd v. Hogan, 181 F. App'x 93, 95 (2d Cir. 2006) (unpublished) (ruling that an incarcerated person sharing a room with a chain smoker for a month, a situation that was inappropriate under prison procedures and which the prison grievance committee condemned, was sufficient grounds for a reasonable jury to find a constitutional violation).

108. Keenan v. Hall, 83 F.3d 1083, 1089–1090 (9th Cir. 1996), opinion amended on denial of reh'g, Keenan v. Hall, 135 F.3d 1318 (9th Cir. 1998) (finding that depriving an incarcerated person of outdoor exercise for six months violated the 8th Amendment).

109. Gates v. Cook, 376 F.3d 323, 334, 339–340 (5th Cir. 2004) (ruling that a high probability of heat-related illness can provide the basis for an 8th Amendment claim); Gaston v. Coughlin, 249 F.3d 156, 164–166 (2d Cir. 2001) (finding that exposure to freezing and sub-zero temperatures due to a broken window can provide the basis for an 8th Amendment claim); Palmer v. Johnson, 193 F.3d 346, 352–353 (5th Cir. 1999) (finding outdoor and overnight confinement sufficient for a constitutional violation); Dixon v. Godinez, 114 F.3d 640, 643–644 (7th Cir. 1997) (ruling that prison officials' deliberate indifference to cold temperatures in an incarcerated person's cell and an incarcerated person's extended exposure to cold temperatures can provide the basis for a claim); Jackson v. Duckworth, 955 F.2d 21, 22 (7th Cir. 1992) (ruling that an incarcerated person may have a claim for black worms in drinking water); Jackson v. Arizona, 885 F.2d 639, 641 (9th Cir. 1989) (holding that a claim alleging polluted drinking water was not frivolous); Johnson-El v. Schoemehl, 878 F.2d 1043, 1054–1055 (8th Cir. 1989) (finding that spraying pesticides into housing units can provide the basis for a claim); Ramos v. Lamm, 639 F.2d 559, 569–570 (10th Cir. 1980) (finding that the plaintiff can base a claim on inadequate ventilation causing mold and fungus growth); Cody v. Hillard, 599 F. Supp. 1025, 1032, 1048 (D.S.D. 1984) (finding that the incarcerated people could base a claim on inadequate ventilation of toxic fumes in their workplaces), aff'd in part and rev'd in part on other grounds, Cody v. Hillard, 830 F.2d 912 (8th Cir. 1987) (en banc). But see Givens v. Jones, 900 F.2d 1229, 1234 (8th Cir. 1990) (finding that there was no 8th Amendment violation where an incarcerated person suffered migraine headaches as a result of noise and fumes during three-week long housing unit renovation); DeSpain v. Uphoff, 264 F.3d 965, 977 (10th Cir. 2001) (finding that exposure to flooding and human waste can provide the basis for an 8th Amendment claim); McCord v. Maggio, 927 F.2d 844, 846–847 (5th Cir. 1991) (finding that backup of sewage in living spaces can provide the basis an 8th Amendment claim); Hoptowit v. Spellman, 753 F.2d 779, 783–784 (9th Cir. 1985) (holding that substandard fire prevention and other safety hazards that expose incarcerated people to an unreasonable threat of injury provide the basis for a claim); Phelps v. Kapnolas, 308 F.3d 180, 185–187 (2d Cir. 2002) (finding that providing a nutritionally inadequate diet to an incarcerated person, despite knowing that such a diet cause pain to the incarcerated person, can provide the basis for a claim); Gates v. Cook, 376 F.3d 323, 334–335 (5th Cir. 2004) (finding that inadequate lighting can provide the basis for an 8th Amendment claim); Keenan v. Hall, 83 F.3d 1083, 1090–1091 (9th Cir. 1996), opinion amended on denial of reh'g, Keenan v. Hall, 135 F.3d 1318 (9th Cir. 1998) (finding that constant illumination can provide the basis for an 8th Amendment claim); Gates v. Cook, 376 F.3d 323, 334 (5th Cir. 2004) (finding that mosquito infestation combined with filthy cells and too much heat can provide the basis for an 8th Amendment claim); Gaston v. Coughlin, 249 F.3d 156, 165–166 (2d Cir. 2001) (finding that the incarcerated person properly stated an 8th

5. An Incarcerated Person's Right to Psychiatric Care

This Section briefly summarizes your right to psychiatric (mental health) care. This includes your right to refuse treatment. For more information, read Chapter 29 of the JLM, "Special Issues for Incarcerated People with Mental Illness."

You have the same right to mental health care that you have to physical health care. Most courts recognize that there is no difference between an incarcerated person's right to physical and mental health treatment.¹¹⁰ However, your right to mental health care may include only necessary treatment that does not cost an unreasonable amount or take an unreasonable amount of time.¹¹¹ Nonetheless, some courts have held that an increased level of care is necessary for mental health patients. For example, courts may require a minimum number of acute-care (active, short-term care for a severe injury or illness), intermediate-care beds, and specialized physicians on staff at all times.¹¹² In 2011, the Supreme Court upheld a "remedial order" (a court order requiring someone to comply with a duty) issued by a California court that requires prisons to provide adequate resources to incarcerated people with mental disorders.¹¹³

If you believe the prison has violated your right to mental health care, you can make a claim against prison officials for deliberate indifference to your Eighth Amendment rights. For example, in one case, the relatives of a person incarcerated in Georgia who committed suicide sued the state for deliberate indifference.¹¹⁴ The incarcerated person had a history of mental illness and took anti-depressants, but the prison psychiatrist stopped his medications.¹¹⁵ When a prison official learned that the incarcerated person was thinking about suicide, he did not do anything. The court found that these events could establish deliberate indifference to the incarcerated person's health in violation of the Eighth Amendment.

Amendment claim based on mice constantly entering cell, combined with freezing temperatures and occasional exposure to sewage water); Powell v. Lennon, 914 F.2d 1459, 1463–1464 (11th Cir. 1990) (finding that exposure to asbestos provide the basis for an 8th Amendment claim); compare with McNeil v. Lane, 16 F.3d 123, 125 (7th Cir. 1993) (holding that exposure to "moderate levels of asbestos" could not provide the basis for a claim); Gates v. Cook, 376 F.3d 323, 343 (5th Cir. 2004) (noting that exposure to the constant screaming and feces-smearing of mentally ill incarcerated people "contributes to the problems of uncleanness and sleep deprivation, and by extension mental health problems, for the other inmates").

110. See Bowring v. Godwin, 551 F.2d 44, 47 (4th Cir. 1977) (denying that there is a difference between the right to mental and physical treatment); see also Inmates of Allegheny County Jail v. Pierce, 612 F.2d 754, 763 (3d Cir. 1979) (holding that seriously mentally ill incarcerated people have a right to adequate treatment and that psychiatric and psychological treatment should be held to the same standard as medical treatment for physical illnesses).

111. Bowring v. Godwin, 551 F.2d 44, 47–48 (4th Cir. 1977) (creating a three-part test for the provision of mental health services. The requirements are as follows. First, the incarcerated person's symptoms must show a serious disease or injury. Second, such a disease or injury must be curable or able to be substantially alleviated. And, third, there must be potential for substantial harm to the incarcerated person because of a delay or denial of care).

112. Laaman v. Helgemoe, 437 F. Supp. 269, 327 (D.N.H. 1977) (holding that incarcerated people were not being given adequate medical or mental health care, and ordering that the New Hampshire State Prison medical staff "consist of a full-time physician and five licensed nurses or qualified paramedics"; that at least two medical staffers be male; that emergency medical care be available "on a twenty-four hour basis, seven days a week"; and that a member of the medical staff be present at the prison "at all times").

113. Brown v. Plata, 563 U.S. 493, 493–498, 131 S. Ct. 1910, 1917–1920, 170 L. Ed. 2d 969, 976–979 (2011) (upholding the remedial order because (1) a shortage of prison medical and mental healthcare staff was causing significant delays in treatment, (2) overcrowding and unsanitary conditions made it difficult to deliver proper medical and mental healthcare, and (3) overcrowding promoted unrest and violence potentially detrimental to an incarcerated person's mental illness).

114. Greason v. Kemp, 891 F.2d 829, 834 (11th Cir. 1990) (holding that deliberate indifference to inadequate psychiatric care resulting in a suicide could be a violation of the 8th Amendment).

115. Greason v. Kemp, 891 F.2d 829, 835 (11th Cir. 1990).

6. Right to Refuse Psychiatric Treatment

You also have a limited right to refuse mental health treatment. In Washington v. Harper, the Supreme Court used a “rational basis test” (a test to determine whether the government’s action was reasonably related to a legitimate goal)¹¹⁶ to decide whether a prison could require an incarcerated person to undergo psychiatric treatment.¹¹⁷ The Court held that if the prison’s actions are reasonably related to legitimate prison interests, then the action is proper. “[G]iven the requirements of the prison environment, the Due Process Clause permits the State to treat an incarcerated person who has a serious mental illness with antipsychotic drugs against his will, if the inmate is dangerous to himself or others and the treatment is in the inmate’s medical interest.”¹¹⁸

If you refuse to take drugs prescribed for your mental illness, the prison must go through certain procedures before they can force you to take the medication. The Court held that the following procedures satisfies the Due Process Clause:

[A] medical finding, that a mental disorder exists which is likely to cause harm if not treated . . . [and] the medication must first be prescribed by a psychiatrist, and then approved by a reviewing psychiatrist, [which] ensures that the treatment in question will be ordered only if it is in the prisoner’s medical interest.¹¹⁹

In other words, before a prison can give you medication against your will, a psychiatrist must prescribe medication. Additionally, a second psychiatrist must agree that you need the medication and that your mental disorder is likely dangerous if untreated.

In Washington v. Harper, the Court held the state’s policy of medicating unwilling patients was constitutional because it met these requirements.¹²⁰ In Washington, the state regulation required that any decision to administer drugs against a patient’s will must be made by a committee.¹²¹ This committee was required to include a neutral psychiatrist and a neutral psychologist, neither of whom were currently treating the incarcerated person.¹²² The prison superintendent could accept or reject the committee’s decision, and the incarcerated person had the option to ask a court to review the committee’s decision.¹²³

You are also entitled to certain due process protections. These protections include a hearing, and must take place before prison authorities can transfer you to a psychiatric hospital.¹²⁴ In Vitek v. Jones, the Supreme Court ruled that it is unconstitutional to subject an incarcerated person to behavior modification treatment without a legitimate reason.¹²⁵

In addition, different psychiatric programs are used to treat incarcerated people who were convicted of sex offenses. Sometimes, incarcerated people who have not been convicted of sex offenses can still be classified as “sex offenders.” In some cases, prison officials can prevent these incarcerated people from getting paroled by claiming that the incarcerated people did not complete a required

116. Black’s Law Dictionary 592 (9th ed. 2009).

117. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 224–225, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1038, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 200 (1990).

118. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 227, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1039–1040, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 201–202 (1990).

119. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 222, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1037, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 198 (1990).

120. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 236, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1044, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 207 (1990).

121. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 215, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1033–1034, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 183 (1990).

122. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 215, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1033–1034, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 183 (1990).

123. Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 229, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1040, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 203 (1990).

124. Vitek v. Jones, 445 U.S. 480, 494–495, 100 S. Ct. 1254, 1264, 63 L. Ed. 2d 552, 566 (1980) (holding that before an incarcerated person is transferred to a mental facility, he should receive written and timely notice, legal counsel, a hearing before an independent decisionmaker with the opportunity to present and confront witnesses, and a written decision).

125. Vitek v. Jones, 445 U.S. 480, 493–494, 100 S. Ct. 1254, 1264, 63 L. Ed. 2d 552, 565–566 (1980); see also Clonce v. Richardson, 379 F. Supp. 338, 348–350 (W.D. Mo. 1974) (ruling that defendant is entitled to a pre-transfer hearing before the prison can subject him to a behavior modification treatment program).

therapeutic program. Courts disagree on whether a hearing is required before prison officials can make this classification.¹²⁶ See Chapter 36 of the JLM, “Special Considerations for Sex Offenders,” for more information on mandatory sex offender programs.

7. Right to Dental Care

In some cases, the right to adequate medical care includes dental care.¹²⁷ The Second Circuit has ruled that a “claim regarding inadequate dental care, like one involving medical care, can be based on various factors, such as the pain suffered by the plaintiff, . . . the deterioration of the teeth due to a lack of treatment, . . . or the inability to engage in normal activities.”¹²⁸ Furthermore, because of a federal class action lawsuit, the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation (“CDCR”) agreed to provide dental care to all incarcerated people.¹²⁹

Like inadequate medical care, dental care is also governed by the deliberate indifference/serious needs analysis.¹³⁰ To prove an Eighth Amendment claim of inadequate dental care, you have to show both deliberate indifference, like in other inadequate medical care claims,¹³¹ and that the denial caused you “substantial harm.”¹³²

In practice, courts often distinguish between preventive dental care, such as cleanings or fluoride treatments, and dental emergencies, such as cavities. In Dean v. Coughlin, the court held that prison officials had violated the Eighth Amendment when they refused to provide serious dental treatments such as fillings and crowns.¹³³ However, the court also found that incarcerated people had no right to

126. Compare Neal v. Shimoda, 131 F.3d 818, 831 (9th Cir. 1997) (requiring the prison to conduct a hearing before classifying an incarcerated person who was not convicted of a sex offense as a “sex offender”), with Grennier v. Frank, 453 F.3d 442, 446 (7th Cir. 2006) (holding that a prison can label an incarcerated person as a “sex offender” without a hearing).

127. See, e.g., Board v. Farnham, 394 F.3d 469, 480–482 (7th Cir. 2005) (finding that breaking off teeth rather than extracting them and denial of toothpaste for protracted periods support an 8th Amendment claim); Hartsfield v. Colburn, 371 F.3d 454, 457–458 (8th Cir. 2004) (finding that six weeks’ delay in seeing a dentist, resulting in infection and loss of teeth, raised an 8th Amendment claim); Farrow v. West, 320 F.3d 1235, 1244–1247 (11th Cir. 2003) (holding that an incarcerated person with only two lower teeth who suffered pain, continual bleeding, swollen gums, and weight loss had a serious medical need, and that a delay of 18 months before the incarcerated person received dentures raised an issue concerning whether there was deliberate indifference); Boyd v. Knox, 47 F.3d 966, 969 (8th Cir. 1995) (finding that a three-week delay in dental care, coupled with knowledge of the incarcerated person’s suffering, can support a finding of “deliberate indifference”).

128. Chance v. Armstrong, 143 F.3d 698, 703 (2d Cir. 1998).

129. Perez v. Tilton, 2006 No. C 05-05241 JSW, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 63318, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 21, 2006) (unpublished).

130. See, e.g., Board v. Farnham, 394 F.3d 469, 481–482 (7th Cir. 2005) (finding that there could be deliberate indifference when an incarcerated person asked for dental supplies 15 times and was repeatedly ignored); Hartsfield v. Colburn, 371 F.3d 454, 457 (8th Cir. 2004) (holding that extreme pain and swelling caused by infected teeth would have been obvious to a layperson and thus submission of verifying medical evidence was unnecessary); Farrow v. West, 320 F.3d 1235, 1244–1247 (11th Cir. 2003) (finding that some medical conditions are serious enough that even a few hours delay in treatment could constitute deliberate indifference); Harrison v. Barkley, 219 F.3d 132, 137–139 (2d Cir. 2000) (finding that refusal to treat incarcerated person’s tooth cavity led to a sufficiently serious medical condition because it was a degenerative condition that could cause acute infections and pain).

131. See Clifton v. Robinson, 500 F. Supp. 30, 35 (E.D. Pa. 1980) (holding that because the incarcerated person claiming denial of dental care did not allege “substantial harm,” the claim failed to show “deliberate indifference”).

132. See Hunt v. Dental Dep’t, 865 F.2d 198, 199–200 (9th Cir. 1989) (holding that a three-month delay in replacing dentures caused gum disease and possibly weight loss, constituting substantial harm).

133. Dean v. Coughlin, 623 F. Supp. 392, 404 (S.D.N.Y. 1985), vacated in part and remanded on other grounds, Dean v. Coughlin, 804 F.2d 207, 216 (2d Cir. 1986).

preventive care.¹³⁴ It is constitutional for the prison to require you to pay for preventative care yourself.¹³⁵

But, note that in some circumstances, limiting care to pulling teeth that could be saved may be unconstitutional.¹³⁶ In Chance v. Armstrong, the court ruled that it was unconstitutional for the prison to pull an incarcerated person's teeth rather than repair them to save money.¹³⁷ The court emphasized that because of the prison's decision, the incarcerated person was in great pain for six months, could not chew properly, and lost his teeth.¹³⁸

D. Medical Care for Female Incarcerated People

1. Accessing Medical Care

Like male incarcerated people, female incarcerated people have an Eighth Amendment constitutional right to medical care.¹³⁹ Female incarcerated people should read this entire Chapter, not only this Part, to understand prison health care rights. This Part of the Chapter only explains special medical issues and procedures for women, such as gynecological examinations, abortion, and pregnancy.

Though state and federal laws guarantee a right to the medical services described in this Part, prisons do not always provide these services.¹⁴⁰ As a result, it is important to know your rights. You should consult your prison's regulations about medical care, as well as federal and state law. For New York, the regulations about prison health care are found in Part 7651 of Title 9 (Executive) of the Codes, Rules and Regulations.¹⁴¹ If your prison or the corrections department in your state does not have such regulations, you should find out if your institution has a health care manual or if your state's corrections department has an operation manual. In Texas, every correctional facility must have a written Health Services Plan describing procedures for regularly scheduled sick calls, emergency services, long-term care, and other medical services.¹⁴² In California, health care provisions are found in Chapter Nine of the Department Operations Manual of the California Department of Corrections.¹⁴³

134. See Dean v. Coughlin, 623 F. Supp. 392, 404 (S.D.N.Y. 1985). Specifically, the court held: “[A] prisoner is entitled to treatment only for conditions that cause pain, discomfort, or threat to good health, not treatment to ward off such conditions.” With regard to preventative dentistry, the court stated that “[a]lthough [it] would probably save the clinic time in the long run, the Constitution does not require wise dentistry, only dentistry which responds to inmates’ pain and discomfort.” See also Grubbs v. Bradley, 552 F. Supp. 1052, 1129 (M.D. Tenn. 1982) (holding that delaying an incarcerated person’s access to routine and preventive dental care is not “deliberate indifference”).

135. See Taylor v. Garbutt, 185 F.3d 869, 869 (9th Cir. 1999) (finding that a prison regulation requiring a co-payment for dental services that the incarcerated person requested does not violate the 8th Amendment); Hogan v. Russ, 890 F. Supp. 146, 149 (N.D.N.Y. 1995) (“Defendants did not deny plaintiff the ability to obtain specialized medical attention [with a periodontist]. They merely stated that it was not prison policy to pay for such specialized care and that such care would be made available to plaintiff at his own expense.”).

136. Chance v. Armstrong, 143 F.3d 698, 703–704 (2d Cir. 1998) (ruling that pulling teeth because it was cheaper than saving them violated the 8th Amendment).

137. Chance v. Armstrong, 143 F.3d 698, 703–704 (2d Cir. 1998).

138. Chance v. Armstrong, 143 F.3d 698, 703–704 (2d Cir. 1998).

139. Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 104, 97 S. Ct. 285, 291, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 260 (1976) (holding that deliberate indifference to the serious medical needs of incarcerated people is banned by the 8th Amendment because it constitutes an “unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain”) (citation omitted).

140. See 28 C.F.R. § 522.20 (2020) (requiring federal prisons to conduct health screenings on new incarcerated people); 28 C.F.R. § 549.10 (2020) (requiring federal prisons to manage and treat infectious disease); N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 137(6)(c) (McKinney 2014) (directing that incarcerated people in solitary confinement must have a daily health check).

141. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, §§ 7651.1–7651.33 (2020).

142. 37 TEX. ADMIN. CODE § 273.2 (2020).

143. Cal. Dept. of Corr. and Rehab. Adult Institutions, Programs, and Parole, Operations Manual, ch. 9 (2018), available at https://www.cdcr.ca.gov/regulations/wp-content/uploads/sites/171/2019/07/Ch_9_2019_DOM.pdf (last visited Oct. 13, 2020).

Many woman who are incarcerated have an increased risk of chronic health problems, such as HIV, hepatitis, asthma, gynecological diseases, nutrition problems, and convulsive seizure disorders.¹⁴⁴ Federal law requires all federal incarcerated people to receive a medical examination within twenty-four hours of arriving at the prison.¹⁴⁵ During this exam, you should be tested for sexually transmitted infections (“STIs”) and tuberculosis (“TB”). Some courts have ruled that these tests are also required at certain state prisons.¹⁴⁶ Many states have TB screening plans, which require screening of incarcerated people in facilities of certain sizes or after an incarcerated person has been held for a certain period of time.¹⁴⁷ Read Chapter 26 of the JLM, “Infectious Diseases: AIDS, Hepatitis, and Tuberculosis in Prison,” for more information. Many female incarcerated people do not receive a medical exam after being admitted, even though prisons have a duty to perform these exams.¹⁴⁸ You should also receive check-ups and diagnostic tests. However, some prisons do not follow the law.¹⁴⁹

(a) Abortion

According to Roe v. Wade, every woman has the right to decide whether to have an abortion or to go forward with a pregnancy.¹⁵⁰ However, states are allowed to place restrictions or limitations on a woman’s right to an abortion, like requiring parental consent for minors, as long as they do not place an “undue burden” on a woman’s right to choose.¹⁵¹ Courts decide what kind of obstacles might count as an undue burden.

If you are a pregnant and incarcerated in federal prison, federal regulations require that prison officials offer you medical, religious, and social counseling before you have an abortion.¹⁵² You may accept or decline this counseling, and officials should allow you to make the final decision on whether or not to have an abortion.¹⁵³ Once you have received the offer of counseling, and have notified the prison in writing that you wish to have an abortion, the prison must arrange for the abortion.¹⁵⁴

If you are a pregnant and incarcerated in state prison, your rights will mostly depend on the abortion laws in your state. In New York, abortions are allowed if a doctor has a “reasonable belief that [the abortion] is necessary to preserve [your] life” or the abortion occurs in the first “twenty-four weeks . . . of [the] pregnancy.”¹⁵⁵

144. See Amnesty Int’l, Not Part of My Sentence: Violations of the Human Rights of Women in Custody (1999), available at <https://www.amnesty.org/download/Documents/144000/amr510191999en.pdf> (last visited Oct. 13, 2020).

145. See 28 C.F.R. § 522.20 (2020) (requiring federal prisons to conduct health screenings on new incarcerated people).

146. See, e.g., Lareau v. Manson, 651 F.2d 96, 109 (2d Cir. 1981) (noting that lack of screening for infectious diseases resulted in a serious threat to incarcerated people’s well-being); Feliciano v. Gonzalez, 13 F. Supp. 2d 151, 208 (D.P.R. 1998) (holding that not screening incoming incarcerated people for infectious diseases, including TB, is unconstitutional); Inmates of Occoquan v. Barry, 717 F. Supp. 854, 867 (D.D.C. 1989) (holding lack of syphilis and TB testing to be a systemic failure showing deliberate indifference).

147. See, e.g., 37 TEX. ADMIN. CODE § 273.7 (2020); CAL. PENAL CODE § 7573(b) (West 2011).

148. See Amnesty Int’l, “Not Part of My Sentence”: Violations of the Human Rights of Women in Custody (1999), available at <https://www.amnesty.org/download/Documents/144000/amr510191999en.pdf> (last visited Oct. 13, 2020).

149. See Women Prisoners of the D.C. Dept. of Corr. v. District of Columbia, 968 F. Supp. 744, 747 (D.D.C. 1997) (holding that female incarcerated people have a right to diagnostic evaluations similar to those provided for men).

150. Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 153–154, 93 S. Ct. 705, 727, 35 L. Ed. 2d 147, 177–178 (1973).

151. See Planned Parenthood v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833, 876–877, 112 S. Ct. 2791, 2820–2821, 120 L. Ed. 2d 674, 714–715 (1992) (explaining the restrictions that could constitute an “undue burden”).

152. 28 C.F.R. § 551.23(b) (2020).

153. 28 C.F.R. § 551.23(a)–(b) (2020).

154. 28 C.F.R. § 551.23(c) (2020).

155. N.Y. PENAL LAW § 125.05(3) (McKinney 2020).

Some states, like California and New York, have codes that say that woman who are incarcerated have the same right to an abortion as any other woman in the state.¹⁵⁶ In other states, there may be additional restrictions on incarcerated people seeking abortions. You should first look at your state code or prison regulations. Few courts have ruled on the issue of whether prisons may treat female incarcerated people differently than other women in the state when it comes to the right to get an abortion. The Third Circuit has held that female incarcerated people have the same right to an abortion as non-incarcerated women in the same state.¹⁵⁷ The court found that requiring a woman to get a court-ordered release for an elective abortion was an undue burden on her constitutionally-protected right to have an abortion, as well as a violation of her Eighth Amendment right to medical treatment in prison. The court classified an elective abortion as a “serious medical need” where denial or undue delay in providing the procedure could cause the incarcerated person’s condition to become “irreparable.”¹⁵⁸ The court also found that a prison is not required to pay for an incarcerated person’s abortion, but if you request an abortion and are entitled to one under state law, then a prison official is required to transport you to a clinic.¹⁵⁹

Some courts have decided that restrictions on elective abortions violate the Fourteenth Amendment, but not the Eighth Amendment.¹⁶⁰ In one case, the Eighth Circuit considered the constitutionality of a Missouri Department of Corrections (“MDC”) policy prohibiting transportation of pregnant incarcerated people off-site for elective, non-therapeutic abortions. The court found that the MDC policy was unconstitutional under the Fourteenth Amendment, and that incarcerated women do not lose their right to abortions once incarcerated.¹⁶¹ However, in a different case, the Fifth Circuit upheld a prison policy requiring incarcerated people to get a court order for abortions because the policy was implemented reasonably and was “rationally connected to the legitimate penological objectives [prison security] served.”¹⁶²

Note that if you ask for an abortion but never get one because of prison officials’ negligence, you probably do not have a constitutional claim. In one case, a pretrial detainee requested an abortion, but because of administrative inefficiency and unreasonable delays by prison officials the abortion was scheduled too late to be performed.¹⁶³ The court found that the prison officials were not deliberately indifferent, only negligent, so their conduct was not in violation of the Eighth Amendment.¹⁶⁴ In a

156. CAL. PENAL CODE § 4028 (West 2011); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 14, § 27.6(c) (2020).

157. Monmouth Cnty. Corr. Inst. Inmates v. Lanzaro, 834 F.2d 326, 343–345 (3d Cir. 1987) (holding abortion restrictions were not justified by state’s interest in childbirth because the interest does not further rehabilitation, security, or deterrence); see also Doe v. Barron, 92 F. Supp. 2d 694 (S.D. Ohio 1999) (holding that a state may not prohibit any woman from making the ultimate decision to terminate her pregnancy before viability).

158. Monmouth Cnty. Corr. Inst. Inmates v. Lanzaro, 834 F.2d 326, 349 (3d Cir. 1987); see also Gibson v. Matthews, 926 F.2d 532 (6th Cir. 1991) (finding that an abortion qualifies as a serious medical need).

159. Monmouth Cnty. Corr. Inst. Inmates v. Lanzaro, 834 F.2d 326, 341–342 (3d Cir. 1987); see also Roe v. Crawford, 514 F.3d 789, 797 (8th Cir. 2008) (holding that by completely eliminating any alternative means of obtaining an elective abortion, the prison’s policy “represent[ed] precisely the ‘exaggerated response to . . . security objectives’” forbidden by case law) (citation omitted). But see Victoria W. v. Larpenter, 369 F.3d 475, 487 (5th Cir. 2004) (deeming a prison policy that required incarcerated people to obtain court orders before they could leave the prison for elective medical procedures “rationally connected to the legitimate penological objectives served”).

160. Roe v. Crawford, 514 F.3d 789, 796–797, 801 (8th Cir. 2008) (holding that refusal to provide an incarcerated person access to an elective, non-therapeutic abortion does not constitute an 8th Amendment violation, but that “an elective abortion . . . is a liberty interest protected under the Fourteenth Amendment”).

161. Roe v. Crawford, 514 F.3d 789, 801 (8th Cir. 2008).

162. Victoria W. v. Larpenter, 369 F.3d 475, 487 (5th Cir. 2004). Note that, because the right to have an abortion is a constitutional right, any prison policy that restricts that right must be “reasonably related to legitimate penological interests.” See, e.g., Doe v. Arpaio, 214 Ariz. 237, 241, 150 P.3d 1258, 1262 (Ariz. Ct. App. 2007).

163. Bryant v. Maffucci, 923 F.2d 979, 980–982 (2d Cir. 1991).

164. Bryant v. Maffucci, 923 F.2d 979, 986 (2d Cir. 1991) (holding that prison officials’ negligent failure to provide an abortion did not violate incarcerated person’s rights).

similar case, the Sixth Circuit found that prison officials were merely negligent when they incorrectly estimated the due date of a pregnant incarcerated person and thus denied her access to abortion facilities.¹⁶⁵

(b) Pregnancy

Your treatment during pregnancy is important.¹⁶⁶ Prisons should (but might not) have policies and procedures for risk assessment and treatment of pregnant incarcerated people, diet and nutrition, prenatal care, and counseling.

In New York State, you have a right to “comprehensive prenatal care . . . which shall include, but is not limited to, regular medical examinations, advice on appropriate levels of activity and safety precautions, nutritional guidance, and HIV education.”¹⁶⁷ Shortly before you are about to give birth, you should be moved from the jail or prison to some other location “a reasonable time before the anticipated birth of [your] child,” and “provided with comfortable accommodations, maintenance and medical care.”¹⁶⁸ You will be returned to the prison or jail “as soon after the birth of [your] child as the state of [your] health will permit.”¹⁶⁹ In California, a pregnant person incarcerated in a local (city, county, or regional) detention facility has a right to receive necessary medical services from the physician of her choice, but that individual must pay for any private doctors.¹⁷⁰ California recently amended its state regulations concerning incarcerated people who are pregnant. The new rules provide for routine physical examinations as well as mandatory nutritional guidelines to be followed by prison facilities when caring for incarcerated people who are pregnant.¹⁷¹ In particular, the use of leg and waist restraints is subject to stringent requirements.¹⁷²

In determining whether prison officials violated your Eighth Amendment rights by denying you medical care, courts generally consider the amount of time left before you reach the full term of your pregnancy, the symptoms of labor that you have exhibited, any previous or potential complications with your pregnancy, and the reaction of prison officials to your condition and requests.¹⁷³ In a federal case in Wisconsin, a woman who was incarcerated charged prison nurses with violating her Eighth Amendment rights by failing to bring her to the hospital when she was in labor.¹⁷⁴ The incarcerated person gave birth in her prison cell.¹⁷⁵ The court denied summary judgment and held that a reasonable jury could conclude that the nurses had shown “deliberate indifference” toward the pregnant incarcerated person because the nurses ignored the incarcerated person’s request to go to the hospital and they “only examined [her] through the small tray slot in the cell door, rather than conducting a more comprehensive exam.”¹⁷⁶

Incarcerated people who are pregnant have also had some success in lawsuits alleging negligence against prisons. One court found a prison liable for the wrongful death of a premature baby born to an incarcerated person because the prison was negligent. Prison officials did not follow the prison’s

165. Gibson v. Matthews, 926 F.2d 532, 536–537 (6th Cir. 1991).

166. Books can help you learn to care for yourself while pregnant. One good resource is What To Expect When You're Expecting by Heidi E. Murkoff and Sharon Mazel (Workman Publishing Company 2008) (1984). If you do not have access to books like this one, consult a medical professional at your facility regarding questions you might have about your pregnancy. You can also find information online at websites like “What to Expect,” available at <http://www.whattoexpect.com> (last visited Oct. 13, 2020).

167. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7651.17(a) (2020).

168. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 611(1)(a) (McKinney 2014).

169. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 611(1)(c) (McKinney 2014).

170. CAL. PENAL CODE § 4023.6 (West 2011).

171. CAL. PENAL CODE §§ 3403, 3406, 3424 (West 2011).

172. CAL. PENAL CODE § 3407 (West 2011).

173. Webb v. Jessamine Cty. Fiscal Court, 802 F. Supp. 2d 870, 880 (E.D. Ky. 2011).

174. Doe v. Gustavus, 294 F. Supp. 2d 1003, 1005 (E.D. Wis. 2003).

175. Doe v. Gustavus, 294 F. Supp. 2d 1003, 1007 (E.D. Wis. 2003).

176. Doe v. Gustavus, 294 F. Supp. 2d 1003, 1009 (E.D. Wis. 2003); see also Webb v. Jessamine Cty. Fiscal Court, 802 F. Supp. 2d 870 (E.D. Ky. 2011) (rejecting summary judgment for the defendant).

procedures, failed to diagnose the labor despite complaints of bleeding and abdominal pain, and did not bring the incarcerated person to a hospital until it may have been too late to prevent the premature birth.¹⁷⁷

Shackling incarcerated people in labor is unfortunately still common, and many departments of corrections and the Federal Bureau of Prisons allow the use of restraints during labor.¹⁷⁸ This may be changing, however. California has banned shackling you by the wrists or ankles during labor, delivery, and recovery, unless it is necessary for the safety and security of you, the staff, or the public.¹⁷⁹ Similarly, New York does not allow the use of restraints on you during delivery.¹⁸⁰ A D.C. court has struck down a practice of shackling women in their third trimester with leg shackles, handcuffs, a belly chain, and a box that connects the handcuffs and belly chain.¹⁸¹ The court held these practices violated the Eighth Amendment; leg shackles alone provide sufficient security during the third trimester and even these must be removed during labor and for a short period thereafter.¹⁸² The Eighth Circuit also ruled that that a reasonable jury could find that a prison officer violated the Eighth Amendment by shackling an incarcerated person after she went into labor.¹⁸³ According to the court, a jury could infer that the officer “recognized that the shackles interfered with [the incarcerated person’s] medical care, could be an obstacle in the event of a medical emergency, and caused unnecessary suffering at a time when [the incarcerated person] would have likely been physically unable to flee.”¹⁸⁴ The court also wrote in a footnote that a jury could determine the officer was aware of the risks involved in labor because they were obvious.¹⁸⁵

E. Your Right to Informed Consent and Medical Privacy

1. Informed Consent

Before you are treated, you should ask your doctor or other prison health staff what to expect from a medical procedure and its risks and alternatives. Depending on your state, you may have both a statutory and constitutional right to receive this information and agree to treatment before you are treated. Giving “informed consent” means that you agree to your particular medical treatment after your doctor has told you about the purpose of the treatment, its possible side effects, and other alternative treatments.¹⁸⁶

177. Calloway v. City of New Orleans, 524 So. 2d 182, 187 (La. Ct. App. 1988); see also Wells v. La. Dept. of Pub. Safety & Corr., 72 So. 3d 910 (La. App. 2 Cir. 2011) (holding that the standard of care imposed upon a confining authority in providing for the medical needs of inmates is that the services be reasonable).

178. ACLU REPRODUCTIVE FREEDOM PROJECT & ACLU NAT’L PRISON PROJECT, ACLU Briefing Paper: The Shackling of Pregnant Women & Girls in U.S. Prisons, Jails, & Detention Centers (2013) available at https://www.aclu.org/files/assets/anti-shackling_briefing_paper_stand_alone.pdf (last visited Oct. 13, 2020).

179. CAL. PENAL CODE § 3407(b) (West 2018) (“A pregnant [incarcerated person] in labor, during delivery, or in recovery after delivery, shall not be restrained by the wrists, ankles, or both, unless deemed necessary for the safety and security of the inmate, the staff, or the public.”).

180. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 611(1)(c) (McKinney 2014) (“No restraints of any kind shall be used when [an incarcerated] woman is in labor, admitted to a hospital, institution or clinic for delivery, or recovering after giving birth.”).

181. Women Prisoners of D.C. Dept. of Corr. v. District of Columbia, 877 F. Supp. 634, 646 (D.D.C. 1994), vacated in part and remanded on other grounds, Women Prisoners of D.C. Dept. of Corr. v. District of Columbia, 93 F.3d 910, 920–923 (D.C. Cir. 1996).

182. Women Prisoners of D.C. Dept. of Corr. v. District of Columbia, 877 F. Supp. 634, 668–669 (D.D.C. 1994), vacated in part and remanded on other grounds, Women Prisoners of D.C. Dept. of Corr. v. District of Columbia, 93 F.3d 910, 920–923 (D.C. Cir. 1996); see also Women Prisoners of D.C. Dept. of Corr. v. District of Columbia, 968 F. Supp. 744 (D.D.C. 1997) (describing settlement after appellate proceedings).

183. Nelson v. Corr. Med. Servs., 583 F.3d 522, 530–532 (8th Cir. 2009).

184. Nelson v. Corr. Med. Servs., 583 F.3d 522, 530 (8th Cir. 2009).

185. Nelson v. Corr. Med. Servs., 583 F.3d 522, 530 n.5 (8th Cir. 2009).

186. To learn more about informed consent issues for incarcerated people with mental illness, see Chapter 29 of the JLM, “Special Issues for Incarcerated People with Mental Illness.”

In New York, if you did not give informed consent before you received a medical treatment (meaning that you did not agree to the treatment or were never fully told of the treatment's risks and alternatives), you can bring a state law claim against your doctor or other prison officials for acting without your informed consent.¹⁸⁷ To prove that you did not give your informed consent, you must show (1) that your doctor did not tell you about the risks of the treatment and the alternative treatments available, (2) that a reasonable patient in your position would not have agreed to the treatment if he had been fully informed, and (3) that the lack of consent caused your injury.¹⁸⁸ You must have been injured as a result of the lack of informed consent in order for your claim to succeed.

You may also be able to bring a similar constitutional claim. The Second Circuit held that your constitutionally protected interest in refusing medical treatment under the Fourteenth Amendment includes the related "right to such information as a reasonable patient would deem necessary to make an informed decision regarding medical treatment."¹⁸⁹ In order to succeed on this claim, you must meet a different test. Specifically, you will have to show (1) that government officials failed to provide you with the kind of information that a reasonable patient would need to make an informed decision, (2) that you would have refused the medical treatment if you had been so informed, and (3) that the officials showed deliberate indifference to your right to refuse medical treatment when they failure to provide you with information about the treatment.¹⁹⁰ However, a prison official can still forcibly give you medical treatment even if you do not consent as long as the official reasonably determines that it "furthers a legitimate penological purpose"—for example, one related to prison security.¹⁹¹

2. Medical Privacy

You have constitutional privacy rights protecting your medical information.¹⁹² You are entitled to confidentiality of information about your medical condition and treatment.¹⁹³ But like all incarcerated

187. N.Y. PUB. HEALTH LAW § 2805-d(2) (McKinney 2012) ("The right of action to recover for . . . malpractice based on lack of informed consent is limited to . . . either (a) non-emergency treatment, procedure or surgery, or (b) a diagnostic procedure which involved invasion or disruption of the integrity of the body.").

188. N.Y. PUB. HEALTH LAW § 2805-d (McKinney 2012); see also Foote v. Rajadhyax, 268 A.D.2d 745, 745, 702 N.Y.S.2d 153, 154 (3d Dept. 2000) (granting an incarcerated person a new trial to show that she had not consented to a root canal).

189. Pabon v. Wright, 459 F.3d 241, 246 (2d Cir. 2006) (finding a constitutionally protected interest, but affirming the grant of summary judgment to prison officials because of qualified immunity); see also White v. Napoleon, 897 F.2d 103, 113 (3d Cir. 1990) ("Prisoners have a right [under the 14th Amendment] to such information as is reasonably necessary to make an informed decision to accept or reject proposed treatment."); Benson v. Terhune, 304 F.3d 874, 884–885 (9th Cir. 2002) (explaining that the recognition of the right to medical information is a "reasonable application of Supreme Court precedent").

190. Pabon v. Wright, 459 F.3d 241, 246 (2d Cir. 2006).

191. Pabon v. Wright, 459 F.3d 241, 246 (2d Cir. 2006).

192. Powell v. Schriver, 175 F.3d 107, 111 (2d Cir. 1999) ("[T]he right to confidentiality includes the right to protection regarding information about the state of one's health . . . [because] . . . there are few matters that are quite so personal as the status of one's health, and few matters the dissemination of which one would prefer to maintain greater control over.") (quoting Doe v. City of New York, 15 F.3d 264, 267 (2d Cir. 1994)); see also Hunnicut v. Armstrong, No. 04-1565-pr, 152 F. App'x. 34, 35–36 (2d Cir. Oct. 13, 2005) (unpublished) (finding that an incarcerated person stated a constitutional privacy claim where the incarcerated person alleged prison publicly discussed his mental health issues in front of other incarcerated people and "allowed non-health staff access to [incarcerated people's] confidential health records").

193. Doe v. Delie, 257 F.3d 309, 315–317 (3d Cir. 2001) (noting that a right to privacy in medical information extends to prescription medications and is "particularly strong" for HIV status); Powell v. Schriver, 175 F.3d 107, 111 (2d Cir. 1999) (finding a right to privacy in "transsexuality"); O'Connor v. Pierson, 426 F.3d 187, 201 (2d Cir. 2005) ("Medical information in general, and information about a person's psychiatric health and substance-abuse history in particular, is information of the most intimate kind."); Hunnicut v. Armstrong, No. 04-1565-pr, 152 F. App'x. 34, 35–36 (2d Cir. Oct. 13, 2005) (unpublished) (finding an allegation that an incarcerated person's mental health consultations in a housing unit within earshot of other incarcerated people stated a constitutional privacy claim).

people's rights, your privacy rights are limited by the needs of prison administration and depend on the circumstances.¹⁹⁴

Courts have “long recognized the general right to privacy in one’s medical information: ‘There can be no question that . . . medical records, which may contain intimate facts of a personal nature, are well within the [scope] of materials entitled to privacy protection.’”¹⁹⁵ The Third Circuit has held that you have a Fourteenth Amendment privacy interest in your medical information because it is among those rights that “are not inconsistent with [your] status as [a] prisoner or with the legitimate penological objectives of the corrections system.”¹⁹⁶ Similarly, the Second Circuit held that you have a constitutional right to keep previously undisclosed medical information confidential as long as the disclosure “is not reasonably related to a legitimate penological interest.”¹⁹⁷

In 1996, Congress passed the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (“HIPAA”), which contains significant protections for incarcerated people’s medical privacy rights.¹⁹⁸ Under the final HIPAA privacy rule, identifiable health information pertaining to you has been deemed “protected health information,” or “PHI.” A hospital providing prison health care may disclose PHI to a “correctional institution” or a law enforcement official having lawful custody of an incarcerated person if the correctional institution or law enforcement official represents that disclosing such protected health information is necessary for:

- (1) the provision of health care to such individuals;
- (2) the health and safety of such individual or other incarcerated people;
- (3) the health and safety of officers, employees, or others at the correctional institution;
- (4) the health and safety of such individuals and officers or other persons responsible for the transport of incarcerated people or their transfer from one institution, facility, or setting to another;
- (5) the health and safety of law enforcement on the premises of the correctional institution; or
- (6) the administration and maintenance of the safety, security, and good order of the correctional institution.¹⁹⁹

A prison hospital is allowed to share PHI to entities outside the hospital if the entity says that the information is necessary for any of the purposes listed above. Furthermore, a prison hospital may reasonably rely upon any such representations from public officials regarding your health. However, when you are released from custody—including probation, parole, and supervised release—you are no longer categorized as an “inmate,” and these permitted use and disclosure provisions no longer apply.²⁰⁰

You should also note that some courts have held prison officials liable for disclosing an incarcerated person’s confidential medical information, not because they violated the incarcerated person’s privacy rights but because by disclosing the information, the officials put the incarcerated person in danger.

194. See generally Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 527, 104 S. Ct. 3194, 3200, 82 L. Ed. 2d 393, 403 (1984) (explaining that an incarcerated person’s expectation of privacy is reasonable only when the incarcerated person’s interest in having privacy is greater than the interest of the prison).

195. Doe v. Delie, 257 F.3d 309, 315 (3d Cir. 2001) (quoting United States v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 638 F.2d 570, 577 (3d Cir. 1980)).

196. Doe v. Delie, 257 F.3d 309, 315–317 (3d Cir. 2001) (quoting Pell v. Procunier, 417 U.S. 817, 822, 94 S. Ct. 2800, 2804, 41 L. Ed. 2d 495, 501 (1974)).

197. Powell v. Schriver, 175 F.3d 107, 112 (2d Cir. 1999) (concluding that “the gratuitous disclosure of [an incarcerated person’s] confidential medical information as humor or gossip” is not reasonably related to penological interests and violates the prisoner’s constitutional right to privacy). The court noted that “disclosure of an inmate’s HIV-positive status [could] further legitimate penological interests” when, for example, a prison needs to segregate HIV-positive incarcerated people or when prison officials need “to warn prison officials and inmates who otherwise may be exposed to contagion.” Powell v. Schriver, 175 F.3d 107, 112–113 (2d Cir. 1999).

198. 45 C.F.R. §§ 160, 162, 164 (2020).

199. 45 C.F.R. § 164.512(k)(5)(i) (2020).

200. 45 C.F.R. § 164.512(k)(5)(iii) (2020) (stating that there is “[n]o application [of this section] after release [from custody]” because “an individual is no longer an inmate when released on parole, probation, supervised release, or otherwise is no longer in lawful custody”).

For example, the Seventh Circuit indicated that prison employees would violate an incarcerated person's Eighth Amendment rights against cruel and unusual punishment if, "knowing that an inmate identified as HIV positive was a likely target of violence by other inmates yet indifferent to his fate, [the employees] gratuitously revealed his HIV status to other inmates and a violent attack upon him ensued."²⁰¹

F. Actions You Can Bring When You Are Denied Medical Care

Now that you know your rights, it is important to be able to enforce them. This Part describes the actions you can bring when your right to adequate medical care is violated. Remember that in almost every instance, your case will be helped by attempting to go through your institution's complaint process. For more information on doing so, see Chapter 15 of the JLM, "Inmate Grievance Procedures."

1. Remedies for People Incarcerated by the State

(a) 42 U.S.C. § 1983 Actions

Section 1983 is a federal statute that allows you to bring a lawsuit when your federal constitutional rights have been violated. When persons acting under state authority (for example, prison guards, prison doctors, and prison administrators) violate your right to adequate medical care, you may use Section 1983 to bring a lawsuit in federal court. For a discussion of Section 1983 actions, see Chapter 16 of the JLM, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law."

(b) Tort Actions

As discussed in Part B of this Chapter, the federal constitutional standard established by Wilson and Farmer cannot be proven by claiming only negligence.²⁰² If the facts of your case are not enough to prove a constitutional violation, but only show negligence, you may want to consider bringing a tort action against state officials instead of a constitutional claim. See Chapter 17 of the JLM, "The State's Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions," to learn how to do so.

To succeed on a negligence claim you must prove three things:

- (1) "Duty of Care"—that the defendants had a duty of care towards you;
- (2) "Breach of Duty"—that the defendants failed to meet that duty; and
- (3) "Injury"—that you were injured as a result of that failure.²⁰³

There are several ways to prove that the prison has a duty of care towards you. First, as discussed above, Estelle v. Gamble held that prison officials have a duty to provide adequate medical care.²⁰⁴ Second, a state statute may declare, or require, a prison's duty of care. Many states have statutes that 201. Anderson v. Romero, 72 F.3d 518, 523 (7th Cir. 1995).

202. See Sanderfer v. Nichols, 62 F.3d 151, 155 (6th Cir. 1995) (finding that even though the doctor probably should have checked the incarcerated person's medical records, her failure to do so was at most negligence, not deliberate indifference); see also Flint v. Kentucky Dept. of Corr., 270 F.3d 340, 354 (6th Cir. 2001) (finding that prison officials violated an incarcerated person's 8th Amendment rights after they failed to take action to protect the incarcerated person from death threats made by another incarcerated person because the prison officials were aware the murdered incarcerated person's life was in danger and "did not have to undertake any further investigation, or draw any inferences . . . to conclude that a risk to [the incarcerated person's] health and safety existed").

203. Brown v. Sheridan, 894 F. Supp. 66, 69–72 (N.D.N.Y. 1995) (finding that prison officials were not negligent for failing to treat an incarcerated person's broken leg because the officials were not told by the incarcerated person of his injury and it was not unreasonable for the officials to not have discovered the injury: "the record shows that these [officials] took reasonable steps to ascertain and monitor plaintiff's condition, and that when plaintiff disclosed his injury to them he received prompt medical attention.").

204. Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 103–106, 97 S. Ct. 285, 290–292, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 259–261 (1976). Note that the Court in Estelle v. Gamble found that "[m]edical malpractice does not become a constitutional violation merely because the victim is a prisoner," and that a proper claim for breach of this duty must include allegations of "acts or omissions sufficiently harmful to evidence deliberate indifference to serious medical needs." Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 106, 97 S. Ct. 285, 292, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 261 (1976).

require prison officials to provide adequate medical care. For example, in New York, Section 70(2)(c) of the New York State Correction Law directs Department of Corrections and Community Supervision officials to maintain and operate correctional facilities “with due regard to . . . [t]he health and safety of every person in the custody of the Department.”²⁰⁵ There are also common law (law made through judge’s opinions, rather than by statute) claims of medical malpractice and negligence actions that you may bring.

The most common method of proving that a defendant breached a duty is to have an expert provide testimony that the defendant did not use the usually accepted procedures. For example, in Stanback v. State, the plaintiff’s expert testified that an x-ray of plaintiff’s knee would have revealed his torn ligament. However, prison doctors only offered ace bandages, braces, and painkillers and did not x-ray the knee for over three years.²⁰⁶ Expert testimony is not always necessary. In Rivers v. State, the court held that “[a] medical expert’s testimony is not required where a lay person, relying on common knowledge and experience, can find that the harm would not have occurred in the absence of negligence.”²⁰⁷ In other words, if an ordinary person could have used common sense to find out that negligence must have occurred, you do not need an expert witness. Thus, no expert testimony was necessary in Rivers to prove that a doctor was negligent when he performed a hernia operation on an incarcerated person’s right side, even though the patient required the operation on his left side and the hernia was visible on the left side.²⁰⁸ As previously noted in Part B of this Chapter, there are differences between medical malpractice and medical negligence claims. The need for an expert is linked to this distinction: if you decide to file a medical malpractice claim, you may need an expert witness to support your claim that a reasonable medical practitioner would not have caused the injury you claim was caused.

Finally, you must prove that the breach of duty was the direct cause of your injury. This element is not usually difficult to prove, but if you interfere with your treatment in any way, you may fail to prove direct causation. For example, in Brown v. Sheridan, the plaintiff lost his case when the court found that he did not receive immediate treatment because of his own failure to disclose the nature of his injury, and that defendants “took reasonable steps to ascertain and monitor plaintiff’s condition.”²⁰⁹ The court noted that the incarcerated person did not openly display symptoms of his injury, and refused to cooperate with psychiatric care that could have aided defendants in discovering and treating his injury sooner.²¹⁰ Also, in Marchione v. State, the plaintiff, who was given medication for hypertension and became permanently impotent as a result, lost on his negligence claim because he did not report his symptoms in time.²¹¹ At trial, medical experts found that the impotence would have occurred if not treated within eight hours after the onset of symptoms. Although the incarcerated person noticed the symptoms by ten o’clock in the morning, he did not indicate his situation was an emergency and delayed making a specific report of his symptoms until the evening.²¹²

An advantage to filing a state tort claim is that you only need to establish negligence, which is easier than establishing deliberate indifference. A disadvantage to filing a state tort claim is that you can only get money damages, while Section 1983 claims provide both “declaratory relief” (a judgment that is binding on both parties in the present and the future) and “injunctive relief” (a court order that

205. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 70(2)(c) (McKinney 2014).

206. Stanback v. State, 163 A.D.2d 298, 298–299, 557 N.Y.S.2d 433, 433–434 (2d Dept. 1990); see also Kagan v. State, 221 A.D.2d 7, 16–18, 646 N.Y.S.2d 336, 342–343 (2d Dept. 1996) (upholding a damage award for an incarcerated person who repeatedly complained of ear pain caused by a respiratory infection but was not seen by a doctor until she had lost all hearing in her ear).

207. Rivers v. State, 142 Misc. 2d 563, 567, 537 N.Y.S.2d 968, 971 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1989), rev’d on other grounds, Rivers v. State, 159 A.D.2d 788, 552 N.Y.S.2d 189 (3d Dept. 1990).

208. Rivers v. State, 142 Misc. 2d 563, 567, 537 N.Y.S.2d 968, 971 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1989), rev’d on other grounds, Rivers v. State, 159 A.D.2d 788, 552 N.Y.S.2d 189 (3d Dept. 1990).

209. Brown v. Sheridan, 894 F. Supp. 66, 72 (N.D.N.Y. 1995).

210. Brown v. Sheridan, 894 F. Supp. 66, 71 (N.D.N.Y. 1995).

211. Marchione v. State, 194 A.D.2d 851, 855, 598 N.Y.S.2d 592, 594–595 (3d Dept. 1993).

212. Marchione v. State, 194 A.D.2d 851, 855, 598 N.Y.S.2d 592, 595 (3d Dept. 1993).

prohibits or commands action to undo some wrong or injury) in addition to money damages. Furthermore, a negligence action may only be filed in state court, while a Section 1983 claim can be filed in either federal or state court.

(c) Article 78 Proceedings in New York State

In New York, there is a legal procedure called an Article 78 proceeding that allows you to challenge a decision made by a state official.²¹³ If you are denied medical care, you can bring a complaint under Article 78 to require the prison to provide that care. In an Article 78 proceeding, you can recover only limited money damages.²¹⁴ To be successful, you must be able to show that the prison authorities were deliberately indifferent to your serious medical needs.²¹⁵ The statute of limitations requires that the proceeding be brought within four months of the denial or you cannot bring the claim.²¹⁶ Administrative remedies must be exhausted before beginning an Article 78 proceeding. See Chapter 22 of the JLM, “How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules,” for more information on Article 78 proceedings in New York.

2. Remedies for People Incarcerated by the Federal Government

(a) Bivens Actions Under 28 U.S.C. § 1331

A Bivens action is the federal incarcerated person's equivalent to a state incarcerated person's Section 1983 action, and this action can be brought after all available administrative remedies are used.²¹⁷ In a Bivens action, you must prove that the prison doctor or official showed deliberate indifference to your serious medical needs. For more on Bivens actions, see Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law.”

(b) Federal Tort Claims Act

Under the Federal Tort Claims Act (“FTCA”),²¹⁸ you can obtain relief if a prison doctor or official was negligent.²¹⁹ In other words, you can sue the federal government if something a government

213. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7801 (McKinney 2008).

214. Money damages are limited to those “incidental to the primary relief sought,” and must be such “as [the plaintiff] might otherwise recover on the same set of facts in a separate action . . . in the supreme court against the same body or officer in its or his official capacity.” N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7806 (McKinney 2008).

215. See, e.g., Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 106, 97 S. Ct. 285, 292, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 261 (1976) (holding that an incarcerated person needs to show “deliberate indifference to serious medical needs” in order to show a violation of the 8th Amendment); Wooley v. N.Y. State Dept. of Corr. Servs., 15 N.Y.3d 275, 282–283, 934 N.E.2d 310, 316, 907 N.Y.S.2d 741, 747 (2010) (finding no deliberate indifference in refusal to treat chronic viral infection with method not approved by federal government when other approved methods are used); Scott v. Goord, 32 A.D.3d 638, 638–639, 819 N.Y.S.2d 618, 619–620 (3d Dept. 2006) (finding no deliberate indifference when prison officials permitted incarcerated person to undergo surgery to alleviate pain in hurt arm, but refused to permit a different surgery to fix the injury); Hernandez v. City of New York, 8 Misc.3d 758, 761, 799 N.Y.S.2d 369, 371 (Sup. Ct. N.Y. County 2005) (noting that medical malpractice or the failure to pursue alternative treatments alone does not violate the Constitution).

216. N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 217(1) (McKinney 2019).

217. Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388, 91 S. Ct. 1999, 29 L. Ed. 2d 619 (1971); see also Porter v. Nussle, 534 U.S. 516, 524, 122 S. Ct. 983, 988, 152 L. Ed. 2d 12, 21 (2002) (holding that an incarcerated person wishing to bring a Bivens suit must use all available administrative remedies first); Ross v. Blake, 136 S. Ct. 1850, 1858–1860 (2016) (holding that incarcerated people seeking to bring a lawsuit only need to exhaust the administrative remedies that are available to them, but do not need to exhaust an administrative process when (1) the administrative process has no potential to provide relief, (2) no ordinary incarcerated person can discern or navigate the process, or (3) prison officials prevent incarcerated people from using the process); see also Chapter 14 of the JLM “The Prison Litigation Reform Act.”

218. 28 U.S.C. §§ 1346(b), 2671–2680.

219. See United States v. Muniz, 374 U.S. 150, 150–152, 163–164, 83 S. Ct. 1850, 1852, 1858, 10 L. Ed. 2d 805, 808–809, 815–816 (1963) (allowing suit under the FTCA in two cases: one based on incarcerated person's claim that the negligence of prison employees was responsible for the delay in diagnosis and removal of the tumor which caused incarcerated person's blindness, and another based on incarcerated person's claim that prison employee did or failed to do while working for the government harmed you.²²⁰ Courts look to see whether the behavior would be a tort in the state where the behavior occurred.²²¹ If it is a tort in that state, you can sue the federal government.

If the injury was caused by intentional behavior, however, a claim cannot be brought under the FTCA.²²² For example, an allegation of assault and battery (considered purposeful behavior under the law) could not be brought as an FTCA claim. If the act or omission that caused your injury arose from a discretionary duty, you cannot sue under the FTCA.

If you do meet FTCA suit requirements, you must bring it against the United States, not the federal employees who caused your injury. If you name employees as defendants, the FTCA authorizes the court to substitute the United States as the sole defendant.²²³

(c) Choosing Between a Bivens Claim and an FTCA Action

If you are a federal incarcerated person, you may have the choice of bringing either a Bivens suit or an FTCA claim. While it is easier to bring a successful FTCA action because it allows suit for mere medical malpractice, there are several advantages to bringing a Bivens action not available under the FTCA. First, while you cannot bring an FTCA action for an intentional tort, you can bring a claim for an intentional tort in a Bivens suit against an individual. Second, under the FTCA you can only sue the federal government, while in a Bivens action you can sue the individuals who mistreated you. Third, under the FTCA you can only receive compensatory damages (money equal to the cost of repairing or compensating the actual injury you suffered), while in a Bivens suit you may receive punitive damages (extra money awarded as a penalty against the wrongdoer). Fourth, in an FTCA action, you cannot later sue the individuals who injured you, but in a Bivens action, if you are unable to collect on the judgment against the individual employees, you can bring a suit against the government. Finally, a judge hears an FTCA suit, but a jury hears a Bivens suit.

If your injury occurred because of a violation of your constitutional rights and also from a tort, you can bring both an FTCA and a Bivens action. If you do not wish to bring both, you can choose between them.

G. Conclusion

The Constitution and state law protect your right to adequate medical care. Part B explained what you need to prove to show you have been denied adequate medical care in violation of the Eighth Amendment. You must show that you suffered serious harm because you did not receive medical treatment (the objective test),²²⁴ and that the prison official who denied you treatment “[knew] of and officials were negligent for failing to provide sufficient prison guards to prevent an assault on the incarcerated person that resulted in injury); Moreno v. United States, 387 F. App’x 159, 161 (3d Cir. 2010) (per curiam) (unpublished) (dismissing FTCA claim because surgeon was a contractor and not a federal official when a botched surgery allegedly caused an incarcerated person to go blind); Kikumura v. Osagie, 461 F.3d 1269, 1300 (10th Cir. 2006) (permitting action under the FTCA for alleged negligence when prison officials took hours to bring very sick incarcerated person to doctor).

220. For the FTCA, conduct is within the scope of the government agent’s “employment” where there is a “reasonable connection between the act and the agent’s duties and responsibilities” and where the act is not “manifestly or palpably beyond the agent’s authority.” Celauro v. IRS, 411 F. Supp. 2d 257, 266 (E.D.N.Y. 2006) (citing Yalkut v. Gemignani, 873 F.2d 31, 34 (2d Cir. 1989)).

222. 28 U.S.C. §§ 1346(b), 2671–2680.

222. You can bring a Bivens action for intentional torts. You may also bring a state tort claim. See JLM Chapter 17, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions,” for more information about state tort claims. Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388, 91 S. Ct. 1999, 29 L. Ed. 2d 619 (1971).

223. See Hui v. Castaneda, 559 U.S. 799, 801, 130 S. Ct. 1845, 1848, 176 L. Ed. 2d 703, 708 (2010) (“When federal employees are sued for damages for harms caused in the course of their employment, the [FTCA] . . . generally authorizes substitution of the United States as the defendant.”).

224. Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 303–305, 111 S. Ct. 2321, 2326–2328, 115 L. Ed. 2d 271, 282–283 (1991); see also Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 345–347, 101 S. Ct. 2392, 2398–2399, 69 L. Ed. 2d 59, 68–69

[ignored] an excessive risk to [your] health or safety” (the subjective test).²²⁵ Part C talked about how courts treat certain common incarcerated person health complaints. Part D explained specific health rights for incarcerated women. Part E explained your right to receive information before you are treated and your right to keep your medical records confidential. Part F talked about the different ways you can go to court if your rights have been violated. Because this Chapter focused on federal and New York state law, you will need to research the law in your own state if you are in a prison outside of New York. Also, read Chapters 26, 28, and 29 of the JLM for more information on your rights with respect to infectious diseases, disabilities, and mental illness.

If you believe you are not receiving adequate medical care, the first step is to assert your rights through your institution’s grievance procedure. If your problem is not addressed, you will have preserved your right to bring a lawsuit in court. You can only bring your lawsuit in federal court, or state court in New York (an Article 78 proceeding), after you are unsuccessful or do not receive a favorable result through the inmate grievance procedure. Read Chapter 15 of the JLM to learn about Inmate Grievance Procedures.

(1981) (noting that objective standards must be used as much as possible in determining whether incarcerated people suffered harm in violation of the 8th Amendment); Mitchell v. Keane, No. 98-2368, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 4363, at *5 (2d Cir. 1999) (unpublished) (noting that sewage dripping through ceiling, if due to prison official’s deliberate indifference, might satisfy the objective test); Rodriguez v. City of New York, 802 F. Supp. 2d 477, 482 (S.D.N.Y. 2011) (finding that a three-day delay in treatment for minor injuries resulting from a beating failed to satisfy the objective test).

225. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 837, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 825 (1994); see also Caiozzo v. Koreman, 581 F.3d 63, 72 (2d Cir. 2009) (holding that the subjective test was not met when a prison official mistakenly thought no injury was imminent from alcohol withdrawal); Williams v. Carbello, 666 F. Supp. 2d 373, 380 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) (holding that the subjective test is not met when prison officials believed the bathroom was sanitary because it was steam-cleaned three times a day).

CHAPTER 24

YOUR RIGHT TO BE FREE FROM ASSAULT BY PRISON GUARDS AND OTHER INCARCERATED PEOPLE*

A. Introduction

The United States Constitution and state laws protect incarcerated people from certain acts of violence and harassment. This includes attacks, rapes, and other forms of assault. If you believe that a guard or another incarcerated person has assaulted you, this Chapter can help explain your legal options. Part B of this Chapter describes your legal right not to be assaulted. It also explains what you need to prove in order to sue under the Eighth Amendment. Part C discusses legal protections against sexual assault and rape. Part D outlines special issues for LGBTQ incarcerated people. Part E explains how to protect your right to be free from physical and sexual assaults.

Before starting your research, keep in mind that there are two types of laws that protect your rights in prison: (1) federal constitutional law and (2) state law. Federal constitutional law comes from the United States Constitution, which protects incarcerated people from certain assaults. The most important constitutional protections against assault are in the Fifth, Eighth, and Fourteenth Amendments. This Chapter will explain these Amendments in more detail. For example, this Chapter will help you figure out if prison officials have violated your Eighth Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment in prison.¹ For a full list of the Constitution's Amendments, see Chapter 16 of the JLM, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law."

To help explain your constitutional rights, this Chapter will describe federal constitutional law cases decided by the U.S. Supreme Court. These cases apply to you no matter where you are imprisoned. This Chapter will also describe cases decided by "Circuit Courts of Appeals." These are the federal appeals courts below the U.S. Supreme Court. Unlike Supreme Court cases, these cases do not set the law for the entire country. Instead, they only apply in the particular group of states that make up the circuit. Therefore, before reading further, you may want to first look up which circuit your state is in. For instance, if you are in New York State, you are in the Second Circuit. Once you know what circuit you are in, you can use the cases from that circuit to understand and make an argument based on federal constitutional law. You can also use cases from other circuits to help support your argument. But, a court in your circuit does not have to follow these cases. If you are confused, you should read Chapter 2 of the JLM, "Introduction to Legal Research," for more information on how the judicial system is organized.

This Chapter also describes New York State law. This means if you are in a prison outside of New York, you will need to research the specific laws of your state. You can still use this Chapter to understand federal constitutional law and how state laws work in general. But, don't forget that the laws in your state might be different. For diagrams of the state and federal court systems, see the inside front and back covers of the JLM.

To summarize: if a guard or another incarcerated person has assaulted you in prison, you may be able to make a (1) federal constitutional law claim (that is, a claim that your constitutional rights were violated) and/or (2) a state law claim (that is, a claim that a state law was violated). The specific state law claim that you bring will depend on the state where you are imprisoned.

* This Chapter was written by Anya Emerson based on previous versions by Sara Manaugh, Jennifer Parkinson, Hannah Breshin Otero, Aric Wu, Sara Pikofsky, and Tami Parker. Special thanks to John Boston of The Legal Aid Society, Prisoners' Rights Project for his valuable comments.

1. The 8th Amendment states that "[e]xcessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted." U.S. CONST. amend. VIII.

Regardless of where you are imprisoned, you can bring a civil law claim. You cannot bring criminal law charges against your attacker. Only the government can bring charges under criminal law.² However, you do not have to wait for the government to bring a criminal charge against your attacker. If you have been assaulted and you want to sue your attacker in court, you can bring a civil suit even before the government charges your attacker with a crime. You can also bring a civil suit even if the government never charges your attacker at all.

State civil law includes many different areas of law. The area of state civil law you would use to file a claim after a prison assault is called “tort law.”³ Specifically, an assault is a type of tort. A tort is a wrongful act one person does to another. Tort law has developed in each state as a part of the “common law” (laws made by judges when they decide cases) rather than as “statutory law” (laws passed by the state legislature). This means that if you want to sue your attacker based on state law, you will need to read the cases decided in state courts to understand the laws that will apply to your case. In some states, the common law of torts has been “codified.” Codified means that the state legislature has organized the judicial case law on torts into “statutes” (written laws passed by the legislature).⁴ You should check to see whether your state legislature has codified tort law. If it has, you can find the definition of assault in the state statute. Tort law has not been codified in New York State. This means that it only exists as judge-made common law. If you are confused about tort law, you should read Chapter 17 of the JLM, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions.”

If you determine your rights have been violated under federal constitutional or state law, you will first need to follow the administrative grievance procedures your prison has set up before you can go to court. Filing a grievance is explained in Chapter 15 of the JLM, “Inmate Grievance Procedures.” If the grievance system does not help you, or if it does not help you enough, you can then file a suit in court. If you go to court, you must choose which court to go to and what type of lawsuit to bring. You can:

- (1) bring an action under Section 1983 of Title 42 of the United States Code (42 U.S.C. § 1983)⁵ in state or federal court,
- (2) file a tort action in state court (in the New York Court of Claims⁶ if you are in New York), or

2. See Lewis v. Gallivan, 315 F. Supp. 2d 313, 316–317 (W.D.N.Y. 2004) (“[T]he law is well settled that no private citizen has a constitutional right to bring a criminal complaint against another individual.”).

3. Note that if you are an incarcerated person in a federal institution (a prison run by the federal government), you will need to sue for simple tort violations using the Federal Tort Claims Act (“FTCA”). The FTCA is a law that allows you to sue the federal government for negligent or harmful actions by its employees. Without the FTCA, you could not sue the federal government in tort because the federal government would be “immune” from this kind of suit (unable to be sued). It is important to note that “[u]nder the FTCA, courts apply the law of the state where the accident occurred.” Robinson v. U.S. Bureau of Prisons, 244 F. Supp. 2d 57, 64 (N.D.N.Y. 2003); see also 28 U.S.C. § 1346(b)(1) (stating that government officials can be sued “in accordance with the law of the place where the act or omission occurred”); Part E(4) of Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law.”

4. The general principles of tort law have also been organized into a “Restatement” by the American Law Institute. The Restatement is a useful resource for learning about tort law in general but is not itself binding law, meaning courts do not have to follow it.

5. Remember that “§” is the symbol for “section.” For example, § 1983 means “Section 1983.”

6. The New York Court of Claims is a specific New York State court that only hears claims for damages against the State of New York. If the person who injured you was a state official or employee, and you decide to file a tort action in state court in New York, you should file your claim in the New York Court of Claims. The Court of Claims can only award money damages; it cannot issue an injunction, or an order from a judge that prevents a person from beginning or continuing specific actions. See Chapter 5 of the JLM, “Choosing a Court & Lawsuit,” for more information on the Court of Claims. See Chapter 17 of the JLM, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions,” for more explanation of tort actions.

(3) file an Article 78⁷ petition in state court if you are in New York.

More information on all of these types of claims can be found in other chapters of the JLM, including Chapter 5, “Choosing a Court and a Lawsuit”; Chapter 16, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law”; Chapter 17, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions”; and Chapter 22, “How to Challenge Administrative Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules.” If you decide to file a federal court claim, you must first read JLM, Chapter 14, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,” on the Prison Litigation Reform Act (“PLRA”). If you do not follow the steps required by the PLRA, you might lose your right to sue (and possibly your good-time credit also).

B. Your Right to Be Free from Assault

This Part of the Chapter is organized into five different sections. Part B(1) explains the legal definition of assault. It also states which prison assaults are considered unlawful. Part B(2) discusses how the Eighth Amendment, which forbids cruel and unusual punishment, protects you against assaults by both prison guards and other incarcerated people. Part B(3) outlines your rights against harassment. Part B(4) explains why you should not use force to resist, even if you think an order, assault, or search by prison officials is illegal. Finally, Part B(5) explains how state laws and state constitutions protect you from assault.

1. The Legal Concept of Assault

Many people confuse the legal term “assault” with the legal term “battery.” They do not mean the same thing in legal language. “Battery” means a violent physical attack.⁸ “Assault” means any act—including a threat, verbal abuse, or harassment—that makes a person afraid of a physical attack from another person.⁹ For example, an assault and battery charge means you are charged with both making someone afraid that you will attack him (assault) as well as actually physically attacking him (battery). Both assault and battery are torts.

Outside prison, most threats, unwanted touching, and uses of force are torts. They are therefore illegal. But in prison, tort law allows (or “privileges”) prison staff to use some force that would not be allowed outside. Therefore, most courts will not find that prison officials violated your rights if they only threatened or harassed you with words. Courts will generally only find that an assault violated your rights (that the act against you was illegal and an actionable tort) if it was battery (you were physically attacked). For more on torts and assault under state tort law, see Part B of Chapter 17 of the JLM, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions.”

Constitutional law is similar to tort law in this respect. Verbal threats by prison staff generally do not violate the Constitution.¹⁰ But if a staff member says words or takes some action that makes you

7. An Article 78 petition is a petition using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law. You cannot use Article 78 to seek damages for assault or other injury. Instead, you can use an Article 78 petition to go to court to challenge decisions made by New York State administrative bodies or officers, like the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision or prison employees, if you think the decision was illegal, arbitrary, or grossly unfair.

8. Battery is “[t]he use of force against another, resulting in harmful or offensive contact.” BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY 173 (10th ed. 2014).

9. Assault is “[t]he threat or use of force on another that causes that person to have a reasonable apprehension of imminent harmful or offensive contact; the act of putting another person in reasonable fear ... of an immediate battery ... [or] [a]n attempt to commit battery [with] the specific intent to cause physical injury.” BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY 130 (10th ed. 2014).

10. See Cole v. Fisher, 379 Fed. Appx. 40, 43 (2d Cir. 2010) (“[V]erbal harassment, standing alone, does not amount to a constitutional deprivation”) (citing Purcell v. Coughlin, 790 F. 2d 263, 265 (2d Cir. 1986)) (internal citations omitted); McBride v. Deer, 240 F. 3d 1287, 1291, n.3 (10th Cir. 2001) (stating that threatening to spray with mace did not violate a constitutional right: “[A]cts or omissions resulting in an inmate being subjected to nothing more than threats and verbal taunts do not violate the Eighth Amendment”); Adkins v. Rodriguez, 59 F.3d 1034, 1037 (10th Cir. 1995) (holding that verbal sexual harassment by a prison guard did not violate a believe that the person will seriously hurt you, courts might find a constitutional violation.¹¹ Even then, under the Prison Litigation Reform Act (“PLRA”), you cannot sue for compensatory damages¹² (and, in some circuits, punitive damages¹³) in federal court for mental or emotional injury unless you were also physically injured.¹⁴ See JLM Chapter 14, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,” for information on the PLRA’s physical injury requirement.

(a) You Must Prove That Your Attacker Intended to Touch or Harm You

(i) State Torts and Intent

Assault and battery are state law torts. State courts use different tests to decide whether someone’s use of force against you was wrongful (whether that person has committed the torts of assault and battery against you).¹⁵ All states require you to show that the defendant meant to act against you in some way. They take different approaches to the other requirements. In some states, you will have to show that the defendant either acted unlawfully or meant to harm you.¹⁶ In others, constitutional right); Oltarzewski v. Ruggiero, 830 F.2d 136, 139 (9th Cir. 1987) (holding that prison official’s use of vulgarity [bad language] did not violate a constitutional right); Mateo v. Fisher, 682 F. Supp. 2d 423, 432 (S.D.N.Y. 2010) (finding that calling an incarcerated person “paranoid” and referring him to a mental health evaluation could be harassment but not serious enough to violate a constitutional right); Govan v. Campbell, 289 F. Supp. 2d 289, 299 (N.D.N.Y. 2003) (“A claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 is not designed to rectify harassment or verbal abuse.” (quoting Gill v. Hoadley, 261 F.Supp.2d 113, 129 (N.D.N.Y. 2003))); Johnson v. Dellatifa, 357 F.3d 539, 546 (6th Cir. 2004) (“[H]arassment and verbal abuse ... do not constitute the type of infliction of pain that the Eighth Amendment prohibits.”); Graves v. N.D. State Penitentiary, 325 F. Supp. 2d 1009, 1011–1012 (D.N.D. 2004) (finding that even though a guard’s racially derogatory language was “offensive, degrading, and reprehensible,” “the use of racially derogatory language will not, by itself, violate the 14th Amendment ‘unless it is pervasive or severe enough to amount to racial harassment’” (quoting Blades v. Schuetzle, 302 F.3d 801, 805 (8th Cir. 2002))).

11. See Irving v. Dormire, 519 F.3d 441, 448–449 (8th Cir. 2008) (finding that prison officer’s multiple death threats partially in response to the incarcerated person starting a lawsuit against officers were serious enough to implicate the 8th Amendment); Northington v. Jackson, 973 F.2d 1518, 1524 (10th Cir. 1992) (finding incarcerated person stated a § 1983 8th Amendment excessive force claim for psychological injuries when plain-clothed corrections officers surprised plaintiff on the street while he was out on work release and, without identifying themselves, threatened at gunpoint to kill him before taking him back to jail; the court held that although the incarcerated person was not physically injured, his alleged psychological injury was not insignificant because “convicted prisoners have a constitutional ‘right to be free from the terror of instant and unexpected death’ at the hands of their keepers” (citations omitted)); see also Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 16–17, 112 S. Ct. 995, 1004, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 172 (1992) (Blackmun, J., concurring) (stating a “guard placing a revolver in an inmate’s mouth and threatening to blow [the] prisoner’s head off” would be an unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain—although psychological, not physical pain—amounting to an 8th Amendment excessive force violation).

12. Compensatory damages are money damages that try to “make you whole again” after your actual injury or to put you in the same position as you were before the injury occurred. These types of damages might include reimbursement for medical expenses or money for pain and suffering.

13. Punitive damages are damages awarded in addition to compensatory damages, and are meant to punish a defendant who was reckless or acted intentionally.

14. The PLRA prohibits all federal civil actions (constitutional and tort claims) brought in federal court by incarcerated people (convicted felons, misdemeanants, and pretrial detainees) for mental or emotional injury suffered while in custody where there was no related physical injury. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e). The Federal Tort Claims Act has a similar limitation for convicted felons (but not pretrial detainees or misdemeanants (person convicted of a misdemeanor)): no convicted felon can “bring a civil action against the United States or an agency, officer, or employee of the Government, for mental or emotional injury suffered while in custody without a prior showing of physical injury or the commission of a sexual act.” 28 U.S.C. § 1346(b)(2). See Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,” for more information.

15. As described in the Introduction to this Chapter, the tests used by courts today come from past judicial decisions—called the common law—that some states have now made into statutes.

16. See, e.g., Glowacki v. Moldtronics, Inc., 636 N.E.2d 1138, 1140, 264 Ill. App. 3d 19, 22 (Ill. App. 2d Dist. 1994) (dismissing plaintiff’s battery action after plaintiff failed to allege either (1) that defendants were involved in illegal activity or (2) that defendants specifically meant to harm him when they exposed him to chemicals at work).

you must show that the defendant deliberately ignored your rights.¹⁷ In a few states, you will only need to add that the defendant touched you without your permission.¹⁸ In New York, courts use the “intentional touching” standard.¹⁹

All state courts believe that sometimes prison officials have to use force in order to maintain safety and order in the prisons. Therefore, courts often think that a prison official’s choice to use physical force on an incarcerated person is not wrongful, even if the same use of force outside prison would be illegal.

In New York, to prove the tort of battery (physical assault), you must show that the defendant meant to do a certain action. But, you do not have to show that the defendant specifically meant to harm you.²⁰ For example, let’s say a prison official handcuffed you very tightly, permanently injuring your wrists and hands. To prove this was battery, you must show that the guard meant to handcuff you. But, you do not have to show that the guard meant to hurt you when he handcuffed you.

(ii) Constitutional Torts and Intent

Proving that an assault violated your constitutional rights under the Eighth Amendment is much more difficult than proving that the assault was a tort in most states. Using the previous example, to prove that an assault against you violated your constitutional rights, you must show that your attacker meant to both handcuff you and meant to hurt you. See Part B(2)(a)(i) below for a full description of what you need to prove to show that an assault violated your rights under the Eighth Amendment. Under state tort law, you could bring a successful claim of assault and battery if you were injured when prison staff intentionally touched you. You could bring this claim even if you could not prove that the official specifically meant to hurt you. But, if you think you can show the official intended to harm you, you can claim that the official committed both a constitutional violation and the state torts of assault and battery in your suit.

(b) Suing the Prison if You Were Assaulted by Other Incarcerated People

(i) State Tort of Negligence

If you were physically attacked by another incarcerated person and believe that prison officials were partly responsible for the attack, you may also be able to sue the prison and/or the prison officials. But here, you cannot claim assault and battery because the prison officials did not actually attack

17. See, e.g., Ashcraft v. King, 228 Cal. App. 3d 604, 613, 278 Cal. Rptr. 900, 904 (Cal. App. 2d Dist. 1991) (“In an action for civil battery the element of intent is satisfied if the evidence shows defendant acted with a ‘willful disregard’ for the plaintiff’s rights.” For example, a defendant disregards your rights in California if they give you one form of medical treatment when you specifically consented to another form).

18. See, e.g., Hughes v. Farrey, 30 A.D.3d 244, 247, 817 N.Y.S.2d 25, 28 (1st Dept. 2006) (“To establish a civil battery a plaintiff need only prove intentional physical contact by defendant without plaintiff’s consent; the injury may be unintended, accidental or unforeseen.”) (quoting Tower Ins. Co. of N.Y. v. Old N. Blvd. Rest. Corp., 245 A.D.2d 241, 242, 666 N.Y.S.2d 636, 637 (1st Dept. 1997)).

19. See, e.g., Hughes v. Farrey, 30 A.D.3d 244, 247, 817 N.Y.S.2d 25, 28 (1st Dept. 2006) (“To establish a civil battery a plaintiff need only prove intentional physical contact by defendant without plaintiff’s consent; the injury may be unintended, accidental or unforeseen.”) (quoting Tower Ins. Co. of N.Y. v. Old N. Blvd. Rest. Corp., 245 A.D.2d 241, 242, 666 N.Y.S.2d 636, 637 (1st Dept. 1997)); Allegany Co-Op Ins. Co. v. Kohorst, 254 A.D.2d 744, 744, 678 N.Y.S.2d 424, 425 (4th Dept. 1998) (“Accidental results can flow from intentional acts. The damage in question may be unintended even though the original act or acts leading to the damage were intentional.”) (quoting Salimbene v. Merchants Mut. Ins. Co., 217 A.D.2d 991, 994, 629 N.Y.S.2d 913, 915–916 (4th Dept 1995)).

20. See, e.g., Hughes v. Farrey, 30 A.D.3d 244, 247, 817 N.Y.S.2d 25, 28 (1st Dept. 2006) (“To establish a civil battery a plaintiff need only prove intentional physical contact by defendant without plaintiff’s consent; the injury may be unintended, accidental or unforeseen.”) (quoting Tower Ins. Co. of N.Y. v. Old N. Blvd. Rest. Corp., 245 A.D.2d 241, 242, 666 N.Y.S.2d 636, 637 (1st Dept. 1997)).

you.²¹ Instead, you can use the law of “negligence.”²² Negligence is different from assault and battery under state tort law. It means that a person did not do enough to fulfill his duty toward you, but not necessarily that he meant to hurt you.²³ If another incarcerated person is attacking you, prison officials are supposed to try to stop the attack. If they do not, you could sue them for negligence. To prove the prison officials’ negligence in such a situation, you must show the court that the officials “failed to exercise [or use] reasonable care” in allowing the attack to happen. In other words, you must show that the officials did not act like reasonably careful people to prevent the attack.²⁴ You will need evidence that: (1) the officials knew (or reasonably should have known) that you would be harmed or that there was a big (“substantial”) risk that you would be harmed,²⁵ and (2) the officials did not act to prevent it.²⁶

However, winning a negligence claim against prison officials for an assault by another incarcerated person is difficult.²⁷ Courts have found negligence in only a few situations: when the attacker is an incarcerated person whom officials knew or should have known was violent;²⁸ when officials placed the plaintiff (the incarcerated person bringing the suit) near a violent mentally ill incarcerated person;²⁹

21. If an officer participated in the attack along with the other incarcerated people, however, you can also claim assault and battery against the participating officer (in addition to your claim of negligence against the other officers who you believe allowed the attack to happen).

22. See Part B(2) of Chapter 17 of the JLM, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions,” for more on negligence and negligent torts.

23. Negligence is “[t]he failure to exercise the standard of care that a reasonably prudent person would have exercised in a similar situation; any conduct that falls below the legal standard established to protect others against unreasonable risk of harm, except for conduct that is intentionally, wantonly, or willfully disregarding of others’ rights . . . [a] tort grounded in this failure, usually expressed in terms of the following elements: duty, breach of duty, causation, and damages.” BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY 1133–1134 (10th ed. 2014).

24. The Restatement (Third) of Torts defines the general rule: “An actor in a special relationship with another owes the other a duty of reasonable care with regard to risks that arise in the scope of that relationship.” Its definition of a “special relationship” includes “a custodian with those in its custody, if: (a) the custodian is required by law to take custody or voluntarily takes custody of another; and (b) the custodian has a superior ability to protect the other.” Restatement (Third) of Torts § 40 (2012). The Restatement of Torts is published by the American Law Institute and presents the general principles of tort law.

25. See, e.g., Sanchez v. City of New York, 99 N.Y.2d 247, 255, 784 N.E.2d 675, 680, 754 N.Y.S.2d 621, 626 (N.Y. 2002) (holding that “the State owes a duty of care to inmates for foreseeable risks of harm; and that foreseeability is defined not simply by actual notice but by actual or constructive notice—by what the ‘State knew or had reason to know’ [or] ... what the State ‘is or should be aware’ of ... The requisite foreseeability is as to a ‘risk of harm’ ... or ‘risk of inmate-on-inmate attack’”; actual notice or “proof of specific notice of time, place or manner of the risk” is not required); see also Newton v. State, 283 A.D.2d 992, 993, 725 N.Y.S.2d 503, 504 (4th Dept. 2001) (denying plaintiff incarcerated person’s claim after finding it was not foreseeable that there would be an attack in one part of the prison because there had been an incident earlier that day in another part of the prison).

26. See, e.g., Sanchez v. City of New York, 99 N.Y.2d 247, 252, 784 N.E.2d 675, 678, 754 N.Y.S.2d 621, 624 (N.Y. 2002) (describing the requirements for a negligence action).

27. See, e.g., Wilson v. State of New York, 303 A.D.2d 678, 679, 760 N.Y.S.2d 51, 52 (2d Dept. 2003) (“While the State’s duty to an inmate encompasses protection from the foreseeable risk of harm at the hands of other prisoners ... the State is not an insurer of an inmate’s safety. The State will be liable in negligence for an assault by another inmate only upon a showing that it failed to exercise adequate care to prevent that which was reasonably foreseeable.”).

28. See, e.g., Blake v. State, 259 A.D.2d 878, 879, 686 N.Y.S.2d 219, 221 (3d Dept. 1999) (affirming the lower court’s finding that prison officials were liable for placing plaintiff in the same recreational yard as an incarcerated person who had assaulted another incarcerated person three months prior and with a sharp object that officers had never located) (citing Littlejohn v. State, 218 A.D.2d 833, 834, 630 N.Y.S.2d 407, 408 (3d Dept. 1995)).

29. See, e.g., Bartlett v. Commonwealth, 418 S.W.2d 225, 227–228 (Ky. 1967) (finding that the trial court erred in refusing to admit evidence showing that two incarcerated people who murdered a 15-year-old incarcerated person in a state juvenile facility had records of violence and mental and emotional disability; noting the general rule that the keeper of a prison must exercise ordinary care for the protection of his incarcerated people if there is when officials placed the plaintiff near an armed incarcerated person;³⁰ when the plaintiff was exposed to a disturbed incarcerated person overseer or “trustee”;³¹ when the plaintiff was exposed to an incarcerated person who had a grudge against him or who had threatened him;³² or sometimes when the prison did not have enough supervisory staff on duty.³³

(ii) Constitutional “Tort” of Deliberate Indifference

If another incarcerated person assaulted you, you may be able to make a federal constitutional claim of “deliberate indifference” as well as a state tort claim of negligence. But, remember that constitutional violations are harder to prove than state tort claims. “Deliberate indifference” means that the prison officials’ actions or inactions were worse than negligence (carelessness). It also means that the actions or inactions were so bad that they violate the Eighth Amendment’s constitutional ban on cruel and unusual punishment. You will have to prove that the prison officials actually knew that you were going to be attacked but did nothing or too little to stop the attack (were “deliberately indifferent” to the danger). It is not enough to prove that the officials were negligent and “should have reasonable grounds to foresee danger to the incarcerated person). But see Luttrell v. Nickel, 129 F.3d 933, 936 (7th Cir. 1997) (finding no negligence on the part of an official who did not separate plaintiff from a mentally disturbed incarcerated person who was taking medication). For examples of courts finding “deliberate indifference” to be a constitutional violation in similar situations, see Haley v. Gross, 86 F.3d 630, 642–643 (7th Cir. 1996) (affirming liability for officials who failed to act during a heated argument between plaintiff and a mentally ill incarcerated person); Glass v. Fields, No. 04-71014, 2007 U.S. Dist. Lexis 37089, at *24 (E.D. Mich. 2007) (finding that the objective component—how serious the risk of harm was—of the deliberate indifference test was met when plaintiff was put in the same cell as a detainee who claimed to be insane and was noted as prone to be violent). But see Hann v. State, 137 Misc. 2d 605, 611, 521 N.Y.S.2d 973, 977 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1987) (finding that it was not foreseeable that incarcerated person with history of assaultive behavior and who was recently released from psychiatric hospital would attack fellow incarcerated person).

30. See, e.g., Huertas v. State, 84 A.D.2d 650, 650–651, 444 N.Y.S.2d 307, 308–309 (3d Dept. 1981) (finding negligence where, immediately before fatal assault, assailant left his work area with iron bar visible under his clothes, in plain view of five corrections officers); Jackson v. Hollowell, 714 F.2d 1372, 1373–1374 (5th Cir. 1983) (finding prison officials liable when incarcerated person was struck by a pellet that was fired by an armed prison trustee using a sawed-off shotgun). Prison trustees are “inmates ... armed with loaded shotguns and ... entrusted with the responsibility of guarding other inmates.” Jackson v. Hollowell, 714 F.2d 1372, 1373 n.2 (5th Cir. 1983).

31. Jackson v. Mississippi, 644 F.2d 1142, 1146 (5th Cir. 1981) (establishing a “constitutional right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment in the form of trusty shooters who were inadequately screened for mental, emotional, or other problems”), aff’d, Jackson v. Hollowell, 714 F.2d 1372, 1373 n.2, 1374 (5th Cir. 1983).

32. See, e.g., Rangolan v. County of Nassau, 51 F. Supp. 2d 236, 238 (E.D.N.Y. 1999) (upholding judgment that county jail was negligent as a matter of law for housing an incarcerated person in the same “jail pod” as another incarcerated person he had served as a confidential informant against and who subsequently beat him badly), vacated in part on other grounds, 370 F.3d 239 (2d Cir. 2004); Ashford v. D.C., 306 F. Supp. 2d 8, 16 (D.D.C. 2004) (finding incarcerated person did state a common law negligence claim where incarcerated person was severely stabbed by a fellow incarcerated person against whom he had a permanent separation order after being transferred to a new prison not aware of the separation order).

33. Negligence is seldom found in such a case. For an unusual example, see Laube v. Haley, 234 F. Supp. 2d 1227, 1251 (M.D. Ala. 2002) (finding that defendants were liable for deliberate indifference because they had ignored the overcrowding and understaffing of the prison). But see Robinson v. U.S. Bureau of Prisons, 244 F. Supp. 2d 57, 65 (N.D.N.Y. 2003) (noting that, to determine the foreseeability of an attack, courts may look at evidence “including staffing levels, the ability of staff to monitor the inmates, past behavior of inmates and prison staff, state regulations regarding the staffing of correctional facilities and the monitoring of inmates, and expert testimony regarding the staffing levels at issue”); Colon v. State, 209 A.D.2d 842, 844, 620 N.Y.S.2d 1015, 1016 (3d Dept. 1994) (reversing court of claims judgment for incarcerated person who claimed the prison failed to provide adequate supervision after being attacked by a fellow incarcerated person in a prison engine repair shop during a supervisor’s brief absence. The court found instead that the State provided reasonable supervision and that “unremitting supervision ... was unnecessary and the fact that [the prison official was] not present at the time of the incident, in and of itself, is insufficient to support a finding that the State failed to exercise reasonable care”).

known” you were in danger. Part B(2)(a)(ii) below explains more about how to show prison officials’ deliberate indifference.³⁴

(c) Body Searches and Sexual Attacks As “Assault”

Violent physical attacks are not the only type of assault in prison. Forced sexual contact and illegal body cavity searches interfere with your body. They may also be considered assaults and batteries.³⁵ Courts use the same civil and constitutional tort laws (including the Eighth Amendment) to decide claims of sexual assault. Part C of this Chapter explains some special legal protections you have against sexual assault.

Courts typically use the Fourth Amendment, not the Eighth Amendment, to decide claims of illegal searches. The Fourth Amendment protects your right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures.³⁶ Some illegal body cavity searches may also be a violation of the Eighth Amendment if a court feels the search is so extreme that it counts as cruel and unusual punishment.³⁷ However, if the official who searched you was acting in order to maintain security or discipline or another reason important to running a prison and the pain you suffered was a side effect, most courts will not find any constitutional wrongdoing.³⁸ See JLM, Chapter 25, “Your Right to Be Free From Illegal Body Searches,” for more information on when searches may violate the Eighth Amendment.

(d) When is Assault Prohibited by the Law?

As this Chapter explained above, not all physical touching or physical force is unlawful assault. The difference between lawful and unlawful assault is particularly important for incarcerated people. Actions that would be unlawful outside of prison may be allowed as “lawful force” in prison. For example, prison officers may use lawful force against incarcerated people to maintain order and to make sure rules are obeyed.³⁹

Also, because corrections officers are part of the government, they can use the defense of qualified immunity⁴⁰ when sued under Section 1983. This means even if you can prove you were assaulted, the 34. See Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 829, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1974, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 820 (1994) (announcing that deliberate indifference requires showing “the official was subjectively aware of the risk”); Knowles v. N.Y. City Dept. of Corr., 904 F. Supp. 217, 222 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (“Mere negligence, however, on the part of a prison official will not give rise to a claim under § 1983.”).

35. See, e.g., Hammond v. Gordon County, 316 F. Supp. 2d 1262, 1303 (N.D. Ga. 2002) (holding female plaintiff had sufficient evidence to claim assault and battery against male prison official who placed the plaintiff “in apprehension of an unlawful touch when [the guard] pointed a gun at plaintiff and attempted to engage in sexual conduct with her”; also recognizing second plaintiff’s claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress when another guard penetrated her vagina with his fingers).

36. The 4th Amendment states that “[t]he right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated.” U.S. CONST. amend. IV.

37. See, e.g., Calhoun v. DeTella, 319 F.3d 936, 939 (7th Cir. 2003) (stating a cross-gender strip search could violate the 8th Amendment if “the strip search in question was not merely a legitimate search conducted in the presence of female correctional officers, but instead a search conducted in a harassing manner intended to humiliate and inflict psychological pain”); Dellamore v. Stenros, 886 F. Supp. 349, 351 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (finding that plaintiff subjected to body cavity search without a medical practitioner present stated a colorable claim under the 8th Amendment).

38. See Whitman v. Nesic, 368 F.3d 931, 935–936 (7th Cir. 2004) (finding no violation because while nudity during drug tests might be uncomfortable, the evidence did not show that the official had acted for any other purpose besides a legitimate interest in providing for the safety of incarcerated people and the community).

39. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 137(5) (McKinney 2014) (“When any inmate, or group of inmates, shall offer violence to any person, or do or attempt to do any injury to property, or attempt to escape, or resist or disobey any lawful direction, the officers and employees shall use all suitable means to defend themselves, to maintain order, to enforce observation of discipline, to secure the persons of the offenders and to prevent any such attempt or escape.” (emphasis added)).

40. Qualified immunity is defined as “[i]mmunity from civil liability for a public official who is performing a discretionary function, as long as the conduct does not violate clearly established constitutional or statutory rights.” BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY 818 (10th ed. 2014).

officials may not be liable because of qualified immunity. For a detailed discussion of qualified immunity and Section 1983, see Part C(3)(c) (“Qualified Immunity”) and Part B (“Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Challenge State or Local Government Action”) of Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law.”

2. Protection from Assault Under the Eighth Amendment

This Section is about the right of convicted state and federal incarcerated people to be free from assault under the Eighth Amendment.⁴¹ The Eighth Amendment prohibits “cruel and unusual punishment.”⁴² Under the Eighth Amendment, prison officials cannot use excessive physical force against you.⁴³ They also cannot purposely let someone else hurt you.⁴⁴

There are two parts of an Eighth Amendment claim. You must prove both of them to show that an assault against you violated the Eighth Amendment. First you must show what the prison official was thinking or knew at the time of the assault (the “subjective” part, explained in Part B(2)(b)). You must also show injuries (if any) you received from an assault by a prison official, or show how a prison official’s actions caused you to be in “substantial risk of serious harm” of being attacked by another incarcerated person (the “objective” part, explained in Part B(2)(b)).

To summarize, to show that an assault against you violated the Eighth Amendment, you must prove that the force used against you had two parts:

- (1) A subjective part—prison officials must have acted with a state of mind that is guilty enough;⁴⁵ and
- (2) An objective part—you must have been injured⁴⁶ or you must have had a big risk of serious injury.⁴⁷

41. This Chapter explains how the 8th Amendment of the U.S. Constitution can protect you from assaults and unreasonable body searches. But the 8th Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment can protect incarcerated people in other ways too, like from general prison conditions such as overcrowding and uncleanness (see Part B(2)(b) of Chapter 16 of the JLM, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief from Violations of Federal Law”), and lack of proper medical care (see Chapter 23 of the JLM, “Your Right to Adequate Medical Care”).

42. U.S. CONST. amend. VIII.

43. See, e.g., Smith v. Mensinger, 293 F.3d 641, 648 (3d Cir. 2002) (stating that serious physical injury is not necessary for an excessive force claim under the 8th Amendment) (citing Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 4, 112 S. Ct. 995, 997, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 164 (1992)).

44. See Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 833–834, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1976–1977, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 822–823 (1994) (holding that prison officials may be held liable under the Eighth Amendment for denying humane conditions of confinement only if they know that inmates face substantial risk of serious harm and disregard that risk by failing to take reasonable measures to abate it); see, e.g., Bistrrian v. Levi, 696 F.3d 352, 370–371 (3d Cir. 2012) (finding that plaintiff stated a constitutional claim against officials who had placed him in a recreational yard with other incarcerated people whom officials knew were likely to retaliate against plaintiff).

45. Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 7, 112 S. Ct. 995, 999, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 166 (1992) (“[T]he core judicial inquiry is ... whether force was applied in a good-faith effort to maintain or restore discipline, or maliciously and sadistically to cause harm.”); Sims v. Artuz, 230 F.3d 14, 21 (2d Cir. 2000) (finding the subjective component of the claim to require a showing that the defendant had the necessary level of culpability, shown by actions characterized as wanton in light of the particular circumstances surrounding the challenged conduct (citations omitted)); Wilkins v. Gaddy, 559 U.S. 34, 130 S. Ct. 1175, 175 L. Ed. 2d 995 (2010) (restating earlier cases).

46. See Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 7, 112 S. Ct. 995, 999, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 166 (1992) (“[T]he extent of injury suffered by a prisoner is one factor that may suggest ‘whether the use of force could plausibly have been thought necessary’ in a particular situation.” (quoting Whitley v. Albers, 475 U.S. 312, 321, 106 S. Ct. 1078, 1085, 89 L. Ed. 2d 251, 261–262 (1986))).

47. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1977, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 823 (1994) (holding that in a claim of failure to protect, “the inmate must show that he is incarcerated under conditions posing a substantial risk of serious harm”).

(a) Subjective Part—Culpable State of Mind

The subjective part of assault means you must show what the prison official was thinking or knew when you were assaulted. Courts use two different standards (the Hudson and Farmer standards) for the subjective part. The standard a court will use in your case depends on who assaulted you: a prison official or another incarcerated person. If a prison official hurt you, courts use the Hudson standard. This standard looks at whether the guard used force as part of his job to keep the prison safe and orderly, or whether the guard's force was meant to cruelly hurt you for no valid reason. If another incarcerated person hurts you, courts use the Farmer standard. This standard looks at whether the prison officials knew about the danger to you but did not stop or act to prevent the assault.⁴⁸

(i) Assault by a Prison Official—The Hudson Standard

If you are suing a prison official who injured you, a court will use the “malicious and sadistic” (evil and cruel) standard. This standard was created by the Supreme Court in *Hudson v. McMillian*⁴⁹ to determine whether the official's force against you was so bad (“excessive”) as to violate the Eighth Amendment.⁵⁰ In order to show a constitutional wrong under Hudson, an incarcerated person must show that the prison official's force was not “a good-faith effort to maintain or restore discipline,” but rather was used “maliciously and sadistically” to hurt the incarcerated person.⁵¹

Officials are not violating the Eighth Amendment if they use force for valid reasons.⁵² Prison officials are generally allowed to use force during a riot or other major prison violence.⁵³ They are also usually allowed to use force during smaller events when incarcerated people behave violently or

48. Note that if a prison official injured you in the presence of, or with the knowledge of, other officials, you could sue both the official who harmed you and also the officials and/or supervisors who knew about it and did nothing. The prison officials who knew about your assault but did nothing would be liable under the Farmer standard—not the Hudson “malicious and sadistic” standard. See, e.g., Blyden v. Mancusi, 186 F.3d 252, 264 (2d Cir. 1999) (finding the deliberate indifference standard applied to prison supervisors if “after learning of the violation through a report or appeal,...[the supervisor] failed to remedy the wrong...created a policy or custom under which unconstitutional practices occurred, or allowed such a policy or custom to continue...[or] was grossly negligent in managing subordinates who caused the unlawful condition or event.” (citations omitted)); Buckner v. Hollins, 983 F.2d 119, 122 (8th Cir. 1993) (applying the deliberate indifference, or Farmer, standard, to a claim based on prison official's failure to act); Meriwether v. Coughlin, 879 F.2d 1037, 1048 (2d Cir. 1989) (“[S]upervisory liability may be imposed...when an official has actual or constructive notice of unconstitutional practices and demonstrates ‘gross negligence’ or ‘deliberate indifference’ by failing to act.”) (citations omitted); Vaughan v. Ricketts, 859 F.2d 736, 741 (9th Cir. 1988) (“[P]rison administrators’ indifference to brutal behavior by guards toward inmates [is] sufficient to state an Eighth Amendment claim.”) (citations omitted); Pizzuto v. Nassau, 239 F. Supp. 2d 301, 311 (E.D.N.Y. 2003) (finding that prison supervisor was liable for standing by and watching while subordinates beat the incarcerated person).

49. Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 24, 112 S. Ct. 995, 1008, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 177 (1992).

50. This section pertains specifically to claims brought by incarcerated people against prison officials who have violated their Eighth Amendment right against cruel and unusual punishment. If you are a pretrial detainee looking to make a claim, see Chapter 34, Part E of the JLM.

51. Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 6–7, 112 S. Ct. 995, 998–999, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 165–166 (1992).

52. See Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 6, 112 S. Ct. 995, 998, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 165 (1992) (“[T]he question whether the measure taken inflicted unnecessary and wanton pain and suffering ultimately turns on whether force was applied in a good faith effort to maintain or restore discipline or maliciously and sadistically for the very purpose of causing harm.” (quoting Whitley v. Albers, 475 U.S. 312, 320–321, 106 S. Ct. 1078, 1085, 89 L. Ed. 2d 251, 261 (1986)); see also Skinner v. Cunningham, 430 F.3d 483, 489 (1st Cir. 2005) (finding that prison officials used reasonable force in forcibly extricating the incarcerated person from his cell after he refused to be handcuffed during a cell search).

53. Whitley v. Albers, 475 U.S. 312, 326, 106 S. Ct. 1078, 1087, 89 L. Ed. 2d 251, 265 (1986) (finding no 8th Amendment violation where incarcerated person was shot as part of a good-faith effort to restore prison security); see also Wright v. Goord, 554 F.3d 255, 270 (2d Cir. 2009) (finding that although guard had placed one hand on incarcerated person's abdomen at the site of his colon surgery, there was no evidence that that placement was sadistic or malicious because prisoner did not testify that guard knew or had reason to know that his abdomen was unusually tender, nor did the record reveal any basis for inferring that guard would have been aware that it was a surgical site).

disruptively.⁵⁴ But, if the force has no purpose and is simply meant to harm the incarcerated person for no valid reason, then the official may be found to have used too much force.⁵⁵ In other words, if the official uses force for the purpose of harming you and not for returning order to the prison, then the official may be found to have used too much force.

To decide if the prison official intended to act maliciously and to harm you (to determine the official's "state of mind"), courts will look at:

- (1) the seriousness of your injuries,⁵⁶
- (2) if the force was necessary under the circumstances (why the official used force),
- (3) the relationship between the need to use force and the amount of force that was actually used,
- (4) the size of the threat as a prison official would reasonably see it, and
- (5) efforts made by prison guards to decrease the amount of force used.⁵⁷

You should think about each of these factors when you try to prove that prison officials meant to hurt you when they used violence. You need to remember that "not every push or shove, even if it may later seem unnecessary," violates your constitutional rights.⁵⁸ Even if an official used force, you may not be able to win in court. Nevertheless, some uses of force may be so extreme that they are unconstitutional, even in an emergency.⁵⁹

The Ninth Circuit (covering Alaska, Arizona, California, Hawaii, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, and Washington) has said that you do not need to show that the officer meant to hurt or punish a specific individual.⁶⁰ This means even if the officer meant to hit someone else, he can still be found liable if he hit you instead. For instance, in Robins v. Meecham, an incarcerated person was injured by a birdshot a correction officer had fired at another incarcerated person.⁶¹ The court held that even though the officer did not mean to harm or punish Robins (the incarcerated person suing), 54. See Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 6, 112 S. Ct. 995, 999, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 165 (1992) (finding that during a riot or a lesser disruption, "corrections officers must balance the need to maintain or restore discipline through force against the risk of injury to inmates"); see also Bellotto v. County of Orange, 248 Fed. Appx. 232, 235 (2d Cir. 2007) (finding that guards did not use excessive force in forcibly restraining and handcuffing female incarcerated person who was violently banging her head against the wall of her cell and refusing to stop).

55. See, e.g., Estate of Davis by Ostfeld v. Delo, 115 F.3d 1388, 1394–1395 (8th Cir. 1997) (finding an 8th Amendment excessive force violation when a corrections officer struck a non-resisting incarcerated person in the head and face 20 to 25 times while four other officers restrained his limbs, resulting in serious injury); Locicero v. O'Connell, 419 F. Supp. 2d 521, 428–29 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) (finding that an incarcerated person adequately stated a claim that his 8th amendment rights were violated when he was seriously assaulted by a prison officer, the incarcerated person did not provoke the assault, and the prison facility had prior notice of, but failed to act about, the officer's previous use of excessive force).

56. Courts will examine the extent of your injury to help determine whether an official's decision to use force in a particular situation was reasonable. See Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 7, 112 S. Ct. 995, 999, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 166 (1992) (citing Whitley v. Albers, 475 U.S. 312, 321, 106 S. Ct. 1078, 1085, 89 L.Ed.2d 251, 261 (1986)). Courts also look at the seriousness of your injuries in deciding the objective component of an 8th Amendment violation.

57. See Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 7, 112 S. Ct. 995, 999, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 166 (1992) (citing Whitley v. Albers, 475 U.S. 312, 321, 106 S. Ct. 1078, 1085, 89 L.Ed.2d 251, 261 (1986)).

58. Johnson v. District of Columbia, 528 F. 3d 969, 974 (D.C. Cir. 2008) (quoting Johnson v. Glick, 481 F.2d 1028, 1033 (2d Cir. 1973), distinguished on other grounds by Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386, 109 S. Ct. 1865, 104 L. Ed. 2d 443 (1989)).

59. See Jones v. Huff, 789 F. Supp. 526, 535–536 (N.D.N.Y. 1992) (finding violations of incarcerated person's 8th Amendment rights when corrections officers slapped, punched, and kicked a handcuffed and naked incarcerated person).

60. See Robins v. Meecham, 60 F.3d 1436, 1439–1440 (9th Cir. 1995) ("[T]he Eighth Amendment does not require a specific intent to punish a specific individual. The basic threshold of the Eighth Amendment is that the offending conduct must be 'wanton.'").

61. Robins v. Meecham, 60 F.3d 1436, 1438 (9th Cir. 1995).

the officer did mean to harm a different incarcerated person.⁶² The court said that this was enough to fulfill the intent requirement.⁶³

Remember that the Prison Litigation Reform Act would probably also prevent you from making a similar claim because it requires a physical injury, not just a mental injury.⁶⁴

(ii) Assault by Another Incarcerated Person—The Farmer Standard

If you are suing a prison official who did not stop or act to prevent another incarcerated person from attacking you, the court will use the “deliberate indifference”⁶⁵ standard from Farmer v. Brennan.⁶⁶ The court will determine whether the prison official’s “deliberate indifference” toward you violated the Eighth Amendment.⁶⁷ Prison officials may be found liable under the deliberate indifference standard if they:

- (1) knew of a big risk of serious harm to the incarcerated person, and
- (2) ignored the risk and did not act or do enough to avoid the harm.⁶⁸

Because incarcerated people often cannot protect themselves, courts have decided that the government must take reasonable steps to protect them against violence by other incarcerated people.⁶⁹ The Eighth Amendment creates a constitutional right for incarcerated people to be protected from harm by fellow incarcerated people.⁷⁰ Courts have mainly used the “deliberate indifference” standard for cases where a prison official does not prevent an incarcerated person from assaulting another incarcerated person. But, courts have also used the standard for when a prison official does not prevent another official from attacking an incarcerated person.⁷¹ These types of lawsuits are also

62. Robins v. Meecham, 60 F.3d 1436, 1440 (9th Cir. 1995).

63. Robins v. Meecham, 60 F.3d 1436, 1440 (9th Cir. 1995).

64. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e). See Part F of Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,” for more information on the PLRA’s limitations on actions for mental or emotional injury.

65. Note that “deliberate indifference” is also the legal standard for 8th Amendment violations regarding medical care and general prison conditions, in addition to incarcerated person-on-incarcerated person assaults.

66. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1977, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 823 (1994) (“[A] prison official must have a ‘sufficiently culpable state of mind’ ... In prison-conditions cases that state of mind is one of ‘deliberate indifference’ to inmate health or safety (internal citations omitted).”)

67. This section pertains specifically to claims brought by incarcerated people against prison officials who have violated their Eighth Amendment right against cruel and unusual punishment. If you are a pretrial detainee looking to make a claim, see Chapter 34 of the JLM.

68. See Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 837, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 825 (1994).

69. See Bistran v. Levi, 696 F.3d 352, 366 (3d Cir. 2012) (stating that prison officials have a duty to protect incarcerated people from violent actions of fellow incarcerated people) (quoting Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1977, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 823 (1994)); see also Berry v. City of Muskogee, 900 F.2d 1489, 1496–1499 (10th Cir. 1990) (finding where incarcerated person was strangled to death in prison by two men whom he had identified as helping him commit the crime for which he was serving time, officials could have known of the danger based on the prior relationship and notification by victim’s wife); Gangloff v. Poccia, 888 F. Supp. 1549, 1555 (M.D. Fla. 1995) (“State officials have a duty, under the Eighth Amendment prohibition of cruel and unusual punishment, to protect inmates from each other. This duty, however, does not lead to absolute liability because the Eighth Amendment addresses only punishment”) (quoting King v. Fairman, 997 F.2d 259, 261 (7th Cir. 1993); Fisher v. Koehler, 692 F. Supp. 1519, 1559 (S.D.N.Y. 1988) (“Although the state is not obliged to insure an assault-free environment, a prisoner has a constitutional right to be protected from the unreasonable threat of violence from his fellow inmates.”) (citing Morgan v. District of Columbia, 263 U.S. App. D.C. 69, 824 F.2d 1049, 1057 (D.C. Cir. 1987)).

70. See, e.g., Blaylock v. Borden, 547 F. Supp. 2d 305, 310 (S.D.N.Y. 2008) (stating that prison officials have a duty to protect prisoners from other prisoners under the 8th Amendment).

71. See Buckner v. Hollins, 983 F.2d 119, 123 (8th Cir. 1993) (finding grounds for an 8th Amendment claim when state corrections officer failed to stop an assault by county corrections officer on naked, handcuffed incarcerated person in cell).

known as “failure-to-protect” claims. You can go to court to claim prison officials are ignoring unsafe conditions or a serious threat against you. You can do this even if you have not yet been assaulted.⁷²

In Farmer v. Brennan, the U.S. Supreme Court held that prison staff showed deliberate indifference when they did not do anything while knowing about a big risk⁷³ to an incarcerated person’s safety.⁷⁴ If you were assaulted by another incarcerated person (or prison guard) and believe prison officials’ deliberate indifference allowed the assault to happen, you will have to show that those specific officials knew of and ignored an excessive risk to your health and safety.⁷⁵ For each individual prison official, you will have to prove to the court that:

- (1) The prison official was aware of facts that would imply a substantial risk of serious harm exists; and
- (2) That specific prison official knew this implication.⁷⁶

Remember, courts also use the deliberate indifference standard in claims against supervisors who did not do enough to watch over and control their prison staff. Courts also use this standard against officers who stood by and watched an assault.⁷⁷

a. Proving a Substantial Risk to Your Safety

You must first show that there was or is a big (“substantial”) risk of serious harm to your safety from another incarcerated person to satisfy the objective part of the Farmer test (see Part B(2)(b)(ii) below).

b. Proving the Prison Officials Knew About This Risk

You must also provide evidence that the official knew of the big risk to your safety.⁷⁸ You do not have to prove that the official definitely knew you were going to be attacked. You only have to show that the official knew there was a big chance that you could get hurt.⁷⁹ You do not have to show that the officials knew you were personally at risk or that the risk came from a particular incarcerated person.⁸⁰

72. See, e.g., Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 831, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1975, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 821 (1994) (describing the alleged 8th Amendment claim as a failure to prevent harm); Helling v. McKinney, 509 U.S. 25, 34, 113 S. Ct. 2475, 2481, L. Ed. 2d 22, 32 (1993) (“[A] prisoner need not wait until he is actually assaulted before obtaining relief ... [T]he Eighth Amendment protects against sufficiently imminent dangers as well as current unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain and suffering.”).

73. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 843, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1982, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 829 (1994) (“The question under the Eighth Amendment is whether prison officials, acting with deliberate indifference, exposed a prisoner to a sufficiently substantial ‘risk of serious damage to his future health,’ and it does not matter whether the risk comes from a single source or multiple sources, any more than it matters whether a prisoner faces an excessive risk of attack for reasons personal to him or because all prisoners in his situation face such a risk” (internal citation omitted)).

74. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 843, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1982, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 829 (1994).

75. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 837, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 825 (1994).

76. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 837, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1979, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 825 (1994).

77. See, e.g., Blyden v. Mancusi, 186 F.3d 252, 265 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding correctional officers to a deliberate indifference standard for violence by subordinates).

78. See Lewis v. Richards, 107 F.3d 549, 553–554 (7th Cir. 1997) (finding no 8th Amendment violation where incarcerated person failed to present sufficient evidence that officials knew of risk to his safety and consciously disregarded that risk after the incarcerated person was subjected to three separate sexual assaults); Davis v. Scott, 94 F.3d 444, 446–47 (8th Cir. 1996) (finding no 8th Amendment violation where prison informant was attacked after his return to the general population, because there was no “solid evidence” that anyone in the general population posed an “identifiable serious risk” to his safety).

79. See Whitston v. Stone County Jail, 602 F.3d 920, 924–925 (8th Cir. 2010) (finding that prison officials could be liable for sexual assault by one incarcerated person against the other even if they did not know about the risk of that specific incarcerated person committing the assault, as long as they knew about the general risk).

80. See Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 843, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1982, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 829 (1994); see also Brown v. Budz, 398 F.3d 904, 914–915 (7th Cir. 2005) (holding deliberate indifference can be established by

For an Eighth Amendment deliberate indifference claim, it is not enough to claim prison officials should have known about the big risk to your safety⁸¹ (although in that case you still may be able to make a state law negligence tort claim as described in Part (B)(1)(a)(i)). These claims require the prison officials to have actually known about the big risk to your safety.⁸²

You can show that the officials actually knew about this substantial risk by showing both direct evidence and circumstantial evidence of the threat.⁸³ Courts think that whether a prison official knew about the risk is a question of fact that depends on the situation.⁸⁴ For example, if you have evidence that the risk was around for a long time, something a lot of people knew about, or that the official must have known about the risk, then generally that evidence is enough to show that the official did in fact know about it.⁸⁵ You should expect prison officials to try to prove that they did not actually know about the facts showing you were in danger. Or, they may try to prove that even if they did know about it, they had good reason to believe that the risk was minor.⁸⁶ In addition to your own complaints about knowledge either of a victim's vulnerability or of an assailant's predatory nature; both are not required); Pierson v. Hartley, 391 F.3d 898, 902–903 (7th Cir. 2004) (holding that an incarcerated person could recover for assault by a violent incarcerated person assigned to an open-air dormitory, which allowed unrestricted movement, in violation of prison policy, regardless of whether prison staff knew of the risk to the particular incarcerated person who was injured); Greene v. Bowles, 361 F.3d 290, 294 (6th Cir. 2004) (holding that a trans incarcerated person could recover for assault by a known “predatory inmate” either because leaving her in a unit containing high-security incarcerated people threatened her safety, or because placing the attacker in protective custody created a risk for the other occupants); Lewis v. Siwicki, 944 F.3d 427, 433–432 (2d Cir. 2019) (“The first Farmer factor, substantial risk of serious harm, depends not on the officials’ perception of the risk of harm, but solely on whether the facts, or at least those genuinely in dispute on a motion for summary judgment, show that the risk of serious harm was substantial”); LaMarca v. Turner, 995 F.2d 1526, 1535–1537 (11th Cir. 1993) (liability can be based on “general danger arising from a prison environment that both stimulated and condoned violence”); Coleman v. Wilson, 912 F. Supp. 1282, 1316 (E.D. Cal. 1995) (risk of harm from systemic medical care deficiencies is obvious); Abrams v. Hunter, 910 F. Supp. 620, 624–625 (M.D. Fla. 1995) (acknowledging potential liability based on awareness of generalized, substantial risk of serious harm from incarcerated people violence), aff’d, 100 F.3d 971 (11th Cir. 1996); Knowles v. N.Y. City Dept. of Corr., 904 F. Supp. 217, 221–222 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (finding a valid claim where prison officials knew of an ethnic “war” among prisoners, that a Hispanic incarcerated person who had been cut had been transferred to plaintiff’s jail, and that plaintiff was part of a group at risk because of his accent and appearance).

81. See Riccardio v. Rausch, 375 F.3d 521, 526 (7th Cir. 2004) (“‘Deliberate indifference’ means subjective awareness. It is not enough, the Court held in Farmer, that the guard ought to have recognized the risk. Instead, ‘the official must both be aware of facts from which the inference could be drawn that a substantial risk of serious harm exists, and he must also draw the inference.’” (citations omitted)); Knowles v. N.Y. City Dept. of Corr., 904 F. Supp. 217, 222 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (“Mere negligence, however, on the part of a prison official will not give rise to a claim under § 1983” (citing Williams v. Vincent, 508 F.2d 541, 546 (2d Cir. 1974))).

82. See Carter v. Galloway, 352 F.3d 1346, 1349–1350 (11th Cir. 2003) (per curiam) (dismissing medium-security incarcerated plaintiff’s claim for assault, after plaintiff was stabbed by his maximum-security cellmate, a known “problematic inmate,” after plaintiff complained his cellmate was “acting crazy” but had not specifically told prison officials his cellmate had threatened him as “[s]uch a generalized awareness of risk in these circumstances does not satisfy the subjective awareness requirement”).

83. Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 524 (5th Cir. 2004) (“The official’s knowledge of the risk can be proven through circumstantial evidence, such as by showing that the risk was so obvious that the official must have known about it” (internal citation omitted)); see also Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 840, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1980, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 827 (1994) (stating that the “concept of constructive knowledge is familiar enough that the term ‘deliberate indifference’ would not, of its own force, preclude a scheme that conclusively presumed awareness from a risk’s obviousness.”). In other words, a finder of fact, like a judge or a jury, may conclude that an official was aware of the risk if the risk was obvious.

84. See Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 842, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1981, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 828 (1994).

85. See Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 842–843, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1981–1982, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 828–829 (1994).

86. See Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 525 (5th Cir. 2004) (noting prison officials defended themselves by trying to show that it was reasonable to believe, based on the information they had at the time, that there was no danger to the incarcerated person or that it was reasonable to disbelieve the incarcerated person’s repeated the risk, you should try to present other evidence that you were in danger to show that the prison officials actually knew of the risk to your safety. Your complaints alone may not prove that prison officials knew about the risk. Courts do not expect guards to believe every protest or complaint an incarcerated person makes.⁸⁷

c. Proving that the Prison Officials Did Not Act Reasonably to Prevent or Stop Assault

Finally, you must prove that the official acted unreasonably or failed to act in a situation where the official knew that you were at a great risk of harm.⁸⁸ It is important to understand that even if a prison official knew of a substantial risk to your health and safety, that prison official may be found free from liability if they responded reasonably to the risk, even if the harm ultimately was not prevented.⁸⁹ For example, in the First Circuit case Burrell v. Hampshire County, the court found that the prison guards did not act unreasonably when they did not transfer an incarcerated person who was good at martial arts and who did not have any previous fights with his attacker. The court found this because the incarcerated person misrepresented himself to the officers as having proficiency in martial arts and the officers could not predict that the incarcerated person would be attacked.⁹⁰

d. Examples of Farmer Deliberate Indifference Cases

In a Fourth Circuit case, Brown v. North Carolina Department of Corrections, a prison staff member told Brown to enter an area to go get cleaning supplies.⁹¹ The staff member knew that another incarcerated person who had a grudge against Brown was in that area of the prison.⁹² That incarcerated person assaulted and beat Brown.⁹³ Based on these facts, the Fourth Circuit held that a reasonable person could say that prison officials had ignored a major risk to Brown.⁹⁴

New York courts have also dealt with claims that guards failed to protect an incarcerated person from other incarcerated people. In Knowles v. New York City Department of Corrections, another incarcerated person slashed Knowles in the face while they were in the recreation area.⁹⁵ Knowles sued prison officials stating that they had known of the risk to him and ignored it.⁹⁶ The guards had complaints of sexual abuse); Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 844, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1982, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 830 (1994) (stating that prison officials can try to show that they “did not know of the underlying facts” or “believed (albeit unsoundly) that the risk ... was insubstantial or nonexistent.”)

87. See Riccardo v. Rausch, 375 F.3d 521, 527–528 (7th Cir. 2004) (stating that “[t]he Constitution does not oblige guards to believe whatever inmates say,” and that “a prisoner’s bare assertion is not enough to make the guard subjectively aware of a risk, if the objective indicators do not substantiate the inmate’s assertion”).

88. See Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 841–842, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1981, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 828 (1994) (holding that under the 8th Amendment, prison officials could not be liable for inhumane conditions of confinement unless the official had knowledge of the risk to the incarcerated person); see also Leibach v. State, 215 A.D.2d 978, 979–980, 627 N.Y.S.2d 463, 463–464 (3d Dept. 1995) (stating that where an attack was planned in secret, and correction staff was not aware of it, staff was not culpable). Please note that if you are a pretrial detainee you must prove that the purposeful force used by the prison official was objectively unreasonable. See Kingsley v. Hendrickson, 576 U.S. 389, 397, 135 S. Ct. 2466, 2473, 192 L. Ed. 2d 416, 426 (2015) (objective reasonableness turns on the facts and circumstances of each particular case and a court must make this determination from the perspective of an officer on the scene); see also Chapter 34 of the JLM, “The Rights of Pretrial Detainees”.

89. See Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 844, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1982–1983, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 830 (1994) (emphasizing that there is no 8th Amendment violation if the official “responded reasonably to the risk, even if the harm ultimately was not averted”); see also Short v. Smoot, 436 F.3d 422, 428 (4th Cir. 2006) (finding that officials who put a suicidal incarcerated person under video surveillance had acted reasonably and could not be liable under the 8th Amendment).

90. Burrell v. Hampshire County, 307 F.3d 1, 8–9 (1st Cir. 2002).

91. Brown v. N.C. Dept. of Corr., 612 F.3d 720, 722 (4th Cir. 2010).

92. Brown v. N.C. Dept. of Corr., 612 F.3d 720, 722 (4th Cir. 2010).

93. Brown v. N.C. Dept. of Corr., 612 F.3d 720, 722 (4th Cir. 2010).

94. Brown v. N.C. Dept. of Corr., 612 F.3d 720, 723 (4th Cir. 2010).

95. Knowles v. N.Y. City Dept. of Corr., 904 F. Supp. 217, 219 (S.D.N.Y. 1995).

96. Knowles v. N.Y. City Dept. of Corr., 904 F. Supp. 217, 218 (S.D.N.Y. 1995).

only patted down the incarcerated people when they had entered the recreation area, instead of going through the normal strip search procedures.⁹⁷ Furthermore, there was evidence that the prison officials knew about a “war” going on between Spanish-speaking and Jamaican incarcerated people. There was also evidence that they knew Knowles was one of the incarcerated people at risk because of the way that he looked and talked.⁹⁸ The court held that this was enough evidence to create uncertainty about whether or not the guards were deliberately indifferent to Knowles’ safety.⁹⁹

In sum, prison officials may be found liable under the Farmer deliberate indifference standard if they (1) know the incarcerated person is facing a substantial risk of serious harm, and (2) ignore the risk by not taking reasonable measures to avoid it. If they meet these requirements, officials may be liable if they do not act to stop another incarcerated person or prison official from attacking you. Prison officials may also be liable if there is a policy allowing a pattern of too much force.¹⁰⁰

(b) Objective Part

In addition to the subjective part discussed above, remember that you also have to prove a second, objective part. To prove this objective part of an Eighth Amendment violation, you must show either that you were actually injured (if assaulted by a prison official)¹⁰¹ or that the prison official’s actions or inaction put you at a “substantial risk of serious harm” from another incarcerated person, whether or not you were actually assaulted.

(c) Seriousness of Harm in Assaults by Prison Officials

To win a lawsuit against a prison official who assaulted you, you have to show that the attack was “cruel and unusual punishment” under the Eighth Amendment.¹⁰² You can show that a prison official violated your Eighth Amendment rights no matter whether your injury was big or small.¹⁰³ What matters most is whether the official used force against you as a way to try to keep order in the prison, or whether the purpose of the force was to hurt you.¹⁰⁴ However, a court will still look into how severe your injury was.¹⁰⁵ This is because the kind of injury you have can help a court figure out the strength of the force that the official used. The injury can also help a court figure out whether officials could have thought that the force was necessary to do their job in a certain situation.

Courts look to society’s standards of good behavior to decide whether the official’s actions were bad enough.¹⁰⁶ In general, prison officials violate society’s standards whenever they maliciously, evilly, or

97. Knowles v. N.Y. City Dept. of Corr., 904 F. Supp. 217, 218–219 (S.D.N.Y. 1995).

98. Knowles v. N.Y. City Dept. of Corr., 904 F. Supp. 217, 222 (S.D.N.Y. 1995).

99. Knowles v. N.Y. City Dept. of Corr., 904 F. Supp. 217, 222 (S.D.N.Y. 1995).

100. See Matthews v. Crosby, 480 F.3d 1265, 1270–1275 (11th Cir. 2007) (holding that a prison warden’s knowledge of the violent propensities of some of his prison guards and his failure to act to prevent them from assaulting prisoners could count as deliberate indifference); Ruiz v. Estelle, 503 F. Supp. 1265, 1302 (S.D. Tex. 1980) (finding 8th Amendment violations where prison officials encouraged staff to indulge in excessive physical violence by rarely investigating reports of violence and failing to take corrective disciplinary action against officers whom they knew to have brutalized prisoners), aff’d in part, rev’d in part, 688 F.2d 266 (5th Cir. 1982), and 679 F.2d 1115 (5th Cir. 1982).

101. Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 8, 112 S. Ct. 995, 999, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 166 (1992) (quoting Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 298, 111 S. Ct. 2321, 2326, 2329, 1115 L. Ed. 2d 271, 278 (1991)); see also Wright v. Goord, 554 F.3d 255, 268–269 (2d Cir. 2009).

102. U.S. CONST. amend. VIII.

103. Wilkins v. Gaddy, 559 U.S. 34, 37, 130 S. Ct. 1175, 1178, 175 L. Ed. 2d 995, 999 (2010) (citations omitted).

104. Wilkins v. Gaddy, 559 U.S. 34, 37, 130 S. Ct. 1175, 1178, 175 L. Ed. 2d 995, 999 (2010) (citations omitted).

105. Wilkins v. Gaddy, 559 U.S. 34, 37, 130 S. Ct. 1175, 1178, 175 L. Ed. 2d 995, 999 (2010) (citations omitted).

106. Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 2, 25, 112 S. Ct. 995, 996, 1008, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 157, 178 (1992); Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 102–103, 97 S. Ct. 285, 290, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 259 (1976); see also Wright v. Goord, 554 F.3d 255, 268–269 (2d Cir. 2009).

cruelly use force to cause harm “whether or not significant injury is evident.”¹⁰⁷ But, “not ... every malevolent [cruel] touch by a prison guard [raises] a federal cause of action.”¹⁰⁸

The Supreme Court has said that “cruel and unusual punishment” does not include uses of very minor amounts of force. Courts have used the Latin phrase “de minimis” to describe this small amount of force. A small amount of force is not the same thing as a small injury.¹⁰⁹ “De minimis” means that a fact or thing is “so insignificant that a court may overlook it in deciding an issue or case.”¹¹⁰ Some examples of injuries courts have thought were de minimis are bumping, discomfort, sore wrists,¹¹¹ cuts and swelling to the wrists,¹¹² being slammed against a wall,¹¹³ and being hit by swinging keys.¹¹⁴ Some examples of force courts have called de minimis are hitting an incarcerated person once on the head,¹¹⁵ spraying an incarcerated person with water,¹¹⁶ pressing a fist against an incarcerated person’s neck,¹¹⁷ and bruising an incarcerated person’s ear during a routine search.¹¹⁸

Because what counts as a constitutional violation changes depending on the specific situation, courts have not defined exactly what type or degree of harm you need to show in order to win on an Eighth Amendment claim. The following cases will give you some examples of injuries courts have said do or do not go against the Eighth Amendment.

In Hudson v. McMillian, the incarcerated person suffered blows that caused “bruises, swelling, loosened teeth, and a cracked dental palate.”¹¹⁹ The Supreme Court found that the violence against 107. Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 9, 112 S. Ct. 995, 1000, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 167 (1992) (internal quotations omitted).

108. Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 9, 112 S. Ct. 995, 1000, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 167 (1992).

109. Wilkins v. Gaddy, 599 U.S. 34, 37–38, 130 S. Ct. 1175, 1178–1179, 175 L. Ed. 2d 995, 999 (2010) (“An inmate who is gratuitously beaten by guards does not lose his ability to pursue an excessive force claim merely because he has the good fortune to escape without serious injury.”); Williams v. Curtin, 631 F.3d 380, 383 (6th Cir. 2011) (stating that coughing and shortage of oxygen, even if de minimis, is not enough to dismiss an 8th Amendment claim).

110. De Minimus, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (10th ed. 2014).

111. Fillmore v. Page, 358 F.3d 496, 504–505 (7th Cir. 2004) (holding that incidental bumping, discomfort, and sore wrists were de minimis and do not meet the constitutional threshold).

112. Watson v. Riggle, 315 F. Supp. 2d 963, 969–970 (N.D. Ind. 2004) (holding injuries to incarcerated person’s wrists, including a cut and some swelling, caused when guards removed his handcuffs were de minimis); cf. Liiv v. City of Coeur D’Alene, 130 Fed. Appx. 848, 852 (9th Cir. 2005) (clarifying that while past cases, such as Wall v. County of Orange, 364 F.3d 1107, 1112 (9th Cir. 2004), have “recognized that excessively tight handcuffing can constitute a Fourth Amendment violation,” a finding of such violation requires either actual injury to the wrists or a complaint to the officers involved that the handcuffs were too tight).

113. Govan v. Campbell, 289 F. Supp. 2d 289, 300 (N.D.N.Y. 2003) (holding that incarcerated person’s claims guard slammed him against the wall and rubbed up against him was “de minimis” and insufficient to state a constitutional violation).

114. Norman v. Taylor, 25 F.3d 1259, 1263–1264 (4th Cir. 1994) (requiring incarcerated person to establish more than de minimis injury by deputy’s swinging of keys at the incarcerated person to maintain claim of excessive force); White v. Holmes, 21 F.3d 277, 281 (8th Cir. 1994) (requiring incarcerated person to establish more than de minimis injury caused by prison librarian throwing keys at prisoner and flailing her arms at prisoner’s head). But see United States v. LaVallee, 439 F.3d 670, 687–688 (10th Cir. 2006) (rejecting the view that de minimis injury is conclusive evidence that de minimus force was used).

115. Olson v. Coleman, 804 F. Supp. 148, 150–151 (D. Kan. 1992) (holding that single blow that struck incarcerated person on the head while he was handcuffed was not excessive use of force), vacated on other grounds, No. 92-3281, 1993 U.S. App. LEXIS 10086, at * 3 (D. Kan. April 28, 1993) (unpublished).

116. Jackson v. Culbertson, 984 F.2d 699, 700 (5th Cir. 1993) (holding that guard’s spraying incarcerated person with water because he started a fire was a de minimis use of physical force and was thus too trivial to make out a violation of 8th Amendment rights).

117. Candelaria v. Coughlin, 787 F. Supp. 368, 374–375 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) (finding that guard pressing his fist against incarcerated person’s neck, resulting in no physical injury, was de minimis force for 8th Amendment purposes), aff’d, 979 F.2d 845 (2d Cir. 1992).

118. Siglar v. Hightower, 112 F.3d 191, 193–194 (5th Cir. 1997) (finding no 8th Amendment violation where plaintiff suffered bruised ear during routine search; court deemed this a de minimis use of force).

119. Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 4, 112 S. Ct. 995, 997, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 164 (1992).

Hudson and his injuries were serious enough to satisfy the “objective part” of the Eighth Amendment. This provided the basis for a constitutional claim. The Supreme Court, in finding a constitutional violation in Hudson, also thought that it was important that the officers meant to embarrass the incarcerated person.

Soon after the Supreme Court decided Hudson, a district court in New York used the Hudson guidelines to determine whether the force used by corrections officers was constitutional. In that case, corrections officers failed to stop other officers from unnecessarily beating an incarcerated person.¹²⁰ The beating badly bruised and injured the incarcerated person, including causing a fracture to his left eye. The same officers who did not stop the beating later ripped off the incarcerated person's clothes because they thought he was stripping too slowly. Even though the incarcerated person had originally disobeyed orders, the court found the officers liable for not trying to stop the other officers from beating the incarcerated person.¹²¹ The court looked at several incidents in this case. In one instance, the court said an officer was liable because he had kicked an incarcerated person in the buttocks for no reason.¹²² Again, as in Hudson, the court found a constitutional violation partly because the officers intended to humiliate the incarcerated person.

In a Third Circuit case, officers hit and kicked an incarcerated person, Giles, while he was restrained on the ground.¹²³ Giles had claimed that the officers continued to do this even after he had stopped resisting them.¹²⁴ The Third Circuit stated that if Giles' claim were true, the officers' actions would be an Eighth Amendment violation.¹²⁵

In Lewis v. Downey, a prison officer used a Taser gun after an incarcerated person did not respond to an order to get up from bed.¹²⁶ The Seventh Circuit stated that these facts were serious enough that a jury should decide about the officer's state of mind in using the Taser gun.¹²⁷ The Fourth Circuit decided that an incarcerated person sprayed with mace and then restrained on a bare-metal bed frame for over eight hours, without access to medical care or a toilet, had an Eighth Amendment claim.¹²⁸

You do not always need to have experienced a severe physical injury to bring a claim against a prison official. The Fifth Circuit has held that an incarcerated person who was beaten by corrections officers, resulting in a sprained ankle, suffered a serious enough injury to have a successful Eighth Amendment claim.¹²⁹ The court stated that there is no minimum injury required for Eighth Amendment claims of excessive force.¹³⁰ Even though a sprained ankle may not seem like a bad injury, in the Fifth Circuit decided it was serious enough not to be de minimis. Similarly, the Third Circuit has said that you could still have an Eighth Amendment claim even if your injury is not that serious.¹³¹

120. Jones v. Huff, 789 F. Supp. 526, 535–536 (N.D.N.Y. 1992).

121. Jones v. Huff, 789 F. Supp. 526, 535–536 (N.D.N.Y. 1992) (finding that kicks and punches were not part of a good-faith effort to restore discipline and could not have been thought necessary since the incarcerated person was already pinned down by two other officers, and that stripping the incarcerated person “was done maliciously with the intent to humiliate him”).

122. Jones v. Huff, 789 F. Supp. 526, 532, 536–537 (N.D.N.Y. 1992).

123. Giles v. Kearney, 571 F.3d 318, 327 (3d Cir. 2009).

124. Giles v. Kearney, 571 F.3d 318, 327 (3d Cir. 2009).

125. Giles v. Kearney, 571 F.3d 318, 327 (3d Cir. 2009).

126. Lewis v. Downey, 581 F.3d 467, 470 (7th Cir. 2009).

127. Lewis v. Downey, 581 F.3d 467, 478 (7th Cir. 2009).

128. Williams v. Benjamin, 77 F.3d 756, 764–765 (4th Cir. 1996).

129. Flowers v. Phelps, 956 F.2d 488, 489–490 (5th Cir. 1992), vacated in part on other grounds, 964 F.2d 400 (5th Cir. 1992).

130. Flowers v. Phelps, 956 F.2d 488, 491 (5th Cir. 1992); see also Bourne v. Gunnels, 921 F.3d 484, 492 (5th Cir. 2019) (“An inmate need not establish a ‘significant injury’ to pursue an excessive force claim because [i]njury and force ... are only imperfectly correlated, and it is the latter that ultimately counts,”). But see West v. United States, 729 F. App'x 145, 148 (3d Cir. 2018) (holding that being “pushed out of a cell” was not a sufficient physical injury), reh'g denied (May 9, 2018).

131. Brooks v. Kyler, 204 F.3d 102, 108 (3d Cir. 2000) (“[T]he absence of significant resulting injury is not a per se reason for dismissing a claim based on alleged wanton and unnecessary use of force against a prisoner.”).

Mental and emotional injuries are different from physical ones. After the Prison Litigation Reform Act (“PLRA”), you can no longer bring claims in federal civil court for mental or emotional injuries that are not related to physical injury. This means that if you bring a claim in federal civil court for mental or emotional injury that did not happen in relation to physical injury, the PLRA requirements may now prevent you from getting compensatory damages (and in some courts, punitive damages as well).¹³²

(iii) Substantial Risk of Serious Harm from Other Incarcerated People

To prove the objective part in a Farmer v. Brennan deliberate indifference claim about an incarcerated person assault, you must show you faced an objective, “substantial risk of serious harm.” You can make a deliberate indifference claim even if you were never injured or attacked as long as you can show there was a big risk that you would get hurt. For a prison official’s actions (or failure to act) to be against the Eighth Amendment, “the deprivation alleged must be, objectively, ‘sufficiently serious.’” You also “must show that [you are] incarcerated under conditions posing a substantial risk of serious harm.”¹³³

It is important that you understand that prison officials will not be responsible anytime another incarcerated person hurts you.¹³⁴ In other words, if you never faced a big risk (or cannot prove you did), then you cannot prove prison officials were deliberately indifferent to that risk. For example, the Eighth Circuit decided that the plaintiff, an incarcerated person who was assaulted by his cellmate, did not have an Eighth Amendment failure-to-protect claim because no one, including the victim, thought that the cellmate was dangerous. Therefore, the court rejected the incarcerated person’s lawsuit because he had failed to show a “substantial risk of serious harm.”¹³⁵

In Farmer, the Court did not explain how serious the risk must be in order to be “substantial.”¹³⁶ Courts consider whether society thinks the risk that the incarcerated person complains of is so bad that it is against our society’s standards to make anyone take such a chance.¹³⁷ In other words, the incarcerated person must show that today’s society does not accept the risk he faced.¹³⁸ Courts do not consider the general, everyday risk of assault from other incarcerated people to be a “substantial risk” by itself.¹³⁹

132. See Part F of Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,” for further information on the PLRA and its actual injury requirement.

133. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1977, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 823 (1994).

134. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1977, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 823 (1994).

135. Berry v. Sherman, 365 F.3d 631, 634–635 (8th Cir. 2004); see also Riccardo v. Rausch, 375 F.3d 521, 526–527 (7th Cir. 2004) (holding that the incarcerated person plaintiff had not faced a substantial risk from his cellmate, who later assaulted him, because while the incarcerated person was at risk of attack from the Latin Kings, his cellmate attacked him not for that reason but out of a personal fantasy: “The risk from which [the prisoner plaintiff] Riccardo sought protection was not realized; for all this record shows, the (objectively evaluated) risk to Riccardo of sharing a cell with Garcia was no greater than the risk of sharing a cell with any other prisoner.”).

136. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834 n.3, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1977 n.3, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 823 n.3 (1994) (noting that the Court did not reach the question of “[a]t what point a risk of inmate assault becomes sufficiently substantial for Eighth Amendment purposes”).

137. See Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 8, 112 S. Ct. 995, 1000, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 167 (1992) (“[T]he Eighth Amendment’s prohibition of cruel and unusual punishments ‘draw[s] its meaning from the evolving standards of decency that mark the progress of a maturing society,’ and so admits of few absolute limitations.”); Wright v. Goord, 554 F.3d 255, 268 (2d Cir. 2009) (“The objective component of a claim of cruel and unusual punishment focuses on the harm done, in light of ‘contemporary standards of decency.’”).

138. See, e.g., Helling v. McKinney, 509 U.S. 25, 35, 113 S. Ct. 2475, 2481, 125 L. Ed. 2d 22, 32–33 (1993) (finding that being exposed to a cellmate who smoked five packs of cigarettes a day created, in theory, a potentially valid claim under the 8th Amendment due to unreasonable health risk).

139. Jones v. Marshall, 459 F. Supp. 2d 1002, 1008 (E.D. Cal. 2006) (“[T]he legal standard must not be applied

Remember that after you show you faced substantial risk of serious harm, you must show that prison officials knew about the risk but were ignored it (see Part B(2)(a)(ii)(3) and (4)).

3. Harassment by Prison Officials

This Section explains which different types of harassment violate the Eighth Amendment. Harassment can be verbal, physical, or sexual. Harassment may be about race, sex, disability, language, national origin, sexual orientation, or other characteristics. New York State defines harassment as “[e]mployee misconduct meant to annoy, intimidate, or harm an inmate.”¹⁴⁰ Generally, verbal harassment alone does not violate the Eighth Amendment unless you are also physically threatened at the same time. Sexual harassment is any unwanted sexual attention. Generally, sexual comments by themselves are not enough for an Eighth Amendment violation.¹⁴¹ If you are being harassed, you should first try to file a grievance through the inmate grievance system, discussed in JLM Chapter 15, “Inmate Grievance Procedures.”

(a) Verbal Harassment Alone

You cannot have an Eighth Amendment claim for verbal assault only.¹⁴² Courts do not think verbal abuse, including racial and sexual comments, is unconstitutional. For example, the Ninth Circuit has held that an incarcerated person did not have an Eighth Amendment claim when a guard verbally harassed the incarcerated person in a sexual and racial way and briefly exposed the guard’s genitals.¹⁴³ Similarly, the Sixth Circuit decided that an incarcerated person had no constitutional claim against a guard who banged his cell door, threw food trays, made aggravating and insulting comments, and behaved in a racially prejudicial manner because harassment and verbal abuse are not Eighth Amendment violations.¹⁴⁴ to an idealized vision of prison life, but to the prison as it exists.”) (quoting Berg v. Kincheloe, 794 F.2d 457, 462 (9th Cir. 1986)).

140. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7, § 701.2(e) (2006).

141. See Adkins v. Rodriguez, 59 F.3d 1034, 1037–1038 (10th Cir. 1995) (finding prison official’s alleged verbal sexual harassment of incarcerated person did not violate the 8th Amendment because it was not objectively sufficiently serious and the prison official did not act with deliberate indifference to the incarcerated person’s health or safety). When other forms of harassment are combined with comments of a sexual nature, they may constitute cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the 8th Amendment. See, e.g., Berry v. Oswalt, 143 F.3d 1127, 1133 (8th Cir. 1998) (holding that allegations of attempted non-routine pat-downs combined with sexual comments and propositions that caused fear and frustration met the objective prong of the 8th Amendment claim). See Parts B(3)(a) and (c) of this Chapter for more information on verbal and sexual harassment.

142. Webster v. City of New York, 333 F. Supp. 2d 184, 201 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (“Being subjected to verbally abusive language does not rise to the level of a constitutional claim in an Eighth Amendment context.”); Minifield v. Butikofer, 298 F. Supp. 2d 900, 904–905 (N.D. Cal. 2004) (holding incarcerated person did not state a constitutional claim for sexual harassment, where a prison official twice unzipped his pants and told incarcerated person to grab his penis, because the Ninth Circuit has “specifically differentiated between sexual harassment that involves verbal abuse and that which involves allegations of physical assault, finding the latter [sic] to be in violation of the constitution”; also noting the incarcerated person had not alleged any physical injury, and under the Prison Litigation Reform Act, “[f]ailure to allege and establish an appropriate physical injury is ground for dismissal” (citations omitted)); Jones v. Brown, 300 F. Supp. 2d 674, 681 (N.D. Ind. 2003) (holding pretrial detainee had no constitutional claim, where guard incorrectly told him criminal charges had been dismissed, when in fact they had been referred to the prosecutor and eventually became part of a plea bargain, because verbal abuse and harassment are not sufficient).

143. Austin v. Terhune, 367 F.3d 1167, 1171–1172 (9th Cir. 2004) (“Although prisoners have a right to be free from sexual abuse, whether at the hands of fellow inmates or prison guards, the Eighth Amendment’s protections do not necessarily extend to mere verbal sexual harassment.” (citations omitted)).

144. Johnson v. Dellatifa, 357 F.3d 539, 546 (6th Cir. 2004) (“[T]he allegations, if true, demonstrate shameful and utterly unprofessional behavior [but] they are insufficient to establish an Eighth Amendment violation ... [H]arassment and verbal abuse ... do not constitute the type of infliction of pain that the Eighth Amendment prohibits.” (citation omitted)).

(b) Verbal Harassment With Physical Threats

Simple verbal harassment does not violate the Eighth Amendment. However, courts have held that when these assaults come along with very serious physical threats (such as believable death threats), you may have a claim for psychological injury.¹⁴⁵ However, the Prison Litigation Reform Act states that incarcerated people may not bring a federal civil action for mental or emotional injury suffered while in custody “without a prior showing of physical injury.”¹⁴⁶ Different courts define “physical injury” differently. But, typically they hold that “de minimus” injuries (very minor injuries, like a small cut or bruise) do not count as a “physical injury.”¹⁴⁷ Also, not all of these courts allow you to receive the same type of damages.¹⁴⁸ This means that if you can only show a psychological injury, you will not be able to get damages.¹⁴⁹ The court can still grant you injunctive relief (a court order to prevent officials or incarcerated people from harassing you) if you can show that this conduct is likely to happen again in the future.¹⁵⁰ For more information on injunctive relief, see Part L of Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act.”

(c) Sexual Harassment

There is no single definition of sexual harassment in the prison context. However, the Bureau of Justice Statistics defines nonconsensual sexual acts as “unwanted contacts with another inmate or unwilling contacts with staff that involved oral sex anal sex, vaginal sex, handjobs, and other sexual acts.”¹⁵¹ Both men and women can be sexually harassed.¹⁵² Because prison officials have so much power over incarcerated people, a corrections officer may try to force an incarcerated person into sexual

145. See, e.g., Northington v. Jackson, 973 F.2d 1518, 1524 (10th Cir. 1992) (finding alleged death threats accompanied by the brandishing of lethal weapons would, if true, violate the 8th Amendment).

146. 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e).

147. See generally Pierre v. Padgett, 808 F. App'x 838, 843 (11th Cir. 2020) (noting that “in order to satisfy section 1997e(e) the physical injury must be more than de minimis, but need not be significant.”); West v. United States, 729 F. App'x 145, 148 (3d Cir. 2018), reh'g denied (May 9, 2018) (finding that “more than a de minimis physical injury must be alleged as a predicate to allegations of mental or emotional injury.”); McAdoo v. Martin, 899 F.3d 521, 525 (8th Cir. 2018) (holding that a plaintiff can only receive damages if they have “more than a de minimis injury”).

148. See generally Pierre v. Padgett, 808 F. App'x 838, 843 (11th Cir. 2020) (finding that only nominal damages are available in suits involving psychological injury, but not other kinds of damages); Small v. Brock, 963 F.3d 539, 543 (6th Cir. 2020) (noting that Section 1997e(e) of the PLRA only prevents recovery of compensatory damages). But see Toliver v. City of New York, 530 F. App'x 90, 93 n.2 (2d Cir. 2013) (quoting Thompson v. Carter, 284 F.3d 411, 416 (2d Cir. 2002) (“Because Section 1997e(e) is a limitation on recovery of damages for mental and emotional injury in the absence of a showing of physical injury, it does not restrict a plaintiff’s ability to recover compensatory damages for actual injury, nominal or punitive damages, or injunctive and declaratory relief.”).

149. For a more detailed explanation about the types of damages that various courts allow one to receive for psychological injuries under the PLRA, see Aref v. Lynch, 833 F.3d 242, 262–267 & n.15 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (describing the varying laws for recovering damages under the PLRA in more detail).

150. See Hutchins v. McDaniels, 512 F.3d 193, 196–198 (5th Cir. 2007) (noting that “the physical injury requirement does not bar declaratory or injunctive relief for violations of a prisoner’s Constitutional rights”); Zehner v. Trigg, 133 F.3d 459, 461–463 (7th Cir. 1997) (finding that in a suit for mental and emotional injuries because of exposure to asbestos, a incarcerated person cannot sue for monetary damages but can sue for other kinds of relief).

151. NPREC, Report and Standards, available at <https://www.bjs.gov/content/pub/pdf/svsfpri07.pdf> (last visited Oct. 21, 2019). Bureau of Justice Statistics, Sexual Victimization in Prisons and Jails Reported by Inmates, 2011–12, available at <https://www.bjs.gov/content/pub/pdf/svpjri1112.pdf> (last visited Oct. 21, 2019).

152. See Boddie v. Schnieder, 105 F.3d 857, 861 (2d Cir. 1997) (finding that, in principle, sexual abuse of a male incarcerated person by a female corrections officer could potentially violate the 8th Amendment); Liner v. Goord, 196 F.3d 132, 135–136 (2d Cir. 1999) (remanding case to consider whether a sexual assault claim violated the 8th Amendment).

conduct by threatening them with disciplinary action or some other punishment. This can be considered cruel and unusual punishment that violates the Eighth Amendment.

Courts look to see if an act of sexual harassment or assault is against “evolving standards of decency” to decide if the act violated an incarcerated person’s Eighth Amendment rights.¹⁵³ In other words, a court will look at what society believes is acceptable and good behavior to decide whether an attacker’s behavior went against that standard. Sexual assault is a clear violation. But, comments of a sexual nature by themselves are usually not enough to violate the Eighth Amendment.¹⁵⁴ When other forms of harassment are combined with comments of a sexual nature, they may constitute cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the Eighth Amendment.¹⁵⁵

If a prison official sexually harassed you, you can file a lawsuit both against that official and the prison. But, keep in mind that it is difficult to make an Eighth Amendment claim for sexual harassment against a correctional institution. It is difficult because you must prove that the administrators showed “deliberate indifference” toward the harassment.¹⁵⁶ In other words, you must show that the prison administrators knew or should have known of the risk of harassment, and ignored it. Showing this knowledge is difficult unless you have evidence that you told the administrators about the problem or asked them for help.

(d) Reporting Harassment in New York

New York law defines harassment as “employee misconduct meant to annoy, intimidate or harm an inmate.”¹⁵⁷ It creates a special procedure for reporting harassment.¹⁵⁸ The procedure says that if you think you are the victim of prison employee misconduct or harassment, you should tell the prison employee’s direct supervisor (but be aware that this is not a requirement for filing a formal grievance).¹⁵⁹ You should also file a formal grievance with the clerk of the Inmate Grievance Resolution Committee (“IGRC”).¹⁶⁰ The Committee will give this grievance to the prison superintendent for review.¹⁶¹ After receiving the grievance, the superintendent will decide within twenty-five (25) calendar days if the employee’s conduct was harassment.¹⁶² If you do not get an answer from the superintendent within this time, you can appeal the grievance to the Central Office Review Committee (“CORC”).¹⁶³

If you are a victim of sexual harassment, you should use the confidential procedure your prison has in place to bring a formal complaint. You should keep copies of these complaints so that you can later prove that administrators knew about the problem and were deliberately indifferent to your complaint.

153. See, e.g., Wood v. Beauclair, 692 F.3d 1041, 1045 (9th Cir. 2012) (describing “evolving standards of decency”) (internal citations omitted).

154. See Adkins v. Rodriguez, 59 F.3d 1034, 1037–1038 (10th Cir. 1995) (finding that a prison official’s alleged verbal harassment of a incarcerated person did not violate the 8th Amendment because it was not objectively sufficiently serious and the prison official did not act with deliberate indifference to the incarcerated person’s health or safety).

155. See, e.g., Berry v. Oswald, 143 F.3d 1127, 1133 (8th Cir. 1998) (holding that allegations of attempted non-routine pat-downs combined with sexual comments and propositions that caused fear and frustration violated the 8th Amendment).

156. See Daskalea v. District of Columbia, 227 F.3d 433, 441, 343 U.S. App. D.C. 261, 269 (D.C. Cir. 2000) (stating that a municipality can be found liable when its policy or custom inflicts the injury; finding that something constitutes a policy or custom when it arises out of deliberate indifference).

157. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.2(e) (2020).

158. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.8 (2020).

159. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.8(a) (2020).

160. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.5(a) (2020). Chapter 15 of the JLM includes information on how to file a grievance complaint.

161. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.8(b) (2020).

162. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.8(f) (2020).

163. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 701.8(g) (2020).

4. Force Used to Carry Out an Illegal Order

If you refuse to follow an order from a prison official, even if that order is illegal, prison officials can use force to make you obey. Courts have held that incarcerated people must follow orders so that prisons can be run in a safe and orderly way.¹⁶⁴ Even if you believe an order violates your constitutional rights, courts say you do not have the right to resist the order.¹⁶⁵

For example, in Jackson v. Allen, an incarcerated person resisted prison guards because he thought they were going to use cruel and unusual punishment against him in violation of the Eighth Amendment.¹⁶⁶ The guards used force on him to overcome his resistance. The incarcerated person won his case against the guards, but only because they used too much force. The district court said that the incarcerated person did not have a strong enough reason to resist the guards because guards have a legal right to make incarcerated people obey their orders and use force if necessary. The court stated that an incarcerated person in this situation can later try to get damages in court for the unconstitutional punishment, but should not resist the order itself. Again, this is only if the officials used a reasonable and necessary amount of force for that situation.¹⁶⁷ But, the court did say there was one exception to the general rule that incarcerated people may never resist orders. An incarcerated person may resist an illegal order to protect himself from “immediate, irreparable and permanent physical or mental damage or death.”¹⁶⁸ The court did not give specific examples of when an incarcerated person could legally refuse an order. The court just said that there would be exceptions only for extreme situations.

5. Protection Under State Constitutions and Statutes and Federal Statutes

You have already read how state tort law and federal constitutional law protect your rights against assault. State constitutions and statutes also protect your right to be free from assault. For example, the New York State Constitution, like the federal Eighth Amendment, prohibits cruel and unusual punishment.¹⁶⁹ Like the federal Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments, the New York Constitution does not allow you to lose your liberty without due process of law.¹⁷⁰

New York State laws give incarcerated people more protections. New York statutes say that prison officials cannot hit incarcerated people except under emergency circumstances: “[N]o officer or other employee of the department shall inflict any blows whatever upon any inmate, unless in self-defense, or to suppress a revolt or insurrection.”¹⁷¹ See Chapter 2 of the JLM, “Introduction to Legal Research,” for information on how to find similar laws in your state.

164. Griffin v. Comm’r of Pa. Prisons, No. 90-5284, 1991 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17951, at *11 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 6, 1991) (unpublished) (“Even if plaintiff considered the order illegal, plaintiff should not have refused to follow it because it is critical to the orderly administration of a prison that prisoners follow orders.”), aff’d, 961 F.2d 208 (3d Cir. 1992).

165. Pressly v. Gregory, 831 F.2d 514, 518 n.3 (4th Cir. 1987) (holding the incarcerated person could not resist being taken into custody by claiming that it violated his civil rights when his habeas petition was still pending).

166. Jackson v. Allen, 376 F. Supp. 1393, 1394 (E.D. Ark. 1974); see also Smith v. Sec’y, Fla. Dept. of Corrections, 358 Fed.Appx. 60, 64 (11th Cir. 2009) (finding a rule that prisoners comply with all orders issued by guards is constitutional, even though the rule might mean prisoners will have to comply with illegal orders); Gossett v. Stewart, 2012 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 34374 (D. Ariz. Mar. 13, 2012).

167. Jackson v. Allen, 376 F. Supp. 1393, 1395 (E.D. Ark. 1974).

168. Jackson v. Allen, 376 F. Supp. 1393, 1395 (E.D. Ark. 1974).

169. N.Y. Const. art. I, § 5.

170. N.Y. Const. art. I, § 6. In general, you have two types of due process rights under the Constitution. Your right to procedural due process means government proceedings must treat you fairly. It limits the ways the government can take away your property, liberty, and life. Your right to substantive due process prevents government interference with other rights individuals have that the government cannot take away—rights such as privacy, speech, and religion. Many Chapters in the JLM deal with these two types of due process.

171. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 137(5) (McKinney 2014). See Chapter 17 of the JLM, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions,” for information on how to bring tort actions against state employees.

In addition, federal statutes can also protect the rights of federal incarcerated people to be free from assault. The Federal Bureau of Prisons owes a duty of care to people in federal custody. This duty can be the basis for a suit against prison officials if you are attacked by other incarcerated people.¹⁷² But, a court will look at state tort law to decide if the officials have failed their duties. So, researching the laws of the state in which the prison sits is still necessary.¹⁷³

C. Sexual Assault and Rape

This Part of the Chapter explains the federal and state laws available if you have been sexually assaulted for both incarcerated men and women. Sexual assault and rape are both types of assaults. “Sexual assault” means any physical contact of a sexual nature, such as fondling your genitals (your private parts). If you have been sexually assaulted, you can make a claim using the laws described above, in Part B of this Chapter.

If you were attacked by a prison official, you can make an Eighth Amendment claim and a state tort law claim for assault and battery. Prison officials have the right to use lawful force to maintain order and security within the prison. They do not have the right to sexually abuse you.¹⁷⁴ Any bodily contact between you and a prison official must be (1) lawful force necessary to maintain security and (2) must connect to helping the official run the prison. A guard cannot claim that he is maintaining order or disciplining you for breaking a rule to force you to have sexual relations with him or to touch him in a sexual way.¹⁷⁵ If a prison official does this, you can seek the protection of the law.¹⁷⁶

Consensual sex (sex that both people agree to) between an incarcerated person and a prison official is not an Eighth Amendment violation. However, from a legal standpoint, consensual sex between an incarcerated person and prison official is “ unquestionably inappropriate.”¹⁷⁷ Federal law specifically criminalizes all sexual contact between corrections officers and incarcerated people in federal prisons, as Part C(2) explains below. Many states, including New York, have similar state laws,¹⁷⁸ as Part C(3) explains.

172. 18 U.S.C. § 4042(a)(2); see United States v. Muniz, 374 U.S. 150, 164–165, 83 S. Ct. 1850, 1859, 10 L. Ed. 2d 805, 816 (1963) (holding that the duty of care owed to federal prisoners is fixed by 18 U.S.C. § 4042, regardless of any conflicting state rules).

173. Parrott v. United States, 536 F.3d 629, 637 (7th Cir. 2008) (finding that Indiana tort law governs whether the duty of care is breached in a suit brought under the Federal Tort Claims Act). See footnote 3 of this Chapter for more information on the Federal Tort Claims Act under which such claims must be brought.

174. See Women Prisoners v. District of Columbia, 877 F. Supp. 634, 665 (D.C. Cir. 1994), vacated in part on other grounds, 93 F.3d 910, 320 U.S. App. D.C. 247 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (“Rape, coerced sodomy, unsolicited touching of women prisoners’ vaginas, breasts and buttocks by prison employees are ‘simply not part of the penalty that criminal offenders pay for their offenses against society.’”) (quoting Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1977, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 823 (1994)).

175. See Women Prisoners v. District of Columbia, 877 F. Supp. 634, 665 (D.C. Cir. 1994), vacated in part on other grounds, 93 F.3d 910, 320 U.S. App. D.C. 247 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (noting that although security concerns sometimes trump privacy interests, the evidence did not show any justification for the invasion of incarcerated people’s privacy or for vulgar sexual remarks).

176. See Women Prisoners v. District of Columbia, 877 F. Supp. 634, 665–666 (D.C. Cir. 1994), vacated in part on other grounds, 93 F.3d 910, 320 U.S. App. D.C. 247 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (holding that the District of Columbia was liable under U.S.C. 42 § 1983 for 8th Amendment violations); see also Hovater v. Robinson, 1 F.3d 1063, 1068 (10th Cir. 1993) (“[A]n inmate has a constitutional right to be secure in her bodily integrity and free from attack by prison guards”) (citing Alberti v. Klevenhagan, 790 F.2d 1220, 1224 (5th Cir. 1986)).

177. See, e.g., Phillips v. Bird, Civil Action No. 03-247-KAJ, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22418, at *16 (D. Del. Dec. 1, 2003) (unpublished).

178. Just Detention International’s website has useful resources, including information on laws, organizations, and practitioners who can help you in each state. Visit <https://justdetention.org/service/> (last visited Oct. 21, 2019) to find local resources.

If another incarcerated person sexually assaulted you, you can claim that prison officials violated the Eighth Amendment if they knew that you were at risk of harm but did nothing about it.¹⁷⁹ You could also make a state law negligence claim against prison officials.

1. What to Do If You Are Sexually Assaulted

If you are raped or sexually assaulted, you should tell someone immediately and ask to go to the hospital. There, you should be tested for sexually transmitted infections, and women should also be tested for pregnancy. The health professional should collect your clothing, fingernail scrapings, pubic hair samples, blood samples, hair strands, and swab samples from the back of your throat and your rectum and/or vagina.¹⁸⁰ If you would like to speak with someone after the sexual assault or rape, the prison may provide counseling.

You may also want to file a report about the sexual assault and press criminal charges. Many incarcerated people are afraid that prison officials will punish them if they file grievances, especially if they are complaining about staff. You may be afraid that your complaint will not be kept private or that you will be harassed or threatened. It can be difficult to report a sexual assault or rape. But, you should know that any sexual contact by a corrections officer is wrong. You have a right not to go through such abuse. It is also wrong for the prison guards to punish you or act against you for reporting the assault. Although, retaliation does happen.

If you bring a civil suit, it is important to know that the court allows claims based on physical abuse, but not claims based only on emotional damage.¹⁸¹ You could claim, however, that you experienced both physical and emotional damage. This makes the collection of physical evidence of sexual assault even more important. See Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,” for more information on the PLRA.

(a) Eighth Amendment Claims for Sexual Assault

Courts use the Eighth Amendment deliberate indifference standard to determine if a prison official is liable for failing to prevent sexual assaults.¹⁸²

If you were assaulted by a prison official, you can claim that the assault was “cruel and unusual punishment” violating your Eighth Amendment rights. Conduct violates the Eighth Amendment if it is against the “evolving standards of decency that mark the progress of a maturing society.”¹⁸³ Courts have found that sexual assaults violate the Eighth Amendment because “rape, coerced sodomy, 179. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 847, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1984, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 847 (1994) (“[A] prison official may be held liable under the Eighth Amendment for denying humane conditions of confinement only if he knows that inmates face a substantial risk of serious harm and disregards that risk by failing to take reasonable measures to abate it.”).

180. See Linda M. Petter & David L. Whitehill, Management of Female Sexual Assault, 58 Am. Family Physician 920 (1998) (providing medical recommendations for rape and sexual assault victims), available at <http://www.aafp.org/afp/980915ap/petter.html> (last visited Oct. 21, 2019).

181. 42 U.S.C. §1997e(e) (“[N]o Federal civil action may be brought by a prisoner confined in a jail, prison or other correctional facility, for mental or emotional injury suffered while in custody without a prior showing of physical injury.”).

182. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1977, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 823 (1994) (holding that to violate the 8th Amendment, a prison official must have a “sufficiently culpable state of mind” which means one of “deliberate indifference” to incarcerated person’s health or safety) (citing Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 111 S. Ct. 2321, 115 L. Ed. 2d 271 (1991)).

183. Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 8, 112 S. Ct. 995, 1000, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 167 (1992) (quoting Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 346, 101 S. Ct. 2392, 2399, 69 L. Ed. 2d 59, 68 (1981)) (internal quotation marks omitted).

unsolicited touching of women prisoners' vaginas, breasts and buttocks by prison employees are 'simply not part of the penalty that criminal offenders pay for their offenses against society.'"¹⁸⁴

In making your Eighth Amendment claim, you must show the same two parts as for any assault by a prison official: (1) the subjective part that the prison official has a state of mind that is guilty enough, and (2) the objective part that the harm is serious enough.¹⁸⁵ Showing these two parts is usually easier with sexual assault than with physical assault. Courts have said that sexual assaults are usually both malicious and harmful. As the Second Circuit has explained, a claim of sexual abuse may meet both the subjective and objective parts of the Eighth Amendment because sexual abuse can cause severe physical and mental harm.¹⁸⁶

(b) Sexual Abuse of Incarcerated Women

While both incarcerated men and women have been sexually assaulted and/or raped, incarcerated women are particularly vulnerable.¹⁸⁷ Although all incarcerated people's rights to privacy are very limited because of the nature of prison and incarceration,¹⁸⁸ courts are sometimes more sympathetic to female incarcerated people because of the greater chance of sexual abuses by prison guards. For example, some courts have found searches of incarcerated women by male guards to be unconstitutional, even if searches of male incarcerated people by female guards would be allowed under the same circumstances.¹⁸⁹ To help prevent sexual abuse of incarcerated women, some prisons have tried to hire only female corrections officers for women's prisons.¹⁹⁰

2. Federal Law

While a prison official is allowed to touch an incarcerated person for security reasons (for example, while performing a legal search), he is never allowed to have sexual contact with an incarcerated person. Federal law criminalizes sexual intercourse or any type of sexual contact between people with "custodial, supervisory or disciplinary" authority (like guards and wardens) and incarcerated people in federal correctional facilities.¹⁹¹ It is a felony to use or threaten force to engage in sexual intercourse

184. Women Prisoners of D.C. Dept. of Corr. v. District of Columbia, 877 F. Supp. 634, 665 (D.D.C. 1994) (quoting Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1977, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 823 (1994)), vacated in part on other grounds, 9 F.3d 910, 320 U.S. App. D.C. 247 (D.C. Cir. 1996).

185. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 834, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1977, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 823 (1994). See Part B(2) of this Chapter for more information on the objective and subjective parts of 8th Amendment violations.

186. Boddie v. Schnieder, 105 F.3d 857, 861 (2d Cir. 1997); see also Hammond v. Gordon County, 316 F. Supp. 2d 1262, 1301 (N.D. Ga. 2002) (holding that an incarcerated person had satisfied both the objective and subjective components of her 8th Amendment claim by alleging she had sexual intercourse with a prison guard, even though the guard claimed it was consensual).

187. Human Rights Watch, All Too Familiar: Sexual Abuse of Women in U.S. State Prisons (1996) ("[The female prisoner population is] a population largely unaccustomed to having recourse against abuse; all the more necessary, then, for the state to present the available means of recourse clearly and in an accessible fashion."), available at <https://www.hrw.org/report/1996/12/01/all-too-familiar/sexual-abuse-women-us-state-prisons> (last visited Oct. 21, 2019).

188. See Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 527–528, 104 S. Ct. 3194, 3200–3201, 82 L. Ed. 2d 393, 403–404 (1983) (finding that the interest in ensuring institutional security necessitates a limited right of privacy for incarcerated people).

189. See, e.g., Jordan v. Gardner, 986 F.2d 1521, 1531 (9th Cir. 1993) (holding that prison policy requiring male guards to conduct non-emergency, suspicionless, clothed body searches on female incarcerated people was cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the 8th Amendment). See Part C(2)(e) of Chapter 25 of the JLM, "Your Right To Be Free From Illegal Body Searches," for more information about cross-gender body searches.

190. See, e.g., Ind. Code Ann. §§ 36-8-3-19, 36-8-10-5 (West 2016). California protects all incarcerated people from being searched by officers of the opposite sex. Cal. Penal Code § 4021(b) (West 2011). Michigan provides that if incarcerated people are subject to body cavity searches by officers of the opposite sex, an officer of the same sex must also be present. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 764.25b(5) (West 2000).

191. 18 U.S.C. § 2243. For an example of criminal prosecution of a federal prison guard for violating this statute, see United States v. Vasquez, 389 F.3d 65, 77 (2d Cir. 2004) (affirming the conviction of a defendant prison

(or sexual contact) in a federal prison.¹⁹² This means it is always illegal in a federal prison for prison officials to have sexual contact with incarcerated people. These laws only protect federal incarcerated people. Laws protecting state incarcerated people are discussed in the next Subsection.

In 2003, the federal government passed the Prison Rape Elimination Act, the first federal law about sexual assault in prisons. The Act calls for the collection of national statistics about sexual assault in federal, state, and local prisons. It also develops guidelines for states on addressing incarcerated people rape, creates a review panel to hold annual hearings, and provides grants to states to fight the problem.¹⁹³ With this Act, the federal government recognized that sexual assault in prisons is a major problem.¹⁹⁴

3. State Law

In many states, including New York and California, any sexual conduct between a prison employee and an incarcerated person—even with the incarcerated person’s consent—is a form of rape.¹⁹⁵ A New York State statute makes any sexual relations between incarcerated people and prison employees illegal. Specifically, the law says incarcerated people cannot legally “consent” to sexual relations with prison employees.¹⁹⁶ Thus, by state statute, New York State prison employees are criminally liable (responsible) for rape, sodomy, sexual misconduct, or sexual abuse if they have sexual contact with or commit a sexual act with incarcerated people. In other words, courts will consider any sexual contact between a prison employee and an incarcerated person a crime. Courts will consider this a crime even if the incarcerated person believed he or she agreed to such contact. Consent is not a valid defense for the prison official’s acts.

Other states that criminalize sexual contact between prison employees and incarcerated people include Alaska, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, the District of Columbia, Florida, Georgia, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Utah, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, and Wisconsin.¹⁹⁷ States that have laws that do guard for five counts of sexual abuse of incarcerated people and one count of misdemeanor abusive sexual contact, and sentencing of defendant to 21 months imprisonment).

192. 18 U.S.C. § 2241.

193. Prison Rape Elimination Act of 2003, 34 U.S.C. §§ 30301–30309 (2012). The National Prison Rape Elimination Commission (“NPREC”) released an official report and guidelines in mid-2009. NPREC, Report and Standards, available at <https://www.ncjrs.gov/pdffiles1/226680.pdf> (last visited Oct. 21, 2019).

194. The U.S. Department of Justice (“DOJ”) also released a report examining the DOJ’s efforts to deter sexual abuse of federally incarcerated people by federal corrections officers, and made recommendations to help the DOJ prevent this sexual abuse (including better staff training and increased medical and psychological help for victims of abuse). Dept. of Justice, Office of the Inspector General, The Department of Justice’s Efforts to Prevent Staff Sexual Abuse of Federal Inmates (2009), available at <http://www.justice.gov/oig/reports/plus/e0904.pdf> (last visited Oct. 21, 2019).

195. CAL. PENAL CODE § 289.6 (West 2014); N.Y. PENAL LAW § 130.05(3)(e)–(f) (McKinney 2014).

196. N.Y. PENAL LAW §§ 130.05(3) (e)–(f) (McKinney 2014).

197. ALASKA STAT. §§ 11.41.425(a)(2), 11.41.427(a)(1) (West 2007); ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-1419 (2010); ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-14-126(a)(1)(A) (2006 & Supp. 2009); Cal. Penal Code § 289.6 (West 2014); COLO. REV. STAT. § 18-3-404(f) (West 2013); Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. §§ 53a-71(a)(5), 53a-73a(a)(1)(F) (West 2012); DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 11, § 1259 (2007); D.C. Code §§ 22-3013, 22-3014, and 22-3017 (West 2017); FLA. STAT. ANN. § 944.35(3) (West 2010); GA. CODE ANN. § 16-6-5.1 (West 2016); HAW. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 707-731(1)(c), 707-732(1)(e) (West 2008); IDAHO CODE ANN. § 18-6110 (2004 & Supp. 2008); 720 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/11-9.2 (West 2010); IOWA CODE ANN. § 709.16(1) (West 2016); KAN. STAT. ANN. § 21-5512 (2012); KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 510.120 (LexisNexis 2008); La. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 14:134.1 (2018); ME. REV. STAT. ANN. tit. 17-A, § 253(2)(E) (2006); MD. CODE ANN., CRIM. LAW § 3-314 (West 2002); MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. §§ 750.520c (1)(i–k) (West 2004); MINN. STAT. ANN. § 609.344(1)(m), 609.345(1)(m) (West 2009); MISS. CODE ANN. § 97-3-104 (West 2008); MO. ANN. STAT. § 566.145 (West 2012); MONT. CODE ANN. § 45-5-502(5)(a) (West 2009); NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 212.187 (West 2015); N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. § 632-A:4(III) (2016); N.J. STAT. ANN. § 2C:14-2(c)(2) (West 2015); N.M. STAT. ANN. § 30-9-11(E)(2) (West 2016); N.D. CENT. CODE ANN. § 12.1-not refer specifically to prison employees but may also criminalize prison employees' sexual contact with incarcerated people include Nebraska, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Texas, and Wyoming.¹⁹⁸

Some states have also taken steps to protect incarcerated people from retaliation for reporting sexual misconduct by prison staff. For example, California has made it illegal for prison guards to retaliate against incarcerated people who report them for sexual assault.¹⁹⁹ Of course, even with such laws, retaliation still occurs and is a real concern. But, if your state law does not allow retaliation, the fact that the law forbids this behavior strengthens your legal claim.

D. Assault on LGBTQ Incarcerated People

This Part of the Chapter discusses special issues for lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and/or queer people. Chapter 30 of the JLM, "Special Information for Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, and/or Queer Incarcerated People," explains these issues in more detail. You can sue before you are assaulted if you feel officials are ignoring a large risk that you will be seriously harmed.

Most LGBTQ incarcerated people who have been assaulted by other incarcerated people make Eighth Amendment deliberate indifference claims under Farmer.²⁰⁰ Although in one case, a court recognized a Fourteenth Amendment Equal Protection claim as well.²⁰¹ To make a claim that you are vulnerable to attack (in order to satisfy a deliberate indifference claim), you have to present evidence that you may be a target of assault.²⁰²

It is important to report any threats against you so that prison officials know about specific problems. For example, if you seem vulnerable because you are gay, transgender, and/or gender-nonconforming, then you should report to prison officials any harassment or threats of rape by other incarcerated people. When you report harassment or threats to prison officials, you need to have some specific evidence or examples (for example, that an incarcerated person who has raped other incarcerated people is threatening you) because suspicions alone are not enough.²⁰³ With such evidence, incarcerated people who are LGBTQ may be able to make a deliberate indifference Eighth Amendment claim that prison officials should have considered the previous threats and tried to prevent an attack. Of course, you will still have to prove that prison officials did not act reasonably to try to prevent the assault.

20-06 (West 2008); OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 2907.03(A)(6,11) (West 2006); OR. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 163.452, 454 (West 2015); 18 PA. STAT. AND CONS. STAT. ANN. § 3124.2 (West 2015); R.I. GEN. LAWS § 11-25-24 (2002); S.C. CODE ANN. § 44-23-1150 (2017); S.D. CODIFIED LAWS § 24-1-26.1 (2013); UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-5-412 (West 2015); VA. CODE ANN. § 18.2-64.2 (West 2012); WASH. REV. CODE ANN. §§ 9A.44.160, 170, 180 (West 2015); W. VA. CODE ANN. § 61-8B-10 (LexisNexis 2005 & Supp. 2009); and WIS. STAT. ANN. § 940.225 (West 2005). These laws vary significantly in detail, and you should consult the law of the state in which you are imprisoned. See Human Rights Watch, All Too Familiar: Sexual Abuse of Women in U.S. State Prisons 39–40 (1996), available at <https://www.hrw.org/report/1996/12/01/all-too-familiar/sexual-abuse-women-us-state-prisons> (last visited Oct. 21, 2019).

198. NEB. REV. STAT. ANN. § 28-322.03 (2009); N.C. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 14-27.31 (West 2014); OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. 21 § 1114 (West 2015); TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. § 22.011 (West 2019); WYO. STAT. ANN. § 6-2-303 (West 2007 & Supp. 2018). See Human Rights Watch, All Too Familiar: Sexual Abuse of Women in U.S. State Prisons 40 (1996), available at <https://www.hrw.org/report/1996/12/01/all-too-familiar/sexual-abuse-women-us-state-prisons> (last visited Oct. 21, 2019).

199. CAL. CODE REG. tit. 15, § 3401.5(f) (2003).

200. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 828–829, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1974–1975, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 820 (1994) (recognizing as actionable an 8th Amendment claim for a prison's "deliberate indifference" to a prominent risk of assault).

201. Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 532–533 (5th Cir. 2004) (holding that incarcerated person's sexual-orientation-based equal protection claims were properly pleaded and actionable).

202. See Purvis v. Ponte, 929 F.2d 822, 825–827 (1st Cir. 1991) (per curiam) (finding that the 8th Amendment is not violated when an incarcerated person alleged general fear of "gay bashing" and suspicions that homophobic cellmates threatened his safety, because the incarcerated person presented no evidence of the likelihood that violence would occur and officials had tried placing him with 6 different cellmates).

203. Riccardo v. Rausch, 375 F.3d 521, 527–528 (7th Cir. 2004) ("The Constitution does not oblige guards to believe whatever inmates say ... [A] prisoner's bare assertion is not enough to make the guard subjectively aware of a risk, if the objective indicators do not substantiate the inmate's assertion.").

You should also note that you may be able to get special protection even if you are not gay but are still more vulnerable to physical and sexual assaults by other incarcerated people because of how you look.²⁰⁴ If you fear you will be assaulted, you may request to be placed in special housing or protective custody. This request unfortunately usually also means you will lose certain privileges. Prison officials may also put you, without your consent, in protective custody or even solitary confinement because they believe that is the only way to protect you.²⁰⁵

1. Special Protections for LGBTQ People

In general, courts have recognized that gay or “effeminate” men are often assaulted in prison, especially when placed in the general population,²⁰⁶ and may need special consideration either at sentencing or after incarceration.²⁰⁷ Courts are still creating the law in this area. But, the Supreme Court has expressly said that a sentencing court may consider “susceptibility to abuse” in prison as a factor for a downward departure (a decrease from what the sentence would otherwise be) in extraordinary or unusual circumstances.²⁰⁸ Where the judge believes there is a serious risk you could be assaulted in prison or where prison officials say that they can protect you only by putting you in protective custody or solitary confinement, you can request better protective custody conditions or a shorter sentence. For example, several courts have ordered reduced sentences for incarcerated people at risk of assault because of their sexual orientation or appearance.²⁰⁹

Special treatment for LGBTQ incarcerated people was considered by the Second Circuit in United States v. Lara.²¹⁰ In this case, the incarcerated person had a youthful appearance and bisexual orientation that made him extremely vulnerable to physical attack. Prison officials were able to protect him only by putting him in solitary confinement, so the court reduced his sentence.²¹¹ A year after 204. See, e.g., United States v. Gonzalez, 945 F.2d 525, 526–527 (2d Cir. 1991) (ruling in favor of decreasing incarcerated person’s sentence because of his feminine appearance).

205. See, e.g., City of New York Department of Corrections, Directive 6007R-A: Protective Custody (May 24, 2010), available at <http://www.nyc.gov/html/doc/downloads/pdf/6007R-A.pdf> (last visited Oct. 21, 2019); New York Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive 4948: Protective Custody Status (Mar. 13, 2015) available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/4948.pdf> (last visited Oct. 21, 2019).

206. See, e.g., Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 848, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1984, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 832 (1994) (noting that placing a young, “effeminate” man into general population could threaten his safety); Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 517–519 (5th Cir. 2004) (holding that officials must use all possible administrative means to protect incarcerated people from sexual abuse); Taylor v. Mich. Dept. of Corr., 69 F.3d 76, 83–84 (6th Cir. 1995) (holding a warden liable for providing inadequate protection against physical and sexual abuse of a vulnerable incarcerated person).

207. United States v. Gonzalez, 945 F.2d 525, 526–527 (2d Cir. 1991) (holding that shortening the prison sentence for an incarcerated person was possible by balancing the government’s interest in incarcerating criminals with the goal of diminishing the likelihood that the incarcerated person would be assaulted).

208. Koon v. United States, 518 U.S. 81, 111, 116 S. Ct. 2035, 2053, 135 L. Ed. 2d 392, 421 (1996). Note that Koon, however, dealt with incarcerated people who were susceptible to abuse because they were ex-police officers, not because of their sexual orientation or appearance. See also United States v. LaVallee 439 F.3d 670, 708 (10th Cir. 2006) (allowing a reduced sentence for police officers because of their clearly demonstrated increased “susceptibility to abuse” in prison, but also noting that police officers will not get reduced sentences solely because of their increased “susceptibility”).

209. See, e.g., United States v. Lara, 905 F.2d 599, 601–602 (2d Cir. 1990) (reducing a sentence for a bisexual incarcerated person after prison officials put him in solitary confinement because solitary confinement was the only way the officials could protect him from assault); United States v. Gonzalez, 945 F.2d 525, 526–527 (2d Cir. 1991) (approving the trial court’s grant of a downward sentencing departure to a nineteen-year-old “effeminate-looking” heterosexual incarcerated person based on the likelihood of assault by other incarcerated people, even though no such attack had yet occurred); cf. United States v. Parish, 308 F.3d 1025, 1032–1033 (9th Cir. 2002) (upholding downward departure because incarcerated person was particularly susceptible to abuse). Note, however, that the Federal Sentencing Commission has discouraged, but not prohibited, the use of physical appearance in determining an incarcerated person’s potential for victimization and thus reduction in sentence. See Koon v. United States, 518 U.S. 81, 107, 116 S. Ct. 2035, 2050, 135 L. Ed. 2d 392, 418 (1996).

210. United States v. Lara, 905 F.2d 599 (2d Cir. 1990).

211. United States v. Lara, 905 F.2d 599, 603 (2d Cir. 1990).

Lara, the Second Circuit also decided United States v. Gonzalez.²¹² In Gonzalez, the court similarly reduced the sentence of a nineteen-year-old incarcerated person who was young, “effeminate,” and likely to be victimized by his fellow incarcerated people.²¹³ Unlike in Lara, however, the incarcerated person in Gonzalez was not gay or bisexual but still vulnerable to homophobic attacks since the way he looked did not fit traditional views of masculinity.²¹⁴ In other words, as long as an incarcerated person looks like he might be gay, he is at a greater risk of attack, even if he is not actually gay. The Gonzalez court also found that the incarcerated person could get a shorter sentence even though he had not been attacked. Oppressive conditions without an actual attack may be enough to get a shorter sentence.²¹⁵

2. Examples of Legal Claims Brought by LGBT Incarcerated People.

In Farmer v. Brennan, a transgender incarcerated woman was placed in the general male prison population and was later beaten and raped by another incarcerated person.²¹⁶ The Supreme Court held that the incarcerated person may have had an Eighth Amendment claim. The Court sent the case back to the lower court to determine if prison officials acted with deliberate indifference by failing to protect him.²¹⁷

In Young v. Quinlan, other incarcerated people sexually assaulted an incarcerated person who looked small, young, and “effeminate.” Officials ignored his requests for protection.²¹⁸ The Third Circuit said that the officials had violated the Eighth Amendment.²¹⁹ Similarly, the Sixth Circuit in Taylor v. Michigan Department of Corrections held that an incarcerated person who was small and vulnerable looking with a youthful appearance, low IQ, and a seizure disorder had an Eighth Amendment claim for being placed in a sixty-person prison camp barracks where he was raped.²²⁰ The Seventh Circuit also recognized an Eighth Amendment claim in Pope v. Shafer when an incarcerated person was assaulted after officials ignored the incarcerated person’s and internal affairs officers’ specific reports of threats against him and refused transfer requests.²²¹

In Greene v. Bowles, a transsexual incarcerated person was placed in protective custody to prevent attacks from other incarcerated people, but was then severely beaten by another incarcerated person in the protective custody unit.²²² The Sixth Circuit recognized an Eighth Amendment deliberate indifference claim because the warden admitted that he knew that the attacker was a “predatory inmate,” that the plaintiff was in protective custody because of her status as a vulnerable incarcerated person, and that both attacker and plaintiff were being housed in the same unit.²²³ Importantly, the Sixth Circuit held that vulnerable incarcerated people (such as those who are, or are perceived as, gay, transgender, or “effeminate”) who have been attacked can prove prison officials knew of the substantial risk to their safety in two different ways:

212. United States v. Gonzalez, 945 F.2d 525 (2d Cir. 1991).

213. United States v. Gonzalez, 945 F.2d 525, 526 (2d Cir. 1991).

214. United States v. Gonzalez, 945 F.2d 525, 526–527 (2d Cir. 1991) (“[E]ven if Gonzalez is not gay or bisexual, his physical appearance, insofar as it departs from traditional notions of an acceptable masculine demeanor, may make him as susceptible to homophobic attacks as was the bisexual defendant before us in Lara.”).

215. United States v. Gonzalez, 945 F.2d 525, 527 (2d Cir. 1991); cf. Koon v. United States, 518 U.S. 81, 111, 116 S. Ct. 2035, 2053, 135 L. Ed. 2d 392, 421 (1996) (finding that the court did not abuse its discretion in granting a downward sentencing departure based on convicted police officers’ susceptibility to abuse in prison).

216. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 830, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1975, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 821 (1994).

217. Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 848–849, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1985, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 833 (1994).

218. Young v. Quinlan, 960 F.2d 351, 362–363 (3d Cir. 1992).

219. Young v. Quinlan, 960 F.2d 351, 362–365 (3d Cir. 1992).

220. Taylor v. Mich. Dept. of Corr., 69 F.3d 76, 77 (6th Cir. 1995).

221. Pope v. Shafer, 86 F.3d 90, 91–92 (7th Cir. 1996).

222. Greene v. Bowles, 361 F.3d 290, 292 (6th Cir. 2004).

223. Greene v. Bowles, 361 F.3d 290, 294 (6th Cir. 2004).

(1) by proving the officials knew of the plaintiff's vulnerable status and of the general risk to the plaintiff's safety from other incarcerated people, even if the officials did not know of any specific danger; or

(2) by proving that the officials knew that a predatory incarcerated person, without separation or other protective measures, could be dangerous to others, including the plaintiff.²²⁴

If you are a vulnerable incarcerated person attacked by a predatory incarcerated person, this makes it easier for you to prove that prison officials knew of the risk to your safety. But, you do not have to prove a particular incarcerated person presented a specific threat to your safety.²²⁵

In another important case, Johnson v. Johnson, an African-American homosexual incarcerated person sued prison officials after prison gangs sexually assaulted him and bought and sold him as a sexual slave for over eighteen months, even though the plaintiff had asked for protection.²²⁶ The Fifth Circuit said the plaintiff had a deliberate indifference claim because the officials continued to house him with the general population even though he repeatedly asked for protection. The prison officials' response—that Johnson must “learn to f or fight”—“was not a reasonable response and ... contraven[e]d clearly established law.”²²⁷ The Court further held that “[a]lthough it is not clear exactly what type of action an official is legally required to take under Farmer ... an official may not simply send the inmate into the general population to fight off attackers.”²²⁸

In his lawsuit, Johnson also claimed that the prison officials' actions violated his Equal Protection rights under the Fourteenth Amendment.²²⁹ Specifically, he claimed that, because of his sexual orientation, the officials failed to protect him like they protected other incarcerated people.²³⁰ The Fifth Circuit recognized this claim, noting that “if they actually did deny Johnson protection because of his homosexuality ... that decision would certainly not effectuate any legitimate [governmental] interest” and would be in violation of the Equal Protection Clause.²³¹ You should note that the Johnson court accepted the plaintiff's sexual-orientation-based equal protection claim without proof that other non-homosexual incarcerated people were treated differently. But, remember that the law is still developing.

224. Greene v. Bowles, 361 F.3d 290, 294 (6th Cir. 2004) (“[W]here a specific individual poses a risk to a large class of inmates, that risk can also support a finding of liability even where the particular prisoner at risk is not known in advance.”).

225. Greene v. Bowles, 361 F.3d 290, 294 (6th Cir. 2004) (“[A] prison official cannot ‘escape liability ... by showing that, while he was aware of an obvious, substantial risk to inmate safety, he did not know that the complainant was especially likely to be assaulted by the specific prisoner who eventually committed the assault.”) (quoting Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 842–843, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1982, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 829 (1994)); see also Curry v. Scott, 249 F.3d 493, 507–508 (6th Cir. 2001) (finding that where a particular prison guard had a history of racially motivated harassment of African American incarcerated people, deliberate indifference could be demonstrated by a factual record, without threat to a particular incarcerated person), overruled in part on other grounds by Jones v. Bock, 549 U.S. 199, 216, 127 S. Ct. 910, 921, 166 L. Ed. 2d 798, 813 (2007).

226. Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 512 (5th Cir. 2004).

227. Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 527 (5th Cir. 2004).

228. Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 527 (5th Cir. 2004); see also Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 832–833, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1976–1977, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 822–823 (1994) (explaining that jailers must “take reasonable measures to guarantee the safety of the inmates” and “are not free to let the state of nature take its course” (internal quotation and citation omitted)); James v. Hertzog, 415 Fed. Appx. 530, 532 (5th Cir. 2011) (unpublished) (Noting that “The Supreme Court has not recognized sexual orientation as a suspect class; however, if the State violates the Equal Protection Clause by creating a disadvantage for homosexuals, the State's conduct must have ‘a rational relationship to legitimate governmental aims.’”) (internal quotation marks removed).

229. U.S. CONST. amend. XIV (“No State shall ... deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.”). See Chapter 30 of the JLM, “Special Information for Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, and Transgender Incarcerated People” for more information on the Equal Protection Clause.

230. Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 512 (5th Cir. 2004) (noting Johnson's claim that officials told him “[w]e don't protect punks on this farm”—‘punk’ being prison slang for a homosexual man”).

231. Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 532 (5th Cir. 2004); see Farmer v. Brennan, 511 U.S. 825, 833, 114 S. Ct. 1970, 1977, 128 L. Ed. 2d 811, 823 (1994) (“[G]ratuitously allowing the beating or rape of one prisoner by another serves ‘no legitimate penological objective.’”) (citation omitted).

E. Legal Remedies Available for Victims of Unlawful Assault

This Part explains what you can do, legally, if you have been the victim of an unlawful assault. Part E(1) explains how you should first complain using your prison's Inmate Grievance Program. Part E(2) describes how you can then file a Section 1983 suit if you believe prison officials or other government employees (including police officers) violated any of your constitutional rights. Part E(3) explains how you can also file a state tort claim. Finally, Part E(4) describes class actions (when groups of plaintiffs bring suit together).

Remembering that different laws apply in state and federal prisons is important. If you are in a federal prison, then it doesn't matter what state the prison is in because all federal prisons use federal law. If you are in state prison, you can use both state and federal laws. But remember each state creates its own laws. Research the laws of your state and how incarcerated people in your state file suits in that state's courts. Federal constitutional rights are protected regardless of whether you are in a state or a federal prison. But, the legal claims you make and how you make them will be different depending on whether you are in state or federal court.

1. Inmate Grievance Program

If you believe your rights have been violated, you should first file an administrative grievance. See Chapter 15 of the JLM, "Inmate Grievance Procedures," for further information. It is very important that you fully complete any administrative grievance processes before filing a lawsuit. If you do not, the court will probably reject your claim because you did not "exhaust" (complete) all administrative remedies first.²³²

2. 42 U.S.C. § 1983

If you think that prison officials have violated your Eighth Amendment rights, you may sue the officials or guards using Section 1983 of Title 42 of the United States Code (42 U.S.C. § 1983). Section 1983 is a federal law that allows you to sue state officials who have violated your constitutional rights while acting "under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom or usage, of any state."²³³ You can sue federal officials in a similar suit, called a Bivens action.²³⁴

You can also use Section 1983 to sue local officials as long as you can show that they too acted under "color of state law." You may be able to sue local officials under state tort law as well. But note that you can only sue municipalities (towns, cities, or counties) under Section 1983 if your injury was the result of an official municipal policy or custom.²³⁵ This means that to sue a city or a county, you will have to show that the "execution of [the] government's policy or custom ... inflict[ed] the injury."²³⁶

232. See, e.g., Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 515–523 (5th Cir. 2004) (dismissing an incarcerated person's claims that prison officials had failed to protect him from repeated sexual assaults due to his failure to exhaust administrative remedies).

233. 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

234. Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388, 91 S. Ct. 1999, 29 L. Ed. 2d 619 (1971) (holding that the federal agent's warrantless entry of arrestee's apartment on narcotics charges without probable cause allowed arrestee to state a federal cause of action under the 14th Amendment). See Part E of Chapter 16 of the JLM, "Using 42 U.S.C. §1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law," for more information on Bivens actions.

235. See, e.g., Williams v. Kaufman County, 352 F.3d 994, 1013–1014 (5th Cir. 2003) (holding that a county could be held liable for unlawful searches of detainees when the relevant policymaker, in this case the sheriff, authorized the policy).

236. Irwin v. City of Hemet, 22 Cal. App. 4th 507, 525, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 433, 442 (Cal. Ct. App. 1994) (quoting Monell v. Dept. of Soc. Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 694, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2037–2038, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 638 (1978)). In Irwin, a California court found that a complaint alleging that the City of Hemet's adoption of a policy or custom not to train its jailers in suicide screening and prevention was the proximate cause of an incarcerated person's suicide, may not be summarily dismissed without determination as to whether or not the city adopted a policy or custom to

In other words, a local government will be held liable only if an injury can be shown to be a direct result of the local government's official policy, either express or implied.²³⁷ Therefore, a local government is not liable under Section 1983 "for an injury inflicted solely by its employees or agents" who were not following official local policy or custom,²³⁸ even though the local officials may be individually liable under Section 1983.

You should read Chapter 16 of the JLM, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law," to learn more about Section 1983 claims. Part E(1) of Chapter 16 explains Bivens actions and Part C(3)(c) gives more information on qualified immunity.

3. Tort Actions

Chapter 17 of the JLM, "The State's Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions," explains how to bring a tort action in New York's Court of Claims.²³⁹ If you were assaulted, you can bring a state law tort action against those who assaulted you, their supervisors, and maybe the state itself.

It is very important to read Chapter 17 because there is a time limit for filing a lawsuit in the Court of Claims. If you do not file before the deadline, then you cannot sue in the New York State court system. Both New York State incarcerated people and incarcerated people from outside New York should read Chapter 17 for more information on how to bring a tort claim in state court.

4. Class Action Suits

Class actions are a type of lawsuit in which many plaintiffs sue together for similar violations of their rights.²⁴⁰ Courts generally allow class actions where the following conditions are present:

- (1) there are too many plaintiffs for the court to try each case individually,
- (2) each plaintiff's case is similar in fact and law,
- (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class (group of plaintiffs suing),
- (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class,²⁴¹

and

- (5) most of the claims would not be brought otherwise because each plaintiff's individual damages are too small.²⁴²

inadequately train jailers. For an example of such a municipal policy or custom, see Blihovde v. St. Croix County, 219 F.R.D. 607, 613 (W.D. Wis. 2003) (involving claims arising from a policy of strip searches for arrestees entering a jail).

237. Blihovde v. St. Croix County, 219 F.R.D. 607, 618 (W.D. Wis. 2003) ("Even when there is no express policy, a municipality may be liable when there is a 'custom' of unconstitutional conduct.") (citing Monell v. Dep't. of Soc. Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 691, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2036, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 635 (1978)); see also Walker v. Sheahan, 526 F.3d 973, 977 (7th Cir. 2008) (dismissing a § 1983 claim for lack of evidence of a practice of using excessive force and following a "code of silence"); Amnesty Am. v. Town of West Hartford, 361 F.3d 113, 125–127 (2d Cir. 2004) (reviewing the law of municipal liability in a damage suit for excessive force).

238. Irwin v. City of Hemet, 22 Cal. App. 4th 507, 525, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 433, 442 (Cal. Ct. App. 1994) (quoting Monell v. Dep't. of Soc. Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 694, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2037–2038, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 638 (1978)).

239. Remember the New York Court of Claims is a specific state court in New York that only deals with claims against the State of New York. If the person who injured you was a state official or employee and you decide to file a tort action in state court in New York, you should file your claim in the New York Court of Claims. The New York Court of Claims can only award money damages; it cannot issue an injunction. See Part C(4) of Chapter 5 of the JLM, "Choosing a Court and a Lawsuit: An Overview of the Options," for more information on the Court of Claims and Chapter 17 of the JLM, "The State's Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions," for more detailed information on tort actions.

240. See Chapter 5 of the JLM, "Choosing a Court and a Lawsuit: An Overview of the Options" on class actions in general and Chapter 16 of the JLM, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law," for more detailed information on § 1983 class actions.

241. See FED. R. CIV. P. 23.

242. See, e.g., Tardiff v. Knox County, 365 F.3d 1, 7 (1st Cir. 2004) (holding that class action status probably

If a pattern of excessive force against incarcerated people exists within a prison, a class action suit may be brought on behalf of all the incarcerated people. This suit can be brought against the wardens or administrators in charge of the overall operations of the prison.²⁴³ Defendants in such an action are charged with “abdicating their duty to supervise and monitor the use of force and deliberately permitting a pattern of excessive force to develop and persist.”²⁴⁴ In cases where injunctive relief is sought against prison officials for patterns of excessive force, “the subjective prong of the Eighth Amendment is satisfied by a showing of deliberate indifference” rather than by the Hudson v. McMillian standard of maliciousness.²⁴⁵

F. Conclusion

This Chapter described the legal meaning of “assault” and explained your right to be free from physical and sexual assault in prison. There are different sources of law offering you protection against guard and incarcerated person assault, and different ways to obtain relief for rights violations. Remember to complete administrative grievance processes before filing suit. Otherwise, courts might not allow you to continue.

is the only feasible means for arrestees to pursue strip search claims); Amchem Prods., Inc., v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 617, 117 S. Ct. 2231, 2246, 138 L. Ed. 2d 689, 709 (1997) (noting that the policy underlying class actions is to make it possible for individuals with small claims to aggregate those claims in order to vindicate their rights).

243. See, e.g., Ingles v. Toro, 438 F. Supp. 2d 203, 208–209 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) (approving settlement of a class action over excessive use of force by New York City prison guards; the city agreed to pay injured incarcerated people $2.2 million and revise its use-of-force directive and investigatory procedures, install new video cameras to watch guards and incarcerated people, and train guards in appropriate defensive techniques); Madrid v. Gomez, 889 F. Supp. 1146, 1254–1260 (N.D. Cal. 1995) (granting injunction in class action on behalf of all inmates at a facility where a pattern of unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain and constitutionally inadequate medical and mental health care was shown as cruel and unusual conditions of confinement for mentally ill incarcerated people in a security housing unit); see also Mark Mooney, Inmates Win 1.5M in Rikers Abuse Settlement, Daily News, Feb. 14, 1996, at 12, available at <https://www.nydailynews.com/archives/news/inmates-win-1-5m-rikers-abuse-settlement-article-1.750312> (last visited Oct. 20, 2019) (discussing a class action suit by 15 incarcerated people that involved allegations of abuse by corrections officers and that was settled by New York City for $1.5 million).

244. Madrid v. Gomez, 889 F. Supp. 1146, 1249 (N.D. Cal. 1995).

245. Madrid v. Gomez, 889 F. Supp. 1146, 1250 (N.D. Cal. 1995).

CHAPTER 25

YOUR RIGHT TO BE FREE FROM ILLEGAL BODY SEARCHES*

A. Introduction

This Chapter explains your right to be free from the involuntary exposure of your body and illegal body searches. Part A is the Introduction. Part B explains your rights regarding involuntary cross-gender exposure (when people of the opposite sex see your body against your wishes) and your privacy rights regarding your body, focusing mainly on the rights of women who are incarcerated. Part C focuses on body searches for both men and women. Finally, Part D explains what you can do to protect your rights and what legal options you have to remedy violations of your rights.

This Chapter explains your rights using both federal constitutional law (from the U.S. Constitution) and New York State laws. When addressing problems related to searches, including body cavity searches, courts generally refer to the Fourth Amendment, which protects you against unreasonable searches.¹ Remember that rulings from the U.S. Supreme Court apply to the whole country. If you are in a prison outside of New York, you should research the laws and cases in your state. You should try to use the laws and court decisions of the federal circuit where you are located. Reading Chapter 2 of the JLM before you read this Chapter (or any other chapter of the JLM) will help you understand how to research the law and understand which laws apply to you and your legal problem.

If you think your rights are being violated, you should first try to protect your rights through your institution's administrative grievance procedures.² You must go through the prison grievance process to protect your right to sue in federal court under the Prison Litigation Reform Act ("PLRA"). Read Chapter 14 of the JLM on the PLRA. If you do not go through the prison grievance process, you might lose your right to sue (and possibly your good-time credit).

If the grievance system does not help you, or if it does not help you enough, you can then file a lawsuit. Incarcerated people who challenge illegal body searches and involuntary exposure usually file claims under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 ("Section 1983"),³ through a Bivens action in state or federal court,⁴ or through an Article 78 petition in state court (if you are in New York).⁵ Other chapters of the JLM have

* This Chapter was written by Anya Emerson based on previous versions by Sara Manaugh, Jennifer Parkinson, Hannah Breshin Otero, Aric Wu, Sara Pikofsky, and Tami Parker. Special thanks to John Boston of The Legal Aid Society, Prisoners' Rights Project for his valuable comments.

1. The Fourth Amendment states that "[t]he right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated . . ." U.S. Const. amend. IV.

2. See Chapter 15 of the JLM for more information on grievance procedures for people who are incarcerated.

3. Remember that "§" is the symbol for "section." For example, § 1983 means "Section 1983." Therefore, "§ 1983" refers to a specific section—section 1983—of a law (here the United States Code).

4. For more information about Bivens actions, see Chapter 16 of the JLM.

5. See N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 7801–7806 (McKinney 2008). An Article 78 petition refers to a petition under Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law & Rules. You cannot use Article 78 to seek money damages. You can only use an Article 78 petition to go to court to challenge decisions made by New York State administrative bodies or officers, like the Department of Corrections and Community Supervision or prison employees, and only if you think the decision was illegal, arbitrary or grossly unfair. If a decision is arbitrary, it means that there was no good reason or policy to justify it. For example, an incarcerated person might file an Article 78 petition to request judicial review of a prison disciplinary determination resulting from what the incarcerated person believes to have been an illegal search. See, e.g., Medina v. Portuondo, 298 A.D.2d 733, 734, 749 N.Y.S.2d 291, 293 (3d Dept. 2002) (using Article 78 to challenge the determination that incarcerated person violated prison rules by possessing contraband and controlled substances); Ocean v. Selsky, 252 A.D.2d 984, 985, 676 N.Y.S.2d 380, 381 (4th Dept. 1998) (using Article 78 to challenge determination regarding the violation of the rules for a "pat frisk"); Young v. Coombe, 227 A.D.2d 799, 800, 642 N.Y.S.2d 443, 444 (3d Dept. 1996) (seeking judicial review of Commissioner's determination that incarcerated person was in violation of prison disciplinary rules by, among other things, not complying with a frisk under Article 78). For more information about Article 78 proceedings, see Part C(4) of more information about these claims, including Chapter 5, Chapter 16, and Chapter 22. If you want to learn more about your rights against assaults in prison, see Chapter 24 of the JLM.

If you bring a civil suit, it is important to know that the court will not recognize emotional damage without physical abuse. According to Section 803(d) of the PLRA, “[n]o Federal civil action may be brought by a prisoner confined in a jail, prison, or other correctional facility, for mental or emotional injury suffered while in custody without a prior showing of physical injury or the commission of a sexual act . . .”⁶ See Chapter 14 of the JLM for more information on the PLRA.

Also, because prison officers are government actors, they can use the defense of “qualified immunity”⁷ to counter a Section 1983 action. This means that even if you can prove you were illegally searched, the officials may not be liable (responsible) because of their qualified immunity defense.⁸ You should read Chapter 16 of the JLM carefully to learn more about the details of Section 1983, particularly Part C(3)(c) (Qualified Immunity) and Part B (Section 1983).

B. Involuntary Exposure

This Part discusses your privacy rights regarding your naked body.⁹ “Involuntary exposure” is when your naked or partly naked body is seen by guards of the opposite sex, such as when you are using showers or toilets. In Turner v. Safley, the Supreme Court stated that although incarcerated people do not have the same rights as people outside of prison, prison regulations that restrict the rights of incarcerated people must be reasonably related to legitimate penological (prison-related) interests.¹⁰ Thus, your privacy rights can be limited if the prison gives a reason that is reasonably related to a legitimate prison policy. For example, your state might allow prison guards of the opposite sex to see your naked body during emergencies.¹¹

But you can expect to have some privacy rights with respect to your naked body. Courts often disapprove of prison policies requiring incarcerated person to be routinely strip searched or seen naked by guards of the opposite sex.¹² Courts have held that prisons may accommodate the privacy interests

Chapter 5 of the JLM and Chapter 22 of the JLM.

6. Prison Litigation Reform Act of 1995 (PLRA), 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(e).

7. “Qualified immunity” is defined as “[i]mmunity from civil liability for a public official who is performing a discretionary function, as long as the conduct does not violate clearly established constitutional or statutory rights.” Qualified Immunity, BLACK’S LAW DICTIONARY (11th ed. 2019).

8. See, e.g., Way v. County of Ventura, 445 F.3d 1157, 1163 (9th Cir. 2006), cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1052, 127 S. Ct. 665, 166 L. Ed. 2d 513 (2006) (holding strip search of arrestee unconstitutional but finding in favor of the County because of the officers’ qualified immunity); Lay v. Porker, 371 F. Supp. 2d 1159, 1167 (C.D. Cal. 2004) (holding that a body cavity search of a naked incarcerated man in the presence of a female officer violated the person’s constitutional rights, but granting summary judgment to the prison because of the prison official’s qualified immunity). But see Edgerly v. City & Cty. of S.F., 599 F.3d 946, 951, 958–959 (9th Cir. 2010) (finding that certain police officers were not entitled to qualified immunity because the law clearly established that the kind of search performed was unconstitutional).

9. For other privacy rights, see Chapter 19 of the JLM (monitoring of telephone calls, inspection of mail, etc.); Chapter 26 of the JLM (on the right to privacy regarding health status).

10. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987).

11. See, e.g., Michenfelder v. Sumner, 860 F.2d 328, 330–337 (9th Cir. 1988) (holding that strip searches conducted by prison guards of the opposite sex of the incarcerated person were reasonable, as they were related to the prison’s legitimate security concerns). For an example outside of the context of searches, see Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 404, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1877, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 467 (1989) (upholding a regulation that allowed prison wardens to prevent incarcerated people from reading books and magazines which were “determined detrimental to the security, good order, or discipline of the institution or . . . might facilitate criminal activity.”).

12. See Mills v. City of Barbourville, 389 F.3d 568, 579 (6th Cir. 2004) (“As to jail employees of the opposite gender viewing prison inmates or detainees, we have recognized that a prison policy forcing incarcerated people to be searched by members of the opposite sex or to be exposed to regular surveillance by officers of the opposite sex while naked—for example while in the shower or using a toilet in a cell—would provide the basis of a claim on which relief could be granted.”) (citations omitted); Fortner v. Thomas, 983 F.2d 1024, 1030 (11th Cir. 1993) (recognizing incarcerated people’s right to bodily privacy “because most people have ‘a special sense of privacy in of people who are incarcerated when such actions are reasonable and do not affect penological interests. But courts have not been clear about which specific prison actions violate your privacy rights.¹³ For example, the court in Hudson v. Goodlander held that assigning female guards to posts where they could see an incarcerated man while he was totally naked violated the man's privacy rights.¹⁴ However, the court stated that voluntary restrictions on the employment of female correction officers should adequately protect the privacy rights of incarcerated people and could be removed during times of emergency.¹⁵

One obstacle to challenging involuntary exposure situations is that prisons must obey federal employment discrimination laws that require male and female employees to be treated the same. Prohibiting guards of the opposite sex from viewing nude incarcerated people may violate laws requiring equal employment opportunities because whether the guard is a man or a woman would then become a factor in employment decisions.¹⁶ Most courts have held that prison policies which may allow for cross-sex viewing of nude incarcerated people do not violate incarcerated people's rights.¹⁷ their genitals, and involuntary exposure of them in the presence of people of the other sex may be especially demeaning and humiliating” (quoting Lee v. Downs, 641 F.2d 1117, 1119 (4th Cir. 1981)); Sepulveda v. Ramirez, 967 F.2d 1413, 1415–1416 (9th Cir. 1992) (noting that, in the Ninth Circuit, the right to bodily privacy was extended to incarcerated people in 1985 and was “clearly established” for parolees by 1988); Kent v. Johnson, 821 F.2d 1220, 1226–1227 (6th Cir. 1987) (recognizing that an incarcerated person has a constitutional claim when the prison fails to reasonably accommodate the interests of incarcerated people against unnecessary bodily exposure to guards of the opposite sex).

13. See Ashann-Ra v. Virginia, 112 F. Supp. 2d 559, 565 (W.D. Va. 2000) (recognizing that routinely or regularly exposing an unclothed incarcerated man to female guards may constitute a constitutional violation, but suggesting that an evidentiary hearing may be required to make that determination for particular encounters); see also Oliver v. Scott, 276 F.3d 736, 744–746 (5th Cir. 2002) (upholding under the Turner reasonable relationship standard a policy “permitting all guards to monitor all inmates at all times” because it “increases the overall level of surveillance” and noting that bathrooms and showers can be the site of violence, making it reasonable for prisons to monitor such areas); Hill v. McKinley, 311 F.3d 899, 903–905 (8th Cir. 2002) (holding both male and female staff could participate in transfer of a naked incarcerated woman who was allegedly disobedient, since not enough female guards were available, but the woman's Fourth Amendment rights were violated when the guards left her naked on a restraint board for a substantial period of time in the presence of male officers); Somers v. Thurman, 109 F.3d 614, 617–623 (9th Cir. 1997) (finding no clearly established Fourth Amendment protection against cross-gender strip searches and dismissing Eighth Amendment claim that female officers subjected male plaintiff to visual body cavity searches, watched him shower, pointed at him, and made jokes about him).

14. Hudson v. Goodlander, 494 F. Supp. 890, 893 (D. Md. 1980); see also Fortner v. Thomas, 983 F.2d 1024, 1029–1030 (11th Cir. 1993) (holding that incarcerated men suing to prevent female guards from coming into living quarters where they were exposed may be entitled to injunctive relief in light of court's recognition of limited constitutional right to bodily privacy); Arey v. Robinson, No. Y-90-3009, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21810, at *32 (D. Md. Apr. 3, 1992) (unpublished) (finding the design and operation of bathroom facilities violated the incarcerated person's privacy rights), adopted by Arey v. Robinson, 819 F. Supp. 478, 479 (D. Md. 1992).

15. Hudson v. Goodlander, 494 F. Supp. 890, 894 (D. Md. 1980).

16. See Csizmadia v. Fauver, 746 F. Supp. 483, 491–492 (D.N.J. 1990) (discussing the tension between incarcerated people's constitutional privacy rights and guards' equal employment rights). But see Tharp v. Iowa Dept. of Corr., 68 F.3d 223, 224–225 (8th Cir. 1995) (finding that assignment of female guards exclusively to female prison units did not violate equal employment rights and could be viewed as serving a positive interest for the prison as long as guards were not being denied opportunities for promotion or being discriminated against by these assignments).

17. See, e.g., Mills v. City of Barbourville, 389 F.3d 568, 579 (6th Cir. 2004) (finding no Fourth Amendment violation where male employee accidentally saw female plaintiff's bare chest while female jailers were searching her upon entry to prison); Grummett v. Rushen, 779 F.2d 491, 496 (9th Cir. 1985) (rejecting claims by incarcerated people challenging assignment of female officers to male housing units); Smith v. Chrans, 629 F. Supp. 606, 611 (C.D. Ill. 1986) (dismissing case when incarcerated person alleged nothing more than occasional and inadvertent sightings by female prison employees of incarcerated people in cells or open shower or toilet facilities engaged in basic bodily functions); Cerniglia v. Cty. of Sacramento, No. 2:99-cv-01938-JKS-DAD, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32346, at *49–52 (E.D. Cal. Apr. 18, 2008) (unpublished) (finding no violation of an incarcerated person's right to privacy where incarcerated person was strip searched in a dayroom where anyone could have seen him, but there was no evidence that anyone actually did). But see Morris v. Newland, No. CIV S-00-2794 GEB GGH P, 2007 U.S.

For example, the Ninth Circuit in Oliver v. Scott held that an incarcerated man's Fourth and Fourteenth Amendment rights were not violated after female prison guards strip searched him and observed him showering and using the bathroom.¹⁸ Similarly, the Eighth Circuit in Timm v. Gunter held that allowing female guards, like male guards, to pat search incarcerated men was a reasonable regulation and did not violate any privacy interests of the incarcerated people.¹⁹

Courts have used several methods to balance incarcerated people's privacy rights and correction officers' right to be free from sex discrimination in employment. For example, the court in Johnson v. Pennsylvania Bureau of Corrections held that a prison's regulations were reasonable when it assigned female officers to patrol housing units since the officers were required to announce their presence when entering housing areas to avoid unnecessarily invading the privacy of incarcerated people of the opposite sex.²⁰ Other methods noted by courts or used by prisons include allowing incarcerated women to cover the windows of their cells for short periods of time,²¹ allowing incarcerated people to cover their genitals with a towel when guards are present in the restrooms,²² and providing pajamas for sleeping.²³ One court has even suggested that prisons should change the design of bathroom facilities to protect an incarcerated person's privacy rights.²⁴

C. Body Searches

This Part discusses when and how prison officials are allowed to search your body. Part C(1) introduces the names which courts use for different types of body searches. Part C(2) explains the Fourth Amendment protections against illegal searches for convicted incarcerated people. Part C(3) explains how the Eighth Amendment also limits certain body searches. Part C(4) discusses DNA testing. Part C(5) describes your privacy rights under state law. Part C(6) describes your right to be free from illegal searches under New York law and prison regulations. Part C(7) explains the consequences of resisting a body search you think is illegal.

Note that people in jail who were recently arrested (arrestees) or who are waiting for trial (pretrial detainees) have more constitutional protections against body searches than incarcerated people who have been convicted. When you research your case, remember that the reasonableness standard for searches of arrestees/pretrial detainees differs from the reasonableness standard for convicted

Dist. LEXIS 15725, at *17–22 (E.D. Cal. Mar. 6, 2007) (unpublished) (dismissing claim that incarcerated person's Fourth Amendment rights were violated by three prison guards watching him shower, but ruling he could continue to litigate his retaliation claim, which was that the guards had “repeatedly ogled him in retaliation for his having filed inmate grievances regarding female guards being allowed to watch him showering or otherwise undressed”).

18. Oliver v. Scott, 276 F.3d 736, 746 (5th Cir. 2002); see also Johnson v. Phelan, 69 F.3d 144, 147 (7th Cir. 1995) (noting that limiting the prison guards that could monitor incarcerated people in the shower or toilets to a specific gender or sexual orientation would be inefficient staff deployment and therefore is not required under the Eighth Amendment).

19. Timm v. Gunter, 917 F.2d 1093, 1100 (8th Cir. 1990) (“We are persuaded that allowing such searches on the same basis as same-sex pat searches is a reasonable regulation as applied at [the prison], and thus is not a constitutional violation.”).

20. Johnson v. Pa. Bureau of Corr., 661 F. Supp. 425, 432 (W.D. Pa. 1987).

21. Torres v. Wis. Dept. of Health & Soc. Servs., 859 F.2d 1523, 1524 (7th Cir. 1988) (en banc) (noting that incarcerated women at women's maximum security prison were allowed to cover windows in the doors of their rooms with privacy cards for up to 10 minutes between the hours of 6 a.m. and 9 p.m. while they are dressing or using the toilet).

22. Timm v. Gunter, 917 F.2d 1093, 1102 (8th Cir. 1990) (noting that “[t]he use of a covering towel while using the toilet or while dressing and body positioning while showering or using a urinal allow the more modest inmates to minimize invasions of their privacy”).

23. Forts v. Ward, 621 F.2d 1210, 1217 (2d Cir. 1980) (finding that a “suitable nighttime garment” can protect incarcerated people from inappropriate viewing of their private parts).

24. Arey v. Robinson, NO. Y-90-3009, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 21810 at *29-30 (D. Md. Apr. 6, 1992) (unpublished) ((stating that the “combined effect of [an] open dormitory and [an] open bathroom area” that puts incarcerated people “on display virtually 24 hours a day no matter how personal an activity” for guards of the opposite sex undermines “[b]asic human dignity”).

incarcerated people. For instance, strip/body cavity searches have been held to be unconstitutional where authorities had no reasonable suspicion that the arrestee was concealing contraband.²⁵ Also, law enforcement-related searches of pretrial detainees' cells are protected by the Fourth Amendment, but searches of the cells of people who have already been convicted are not.²⁶ Refer to Part C(2) of this section to learn about the reasonableness standard for searches of incarcerated people.

1. Types of Body Searches

It is important to remember that most searches of incarcerated people are legal. Prison officials may legally touch you for security reasons, such as when performing a valid search.²⁷ But courts have recognized that sometimes prison officials use searches, especially strip searches and body cavity searches, to harass or abuse incarcerated people. This type of search is not legal.²⁸ Courts, including the Supreme Court, have created some standards to balance the needs of prisons and incarcerated people.²⁹ This Section explains five types of searches:

- (1) pat frisk search—a search where a prison guard searches your body and clothes while you are still dressed (but you will usually have to remove your hat, shoes, and coat);
- (2) strip search—a search where you remove all of your clothing, and the prison official searches your clothes after you take them off (the prison guard does not touch you or search your body cavities);
- (3) strip frisk search—a search where the official searches your clothes after you have taken them off and also looks at (but does not touch) your body cavities (all incarcerated people must bend over to have their anal cavities searched; women must also squat so that the guards can look into their vaginal cavity);
- (4) body cavity search—a search that includes contact with any or all of your body cavities; these searches should be performed by trained medical personnel only; and
- (5) cross-gender body search—any search performed by someone of the opposite sex.

25. See Weber v. Dell, 804 F.2d 796, 802 (2d Cir. 1986).

26. Willis v. Artuz, 301 F.3d 65, 69 (2d Cir. 2002) (justifying the differential treatment of convicted incarcerated person's room because "a convicted prisoner's loss of privacy rights can be justified on grounds other than institutional security," such as punishment).

27. Prison officials are allowed to use bodily force to maintain control and security within the prison as long as their actions relate to some penological need, meaning the action helps them manage and maintain control of the prison. See N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 137(5) (McKinney 2014) ("When any inmate...shall offer violence to any person, or do or attempt to do any injury to property, or attempt to escape, or resist or disobey any lawful direction, the officers and employees shall use all suitable means to defend themselves, to maintain order, to enforce observation of discipline, to secure the persons of the offenders and to prevent any such attempt or escape."). But see Turner v. Huibregtse, 421 F. Supp. 2d 1149, 1152 (W.D. Wis. 2006) (finding that inappropriate fondling of an incarcerated person in a harassing manner, unlike the touching requisite to a search, may violate the person's constitutional rights).

28. For more on harassment, see Part B(3) of Chapter 24 of the JLM.

29. See generally Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 526–527, 104 S. Ct. 3194, 3200–3201, 82 L. Ed. 2d 393, 403–404 (1984) (utilizing a reasonableness standard to evaluate whether incarcerated people have an expectation of privacy); Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 558–559, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1884, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 480–481 (1979) (using a reasonableness standard); see also Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89–91, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79–80 (1987) (establishing a four-part test to determine if a prison regulation's violation of a constitutional right was reasonable), superseded in part by statute, 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1 (introducing a standard for infringements on religious freedom).

2. Fourth Amendment Protections

Incarcerated people usually use the Fourth Amendment, which forbids “unreasonable searches and seizures,”³⁰ to challenge body searches. Incarcerated people have some, but very limited, privacy rights to their bodies under the Fourth Amendment.³¹

This Section first tells you when courts do allow body searches under the Fourth Amendment. Part C(2)(a) explains the Fourth Amendment’s “reasonableness standard,” which courts use to decide if a search was lawful. Part C(2)(b) discusses strip search cases, Part C(2)(c) discusses strip frisks, and Part C(2)(d) covers body cavity searches. Finally, Part C(2)(e) explains your limited right to not be searched by someone of the opposite sex (cross-gender body searches).

(a) Reasonableness Standard for Searches of Incarcerated People

The lawfulness of a body search depends on whether a prison guard performs the search reasonably. In Bell v. Wolfish, the Supreme Court said that body searches conducted by prison guards while in prison are constitutional, but only if performed in a “reasonable manner.”³² Guards must act reasonably when searching incarcerated people because searches invade incarcerated people’s privacy and can easily become abusive.³³ In other words, courts balance the state’s need for the search against how much the incarcerated person’s privacy is invaded.

The courts do not have one particular rule for what is reasonable in body searches. Instead, they have decided that some practices are unreasonable. To decide whether a search is unreasonable and unnecessarily invasive of incarcerated people’s privacy, courts must look at: (1) how the search is performed; (2) the scope of the search; (3) the reason for the search; and (4) the place of the search.³⁴

Different courts make different decisions using this test, depending on how reasonable a court finds the prison officials’ explanation for the search and the conduct during the search. Note that courts often believe prison officials when they claim that they needed to search an incarcerated person for security reasons. Courts usually “defer” to prison safety policies, meaning courts usually do not want to second-guess the policies.³⁵ While courts will not allow prison officials to do anything they wish

30. U.S. CONST. amend. IV. But remember that the Fourth Amendment does not protect you from searches and seizures of your prison cell because the Supreme Court has said that incarcerated people have no legitimate expectation of privacy in their prison cells. See Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 526, 104 S. Ct. 3194, 3200, 82 L. Ed. 2d 393, 402–403 (1984) (holding that the Fourth Amendment prohibition against unreasonable searches does not apply to prison cells because “[t]he recognition of privacy rights for prisoners in their individual cells simply cannot be reconciled with the concept of incarceration and the needs and objectives of penal institutions”); Block v. Rutherford, 468 U.S. 576, 591, 104 S. Ct. 3227, 3235, 82 L. Ed. 2d 438, 450 (1984) (holding searches of pretrial detainees’ cells were not unconstitutional because they served the important government purpose of maintaining security in the jail); Willis v. Artuz, 301 F.3d 65, 68–69 (2d Cir. 2002) (holding that incarcerated people are not protected from cell searches prompted by prosecutors or police even though such searches are not related to prison security). But see United States v. DeFonte, 441 F.3d 92, 94 (2d Cir. 2006) (finding that even though is no reasonable expectation of privacy in prison cells for Fourth Amendment purposes, attorney-client privilege protects an incarcerated person’s journal kept in prison cell, since journal entries contained notes from conversations with the person’s attorney).

31. See, e.g., Nicholas v. Goord, 430 F.3d 652, 658 (2d Cir. 2005), cert. denied, 549 U.S. 953, 127 S. Ct. 384, 166 L. Ed. 2d 270 (2006) (“[P]risoners retain a right to bodily privacy, even if that right is limited by institutional and security concerns.”); Peckham v. Wis. Dept. of Corr., 141 F.3d 694, 697 (7th Cir. 1998) (noting that while incarcerated people have some limited protections under the Fourth Amendment, “it is difficult to conjure up too many real-life scenarios where prison strip searches of inmates could be said to be unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment”); Fortner v. Thomas, 983 F.2d 1024, 1030 (11th Cir. 1993) (“We are persuaded to join other circuits in recognizing an incarcerated person’s constitutional right to bodily privacy because most people have ‘a special sense of privacy in their genitals, and involuntary exposure of them in the presence of people of the other sex may be especially demeaning and humiliating.’”).

32. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 560, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1885, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 482 (1979).

33. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 559–560, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1884–1886, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 481–483 (1979).

34. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 559, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1884–1885, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 481–482 (1979).

35. See Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 547, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1878, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 474 (1979) (“Prison administrators therefore should be accorded wide-ranging deference in the adoption and execution of policies and

(courts can and have struck down unreasonable policies), a prison official can typically easily prove the need for a search policy. Some examples of “reasonable” searches are:

- (1) a visual, public strip search and urine analysis drug test as part of a prison administration’s efforts to stop prison drug use;³⁶
- (2) drawing an incarcerated person’s blood or saliva to add DNA to a criminal profiling database;³⁷ and
- (3) a policy of visually strip searching all people recently-arrested before admitting them to the general population of a detention center, regardless of the reason for their arrest, in order to prevent dangerous or illegal materials from entering the prison.³⁸

In general, searches should not be performed abusively (in violation of the Eighth Amendment’s ban on cruel and unusual punishment)³⁹ or conducted in an unnecessarily public manner.⁴⁰ Who conducts the search can be important—for example, some states require body cavity searches to be performed by trained medical personnel, and some courts are less likely to find a violation when a body cavity search is conducted by medical personnel.⁴¹ Where the search is performed is also a factor—for example, prison officials should not perform strip searches in public without a good reason.⁴² Which incarcerated people are being searched is considered critical—courts allow more practices that in their judgment are needed to preserve internal order and discipline and to maintain institutional security.”); Bull v. City & Cty. of San Francisco, 595 F.3d 964, 977 (9th Cir. 2010) (noting that courts owe great deference to prison officials’ professional judgment); Whitman v. Nesic, 368 F.3d 931, 934–935 (7th Cir. 2004) (deferring to prison’s claim of security justifications for requiring incarcerated people to be strip-searched before giving urine samples in a random drug testing program, because “[p]rison officials must be accorded wide-ranging deference in matters of internal order and security”) (quoting Meriwether v. Faulkner, 821 F.2d 408, 417 (7th Cir. 1987)); Elliott v. Lynn, 38 F.3d 188, 191–192 (5th Cir. 1994) (agreeing with the prison’s claim that a state of emergency existed that justified the deprivation of privacy where prison officials conducted a massive prison shakedown after an increase in murders and violence and strip searches were conducted in front of other incarcerated people and several non-prison staff).

36. See Thompson v. Souza, 111 F.3d 694, 699–703 (9th Cir. 1997) (upholding a strip search conducted in front of other incarcerated people even though strip searches were not an official part of the prison’s policy, and holding that requiring incarcerate people to provide urine samples for the purposes of drug tests does not violate their constitutional rights).

37. See Hamilton v. Brown, 630 F.3d 889, 894–896 (9th Cir. 2011) (holding that prison officials can collect blood samples from incarcerated people for the purpose of DNA identification); Padgett v. Donald, 401 F.3d 1273, 1277–1280 (11th Cir. 2005) (holding that there is no constitutional violation in collecting saliva samples for the purpose of creating a DNA database of incarcerated people).

38. See Florence v. Bd. of Chosen Freeholders, 566 U.S. 318, 333–334, 132 S. Ct. 1510, 1520–1521, 182 L. Ed. 2d 566, 579 (2012) (concluding that a prison policy of strip searching every person admitted into a detention center, no matter the offense arrested for, was constitutional).

39. See, e.g., Calhoun v. DeTella, 319 F.3d 936, 940 (7th Cir. 2003) (holding that conducting strip searches while opposite-sex staff were invited to watch, accompanied by sexual harassment and taunting, would be “designed to demean and humiliate” and would thus provide an Eighth Amendment claim). But see Somers v. Thurman, No. 96-55534, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 12272, at *31 (9th Cir. Mar. 25, 1997) (unpublished) (“To hold that gawking, pointing, and joking violates the prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment would trivialize the objective component of the Eighth Amendment test and render it absurd.”).

40. See, e.g., Farmer v. Perrill, 288 F.3d 1254, 1260 (10th Cir. 2002) (holding that the incarcerated person has “the right not to be subjected to a humiliating strip search in full view of several (or perhaps many) others unless the procedure is reasonably related to a legitimate penological interest”) (emphasis in original).

41. See, e.g., CAL. PENAL CODE § 4030(j) (Deering 2016) (requiring that a body cavity search be conducted only by “a physician, nurse practitioner, registered nurse, licensed vocational nurse, or emergency medical technician Level II licensed to practice in [California]”); Turner v. Procopio, No. 13-CV-693-FPG-MJR, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 55052 at *25 (W.D.N.Y. Mar. 27, 2020) (holding a physical body cavity search performed by a physician and licensed nurse was reasonable, even though the search warrant did not specify that the search had to be a physical cavity search); see also Geder v. Lane, 745 F. Supp. 538, 539 (C.D. Ill. 1990) (suggesting that medical personnel are authorized to perform a broader variety of searches than nonmedical personnel).

42. See, e.g., Farmer v. Perrill, 288 F.3d 1254, 1260–1261 (10th Cir. 2002) (permitting a challenge to visual strip searches en route to the recreation yard conducted in view of other incarcerated people and holding that the government must be justified when doing the visual strip searches in public); Smith v. Taylor, 149 F. App’x 12, intrusive searches of maximum security incarcerated people,⁴³ though the Supreme Court has held that even people who are arrested for minor crimes can be visually strip searched when admitted into detention in the interest of prison security.⁴⁴

The New York State Department of Corrections and Community Supervision (“DOCCS”) relies on this standard (of what is or is not reasonable) when trying to figure out what kind of pat frisks are permitted. According to Directive 4910, a pat frisk is permitted if an official has “an articulable basis to suspect that an inmate may be in possession of contraband,” among other reasons.⁴⁵ The old reasonable suspicion standard required a “particularized and objective basis.”⁴⁶ This meant that from an objective point of view, the circumstances leading up to the search would have made a reasonable person believe that a suspect was in possession of contraband.⁴⁷ The wording in the new standard—“articulable basis”—gives prison officials even greater leeway when determining if a pat frisk is necessary. As long as a prison official can give a reason (and it may not be a good reason) to suspect that you may be carrying contraband, he can pat frisk you.⁴⁸ An official will also pat frisk you before you speak with Department officials or enter the visiting room.⁴⁹

(b) Strip Search

In a strip search, you take off your clothes and a prison official searches them and inspects your naked body. In a strip search, the official does not touch you or search your body cavities. At least one circuit court has held that a strip search does not have to be “deliberate,” meaning that an officer does not need to take specific actions, such as asking you to open your mouth or raise your armpits, for an 14 (2d Cir. 2005) (noting that the presence of more officers at a strip search than prison rules authorized may suggest a privacy violation not necessary to serve penological interests).

43. See, e.g., Savard v. Rhode Island, 338 F.3d 23, 30 (1st Cir. 2003) (en banc) (noting the different Fourth Amendment rights afforded to misdemeanor arrestees and convicted convicts); Arruda v. Fair, 710 F.2d 886, 886–888 (1st Cir. 1983) (upholding the practice of subjecting maximum-security incarcerated people to body cavity searches upon non-contact visitations, visits to the infirmary and library, and upon leaving cells, finding the practice reasonable given prison officials’ need to find smuggled contraband among segregated incarcerated people in maximum-security prison); see also Michenfelder v. Sumner, 860 F.2d 328, 333 (9th Cir. 1988) (“The fact that Unit 7 houses the state’s most difficult incarcerated people gives rise to a legitimate governmental security interest in procedures that might be unreasonable elsewhere.”); Rickman v. Avanti, 854 F.2d 327, 328 (9th Cir. 1988) (holding that policy of performing visual strip and body cavity searches on people held in administrative segregation unit whenever they left their cells was constitutional in light of security interests for most restrictive unit); Lopez v. Youngblood, 609 F. Supp. 2d 1125, 1136, 1139 (E.D. Cal. 2009) (distinguishing a county jail’s unreasonable blanket strip search policy from the reasonable searches at a maximum security facility such as the one in Michenfelder).

44. See Florence v. Bd. of Chosen Freeholders, 566 U.S. 318, 132 S. Ct. 1510, 182 L. Ed. 2d 566 (2012); see also Brown v. Hilton, 492 F. Supp. 771, 776–777 (D.N.J. 1980) (holding visual anal inspections of incarcerated people entering a segregated unit were proper for incarcerated person who was an accomplice of two other incarcerated people caught with contraband).

45. State of New York, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, Directive No. 4910, Control of and Search for Contraband 4 (2019), available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/4910.pdf>. (last visited Feb. 12, 2020).

46. See Ornelas v. United States, 517 U.S. 690, 696, 116 S. Ct. 1657, 1661–62, 134 L. Ed. 2d 911, 918–19 (1996) (discussing “reasonable suspicion” in the context of a police officer’s decision to stop, question, and inspect a car on suspicion that drugs were stored in that car).

47. See Ornelas v. United States, 517 U.S. 690, 696, 116 S. Ct. 1657, 1661–1662, 134 L. Ed. 2d 911, 918–919 (1996).

48. Though never explicitly discussed by the courts in the context of Directive No. 4910, in other contexts, an articulable basis standard is met when the person conducting the search “possesses a reasonable belief based on ‘specific and articulable facts which, taken together with the rational inferences from those facts, reasonably warrant’” that belief. Mich. v. Long, 463 U.S. 1032, 1049, 103 S. Ct. 3469, 3481, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1201, 1220 (1983) (upholding a warrantless search of a car based on an officer’s suspicion that it contained weapons that could be used to harm the officers).

49. State of New York, Dept. of Corr. and Cmty. Supervision, Directive No. 4910, Control of and Search for Contraband 4 (2019), available at <http://www.doccs.ny.gov/Directives/4910.pdf>. (last visited Feb. 12, 2020).

inspection of your naked body to count as a strip search.⁵⁰ All that matters is that “viewing of the naked body was an objective of the search, rather than an unavoidable and incidental by-product.”⁵¹ Courts generally allow strip searches if prison officials have a legitimate reason based on safety and security for conducting the search. For example, where there has been an increase in violence at the prison or where incarcerated people have had contact with visitors from outside of the prison.⁵² It is a violation of your Fourth or Eighth Amendment constitutional rights to be strip searched only because the prison wants to harass or punish you, and not because the prison has other legitimate security reasons.⁵³ However, courts will allow strip searches, even for people charged with minor offenses, without reasonable suspicion.⁵⁴

Courts often disagree about what the Fourth Amendment’s reasonableness standard for strip searches actually means. For example, in Arruda v. Fair, the First Circuit held that a policy requiring strip searches of maximum security incarcerated people when entering or leaving their units to go to the library or infirmary and after meeting visitors was reasonable.⁵⁵ Even though a guard accompanied incarcerated people to the infirmary and there was a wire screen in the visiting area, the court concluded this policy was reasonable because particularly dangerous people were involved.⁵⁶ However, in Parkell v. Danberg, decided by the Third Circuit, the court found that invasive strip searches three times a day of people held in a maximum security cell block was not reasonable, because it didn’t realistically serve the prison’s legitimate interest in preventing smuggling.⁵⁷

Courts also look at the place of the search and the conditions of the search to see if the incarcerated person’s privacy rights were violated.⁵⁸ For example, in Hodges v. Stanley, an incarcerated person

50. Wood v. Hancock Cty. Sheriff’s Dept., 354 F.3d 57, 63–65 (1st Cir. 2003) (defining strip searches as “exposing one’s naked body to official scrutiny” and suggesting that the term may include a “clothing search” which requires the removal of all clothing in front of an officer). But see Stanley v. Henson, 337 F.3d 961, 963–964 (7th Cir. 2003) (concluding that observed clothing swap in which incarcerated person was never fully naked was not a “strip search” because it was an administrative procedure with the purpose of ensuring that contraband was not brought into the jail).

51. Wood v. Hancock Cty. Sheriff’s Dept., 354 F.3d 57, 65 (1st Cir. 2003).

52. See, e.g., Brown v. Blaine, 185 F. App’x 166, 169 (3d Cir. 2006) (finding visual strip searches appropriate when conducted under institutional policy that mandated strip searches upon reentry to the restricted housing unit); Roberts v. Rhode Island, 239 F.3d 107, 112 (1st Cir. 2001) (noting that prisons have discretion to base searches on the type of crime for which an incarcerated person is convicted, such as justifying a search on the fact that the incarcerated person was charged with a violent felony); Peckham v. Wis. Dept. of Corr., 141 F.3d 694, 697 (7th Cir. 1998) (finding strip searches that were for legitimate, identifiable purposes and not for punishment or harassment purposes did not violate incarcerated person’s rights); Thompson v. Souza, 111 F.3d 694, 700 (9th Cir. 1997) (upholding visual strip searches to search for drugs, even though the strip searches were not explicitly described in a drug search plan); Goff v. Nix, 803 F.2d 358, 366–371 (8th Cir. 1986) (upholding visual body cavity searches on incarcerated people before and after trips to hospital, visits to prison infirmary, other contacts with people outside the prison, and exercise period for incarcerated people in segregation).

53. See Peckham v. Wis. Dept. of Corr., 141 F.3d 694, 697 (7th Cir. 1998) (suggesting that the Eighth Amendment’s prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment protects incarcerated people from strip searches intended to punish and harass); Harris v. Ostrout, 65 F.3d 912, 916 (11th Cir. 1995) (stating that if strip searches “are devoid of penological merit and imposed simply to inflict pain, the federal courts should intervene,” and that strip searches may not be used to retaliate against First Amendment protected activity, such as the constitutional right of access to the courts); see also Whitman v. Nescic, 368 F.3d 931, 934 (7th Cir. 2004) (noting that a search must be “calculated harassment unrelated to prison needs” in order to be unconstitutional (quoting Meriwether v. Faulkner, 821 F.2d 408, 418 (7th Cir. 1987))).

54. See Florence v. Bd. of Chosen Freeholders, 566 U.S. 318, 322, 132 S. Ct. 1510, 1511, 182 L. Ed. 2d 566, 570 (2012) (finding that a prison policy of strip searching every person admitted into a detention center, no matter the offense arrested for, was constitutional).

55. Arruda v. Fair, 710 F.2d 886, 886–888 (1st Cir. 1983).

56. Arruda v. Fair, 710 F.2d 886, 886–888 (1st Cir. 1983).

57. Parkell v. Danberg, 833 F.3d 313, 327–328 (3d Cir. 2016).

58. See, e.g., Evans v. Stephens, 407 F.3d 1272, 1281 (11th Cir. 2005) (en banc) (holding that searches conducted with little respect for arrestees’ privacy, without sanitary precautions, and which included threatening and racist language were unreasonable), Cornwell v. Dahlberg, 963 F.2d 912, 916–917 (6th Cir. 1992) (holding complained that a prison official had physically attacked him and then stripped searched him, which the incarcerated person claimed was unconstitutional.⁵⁹ The incarcerated person alleged (stated) that he had been searched twice in a row, and he questioned the need for a second search. The Second Circuit noted that the first search, a mandatory procedure when incarcerated people were put in administrative detention, was proper. However, the court found that Hodges stated a constitutional claim because the second search was unnecessary.⁶⁰

(c) Strip Frisk

“Strip frisk” means a visual search of an incarcerated person’s clothes and body, including body cavities.⁶¹ However, it’s important to note that courts will sometimes call it a “strip search” but are really referring to a visual search where prison officials also check your body cavities.⁶² For a male, this may involve one or more of the following procedures:

- (1) Opening his mouth and moving his tongue up and down and from side to side,
- (2) Removing any dentures,
- (3) Running his hands through his hair,
- (4) Allowing his ears to be visually examined,
- (5) Lifting his arms to expose his armpits,
- (6) Bending over and/or spreading his buttocks to expose his anus to the frisking officer, or
- (7) Spreading his testicles to expose the area behind his testicles.

For females the procedures are the same, except females may also be required to squat to show the vagina.⁶³ It is important to remember courts sometimes use the terms “strip frisk search” and “visual body cavity search” to mean the same thing.

Courts usually require that prison officials be suspicious of a particular incarcerated person before strip frisks or body cavity searches are justified.⁶⁴ However, some courts now allow random strip frisk searches. For example, the Second Circuit in Covino v. Patrissi suggested that routine strip frisk searches may be reasonable and do not need to be limited to searching incarcerated people after contact visits.⁶⁵ Using the reasonableness standard, the court in Covino found that a regulation allowing random visual body cavity searches (which required the incarcerated man to remove his clothing, lift his genitals, and spread his buttocks for a visual examination) was reasonable.⁶⁶ Because the that an outdoor strip search of an incarcerated man in front of female prison officers was unreasonable).

59. Hodges v. Stanley, 712 F.2d 34, 35 (2d Cir. 1983).

60. Hodges v. Stanley, 712 F.2d 34, 35–36 (2d Cir. 1983); see also Iqbal v. Hasty, 490 F.3d 143, 172 (2d Cir. 2007) (finding that detainee stated a Fourth Amendment claim when he alleged that he was subjected to multiple consecutive strip searches and repeated strip and body cavity searches that might be understood to be punishment and not related to legitimate government purposes), overruled on other grounds, Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 173 L. Ed. 2d 868 (2009).

61. See Florence v Bd. of Chosen Freeholders, 566 U.S. 318, 343, 132 S. Ct. 1510, 1525, 182 L. Ed. 2d 566, 585 (2012) (Breyer, J., dissenting). Prison officials only look at your body cavities in a strip frisk search. If officials touch any body cavity, they are conducting a physical body cavity search. See, e.g., CAL. PENAL CODE § 4030(c)(2) (Deering 2016).

62. See, e.g., Florence v Bd. of Chosen Freeholders, 566 U.S. 318, 343, 132 S. Ct. 1510, 1525, 182 L. Ed. 2d 566, 585 (2012) (Breyer, J., dissenting); Abrams v. Erfe, Civil Action No. 3: 17 - CV - 1570 (CSH), 2018 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 110816, at *23–26 (D. Conn. July 3, 2018) (unpublished). But see Harris v. Miller, 818 F.3d 49, 58 (2d Cir. 2016).

63. Florence v Bd. of Chosen Freeholders, 566 U.S. 318, 343, 132 S. Ct. 1510, 1525, 182 L. Ed. 2d 566, 585 (2012) (Breyer, J., dissenting).

64. See, e.g., Vaughan v. Ricketts, 950 F.2d 1464, 1468–1469, 21 Fed. R. Serv. 3d (West) 959 (9th Cir. 1991) (requiring “reasonable cause” to justify manual rectal search), overruled on other grounds by Koch v. Ricketts, 68 F.3d 1191 (9th Cir. 1995); see also Hartline v. Gallo, 546 F.3d 95, 100 (2d Cir. 2008) (citation omitted) (“The Fourth Amendment requires an individualized ‘reasonable suspicion that [a misdemeanor] arrestee is concealing weapons or other contraband based on the crime charged, the particular characteristics of the arrestee, and/or the circumstances of the arrest’ before [he] may be lawfully subjected to a strip search”).

65. Covino v. Patrissi, 967 F.2d 73, 79 n.5 (2d Cir. 1992).

66. Covino v. Patrissi, 967 F.2d 73, 79–80 (2d Cir. 1992).

incarcerated people being searched were considered dangerous and the prison needed to prevent contraband, the court found that the prison officials' need to conduct these searches was more important than the incarcerated people's privacy.⁶⁷

When prison officials conduct strip frisk searches to control a dangerous situation, courts usually do not find any constitutional violation.⁶⁸ For example, the Eighth Circuit in Franklin v. Lockhart held that a policy requiring visual body cavity searches of incarcerated people on punitive status, in administrative segregation, or in need of protection, was justified by security concerns.⁶⁹ The Fifth Circuit in Elliott v. Lynn held that a visual body cavity search of an incarcerated person in front of other incarcerated people and non-searching officers was justified as part of a prison-wide shakedown following an increase in murders.⁷⁰ The Ninth Circuit in Thompson v. Souza held that a visual strip search of an incarcerated person's body cavities was reasonably related to the prison's legitimate need to keep drugs out of the prison and therefore did not violate the Fourth Amendment.⁷¹ The court reached this conclusion even though the search happened in front of other incarcerated people, the search went beyond prison guidelines and the officials' search plan, and the person being searched was told to run his fingers around his gums after touching his genitalia.⁷² Other courts have also held that a prison's safety concerns override incarcerated people's privacy rights in a strip frisk situation.⁷³

(d) Body Cavity Search

A "body cavity search" (or "digital search") is an actual physical examination of the incarcerated person's anal and/or genital cavities conducted by a professional member of the health services staff.⁷⁴ During a digital body cavity search, a guard or prison official places his or her fingers into an incarcerated person's nose, mouth, anus, and/or vagina. The test for deciding whether digital body cavity searches are reasonable is stricter than the test for any other type of search because body cavity searches are much more intrusive. The Ninth Circuit has established three requirements that must be satisfied in order for a digital body cavity search to be constitutional under the Fourth Amendment:⁷⁵

67. Covino v. Patrissi, 967 F.2d 73, 79–80 (2d Cir. 1992).

68. See, e.g., Serna v. Goodno, 567 F.3d 944, 953 (8th Cir. 2009) (holding that a body cavity search for a possible cellphone in a treatment facility for sex offenders did not violate the Fourth Amendment, because "[c]ell phones and their potential to grant access to past or future victims for illegal purposes or to procure sexually explicit material also have the potential to negatively interfere with the Program's treatment goals."); Goff v. Nix, 803 F.2d 358, 367–368 (8th Cir. 1986) (holding that visual body cavity searches by prison officials did not violate the Fourth Amendment, and prison administrators' decision to conduct such searches as a condition of any movement outside segregation unit or confines of prison was entitled to deference).

69. Franklin v. Lockhart, 883 F.2d 654, 656 (8th Cir. 1989).

70. Elliott v. Lynn, 38 F.3d 188, 191–192 (5th Cir. 1994); cf. Moore v. Carwell, 168 F.3d 234, 236–237 (5th Cir. 1999) (noting that in the absence of emergency or extraordinary circumstances, body cavity searches by an officer of the opposite sex in view of other officers of the same sex may be a violation of the incarcerated person's constitutional rights).

71. Thompson v. Souza, 111 F.3d 694, 700–701 (9th Cir. 1997).

72. Thompson v. Souza, 111 F.3d 694, 700–701 (9th Cir. 1997).

73. See Thompson v. Souza, 111 F.3d 694, 700–701 (9th Cir. 1997); Givens v. Aaron, No. 3:14-cv-378-FDW, 2016 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 117324, at *3–12 (W.D.N.C. Aug. 31, 2016) (unpublished) (holding that a strip frisk conducted by at least six prison officials and video recorded was reasonable because of the prison's safety concerns that the incarcerated person had an illegal cell phone on his person). But see Malik v. Miller, 679 F. Supp. 268, 269–270 (W.D.N.Y. 1988) (noting that if an incarcerated person could prove he endured a strip frisk in the middle of a hallway in front of 10 to 15 people who were not part of the search, his privacy interest could override the prison's claims of their security interest).

74. See 28 C.F.R. § 552.11(d) (defining "digital or simple instrument search" as an "inspection for contraband or any other foreign item in a body cavity of an inmate by use of fingers or simple instruments, such as an otoscope, tongue blade, short nasal speculum, and simple forceps," but declaring that the search "may be conducted only by designated qualified health personnel").

75. Wiley v. Serrano, 37 F. App'x 252, 253 (9th Cir. 2002).

- (1) Prison officials must have reasonable cause to search the incarcerated person⁷⁶ (but this standard is less strict than probable cause);⁷⁷
- (2) The search must serve a valid penological (prison management) need;⁷⁸ and
- (3) The search must be “conducted in a reasonable manner,” which means the court will look at whether trained staff performed the search in private and under hygienic (clean) conditions.⁷⁹

The Seventh Circuit in Bruscino v. Carlson held that a policy requiring rectal searches of incarcerated people returning to cells was reasonable because guards found a lot of contraband, including knives and hacksaw blades, through those searches.⁸⁰ Furthermore, prison violence had decreased since the searches began.⁸¹ Please note, however, that Bruscino involved the U.S. Penitentiary in Marion, Illinois, a “prison designed to hold the most violent and dangerous prisoners in the federal system,” which may explain why the court allowed these invasive searches to occur frequently.⁸² As part of this search, incarcerated people returning to their cells were often subjected to a rectal search, where a paramedic inserted a gloved finger into the incarcerated person’s rectum and felt around for contraband.⁸³

Courts also often approve body cavity searches performed by X-ray.⁸⁴ For example, in People v. Pifer the court held an X-ray search, which discovered a hypodermic syringe in the incarcerated person’s rectal cavity, was reasonable.⁸⁵ The court found the prison had significant and legitimate security interests more important than the incarcerated person’s rights. The court also said “an X-ray is far less humiliating, degrading, invasive, annoying and physically uncomfortable than a physical viewing of the anal cavity or physical invasion of the rectal cavity.”⁸⁶

The New York State Department of Corrections and Community Supervision (DOCCS) rules say that body cavity searches may only be done when “there are compelling reasons to believe that the inmate or inmates to be searched have secreted contraband in an oral and/or genital cavity,” which

76. Vaughan v. Ricketts, 859 F.2d 736, 739–740 (9th Cir. 1988) (holding that reasonable cause is required but declining to rule on whether it existed in that case), rev’d on other grounds sub nom. Koch v. Ricketts, 68 F.3d 1191 (9th Cir. 1995).

77. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 560, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1885, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447 (1979) (“Balancing the significant and legitimate security interests of [prisons] against the privacy interests of the inmates, we conclude that [digital cavity searches] can [be conducted on less than probable cause].”).

78. Tribble v. Gardner, 860 F.2d 321, 322–325 (9th Cir. 1988) (holding that if rectal searches were conducted every time an incarcerated person is moved into a secure housing unit within a maximum security prison and for purposes unrelated to security considerations, the searches would violate the Fourth Amendment); see also Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64 (1987) (holding that a prison regulation that impinges on incarcerated people’s constitutional rights must be reasonably related to a legitimate penological interest).

79. See Vaughan v. Ricketts, 859 F.2d 736, 739–741 (9th Cir. 1988) (holding that rectal searches conducted in an open hallway on an unsanitary table were unreasonable); State v. Robinson, 105 Conn. App. 179, 184, 937 A.2d 717, 720 n.9 (Conn. App. Ct. 2008) (noting that any warrant for a body cavity search must contain instruction that the search is to be conducted under sanitary conditions); Nelson v. Dicke, Civil No. 00-285 (JRT/FLN), 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5800, at *27 – 29 (D. Minn. Mar. 31, 2002) (unpublished) (finding that an incarcerated person likely had a Fourth Amendment claim for being subjected to a cavity search that was, among other things, not conducted in a sanitary environment).

80. Bruscino v. Carlson, 854 F.2d 162, 164–166 (7th Cir. 1988).

81. Bruscino v. Carlson, 854 F.2d 162, 164–165 (7th Cir. 1988).

82. Bruscino v. Carlson, 854 F.2d 162, 163 (7th Cir. 1988).

83. Bruscino v. Carlson, 854 F.2d 162, 164 (7th Cir. 1988).

84. See, e.g., People v. Collins, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 731, 743–744, 115 Cal. App. 4th 137, 153–155 (Cal. Ct. App. 2004) (upholding an intended visual body cavity search of an incarcerated person; noting that X-ray searches are often reasonable and, when conducted by a specialized technician, are not harmful or uncomfortable).

85. People v. Pifer, 265 Cal. Rptr. 237, 238, 240–241, 216 Cal. App. 3d 956, 959, 962–963 (Cal. Ct. App. 1989) (finding that routine X-ray searches of all incarcerated people being transferred from one prison facility to another were reasonable).

86. People v. Pifer, 265 Cal. Rptr. 237, 240, 216 Cal. App. 3d 956, 961 (Cal. Ct. App. 1989).

creates “a clear threat to the safety ... of the facility and/or ... any person.”⁸⁷ A doctor must explain the process to the incarcerated person before performing a body cavity search.⁸⁸ The incarcerated person should have the opportunity to give up the contraband at this time.⁸⁹ A corrections officer of the same sex as the incarcerated person must be present during the search.⁹⁰

Note that in New York, an X-ray search using the Body Orifice Scanning System (“the BOSS” or “the BOSS chair”) is sometimes also called a metal detector search.⁹¹ Whenever you are searched with the BOSS chair, you are required to be fully clothed.⁹² Even if the X-ray search is being used after a strip search or a strip frisk, prison officials must let you put your undergarments, pants, and shirt back on first.⁹³ See Part C(6) of this Chapter for more information about these New York State specific prison rules.

(e) Cross-Gender Body Searches

This Subsection explains your right to not be searched by prison officials of the opposite sex. Part B of this Chapter, “Involuntary Exposure,” explained your right not to be seen by prison officials of the opposite sex. You should read both sections because the laws are very similar.

Courts have held that, in some situations, incarcerated people do have the right to not be searched by guards of the opposite sex.⁹⁴ However, courts have generally found that incarcerated people’s legitimate expectations of privacy from persons of the opposite sex are very limited.⁹⁵ In deciding whether a cross-gender search is a violation of an incarcerated person’s rights, courts must balance the incarcerated person’s limited right to be free from invasions of privacy by members of the opposite

87. State of New York, Department of Corrections & Community Supervision, Directive No. 4910, Control of & Search for Contraband 11-12 (2019) (as revised June 28, 2019) (limiting compelling reasons to certain circumstances).

88. State of New York, Department of Corrections & Community Supervision, Directive No. 4910, Control of & Search for Contraband 12 (2019) (as revised June 28, 2019) (noting that a primary care provider (PCP) must explain and conduct the body cavity search).

89. State of New York, Department of Corrections & Community Supervision, Directive No. 4910, Control of & Search for Contraband 12 (2019) (as revised June 28, 2019) (noting that the incarcerated person must have the opportunity to voluntarily yield the contraband).

90. State of New York, Department of Corrections & Community Supervision, Directive No. 4910, Control of & Search for Contraband 12 (2019) (as revised June 28, 2019).

91. State of New York, Department of Corrections & Community Supervision, Directive No. 4910, Control of & Search for Contraband 2 (2019) (as revised June 28, 2019).

92. State of New York, Department of Corrections & Community Supervision, Directive No. 4910, Control of & Search for Contraband 2–3 (2019) (as revised June 28, 2019).

93. State of New York, Department of Corrections & Community Supervision, Directive No. 4910, Control of & Search for Contraband 2–3 (2019) (as revised June 28, 2019) (stating that underclothes means “undershorts for males, and bras and panties for females”).

94. See, e.g., Mills v. City of Barbourville, 389 F.3d 568, 579 (6th Cir. 2004) (“[W]e have recognized that a prison policy forcing incarcerated people to be searched by members of the opposite sex or to be exposed to regular surveillance by officers of the opposite sex while naked...would provide the basis of a claim on which relief could be granted.”); Moore v. Carwell, 168 F.3d 234, 235–237 (5th Cir. 1999) (holding that an allegation of a strip and body cavity search performed by an officer of the opposite sex, absent an emergency or unavailability of a same sex officer, was not frivolous for purposes of the Fourth Amendment); Hayes v. Marriott, 70 F.3d 1144, 1147–1148 (10th Cir. 1995) (holding that summary judgment as to the Fourth Amendment claim was inappropriate for defendants because plaintiff was subjected to a body cavity search “in the presence of over 100 people, including female secretaries and case managers”); Byrd v. Maricopa Cty. Sheriff’s Dept., 629 F.3d 1135, 1136–1137, 1143, 1147 (9th Cir. 2011), cert. denied, 563 U.S. 1033, 131 S. Ct. 2964, 180 L. Ed. 2d 246 (2011) (holding that “the cross-gender strip search performed on [plaintiff] was unreasonable as a matter of law...and violated [plaintiff’s] rights under the Fourth Amendment to be free from unreasonable searches,” where a non-uniformed female guard conducted a strip search on an incarcerated man in front of 10 to 15 non-participating officers).

95. See, e.g., Michenfelder v. Sumner, 860 F.2d 328, 334 (9th Cir. 1988) (holding that strip searches of incarcerated men that occasionally occurred in view of female guards do not violate the Fourth Amendment); Grummett v. Rushen, 779 F.2d 491, 496 (9th Cir. 1985) (finding that a pat-down search of an incarcerated man, including his groin area, by female guards does not violate the Fourth Amendment).

sex against the state's interests in maintaining the security of the prison⁹⁶ and in avoiding sex discrimination in prison employment.⁹⁷ Because a majority of incarcerated people are male, if the courts held that female guards could never search incarcerated men it might make it harder for women to be hired as security guards (since conducting searches is an important duty of security guards), resulting in possible employment discrimination. Therefore, the state has to balance this interest of not discriminating against female security guards with the particular rights of incarcerated people not to be searched by a guard of the opposite sex. In summary, most cases addressing cross-gender searches in prisons focus first on the incarcerated person's right to privacy and then try to balance this right against the government interests in maintaining security and in not discriminating against women. (Note also that even if a court finds that a search by a prison guard of the opposite sex was a violation of the incarcerated person's Fourth Amendment privacy rights, the guard may still be entitled to qualified immunity.)⁹⁸

This balancing test is difficult, so different cases and courts produce different outcomes. Usually, the focus is on the specific facts of each case. For example, even though the Ninth Circuit has said that "it is highly questionable. . . whether prison inmates have a Fourth Amendment right to be free from routine unclothed searches by officials of the opposite sex,"⁹⁹ it declared a search "unreasonable as a matter of law" under the Fourth Amendment in another case.¹⁰⁰ Similarly, the Seventh Circuit has specifically said that not all cross-gender searches are permissible.¹⁰¹ It stated that prisons should respect an incarcerated person's constitutional privacy where it is reasonable, taking into account prison security and equal employment for female guards.¹⁰²

Your state may also have laws protecting incarcerated women or regulating searches by opposite-sex guards. For example, California law requires that all people incarcerated in California be searched "in a professional manner."¹⁰³ Routine clothed searches of incarcerated men may be performed by

96. Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 527, 104 S. Ct. 3194, 3200–3201, 82 L. Ed. 2d 393, 403–404 (1984) ("Determining whether [an incarcerated person's] expectation of privacy is 'legitimate' or 'reasonable' necessarily entails a balancing of interests. The two interests here are the interest of society in the security of its penal institutions and the interest of the prisoner in privacy within his cell.").

97. See, e.g., Timm v. Gunter, 917 F.2d 1093, 1096–1097, 1102 (8th Cir. 1990) (holding that it was not unreasonable for a prison to authorize female guards to conduct surveillance of all areas, including shower and toilet facilities, and to pat search incarcerated men on the same basis as male guards, given the prison's interest in protecting the equal employment rights of prison guards); Berl v. Cty. of Westchester, 849 F.2d 712, 716 (2d Cir. 1988) (finding the county liable for employment discrimination under Title VII for refusing to consider two male guards for promotion to female unit of prison); Smith v. Fairman, 678 F.2d 52, 53–55 (7th Cir. 1982) (per curiam) (considering the state's "strong interest in avoiding sex discrimination in its hiring practices at the prison" and holding that "requiring plaintiff to submit to a limited frisk-type search by a female guard infringes upon no right guaranteed by the Constitution" where the "limited frisk" did not include the genital area); Bagley v. Watson, 579 F. Supp. 1099, 1104–1105 (D. Or. 1983) (holding that female corrections officers cannot be excluded from positions that involve performing pat-down frisk searches of clothed incarcerated men and visual observations of incarcerated men in various states of undress); Griffin v. Mich. Dept. of Corr., 654 F. Supp. 690, 702–703 (E.D. Mich. 1982) (finding gender an unacceptable occupational qualification for corrections officers). See Part B of this Chapter for a discussion of similar issues concerning involuntary exposure.

98. See, e.g., Lay v. Forker, 371 F. Supp. 2d 1159, 1166–1167 (C.D. Cal. 2004) (finding that a strip search of an incarcerated man in the presence of a female officer violated the Fourth Amendment but that the officer was entitled to qualified immunity).

99. Somers v. Thurman, 109 F.3d 614, 622, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 12272, 24 (9th Cir. 1997).

100. Byrd v. Maricopa Cty. Sheriff's Dept., 629 F.3d 1135, 1136–1137, 1143, 1147 (9th Cir. 2011) (holding that "the cross-gender strip search performed on [plaintiff] was unreasonable as a matter of law...and violated [plaintiff's] rights under the Fourth Amendment to be free from unreasonable searches," where a non-uniformed female guard conducted a strip search on an incarcerated man in front of 10 to 15 non-participating officers).

101. Canedy v. Boardman, 16 F.3d 183, 188 (7th Cir. 1994).

102. Canedy v. Boardman, 16 F.3d 183, 188 (7th Cir. 1994) (finding that an incarcerated man did have a cause of action against strip searches by female guards, because "where it is reasonable—taking account of a state's interests in prison security and in providing equal employment opportunity for female guards—to respect an inmate's constitutional privacy interests, doing so...is a constitutional mandate").

103. CAL. CODE REGS. tit. 15, § 3287(b) (2019) (requiring that all searches of incarcerated people "be prison officials of either sex, but searches of clothed incarcerated women should be performed only by female employees, except in emergency situations.¹⁰⁴ California prohibits opposite-sex guards (other than qualified medical staff) from performing unclothed body inspections “except under emergency conditions with life or death consequences.”¹⁰⁵

In New York, DOCCS allows female correction officers to routinely pat frisk most incarcerated men.¹⁰⁶ For women incarcerated in New York State, however, DOCCS notes that cross-gender pat frisks are not allowed, “absent exigent circumstances.”¹⁰⁷ For more information on New York DOCCS requirements, see Part C(6) of this Chapter.

(i) Searches of Incarcerated Women by Male Guards¹⁰⁸

While all incarcerated people’s rights to privacy are limited because of the nature of prison and incarceration,¹⁰⁹ courts are sometimes more sympathetic to women who are incarcerated. Some courts recognize that women have a greater privacy interest in certain situations because incarcerated women are particularly vulnerable to sexual abuse by correctional personnel. As a result, some courts have found searches of incarcerated women by male guards to be unconstitutional, even if the same searches of incarcerated men by female guards would be allowed under the same circumstances.

For example, in Jordan v. Gardner, the Ninth Circuit held that past sexual and physical abuse experienced by incarcerated women may affect the way they react to searches by male prison guards.¹¹⁰ Because of this, the court found that incarcerated women who have suffered past sexual and physical abuse had particular vulnerabilities that could cause the cross-gender body searches to be more traumatic and mentally painful for them than a similar cross-gender body search of incarcerated men who have not suffered past sexual and/or physical abuse.¹¹¹ The court held that random, non-emergency, clothed body searches conducted by male guards on incarcerated women were cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the Eighth Amendment.¹¹² During the searches, the guards conducted in a professional manner which avoids embarrassment or indignity to the inmate. Whenever possible, unclothed body inspections of inmates shall be conducted outside the view of others”). Title 15 of the California Code of Regulations (Crime Prevention and Corrections) contains the provisions concerning body searches of people who are incarcerated.

104. CAL. CODE REGS. tit. 15, § 3287(b)(2)–(3) (2019).

105. CAL. CODE REGS. tit. 15, § 3287(b)(1) (2019). The California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation’s Department Operations Manual (DOM) reflects the same policies. California Department of Corrections & Rehabilitation, Operations Manual, Chapter 5, § 52050.16.5 (updated through Jan. 1, 2019), available at <https://www.cdcr.ca.gov/regulations/adult-operations/dom-toc/> (last visited Sept. 16, 2019).

106. State of New York, Department of Corrections & Community Supervision, Directive No. 4910, Control of & Search for Contraband 4 (2019) (as revised June 28, 2019) (“Pat frisks [of incarcerated men] will be performed by Officers regardless of gender,” but incarcerated men who are Muslim may request a male officer under some circumstances). In general, cross-gender pat-down searches of incarcerated men by female prison guards are constitutionally permissible. See Grummett v. Rushen, 779 F.2d 491, 495 (9th Cir. 1985) (permitting routine cross-gender pat-downs because “[t]hese searches do not involve intimate contact with an inmate’s body”); Smith v. Fairman, 678 F.2d 52, 53–55 (7th Cir. 1982) (holding female guards may conduct pat-down searches without violating an incarcerated man’s constitutional right to privacy).

107. State of New York, Department of Corrections & Community Supervision, Directive No. 4910, Control of & Search for Contraband 4 (2019) (as revised June 28, 2019).

108. It is very important that you read all of Part C of this Chapter, not just this Section. Courts will use the general rules explained in Part C to decide if a search was legal. This Section only explains some additional protections that incarcerated women may have against searches by male prison guards.

109. See Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 527, 104 S. Ct. 3194, 3201, 82 L. Ed. 2d 393, 404 (1984) (stating that the “right of privacy in traditional Fourth Amendment terms is fundamentally incompatible with the close and continual surveillance of inmates and their cells”).

110. Jordan v. Gardner, 986 F.2d 1521, 1539–1540 (9th Cir. 1993).

111. Jordan v. Gardner, 986 F.2d 1521, 1526 (9th Cir. 1993).

112. Jordan v. Gardner, 986 F.2d 1521, 1522–1523 1530–1531 (9th Cir. 1993). Whether the doctrine of this case will be adopted by other circuits or the Supreme Court is questionable. See Hovater v. Robinson, 1 F.3d 1063, 1068 (10th Cir. 1993) (finding that the plaintiff could not prove that a prison policy allowing male guards to conduct searches of incarcerated women disregards a known or obvious risk that is very likely to result in the rubbed, stroked, squeezed, and kneaded the women's bodies, including their covered breasts, buttocks, inner thighs, and crotches.¹¹³ The policy required guards to "[p]ush inward and upward when searching the crotch and upper thighs" of the women and to check the crease in their buttocks with a downward motion with the edge of the hand.¹¹⁴ Many of the women had been sexually or physically abused by men in the past, and one woman, after being searched, suffered severe distress.¹¹⁵ The court found that prison officials knew of the risks of mental trauma and acted with deliberate indifference to the harm that the cross-gender clothed body searches were likely to cause.¹¹⁶ The court additionally said the policy violated the Eighth Amendment because it was "unnecessary" for male guards to search the women since female guards could do the searches.¹¹⁷ Other courts have also recognized that incarcerated women are entitled to greater privacy protection, though with some limitations.¹¹⁸

In general, male prison officials are allowed to conduct clothed body frisks of incarcerated women (where the outer garments/clothing of the person is searched),¹¹⁹ cell searches,¹²⁰ and visual body cavity or strip searches (where incarcerated people must take off their clothes and be visually inspected by a guard).¹²¹ Some states require that only medical personnel, not correctional personnel, do body cavity searches that involve physical intrusion or extraction of a foreign object from a body cavity.¹²² violation of an incarcerated person's constitutional rights). The Jordan court's decision was fact-specific to the particular prison in the case, and other courts have indicated that the case did not create a per se constitutional violation (meaning there may be cases in which cross-gender searches are constitutional). See Carl v. Angelone, 883 F. Supp. 1433, 1440 (D. Nev. 1995) (finding that although the prison director transferred male correction officers out of women's prisons based on Jordan, cross-gender searches were not always unconstitutional; thus, prisons could not be forced to transfer the men based on their sex).

113. Jordan v. Gardner, 986 F.2d 1521, 1523 (9th Cir. 1993).

114. Jordan v. Gardner, 986 F.2d 1521, 1533 (9th Cir. 1993) (Reinhardt, J., concurring).

115. Jordan v. Gardner, 986 F.2d 1521, 1523, 1539 (9th Cir. 1993).

116. Jordan v. Gardner, 986 F.2d 1521, 1528–1529 (9th Cir. 1993).

117. Jordan v. Gardner, 986 F.2d 1521, 1526–1528 (9th Cir. 1993); see also Berry v. City of Muskogee, 900 F.2d 1489, 1498 (10th Cir. 1990) (stating knowledge of risk of harm and failure to act to prevent the harm constitute deliberate indifference to a known or obvious risk that is very likely to result in the violation of an incarcerated person's constitutional rights).

118. See, e.g., Sepulveda v. Ramirez, 967 F.2d 1413, 1416–1417 (9th Cir. 1992) (denying qualified immunity to a male parole officer who walked in on a female parolee urinating as part of a required drug test); Torres v. Wis. Dept. of Health & Soc. Servs., 838 F.2d 944, 953 (7th Cir.), rev'd en banc, 859 F.2d 1523, 1524–1525 (7th Cir. 1988) (noting approvingly that to protect incarcerated women's privacy, a state prison provided them with appropriate sleepwear and allowed them to cover their windows while dressing or using the toilet); Forts v. Ward, 621 F.2d 1210, 1213 (2d Cir. 1980) (allowing incarcerated women to cover the window of their cells for privacy for 15 minute intervals). But see Carlin v. Manu, 72 F. Supp. 2d 1177, 1184 (D. Or. 1999) (holding that male guards could be present as female guards strip searched incarcerated women during an emergency removal to a male prison since the male guards were not touching the women).

119. See Colman v. Vasquez, 142 F.Supp.2d 226, 231–234 (noting that cross-gender pat/frisk exams are not facially unconstitutional, but denying dismissal of an incarcerated person's 4th Amendment claim so the court could learn more facts to determine the balance of incarcerated people's 4th Amendment rights against valid penological interests); see also Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 558, 99 S. Ct. 1861, 1884, 60 L. Ed. 2d 447, 481 (1979) (upholding visual body cavity searches of incarcerated people against 4th Amendment challenge; the gender of the guards assigned to conduct the searches is not mentioned).

120. See Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 525–526, 104 S. Ct. 3194, 3199–3200, 82 L. Ed. 2d 393, 402–403 (1984) (holding that incarcerated person has no reasonable expectation of privacy in his cell and that "the Fourth Amendment proscription against unreasonable searches does not apply within the confines of the prison cell"); Martin v. Lane, 766 F. Supp. 641, 646 (N.D. Ill. 1991) (applying Hudson to deny relief under the 4th Amendment to an incarcerated person whose cell was searched during a lockdown).

121. See Lee v. Downs, 641 F.2d 1117, 1120–1121 (4th Cir. 1981) (finding that the presence of male guards during the body cavity search of an incarcerated woman by a female nurse was reasonably necessary to restrain the incarcerated person and therefore did not violate her 4th Amendment rights, but also suggesting that if female guards had been able to restrain the woman by themselves, the presence of male guards would have been unnecessary and potentially unreasonable).

122. See, e.g., DaVee v. Mathis, 812 S.W.2d 816, 824–826 (Mo. Ct. App. 1991) (concluding that while searches involving physical intrusion and removal of foreign objects must be conducted by medical personnel, the search in question did not involve physical contact and was thus reasonably conducted by non-medical personnel);

Similarly, body cavity searches requiring the use of one's fingers, called "digital body searches," are unreasonable unless medical personnel do these searches in a hygienic manner in a private area.¹²³ The presence of male officers is also a circumstance that might make a digital body search unreasonable.¹²⁴ A woman's pregnancy may justify even stricter standards for cavity searches.¹²⁵

Your state may have specific laws to protect you or to regulate searches by opposite-sex guards. California, for example, prohibits opposite-sex guards from performing unclothed body inspections in non-emergency situations.¹²⁶ In New York, DOCCS policy requires that, whenever possible, female guards—not male guards—should pat frisk incarcerated women.¹²⁷ If a male officer has to perform a pat frisk search of an incarcerated woman (because, for example, a female officer is not available), he must try to search the incarcerated person in a public location.¹²⁸ In New York, male guards cannot perform non-emergency pat frisks on incarcerated women; they can only perform a pat frisk on a woman in the case of "temporary and unforeseen circumstances that require immediate action" to combat any threats to the institution's security or order.¹²⁹ Even when a male officer performs a pat frisk on an incarcerated woman because of emergency circumstances, the officer must report the date,

U.S. ex rel. Guy v. McCauley, 385 F. Supp. 193, 199 (E.D. Wis. 1974) ("The intrusion into or the examination of either the vaginal or anal cavities must be made by skilled medical technicians....").

123. See Bonitz v. Fair, 804 F.2d 164, 172–173 (1st Cir. 1986) (holding that digital body searches of incarcerated women were unreasonable and in violation of the 4th Amendment because non-medical personnel performed the searches in an unhygienic manner and in the presence of male personnel), overruled on other grounds by Unwin v. Campbell, 863 F.2d 124, 128 (1st Cir. 1988); U.S. ex rel. Guy v. McCauley, 385 F. Supp. 193, 198 (E.D. Wis. 1974) (finding that a search "abused common conceptions of decency and civilized conduct" and violated the 5th Amendment even though it was done in a sanitary manner by female officers, because it involved forcing a pregnant woman to bend over painfully, the police officers conducting the search were not medically trained, and the search was not conducted in a medical environment); see also Rodriguez v. Furtado, 950 F.2d 805, 811 (1st Cir. 1991) (holding that a body cavity search of a female patient by a doctor in a hygienic and private setting pursuant to a search warrant was reasonable). Some states have statutes specifically requiring medical personnel perform body cavity searches of incarcerated people. See, e.g., MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 764.25b(5) (West 2000).

124. See Bonitz v. Fair, 804 F.2d 164, 172–173 (1st Cir. 1986) (searching incarcerated women in the presence of male officers is one factor that the court considered in finding the search to be unreasonable), overruled on other grounds by Unwin v. Campbell, 863 F.2d 124, 128 (1st Cir. 1988).

125. See U.S. ex rel. Guy v. McCauley, 385 F. Supp. 193, 198 (E.D. Wis. 1974) (holding that a visual vaginal search of woman who is seven-months pregnant "abuse[s] common conceptions of decency and civilized conduct" when the search is conducted in a non-medical environment by non-medical officers, and it was painful for the woman to bend over).

126. CAL. CODE REGS. tit. 15, § 3287(b)(1) (2018). The California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation's Department Operations Manual (DOM) reflects the same policies. California Department of Corrections & Rehabilitation, Operations Manual § 52050.16.5 (as revised Jan. 1, 2019), available at https://www.cdcr.ca.gov/regulations/wp-content/uploads/sites/171/2019/08/Ch_5_2019_DOM.pdf (last visited Feb. 10, 2020).

127. State of New York, Department of Corrections & Community Supervision, Directive No. 4910, Control of & Search for Contraband 4 (2017) (as revised June 28, 2019), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/08/4910%20Control%20of%20%26%20Search%20for%20Contraband.pdf> (last visited June 13, 2020). Pat frisks are required when incarcerated people are entering the visiting room, when an entire area of the institution is being searched, when an officer has an articulable basis to suspect an incarcerated person possesses contraband, or as directed by supervisory staff. Pat frisks are also allowed when an incarcerated person is going or returning to housing, program, and recreation areas and outside work details.

128. State of New York, Department of Corrections & Community Supervision, Directive No. 4910, Control of & Search for Contraband 4–5 (2017) (as revised June 28, 2019), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/08/4910%20Control%20of%20%26%20Search%20for%20Contraband.pdf> (last visited June 13, 2020).

129. State of New York, Department of Corrections & Community Supervision, Directive No. 4910, Control of & Search for Contraband 4 (2017) (as revised June 28, 2019), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/08/4910%20Control%20of%20%26%20Search%20for%20Contraband.pdf> (last visited June 13, 2020).

time, place, and reason for the pat frisk, and they cannot use the palms of their hands while frisking the woman's breast area.¹³⁰

Some prisons have tried to hire female prison officers for certain jobs in women's prisons.¹³¹ But the prisons can be sued for employment discrimination if they do this, since federal law prohibits employment discrimination based on sex,¹³² and courts have held that hiring officers of only one gender for a particular prison, block, or task violates this law.¹³³ Courts consider the state's interest in equal employment opportunities for correctional officers to be strong compared to an incarcerated person's privacy interest in her body, as long as the cross-gender interactions are not offensive, disrespectful, or unprofessional.¹³⁴ This is why male guards may be allowed to search women who are incarcerated.

In conclusion, courts will balance the invasive nature of the search against the prison's concerns of security and equal employment opportunities. But prison officials must still try to provide privacy to incarcerated people if reasonable, and they should also train prison employees to carry out searches professionally, without being unnecessarily intrusive.¹³⁵

3. Eighth Amendment Limitations

Chapter 24 of the JLM explains your rights under the Eighth Amendment, which prohibits cruel and unusual punishment. As this Chapter explains, courts usually view illegal search claims as possible violations of the Fourth Amendment. Sometimes, however, a court may believe a search was

130. State of New York, Department of Corrections & Community Supervision, Directive No. 4910, Control of & Search for Contraband 4 (2017) (as revised June 28, 2019), available at <https://doccs.ny.gov/system/files/documents/2019/08/4910%20Control%20of%20%26%20Search%20for%20Contraband.pdf> (last visited June 13, 2020).

131. Indiana requires a "prison matron" be appointed for female prisons. IND. CODE ANN. § 36-8-10-5 (LexisNexis 2016); California protects all incarcerated people from room searches performed solely by officers of the opposite sex and ensures that a trained female staff member is available and accessible to supervise incarcerated women. CAL. PENAL CODE § 4021 (West 2011). Michigan provides that if incarcerated people are subject to body cavity searches by a person of the opposite sex, another person of the same sex as the incarcerated person must also be present. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 764.25b(5) (West 2000).

132. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)–(d) ("Title VII").

133. See Henry v. Milwaukee Cty., 539 F.3d 573, 581–586 (7th Cir. 2008) (finding that a prison policy which required staff overtime shifts to be staffed by same-sex guards and so reduced the number of shifts available to women was not reasonably necessary to achieve the goals of rehabilitation, security, and privacy); see also Forts v. Ward, 621 F.2d 1210, 1216–1217 (2d Cir. 1980) (holding that male prison guards could not be excluded from night shifts in a women's prison because other measures to ensure privacy of incarcerated person were available). But see Robino v. Iranon, 145 F.3d 1109, 1110–1111 (9th Cir. 1998) (upholding policy excluding male prison guards from certain posts in order to accommodate the privacy of incarcerated women and reduce the risk of sexual conduct between guards and incarcerated people when male prison guards still had many other employment opportunities in the system).

134. See Grummett v. Rushen, 779 F.2d 491, 496 (9th Cir. 1985) (finding a prison policy which allowed female guards to conduct pat-down searches was not a violation of the incarcerated person's privacy when "the searches are performed by the female guards in a professional manner and with respect for the inmates"); see also Robins v. Centinela State Prison, 19 F. App'x. 549, 550–551 (9th Cir. 2001) (while generally the search of incarcerated men by female officers may not violate the 4th Amendment, a search that is "completely unprofessional and offensive" may be such a violation).

135. See Timm v. Gunter, 917 F.2d 1093, 1100 (8th Cir. 1990) (upholding cross-gender pat searches when female guards are trained to perform pat searches of incarcerated men in a professional manner); Torres v. Wisconsin Dept. of Health & Soc. Servs., 859 F.2d 1523, 1524–1525 (7th Cir. 1988) (noting procedures in place to minimize intrusions on the privacy of incarcerated people). But see Cameron v. Hendricks, 942 F. Supp. 499, 503 (D. Kan. 1996) (stating that the availability of less intrusive measures is only one factor in determining the reasonableness of a search and that officials are not required to perform the "least intrusive" search).

so unreasonable that it violates the Eighth Amendment's prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment.¹³⁶ Some illegal searches may also be considered assault and battery.¹³⁷

There is no clear standard about how much pain and suffering is unconstitutional. Courts usually say "the unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain" violates the Eighth Amendment.¹³⁸ Whether a search is considered an "unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain" depends on the circumstances, because it may be necessary for prison officials to use more force in certain situations. In general, however, infliction of pain is considered "unnecessary and wanton" when the prison official is acting in bad faith and for no other reason but to cause harm.¹³⁹ Prison officials' behavior must meet this standard before a court will find a constitutional violation. But if the official acts only to further some legitimate penological interest and if the pain suffered is not the main purpose of the search, then courts will probably say that your constitutional rights were not violated.¹⁴⁰ If you believe your Eighth Amendment rights were violated by an illegal search, you should read JLM, Chapter 16 as well as Chapter 24 for more information.

With regard to body searches, the Eighth Amendment is most often triggered by the manner in which the searches happen and, at times, because of the purpose of the searches. In Meriwether v. Faulkner, the plaintiff was a transgender woman who said that guards made her strip to harass her and to see her body parts after she had a gender-affirming surgery.¹⁴¹ She also said that there were no security reasons to search her.¹⁴² The court said that such searches might violate the Eighth Amendment. In addition, in McRorie v. Shimoda, the court sustained an Eighth Amendment claim against a prison guard who stuck his baton into the anus of an incarcerated person during a strip search.¹⁴³

The Seventh Circuit in Isby v. Duckworth held that a rectal cavity search conducted in a private room by a doctor, who put a gloved and lubricated finger into the incarcerated person's anus to check for a weapon, was not abusive because it was not an unreasonable precaution after hearing a gunshot.

136. See, e.g., Jordan v. Gardner, 986 F.2d 1521, 1524–1531 (9th Cir. 1993) (en banc) (finding that a policy allowing male corrections officers to conduct random, non-emergency clothed body searches on incarcerated women without suspecting the women of any offense violated the 8th Amendment); Tribble v. Gardner, 860 F.2d 321, 325–326 (9th Cir. 1988) (finding that a rectal probe may have violated the 8th Amendment if it was conducted for purposes unrelated to security considerations, where an incarcerated person's clothing, hair, hands, and other body cavities were not searched and incarcerated person's recent X-ray revealed no contraband in his rectum).

137. See, e.g., Hammond v. Gordon Cty., 316 F. Supp. 2d 1262, 1293–1294 (N.D. Ga. 2002) (holding that an incarcerated woman presented enough evidence to support a claim of assault and battery by alleging that a guard inserted his fingers into her vagina).

138. See Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 5–10, 112 S. Ct. 995, 998–1000, 117 L. Ed. 2d 156, 165–168 (1992) (stating that although "the unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain" constitutes a violation of the Eighth Amendment, the Eighth Amendment also allows some use of force and allows force that is in proportion to the need to keep order); Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 173, 96 S. Ct. 2909, 2925, 49 L. Ed. 2d 859, 874–875 (1976) (holding that a court must determine whether a punishment involves the unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain and whether the punishment is grossly out of proportion to the severity of the crime [meaning the punishment is much more severe than the crime]); see also Baze v. Rees, 553 U.S. 35, 54–57, 62, 128 S. Ct. 1520, 1531–1534, 1537, 170 L. Ed. 2d 420, 432–437, 440 (2008) (upholding the three-drug lethal injection protocol on the grounds that neither the risk of improper administration of the first drug nor the failure to adopt more humane alternatives constitute a "wanton infliction of pain under the Eighth Amendment").

139. See Whitley v. Albers, 475 U.S. 312, 321–322, 106 S. Ct. 1078, 1085, 89 L. Ed. 2d 251, 262 (1986) (holding that an incarcerated person's 8th Amendment rights were not violated even after a prison officer shot the incarcerated person in the leg in the course of a prison riot).

140. See Del Raine v. Williford, 32 F.3d 1024, 1038–1042 (7th Cir. 1994) (finding that while rectal searches may inflict pain, if the official has a legitimate reason to conduct them, they do not violate the 8th Amendment); see also Gillis v. Litscher, 468 F.3d 488, 494 (7th Cir. 2006) (finding that a behavioral modification program imposed on an incarcerated person for breaking a rule may have violated his 8th Amendment rights if he could show that the prison officials disregarded a substantial risk of serious harm to him when they imposed it).

141. Meriwether v. Faulkner, 821 F.2d 408, 411, 417 (7th Cir. 1987).

142. Meriwether v. Faulkner, 821 F.2d 408, 417–418 (7th Cir. 1987).

143. McRorie v. Shimoda, 795 F.2d 780, 781–783 (9th Cir. 1986).

The Seventh Circuit held this even though the doctor laughed before doing the search and guards held the incarcerated person down.¹⁴⁴ Similarly, the Ninth Circuit in Somers v. Thurman held that an incarcerated man did not state an Eighth Amendment claim based on allegations (statements) that female guards pointed and joked among themselves while observing him showering and while conducting a body cavity search of him.¹⁴⁵ However, the Ninth Circuit in Dockery v. Bass held that an incarcerated person may have an Eighth Amendment claim when officials strip searched him twice, causing him pain from handcuff use and forcing a tube up his anus.¹⁴⁶

4. DNA Testing

Incarcerated people can be forced to give DNA samples by state or federal law.¹⁴⁷ Forced DNA testing of people who are incarcerated generally does not violate the Fourth Amendment.¹⁴⁸ It is unclear so far if all incarcerated people can be forced to give DNA samples, not just incarcerated people convicted of certain types of crimes,¹⁴⁹ like sex offenses.¹⁵⁰ Some courts have found that laws requiring DNA sampling of all people convicted of felonies do not violate the Fourth Amendment because the state's interest is more important than the bodily intrusion.¹⁵¹ See Chapter 11 of the JLM and Chapter 36 for more information.

144. Isby v. Duckworth, No. 97-3705, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 7823, at *2-7 (7th Cir. Apr. 21, 1999) (unpublished).

145. Somers v. Thurman, No. 96-55534, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 12272, at *25-26 (9th Cir. Mar. 25, 1997) (unpublished).

146. Dockery v. Bass, No. 95-17250, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 35693, at *2, *7-8 (9th Cir. Dec. 17, 1997) (unpublished).

147. See, e.g., United States v. Weikert, 504 F.3d 1, 2-3 (1st Cir. 2007) (holding that requiring an incarcerated person on supervised release to give a blood sample did not violate the 4th Amendment); United States v. Kincade, 379 F.3d 813, 832, 839 (9th Cir. 2004) (holding that compulsory DNA profiling of specified federal offenders was reasonable under the totality of the circumstances, which included the probationer's reduced expectations of privacy, the minimal intrusion that occurs from blood sampling, and the significant societal interests furthered by the collection of DNA information from convicted offenders); Velasquez v. Woods, 329 F.3d 420, 421 (5th Cir. 2003) (per curiam) (noting that every circuit court which has considered whether statutes requiring collection of DNA samples from people convicted of felonies violate the 4th Amendment has held that they do not); State v. Martin, 955 A.2d 1144, 1145-1146 (Vt. 2008) (upholding a state law requiring people convicted of nonviolent felonies to provide DNA samples).

148. Groceman v. U.S. Dept. of Justice, 354 F.3d 411, 413-414 (5th Cir. 2004) (per curiam) (“[A]lthough collection of DNA samples from incarcerated people implicates Fourth Amendment concerns, such collections are reasonable in light of an inmates diminished privacy rights, the minimal intrusion involved, and the legitimate government interest in using DNA to investigate crime....[P]ersons incarcerated after conviction retain no constitutional privacy interest against their correct identification.”); Padgett v. Donald, 401 F.3d 1273, 1275 (11th Cir. 2005) (finding that forced DNA sampling does not violate the 4th Amendment because incarcerated people have more limited Fourth Amendment rights to privacy and the state has an interest in keeping track of people convicted of felonies).

149. See Groceman v. U.S. Dept. of Justice, 354 F.3d 411, 413 n.2 (per curiam) (5th Cir. 2004) (noting that in the Tenth and Second Circuits, DNA samples of incarcerated people must be taken in accordance with DNA collection statutes, which satisfies “the ‘special needs’ exception to the warrant requirement”; however, in the Fourth Circuit, incarcerated people have no 4th Amendment right to be free from DNA searches); Roe v. Marcotte, 193 F.3d 72, 81-82 (2d Cir. 1999) (upholding statute requiring people convicted of sex offenses to submit to collection of DNA samples, but disagreeing with argument that would have made the statute apply to people convicted of any offense). But see United States v. Amerson, 483 F.3d 73, 80-84, 89 (2d Cir. 2007) (holding DNA collection statute applied to non-violent probationers under the two-pronged special needs test used in the circuit when there was a strong governmental interest in rapidly and accurately solving crimes); Nicholas v. Goord, 430 F.3d 652, 655 n.2, 671 (2d Cir. 2005) (upholding statute requiring people found guilty of assault, homicide, rape, incest, escape, attempted murder, kidnapping, arson, and burglary have their DNA collected, and suggesting the statute may apply to all people convicted of felonies).

150. See, e.g., Boling v. Romer, 101 F.3d 1336, 1340 (10th Cir. 1996) (upholding a requirement that incarcerated people convicted of sexual assault provide DNA samples).

151. United States v. Amerson, 483 F.3d 73, 80-84, 89 (2d Cir. 2007) (holding that under the two-pronged special needs test used in the circuit, the DNA collection statute applied to people on probation who had been

5. Statutory Privacy Rights

You may also have privacy rights under state statutes and regulations, in addition to your federal constitutional rights.¹⁵² For example, New York State law requires prisons to give incarcerated people certain clothing, and to follow specific procedures when giving incarcerated people urine tests or searching incarcerated people's religious items.

(a) Clothing

New York State law gives all incarcerated people the right to the same amount of “facility-issued clothing.”¹⁵³ Look in your prison library for the New York DOCCS Directives (specific prison rules) for more specific information about clothing. Prison officials in New York cannot take clothing away as punishment.¹⁵⁴ But they can take clothing away if they think it is dangerous to the prison and/or yourself by being a threat “to the safety, security or good order” of the facility.¹⁵⁵ If officials want to take away some clothing from you because they think it is dangerous for you to have, they must follow specific procedures.¹⁵⁶ A deprivation order—an order that takes away a specific item, privilege or service—must be authorized by the chief administrative officer in writing.¹⁵⁷ The order must include the reasons for the order.¹⁵⁸ The deprivation order must be reviewed within seven days.¹⁵⁹ If this review could impact your health, then the chief administrative officer must consult with the jail doctor or other qualified health staff, who must record in writing whether continuing the deprivation would compromise your health.¹⁶⁰ After every review, the chief administrative officer must put in writing whether the order will stop or continue, and state the reasons for his decision.¹⁶¹ convicted of non-violent offenses because there was a strong governmental interest and minimal intrusion into and invasion of the privacy of the people on probation); Padgett v. Ferrero, 294 F. Supp. 2d 1338, 1342 (N.D. Ga. 2003) (finding that felony convictions justified searches, including DNA sampling, and so satisfied the 4th Amendment requirement that the search be reasonable); United States v. Stegman, 295 F. Supp. 2d 542, 548–550 (D. Md. 2003) (finding that compelling a person to provide a DNA sample while on supervised release was not an unreasonable search or seizure).

152. Incarcerated people should become familiar with the penal codes of their respective states, as well as the employee manual of their prisons, if possible. The employee manuals will tell you what procedures the guards must follow and may help you challenge the guards' behavior through internal prison grievance procedures.

153. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7005.7 (2013). For men, this includes one shirt and one pair of pants. Women receive one shirt or blouse, and one skirt, smock, dress, or pair of pants. Both men and women should receive two pairs of socks, two sets of underwear, one pair of shoes, and one sweater, sweatshirt, or jacket during cold weather. Incarcerated women are allowed to wear bras. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7005.7 (2013).

154. See N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, §§ 7075.5(a)–(b) (2019) (forbidding denial, restriction, or limited provision of an essential service to an incarcerated person as a means of punishment, and essential services will not be denied, restricted, or limited unless providing them would be a threat to the safety, security, or good order of the facility, incarcerated person, staff, or other people incarcerated at the facility); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7005.12 (2013) (“Any decision to deny, restrict or limit an inmate of any right, service, item or article, guaranteed an inmate by the provisions of this Part, shall be done in accordance with [N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7075.5]).

155. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7075.5(b) (2019); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7005.12 (2013).

156. See N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7075.5(b) (2019); N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7005.12 (2013).

157. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7075.5(b) (2019).

158. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7075.5(c) (2019).

159. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7075.5(c) (2019).

160. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7075.5(c) (2019).

161. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 9, § 7075.5(c) (2019).

(b) Urine Tests

Forcing people to take urine tests or give samples of other bodily fluids is considered a “search”¹⁶² under the Fourth Amendment, and the procedures for urine tests are held to the same rules and standards as other searches. Prison officials may make incarcerated people give urine samples for drug testing either with reasonable cause or under a program designed to prevent selective enforcement of prison rules or harassment of incarcerated people.¹⁶³ New York has state regulations about privacy when you take a urinalysis test.¹⁶⁴ The rules have a specific procedure for urine tests. You will be pat frisked before giving the sample, and someone will watch you give the sample. The person who watches you must be from the security or medical staff, and the person has to be the same sex as you. You should be in a private place where no other incarcerated people or staff can see you.¹⁶⁵

(c) Searches of Religious Items

In New York, religious items such as the medicine bag of an incarcerated person who is Native American can only be inspected in a way that respects its religious significance. However, a medicine bag may be scanned at any time with a metal or other electronic detector. An incarcerated person must also hold the medicine bag open for prison officials to look inside if the official has reason to believe that it may contain contraband.¹⁶⁶ See Chapter 27 of the JLM for more information on religious rights in prison.

6. Departmental Directives and Privacy Rights

The New York DOCCS Directives have specific rules for each state prison. Look in your prison library for a copy of these directives. These directives have additional rules for searches that may be stricter than the court rules. For example, the directives say that only a primary care provider (PCP), like a physician, can conduct body cavity searches.¹⁶⁷ The body cavity search must take place in an appropriate examining room. The official must use professional, hygienic techniques and explain the procedure to you. The physician must also give you a chance to give up contraband voluntarily. One corrections officer of your sex must be present to witness the examination.¹⁶⁸ These rules are intended 162. Skinner v. Ry. Labor Execs. Ass’n, 489 U.S. 602, 617, 109 S. Ct. 1402, 1413, 103 L. Ed. 639, 660 (1989) (holding that the Federal Railroad Administration’s policies of drug testing by collecting and testing urine samples and samples of other bodily fluids are “searches” under the 4th Amendment).

163. See, e.g., Louis v. Dept. of Corr. Servs. of Neb., 437 F.3d 697, 700–701 (8th Cir. 2006) (holding in a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 action that prisons requiring urine tests do not need to allow incarcerated people to sign and seal their own urine specimens and do not have to conduct a confirmatory test where the test shows a positive result but incarcerated person denies using drugs); Lucero v. Gunter, 17 F.3d 1347, 1350 (10th Cir. 1994) (upholding the random urine collection and testing of incarcerated people as a reasonable means of preventing the unauthorized use of narcotics); Forbes v. Trigg, 976 F.2d 308, 310, 314–315 (7th Cir. 1992) (upholding urinalysis of all incarcerated people in jobs that allowed them potential access to contraband from outsiders); Hurd v. Scribner, No. 06CV0412, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 32651, at *9, *15 (S.D. Cal. May 02, 2007) (unpublished) (upholding, in response to a habeas petition, discipline taken against an incarcerated person who refused a drug test); see also Thompson v. Souza, 111 F.3d 694, 702 (9th Cir. 1997) (noting that other courts have held that truly random urine tests are reasonable because they prevent correctional officials from harassing particular incarcerated people by subjecting them to repeated drug tests); Storms v. Coughlin, 600 F. Supp. 1214, 1226 (S.D.N.Y. 1984) (holding that the incarcerated people must be chosen for urine tests through a system of selection in which the incarcerated people to be tested are chosen blindly). But see Thompson v. Souza, 111 F.3d 694, 702–703 (9th Cir. 1997) (upholding nonrandom urine testing of a group of 124 incarcerated people).

164. See N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1020.4 (2012).

165. See N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 7, § 1020.4 (2012) (stating the rules and procedure for urinalysis); see also State of New York, Department of Corrections & Community Supervision, Directive No. 4937, Urinalysis Testing 1–4 (2017) (as revised Dec. 27, 2018).

166. State of New York, Department of Corrections & Community Supervision, Directive 4910, Control of & Search for Contraband 13 (2018) (as revised June 28, 2019).

167. State of New York, Department of Corrections & Community Supervision, Directive 4910, Control of & Search for Contraband 11–12 (2018) (as revised June 28, 2019).

168. State of New York, Department of Corrections & Community Supervision, Directive 4910, Control of to make sure that no one, including health officials, humiliates or harasses you. If anyone does harass you, you may bring a complaint alleging violation of the professional standards set out in the directives.

The New York Directives also say that when you are transferred from one DOCCS facility to another, you will be strip frisked and subjected to a metal detector search at the facility from which you are being transferred, but you will not be strip searched or strip frisked at the receiving facility. You may have to go through a metal detector search at the receiving facility, though. The same policy applies when you are transferred from one Special Housing Unit to another Special Housing Unit. In both situations, however, an officer may strip search you at the receiving facility if an officer has “probable cause” to believe that you are carrying contraband.¹⁶⁹

When you are strip searched or strip frisked, prison officials must make sure you have some privacy. In general, only the prison official doing the search should be there, although a supervisor may watch.¹⁷⁰ Additional corrections officers should be present only if there are major disturbances or if it is likely that you will resist the search, and incarcerated people may be searched in groups if there is a major disturbance at the facility. The prison should limit traffic as much as possible where strip searches are conducted. Officers of the same sex as you must conduct your strip searches and strip frisks.¹⁷¹

A very important rule about strip searches in New York is that officers must always act professionally. They have to be aware of the sensitive nature of searches and must “conduct such searches in a manner least degrading to all involved.”¹⁷² Typically, if you cooperate in a non-body cavity search, the officer may not touch you, except to run fingers through your hair if necessary.¹⁷³ If you believe that a search is conducted improperly, you can use the New York Inmate Grievance Program or an Article 78 proceeding to seek a remedy.¹⁷⁴ If you believe the search also violated your constitutional rights, then you can use the legal remedies described in Part D of this Chapter. If you are incarcerated in another state, it is likely that there are similar regulations to protect your rights. See Chapter 2 of the JLM for more information on legal research so that you can find the laws and regulations of the state where you are incarcerated.

7. Why You Should Not Resist an Illegal Body Search

If you are searched in a way that you believe is illegal or against a prison regulation, it is best to allow the search to take place. (Prison officials can use force to make you obey orders, even if those orders may be illegal, so resisting is often not possible.) Courts have held that incarcerated people must follow orders so that prison rules can be administered safely and in an orderly way.¹⁷⁵ Even if you & Search for Contraband 11–12 (2018) (as revised June 28, 2019).

169. State of New York, Department of Corrections & Community Supervision, Directive 4910, Control of & Search for Contraband 8–9 (2018) (as revised June 28, 2019).

170. State of New York, Department of Corrections & Community Supervision, Directive 4910, Control of & Search for Contraband 10 (2018) (as revised June 28, 2019).

171. State of New York, Department of Corrections & Community Supervision, Directive 4910, Control of & Search for Contraband 9 (2018) (as revised June 28, 2019).

172. State of New York, Department of Corrections & Community Supervision, Directive 4910, Control of & Search for Contraband 9 (2018) (as revised June 28, 2019).

173. State of New York, Department of Corrections & Community Supervision, Directive 4910, Control of & Search for Contraband 10 (2018) (as revised June 28, 2019).

174. See Chapter 15 of the JLM and Chapter 22 for more information on inmate grievance procedures and Article 78 proceedings.

175. Griffin v. Comm’r of Pa. Prisons, No. 90-5284, 1991 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17951, at *11 (E.D. Pa. Dec. 10, 1991) (unpublished), aff’d, 961 F.2d 208 (3d Cir. 1992) (“Even if plaintiff considered the order illegal, plaintiff should not have refused to follow it because it is critical to the orderly administration of a prison that incarcerated people follow orders.”); see also Eccleston v. Oregon ex rel. Or. Dept. of Corr., 168 F. App’x 760, 761 (9th Cir. 2006) (finding that a prison official’s use of a chemical agent on an incarcerated person who repeatedly refused to follow orders to leave his cell was not cruel and unusual punishment); Williams v. Delo, 49 F.3d 442, 446 (8th Cir. 1995) (finding that the incarcerated person’s refusal to follow the orders of corrections officials posed a threat to believe that an order violates your constitutional rights, courts say that you do not have the right to resist the order.¹⁷⁶

It is safest for you not to resist the prison official, because if you resist you probably will be disciplined and you may be injured. You can later file a lawsuit to help prevent future violations of your rights and to punish the official. Any disciplinary action taken against you for resisting the search will be added to your record, affecting your good-time credit and your chances of parole. If you resist a search and then bring a lawsuit, winning the suit may mean the court will clear your disciplinary record after finding the search violated prison rules.¹⁷⁷ However, that is not always the case. Resisting a search—even if it is obviously illegal—is likely to lead to a permanent mark on your disciplinary record, because courts rarely order a disciplinary record to be changed. It is unlikely that a permanent mark due to your resisting an illegal search will ever be cleared from your record.¹⁷⁸ Courts want incarcerated people to challenge violations of their rights in courts, instead of refusing to obey orders from prison officials.¹⁷⁹ Do not count on the courts to clear your record, especially if the order you disobey is not clearly contrary to a prison's rules.

D. Legal Remedies

If you believe your rights have been violated, remember you must first file an administrative grievance at your institution. See Chapter 15 of the JLM for further information.¹⁸⁰ You can then file a Section 1983 lawsuit if you believe prison officials or other government employees (including police officers) have violated any of your constitutional rights. In addition, you can file a class action law suit, which involves a group of people, called plaintiffs, bringing a lawsuit together.

If you think that prison officials have violated your Eighth or Fourth Amendment rights, you may sue the officials or guards using 42 U.S.C. § 1983. Section 1983 is a federal law that allows you to sue state officials who have violated your constitutional rights while acting “under color of state law,” institutional security).

176. Pressly v. Gregory, 831 F.2d 514, 518 n.3 (4th Cir. 1987) (citing Wright v. Bailey, 544 F.2d 737 (4th Cir. 1976), for the legal fact that you cannot resist arrest by stating that the arrest is illegal unless the illegality is clear at the time of the arrest); Jackson v. Allen, 376 F. Supp. 1393, 1394–1395 (E.D. Ark. 1974) (holding that, because of the discipline structure of prisons, incarcerated people do not have the right to resist an unconstitutional order or punishment unless resistance is necessary to prevent one's own permanent physical or mental damage or death). But see Purcell v. Pa. Dept. of Corr., No. 95-6720, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 105, at *26–27 (E.D. Pa. Jan. 9, 1998) (unpublished) (finding the incarcerated plaintiff could proceed with his action against prison officials, where he may have been injured because he followed an order that medical professionals previously led him to believe he did not need to obey).

177. See Dunne v. Reid, 93 Misc. 2d 50, 51–52, 402 N.Y.S.2d 923, 924 (Sup. Ct. Dutchess County 1978) (ordering incarcerated person's disciplinary record from resisting search cleared after finding prison officials acted in violation of prison regulations when they tried to search the incarcerated person in front of other people, despite prison rules that said searches must respect incarcerated people's privacy).

178. See, e.g., Mahogany v. Stalder, 242 F. App'x 261, 263 (5th Cir. 2007) (per curiam) (dismissing incarcerated person's claim seeking restoration of good-time credits and removal of disciplinary proceedings from his record, despite allowing his § 1983 claim for “deprivation of civil rights” to proceed).

179. See Rivera v. Smith, 63 N.Y.2d 501, 515, 472 N.E.2d 1015, 1022, 483 N.Y.S.2d 187, 194 (1984) (“[T]he recognition and enforcement even of constitutional rights may have to await resolution in administrative or judicial proceedings; self-help by the inmate cannot be recognized as an acceptable remedy.”). But see Sanchez v. Scully, 143 Misc. 2d 889, 889–890, 542 N.Y.S.2d 920, 920 (Sup. Ct. Dutchess County 1989) (holding that, given the existence of unambiguous statutory language in support of incarcerated person's refusal to work in excess of eight hours per day, the record of the subsequent disciplinary proceeding should be expunged, or removed, from the person's record); Dunne v. Reid, 93 Misc. 2d 50, 51–52, 402 N.Y.S.2d 923, 924 (Sup. Ct. Dutchess County 1978) (finding a disciplinary action inappropriate where the incarcerated person resisted a search that violated the prison's own regulations).

180. See, e.g., Johnson v. Johnson, 385 F.3d 503, 515–523 (5th Cir. 2004) (describing in detail the requirement that an incarcerated person exhaust administrative remedies before filing a lawsuit).

which means while acting with authority from the state.¹⁸¹ You can sue federal officials in a similar suit, called a Bivens action.¹⁸²

You can also use Section 1983 to sue local officials as long as you can show that they too acted “under color of state law.” But note that you can only sue municipalities (towns, cities, or counties) under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 if your injury happened because of an official municipal policy or custom.¹⁸³ To sue a city or a county, then, you will have to show that the “execution of [the] government’s policy or custom . . . inflict[ed] the injury.”¹⁸⁴ In other words, a local government will be held liable only if an injury can be shown to be a direct result of the local government’s official policy, either express or implied.¹⁸⁵ Therefore, a local government is not at fault, or “liable,” under Section 1983, “for an injury inflicted solely by its employees or agents” who were not following official local policy,¹⁸⁶ even though the local officials may be individually liable under Section 1983. You should read Chapter 16 of the JLM to learn more about Section 1983 claims.

There have also been successful class actions challenging official municipal policies under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. Class actions are a type of lawsuit where many plaintiffs sue together for similar violations of their rights.¹⁸⁷ Most successful class action cases challenging prison search policies have been brought on behalf of non-violent, non-drug misdemeanor arrestees, not convicted incarcerated people.¹⁸⁸

181. 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

182. Incarcerated people can make constitutional claims against federal officials in federal court under 28 U.S.C. § 1331 by using Bivens actions. See Part E(1) of Chapter 16 of the JLM for more information on Bivens actions.

183. See, e.g., Williams v. Kaufman County, 352 F.3d 994, 1013–1014 (5th Cir. 2003) (holding that the municipality could be held liable for unlawful searches of detainees because the policy was authorized by the sheriff, the relevant policymaker).

184. Irwin v. City of Hemet, 22 Cal. App. 4th 507, 525–527, 27 Cal. Rptr.2d 433, 442–443 (Cal. Ct. App. 1994) (plaintiffs’ allegation that the City’s adoption of a policy or custom not to train its corrections officers in suicide screening and prevention caused their incarcerated family member to commit suicide was a factual issue the lower court should have allowed to proceed to trial) (quoting Monell v. Dept. of Soc. Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 694, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2037–2038, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 638 (1978))). For an example of such a municipal policy or custom, see Blihovde v. St. Croix County, 219 F.R.D. 607, 612–613 (W.D. Wis. 2003) (describing a county’s strip search policy, and concluding that the plaintiffs fairly alleged that the county-wide policy or custom of conducting strip searches could have been the cause of the plaintiff’s injury).

185. Blihovde v. St. Croix County, 219 F.R.D. 607, 618 (W.D. Wis. 2003) (“Even when there is no express policy, a municipality may be liable when there is a ‘custom’ of unconstitutional conduct.” (citing Monell v. Dept. of Soc. Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 691, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2036, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 635 (1978))); see also Amnesty Am. v. Town of W. Hartford, 361 F.3d 113, 124–127 (2d Cir. 2004) (reviewing the law of municipal liability in a damages suit for excessive force).

186. Irwin v. City of Hemet, 22 Cal. App. 4th 507, 525, 27 Cal. Rptr.2d 433, 442 (Cal. Ct. App. 1994) (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Monell v. Dept. of Soc. Servs., 436 U.S. 658, 694, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2037–2038, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 638 (1978)).

187. See Chapter 5 of the JLM for information on class actions in general and Part D(1) of Chapter 16 of the JLM for information on § 1983 class actions.

188. See, e.g., Bynum v. District of Columbia, 217 F.R.D. 43, 45–50 (D.D.C. 2003) (certifying a § 1983 class action claiming 4th and 5th Amendment violations, where plaintiffs challenged a prison policy of conducting strip searches of incarcerated people returning from court with orders for their release, without any suspicion). Bynum later settled for $12 million and the District of Columbia agreed to “no longer strip search [detainees] who are entitled to release.” Bynum v. Gov’t of the Dist. of Columbia, 384 F. Supp. 2d 342, 358–359 (D.D.C. 2005); see also Tardiff v. Knox County, 365 F.3d 1, 5–7 (1st Cir. 2004) (affirming class certification of people arrested for non-violent, non-drug offenses who challenged policy of blanket, routine strip searches without reasonable suspicion); Blihovde v. St. Croix County, 219 F.R.D. 607, 612–621 (W.D. Wis. 2003) (affirming amended class definition in a § 1983 class action, alleging plaintiffs, all misdemeanor non-drug, non-violent arrestees, were subjected to strip searches without reasonable suspicion according to a county prison policy in violation of the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments). Nilsen v. York County, 382 F. Supp. 2d 206, 209–213 (D. Me. 2005), approved a $3.3 million settlement in a § 1983 class action over strip searches of non-drug, non-weapon, and non-violent arrestees at county jail; plaintiffs alleged the strip searches were conducted pursuant to county jail policy, without individualized reasonable suspicion in violation of the Fourth Amendment. The settlement also required the

It is important to remember that different laws apply in state and federal prisons. If you are in a federal prison, it does not matter what state the prison is in. Federal prisons only use federal law. If you are in a state prison, you can use both state and federal laws. But, remember that each state creates its own laws. You must research the laws of your particular state and how incarcerated people in your state file suits in that state's courts. Federal constitutional rights are protected regardless of whether you are in state or federal prison, but the way you present your case—what legal claims you make and how you make them—will differ.

E. Conclusion

In conclusion, although your rights against involuntary exposure and body searches are substantially limited in prison, you still have important protections under the Fourth Amendment, Eighth Amendment, and certain state statutes and regulations. Whether your rights have been violated will depend in large part on the reasonableness behind the search, or behind the policy leading to the involuntary exposure. It will also depend on what kind of search or exposure is at issue. The more cases you can find with facts similar to your own situation where the prison was found to have violated the law, the better your chances of showing that your rights were violated.

county to maintain a written policy prohibiting the challenged strip searches.

CHAPTER 26

INFECTIOUS DISEASES: AIDS, HEPATITIS, TUBERCULOSIS, AND MRSA IN PRISONS*

A. Introduction

This Chapter explains your legal rights with respect to infectious diseases in prison. This Chapter has information both for incarcerated people who already have an infectious disease (like HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, hepatitis B, hepatitis C, or Methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus aureus (MRSA)), and for incarcerated people who want to avoid getting an infectious disease. Part B gives you some basic facts about infectious diseases. Section (1)(a) of Part B also describes how women may have different symptoms of HIV/AIDS than men. Part C explains the general standard used to determine whether a prison policy is constitutional. Part D is about medical testing for infectious diseases in prisons, including whether a prison can force you to get tested or have others tested. Part E discusses disease prevention and segregation issues. Part F discusses the role of confidentiality and what you can expect in terms of keeping your health status private in prison. Part G deals with treatment options and your legal rights to those options. Part H discusses issues relating to discrimination. Part I discusses sentencing issues. Part J discusses planning for your release if you have an infectious disease. Finally, Appendix A lists resources for further information, counseling, and support for you and your family.

You should also read other chapters of the JLM to understand your legal rights, especially Chapter 16, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law,” Chapter 36, “Special Considerations for Sex Offenders,” Chapter 28, “Rights of Prisoners with Disabilities,” Chapter 23, “Your Right to Adequate Medical Care,” and Chapter 35, “Getting Out Early: Conditional & Early Release.”

There are more court cases about HIV/AIDS than about the other diseases discussed in this Chapter. Because judges always look at the specific facts of each case, try to find cases about your disease. But, you also can try to make comparisons between different diseases and explain how the diseases are very similar, including how they are spread and their effects on incarcerated people. For example, if you want to use a case about AIDS and argue that the case should also apply to hepatitis C, you should try to explain your reasons as clearly as possible.

This Chapter is only a summary of the many issues about infectious diseases in the prison system. You probably will have to do more research elsewhere. For example, this Chapter only includes HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, hepatitis (the most common infectious diseases in prison), and MRSA, but there are many other diseases. Scientists are always discovering new information about infectious diseases, so some of this information may not be correct in the future.

B. Background Information on Infectious Diseases

1. HIV and AIDS

HIV, the Human Immunodeficiency Virus, is the virus that causes AIDS.¹ AIDS stands for Acquired Immunodeficiency Syndrome. Over time, HIV weakens your immune system so your body

* This Chapter was rewritten by Carrie Ellis, based, in part, on previous versions of “AIDS in Prison” and “AIDS, Tuberculosis, and Hepatitis in Prison” by Emily Monroe, Jin Hee Lee, Stephanie I. R. Fidler, Sara Corello, and Paul Farrell Mapelli. Special thanks to Milton Zelermeyer Prisoners’ Rights Project, The Legal Aid Society of New York; Madeline DeLone, Innocence Project; and Jennifer Wynn, Prison Visiting Project, Correctional Association of New York, for their helpful comments.

1. HIV/AIDS—About HIV/AIDS, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/hiv/basics/whatishiv.html> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019). The JLM knows that many incarcerated people do not have access to the Internet, but because we want this information to be up to date, we cite frequently to different agencies’ and organizations’ websites.

cannot fight off infection properly. You may develop various infections—known as “opportunistic” infections—that take advantage of your body’s weakened condition.²

Most people with HIV develop AIDS within ten to fifteen years of getting HIV.³ The time it takes for HIV to develop into AIDS is different for each person. Medical treatments can slow down how fast HIV weakens your body.⁴ As HIV gets worse and becomes AIDS, people become sick with serious illnesses and infections.

Being HIV-positive does not mean that you have AIDS. It is very important that you consult a doctor to find out if you are infected with HIV or if you have developed AIDS so that you can receive proper medical treatment. The only way you can know for certain whether you are infected is to be tested.

An estimated 1.1 million people in the United States were living with HIV as of 2015, and, in 2017 alone, 38,739 people in the United States and U.S. territories were diagnosed with HIV.⁵ The estimated rate of confirmed AIDS cases in state and federal prisons between 1999 and 2008 was more than four times higher than in the general population.⁶ In 2014, approximately 1,994 incarcerated people in New York State prisons (but not counting prisons in New York City) were HIV positive, and of those, 1,284 incarcerated people had AIDS.⁷

HIV is most commonly spread by having unprotected anal, vaginal, or oral sex with a person who has HIV or by sharing needles or injection equipment with a drug user who has HIV.⁸ It can also be spread from an HIV-infected mother to her baby, before or during birth or through breast-feeding, and through unsanitary tattooing or body piercing procedures.⁹

You cannot get HIV by working with or being around someone who has HIV or by sharing a cell with another incarcerated person who has HIV. You also cannot get HIV from sweat, spit, tears, clothes, drinking fountains, telephones, toilet seats, or through everyday activities like sharing a meal. HIV is also not transmitted through insect bites or stings, donating blood, or through closed-mouth kissing (although there is a very small chance of getting it from open-mouthed or “French” kissing with someone who is HIV positive because of possible blood contact through open wounds, warts, etc.).¹⁰

If you are currently HIV negative, you can help avoid getting HIV by taking the following steps:

- (1) Never share needles or syringes if you inject drugs;

2. HIV/AIDS—About HIV/AIDS, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <http://www.cdc.gov/hiv/basics/whatishiv.html> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

3. HIV/AIDS: Online Q&A, WORLD HEALTH ORG. (Nov. 2017), available at <https://www.who.int/features/qa/71/en/> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

4. HIV/AIDS—HIV Treatment, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/hiv/basics/livingwithhiv/treatment.html> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

5. HIV/AIDS—Basic Statistics, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <http://www.cdc.gov/hiv/topics/surveillance/basic.htm#aidsdiagnoses> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019); see also HIV in the United States, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/hiv/statistics/overview/atalgance.html> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

6. Laura M. Maruschak & Randy Beavers, Bulletin: HIV in Prisons, 2007–08, BUREAU OF JUSTICE STATISTICS, at 3 (2010), available at <https://www.bjs.gov/content/pub/pdf/hivp08.pdf> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019); see also Fenced In: HIV/AIDS in the US Criminal Justice System, GAY MEN'S HEALTH CRISIS, available at <https://www.hivlawandpolicy.org/sites/default/files/Fenced%20In.pdf> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019) (explaining that, as of 2012, HIV was four times more prevalent in the prison population than in the general population).

7. BUREAU OF HIV/AIDS EPIDEMIOLOGY, N.Y. STATE DEPT. OF HEALTH, N.Y. STATE HIV/AIDS SURVEILLANCE ANNUAL REPORT: FOR CASES DIAGNOSED THROUGH DECEMBER 2014, at 59 (2016), available at https://www.health.ny.gov/diseases/aids/general/statistics/annual/2014/2014-12_annual_surveillance_report.pdf (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

8. HIV/AIDS—HIV Transmission, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <http://www.cdc.gov/hiv/basics/transmission.html> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

9. HIV/AIDS—HIV Transmissions, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <http://www.cdc.gov/hiv/basics/transmission.html> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

10. HIV/AIDS—HIV Transmissions, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <http://www.cdc.gov/hiv/basics/transmission.html> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

- (2) Never share needles or syringes if you get a tattoo or body piercing;
- (3) Do not share equipment used to prepare and inject drugs (“works”);
- (4) Use a latex condom—not a lambskin condom—every time you have sex, including anal and oral sex;
- (5) Never share razors or toothbrushes because of the risk of contact with someone else’s blood.

Taking these precautions can help protect you from contracting the HIV infection.¹¹

(a) Women and HIV/AIDS

Symptoms of HIV are often different for women than for men. Because these symptoms are typically not associated with HIV, many women go undiagnosed until the virus progresses to AIDS.¹² Early signs for a woman with HIV include gynecological disorders, especially pelvic inflammatory disease (“PID”)¹³; infections, such as human papillomavirus (“HPV”), that can cause cervical dysplasia¹⁴; and chronic yeast infections.¹⁵ HIV-positive women also have a higher risk of developing cervical cancer.¹⁶ If you are HIV-positive, getting a complete gynecological exam—including an inspection of the cervix (colposcopy) and a pap smear—every six months is important in order to detect any problems early. If you believe you may be infected with HIV or AIDS, try to get tested.

Appendix A includes several organizations and sources of information about HIV and AIDS. If you are HIV-positive, it is important that you be tested for tuberculosis, a very contagious and serious disease, because HIV-positive people have a much higher risk of getting tuberculosis.¹⁷

2. Tuberculosis

Tuberculosis (“TB”) is a disease caused by bacteria that are spread through the air. When you breathe in the bacteria, they usually settle in and attack your lungs, but the bacteria can also move to and attack other parts of your body.¹⁸ Outside of prison, TB does not spread that easily. In prison, however, TB spreads much more easily because of overcrowding and poor ventilation.¹⁹ People born outside the United States (especially in Latin America, the Caribbean, Africa, Asia, Eastern Europe, or Russia) are more likely to have been infected with the bacteria.²⁰ Additionally, people who have

11. See HIV/AIDS—Prevention, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/hiv/basics/prevention.html> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

12. See Louise G. Trubek & Elizabeth A. Hoffman, Searching for a Balance in Universal Health Care Reform: Protection for the Disenfranchised Consumer, 43 DEPAUL L. REV. 1081, 1087 (1994).

13. See Pelvic Inflammatory Disease (PID)—CDC Fact Sheet, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/std/pid/stdfact-pid-detailed.htm> (last visited Oct. 15, 2019) (warning that PID is a serious complication of sexually transmitted diseases).

14. See U.S. DEPT. OF HEALTH & HUMAN SERVS., GUIDE FOR HIV/AIDS CLINICAL CARE, at 378 (2011), available at https://aidsetc.org/sites/default/files/resources_files/CM_Jan2011%20\(1\).pdf.pdf) (last visited Oct. 5, 2019) (explaining that HIV-infected women are at a higher risk of HPV infection).

15. See Fungal Diseases—Vaginal Candidiasis, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/fungal/diseases/candidiasis/genital/index.html> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019) (explaining that women with HIV are at a higher risk of developing yeast infections); see also Women and HIV, OFFICE ON WOMEN’S HEALTH, U.S. DEPT. OF HEALTH & HUMAN SERVS., available at <https://www.womenshealth.gov/hiv-and-aids/women-and-hiv> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

16. HIV Infection and Cancer Risk, NAT’L CANCER INST., available at <http://www.cancer.gov/cancertopics/factsheet/Risk/hiv-infection> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

17. Tuberculosis (TB)—TB and HIV Coinfection, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/tb/topic/basics/tbhivcoinfection.htm> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

18. Tuberculosis (TB)—How TB Spreads, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/tb/topic/basics/howtbspreads.htm> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

19. See Prevention and Control of Tuberculosis in Correctional and Detention Facilities: Recommendations from CDC, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/mmwr/preview/mmwrhtml/rr5509a1.htm> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

20. CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, U.S. DEPT. OF HEALTH & HUMAN SERVS., Epidemiology of Tuberculosis, in SELF-STUDY MODULES ON TUBERCULOSIS at 13 (2019), available at <https://www.cdc.gov/tb/education/ssmodules/pdfs/Module2.pdf> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

spent time in places where TB is common, like homeless shelters, hospitals, and prisons, are also more likely to have a TB infection.²¹

It is important to know that being infected with the TB bacteria is not the same as having TB disease. If you have a “TB infection” (also referred to as “latent TB”), you will have no symptoms and you cannot spread TB to others. But if you do not get medical treatment, your TB infection can develop into “TB disease” (or “active TB”).²² If you have active TB, you can have symptoms like a bad cough lasting more than three weeks, pain in your chest, coughing up blood or phlegm, weakness or fatigue, weight loss, no appetite, chills, a fever, or night sweating.²³

TB is particularly dangerous for HIV-positive people because of their weakened immune systems. In fact, TB is one of the leading causes of death for HIV-positive people.²⁴ Although as many as 13 million people in the United States have latent TB, only about five to ten percent will develop active TB disease if left untreated.²⁵ If you have HIV, however, you should be aware that people with both HIV and TB infections are much more likely to develop active TB than HIV-negative people.²⁶

Be sure to consult other sources and prison medical professionals if you think you have TB. Active TB disease can be treated and cured if you get medical care, take prescription medication, and follow your doctor's orders.²⁷

3. Hepatitis B and Hepatitis C

Hepatitis is a disease that attacks the liver. There are different types of hepatitis, but the most common types among incarcerated people are hepatitis B and hepatitis C.

(a) Hepatitis B

In 2017, there were about 22,100 new hepatitis B infections in the United States.²⁸ More than 1,700 people died in 2016 from liver disease related to hepatitis B.²⁹ The hepatitis B virus, like HIV, is spread by having sex with infected persons, through sharing needles (“works”) when shooting drugs, through workplace exposure to infected needles or other sharp objects, or from an infected mother to her baby during birth.³⁰ You can avoid getting hepatitis B by taking the same precautions as you would take to avoid getting HIV. For more information on HIV prevention, see Part B(1) of this Chapter.

People who have hepatitis B often do not have any symptoms but can still spread the virus to other people.³¹ If you do have symptoms, you may develop yellow eyes and skin, tiredness, loss of appetite,

21. Neela D. Goswami & Philip LoBue, Travel-Related Infectious Diseases, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <http://wwwnc.cdc.gov/travel/yellowbook/2014/chapter-3-infectious-diseases-related-to-travel/tuberculosis> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

22. Tuberculosis (TB)—Latent TB Infection and TB Disease, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/tb/topic/basics/tbinfectiondisease.htm> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

23. Tuberculosis (TB)—Signs and Symptoms, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <http://www.cdc.gov/tb/topic/basics/signsandSYMPTOMS.htm> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

24. Tuberculosis (TB)—TB and HIV Coinfection, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/tb/topic/basics/tbhivcoinfection.htm> (last visited Sep. 15, 2019).

25. CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, U.S. DEPT. OF HEALTH & HUMAN SERVS., TB IN THE UNITED STATES: A SNAPSHOT, at 2 (2018), available at <https://www.cdc.gov/nchhstp/newsroom/docs/factsheets/tb-in-the-us-a-snapshot.pdf> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

26. Tuberculosis (TB)—TB and HIV Coinfection, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/tb/topic/basics/tbhivcoinfection.htm> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

27. Tuberculosis Facts, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at https://www.cdc.gov/tb/publications/factseries/cure_eng.htm (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

28. Viral Hepatitis—Hepatitis B Questions and Answers for the Public, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/hepatitis/hbv/bfaq.htm> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

29. Viral Hepatitis—Hepatitis B Questions and Answers for the Public, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/hepatitis/hbv/bfaq.htm> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

30. Viral Hepatitis—Hepatitis B Questions and Answers for the Public, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/hepatitis/hbv/bfaq.htm> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

31. Viral Hepatitis—Hepatitis B Questions and Answers for the Public, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & dark urine, abdominal pains, and nausea.³² There are vaccines to protect you from hepatitis B, but once you get hepatitis B, there is no cure.³³ You should still get medical attention, however, because there are medical treatments to help your symptoms.³⁴ If you have hepatitis B, you should get tested for HIV and hepatitis C.

(b) Hepatitis C

Hepatitis C virus (“HCV”) causes hepatitis C. In 2016, there were an estimated 41,200 new hepatitis C virus infections in the United States, and there were about 2.4 million people living with the disease in this country.³⁵ Almost 80% of infected persons do not show any signs or symptoms of hepatitis C.³⁶ Some people infected with hepatitis C may not show any symptoms for twenty or thirty years.³⁷ Hepatitis C symptoms include yellow skin, dark urine, fatigue, abdominal pain, and loss of appetite.³⁸ People with chronic HCV infection have a serious risk of developing liver damage.³⁹ If you have hepatitis C, you should not drink alcohol because alcohol can make your liver damage worse.⁴⁰

While few people outside of prison have HCV, a high percentage of incarcerated people are infected with HCV.⁴¹ To avoid getting hepatitis C, you should:

- (1) Never shoot drugs (if you cannot stop, never reuse or share syringes, water, or “works”);
- (2) Never share toothbrushes, razors, or other personal care items;
- (3) Avoid getting a tattoo or body piercing if there is a chance that someone else’s blood is on the tools or that the artist or piercer does not follow good health practices;⁴²
- (4) Avoid having unprotected sex.

Though the chances of spreading hepatitis C through sexual intercourse is not known, the risk of spreading hepatitis C through direct contact with infected blood is high.⁴³ If you have hepatitis C, you should be tested for HIV and hepatitis B.

PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/hepatitis/hbv/bfaq.htm> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

32. Viral Hepatitis—Hepatitis B Questions and Answers for the Public, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/hepatitis/hbv/bfaq.htm> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

33. See Finding a Cure for Hepatitis B: Are We Close?, WORLD HEALTH ORG. (June 2018), available at <https://www.who.int/hepatitis/news-events/hbv-cure-overview/en/> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

34. Viral Hepatitis—Hepatitis B Questions and Answers for the Public, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/hepatitis/hbv/bfaq.htm> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

35. Viral Hepatitis—Hepatitis C Questions and Answers for the Public, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/hepatitis/hcv/cfaq.htm> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019).

36. Nat’l Prevention Info. Network, U.S. Dept. of Health & Human Servs., Viral Hepatitis—Hepatitis C Basics, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://npin.cdc.gov/pages/hepatitis-c-basics> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019).

37. See Viral Hepatitis—Hepatitis C Questions and Answers for the Public, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/hepatitis/hcv/cfaq.htm> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019).

38. Viral Hepatitis—Hepatitis C Questions and Answers for the Public, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/hepatitis/hcv/cfaq.htm> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019).

39. See Viral Hepatitis—Hepatitis C Questions and Answers for the Public, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/hepatitis/hcv/cfaq.htm> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019).

40. Viral Hepatitis—Hepatitis C Questions and Answers for the Public, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <https://www.cdc.gov/hepatitis/hcv/cfaq.htm> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019).

41. See An Overview of Hepatitis C in Prisons and Jails, NAT’L HEPATITIS CORRECTIONS NETWORK (Feb. 22, 2016), available at http://www.hcvinprison.org/resources/articles-documents/71-main-content/content/191-hepcprison#_edn2 (last visited Oct. 6, 2019) (citing a study that estimated that incarcerated people account for one-third of hepatitis C infections in the United States).

42. See Hepatitis C: General Information, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION (2015), available at <http://www.cdc.gov/hepatitis/HCV/PDFs/HepCGeneralFactSheet.pdf> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019).

43. See Hepatitis C: General Information, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION (2015), available at <http://www.cdc.gov/hepatitis/HCV/PDFs/HepCGeneralFactSheet.pdf> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019).

4. Methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus Aureus (“MRSA”)

Staphylococcus (staph) is a kind of bacteria that can cause a variety of health problems, ranging from minor skin irritation to, more rarely, deadly infections.⁴⁴ Methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus aureus, or MRSA, is a kind of staph not easily treatable with the antibiotics that normally cure a staph infection.⁴⁵ Many people carry staph bacteria in their nose without getting sick.⁴⁶ The illness can develop if the bacteria enter the skin, often through a scratch, scrape, or other minor wound.⁴⁷ Most cases of MRSA happen in healthcare settings like hospitals, but MRSA is also likely to spread in crowded living conditions, including in dormitories, athletic facilities, and correctional facilities.⁴⁸

The first symptom of MRSA is usually a skin infection easily mistaken for a pimple, boil, or insect bite.⁴⁹ The infection may be painful, swollen, red, or produce pus.⁵⁰ It can develop into a large abscess or blister.⁵¹ MRSA can usually be treated by either draining the wound or taking antibiotics.⁵² Do not drain the wound yourself because that can cause the infection to spread.⁵³ The infection may return even after treatment.⁵⁴

MRSA and other staph infections can be spread to other people through direct physical contact or, less commonly, through contact with an infected surface or object.⁵⁵ You can reduce the risk of infection by keeping wounds clean, dry, and covered.⁵⁶ It is also important to keep shared surfaces clean, to wash your hands often (especially after touching a wound), and to avoid sharing personal items like razors and clothing.⁵⁷ If you suspect you have MRSA, it is especially important to seek treatment if

44. See Staph Infections—Overview, MAYO CLINIC, available at <https://www.mayoclinic.org/diseases-conditions/staph-infections/symptoms-causes/syc-20356221> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019).

45. See Methicillin-Resistant Staphylococcus Aureus (MRSA) Infections—General Information, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <http://www.cdc.gov/mrsa/community/index.html> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019).

46. See Staph Infections—Overview, MAYO CLINIC, available at <https://www.mayoclinic.org/diseases-conditions/staph-infections/symptoms-causes/syc-20356221> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019).

47. See Methicillin-Resistant Staphylococcus Aureus (MRSA) Infections—General Information, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <http://www.cdc.gov/mrsa/community/index.html> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019).

48. See Peter Eisler, Dangerous MRSA Bacteria Expand into Communities, USA TODAY (Dec. 16, 2013, 6:16 PM), available at <https://www.usatoday.com/story/news/nation/2013/12/16/mrsa-infection-community-schools-victims-doctors/3991833/> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019).

49. Tara Parker-Pope, MRSA Warning Signs and Preventive Measures, N.Y. TIMES, Oct. 27, 2007, at B4, available at <http://www.nytimes.com/2007/10/27/nyregion/27mrsa.html> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019).

50. Methicillin-Resistant Staphylococcus Aureus (MRSA) Infections—General Information, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <http://www.cdc.gov/mrsa/community/index.html> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019).

51. Tara Parker-Pope, MRSA Warning Signs and Preventive Measures, N.Y. TIMES, Oct. 27, 2007, at B4, available at <http://www.nytimes.com/2007/10/27/nyregion/27mrsa.html> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019).

52. See Staph Infections—Overview, MAYO CLINIC, available at <https://www.mayoclinic.org/diseases-conditions/staph-infections/symptoms-causes/syc-20356221> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019) (noting that strains of MRSA still respond to certain antibiotics).

53. Tara Parker-Pope, MRSA Warning Signs and Preventive Measures, N.Y. TIMES, Oct. 27, 2007, at B4, available at <http://www.nytimes.com/2007/10/27/nyregion/27mrsa.html> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019).

54. Learning About MRSA: A Guide for Patients, MINN. DEPT. OF HEALTH, available at <https://www.health.state.mn.us/diseases/staph/mrsa/book.html> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019).

55. FED. BUREAU OF PRISONS, MANAGEMENT OF METHICILLIN-RESISTANT STAPHYLOCOCCUS AUREUS (MRSA) INFECTIONS, FEDERAL BUREAU OF PRISONS CLINICAL PRACTICE GUIDELINES, at 28 (2012), available at <https://www.bop.gov/resources/pdfs/mrsa.pdf> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019).

56. See Methicillin-Resistant Staphylococcus Aureus (MRSA) Infections—General Information, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <http://www.cdc.gov/mrsa/community/index.html> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019).

57. See Methicillin-Resistant Staphylococcus Aureus (MRSA) Infections—General Information, CTRS. FOR DISEASE CONTROL & PREVENTION, available at <http://www.cdc.gov/mrsa/community/index.html> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019).

you have HIV or another immune-system disorder, because a MRSA infection may lead to more serious problems.⁵⁸

C. Constitutional Rights in a Prison Setting

The rest of this Chapter discusses your rights to treatment for and protection from infectious diseases in prison. It also explains when and how a correctional facility can limit your rights to treatment and protection. This Part explains the general legal standard that courts use to determine if a prison policy is constitutionally valid. Knowing the rule will help you better understand the court decisions in this Chapter.

In general, correctional facilities can limit your constitutional rights if their actions are “reasonably related to a legitimate penological (meaning, prison-related) interest.”⁵⁹ To decide if a prison policy has a legitimate penological interest, courts look at four factors:⁶⁰

- (1) The existence of a valid, rational connection between the prison policy and a legitimate state interest (which means that the state has a real or good reason for the policy);⁶¹
- (2) Whether alternative means of exercising the right are limited (which means that there is another way you can exercise your constitutional right);⁶²
- (3) The impact that allowing exercise of the right will have on guards, other incarcerated people, or the allocation of prison resources (which means that a court will look at how your constitutional right affects guards, other incarcerated people and the prison’s resources, like the prison’s money or visitor safety);⁶³ and
- (4) Whether the prison policy or regulation is an exaggerated response to prison concerns, as shown by the ready availability of alternative means of exercising the right (which means that a court will consider if the policy is an extreme reaction to the prison’s concern).⁶⁴

These four factors are often referred to as the Turner standard, because the Supreme Court first used them in the case Turner v. Safley.⁶⁵

If you think a prison policy illegally violates your constitutional rights, you may want to argue that “there is no legitimate penological interest which justifies the violation” which means that there is no real reason for the prison to limit your constitutional right so their policy is illegal. At the least, you can argue that the interest is not “reasonably related” to the actions or policy of the prison officials.

58. See Divya Ahuja & Helmut Albrecht, HIV and Community-Acquired MRSA, J. WATCH (Feb. 9, 2009), available at <https://www.jwatch.org/ac200902090000001/2009/02/09/hiv-and-community-acquired-mrsa> (last visited Oct. 6, 2019).

59. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 87, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987) (superseded by statute) (holding that prison systems’ regulations of marriages between incarcerated people and incarcerated person-to-incarcerated person correspondence must meet a “reasonable relationship” standard).

60. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89–91, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79–80 (1987) (superseded by statute).

61. See, e.g., Beard v. Banks, 548 U.S. 521, 530, 126 S. Ct. 2572, 2578, 165 L. Ed. 2d 697, 706 (2006) (finding that the prohibition on access to newspapers, magazines, and personal photographs was necessary in order to motivate better behavior on the part of incarcerated people who had already been deprived of almost all privileges).

62. See, e.g., Overton v. Bazzetta, 539 U.S. 126, 135, 123 S. Ct. 2162, 2169, 156 L. Ed. 2d 162, 172 (2003) (holding restrictions on incarcerated people’s visitation rights to be legitimate when restricted incarcerated people have available alternative means of exercising the right of association, even if those alternative means (letters, telephone calls, and messages sent through those permitted to visit) are not ideal).

63. See, e.g., Overton v. Bazzetta, 539 U.S. 126, 135, 123 S. Ct. 2162, 2169, 156 L. Ed. 2d 162, 172 (2003) (stating that courts will be “particularly deferential” to prison administrators’ regulatory judgments” where the allocation of prison resources and the safety of visitors, guards, and other incarcerated people are implicated).

64. See, e.g., Overton v. Bazzetta, 539 U.S. 126, 136, 123 S. Ct. 2162, 2169–2170, 156 L. Ed. 2d 162, 172–173 (2003) (finding that, although Turner requires looking to whether the prison policy is an exaggerated response, Turner does not impose a least restrictive alternative test).

65. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64 (1987) (superseded by statute).

This is different from saying there is no legitimate interest because you're saying that the prison has a real interest, but limiting your rights has nothing to do with it. You can also try to argue that there are other ways for the prison to achieve their goal without limiting your constitutional rights.

D. Legal Rights Concerning Testing for Infectious Diseases

1. Involuntary Testing

Mandatory testing policies, or testing that you are required to do, are different depending on which state you are in. States may also have different policies for different diseases. For example, a state may require incarcerated people to take a TB test but not an HIV test. If you are outside New York State, you should check your state's laws to find out what its testing policies are. Because courts find that the prevention of disease is a legitimate state interest under the Turner standard discussed above, courts will generally allow prisons to test you for infectious diseases, even without your consent (which means that you can be tested even if you do not voluntarily agree to testing).⁶⁶

(a) HIV Testing

In New York State prisons, you normally cannot be tested for HIV without your consent (which means that you will not be tested unless you voluntarily agree).⁶⁷ But, if you are convicted of certain sex offenses, you can be tested for HIV against your will if the victim requests that you be tested.⁶⁸ You will be given your test results, and the results will also be sent to the victim, and possibly to the victim's immediate family, guardian, physicians, attorneys, and medical or mental health providers. Past and future contacts of the victim may also be notified if there has been a risk of HIV transmission to that contact.⁶⁹ Your test results cannot be used against you in a civil or criminal proceeding if they are related to the events that caused you to be convicted.⁷⁰

Federal prisons, unlike New York State prisons, can require you to undergo HIV testing, although federal prisons do not test all incarcerated people. If you have a sentence of six months or longer, and if medical personnel think you might have HIV, they may require you to take an HIV test.⁷¹ If you refuse the test, you might receive an incident report for failing to follow an order.⁷² Also, if you refuse HIV testing, you may not be able to file a claim for failure to receive adequate medical care for HIV.⁷³ Additionally, federal prisons conduct mandatory random testing once a year. If you test positive, the prison cannot subject you to disciplinary action based solely on your results, though you may be punished if you are caught performing an act that could transmit the disease.⁷⁴ Also, federal prisons

66. See, e.g., Rossi v. Portuondo, 277 A.D.2d 526, 527, 714 N.Y.S.2d 816, 817 (3d Dept. 2000).

67. N.Y. PUB. HEALTH LAW § 2781(1) (McKinney 2012) (stating that consent must be “written” and “informed” from a person who is capable of consenting; if the person is incapable, someone authorized by law may consent for the person). See McLain v. Grosso, 31 A.D.3d 765, 766, 820 N.Y.S.2d 93, 94 (2d Dept. 2006) (holding that a prison could not administer an HIV test on an incarcerated person because according to § 2781(1), “HIV-related testing is prohibited without the written informed consent of the person to be tested, except as authorized by CPLR 3121 or otherwise specifically permitted by statute”). See also Siegrist v. State, 55 A.D.3d 717, 718, 868 N.Y.S.2d 670, 671 (2d Dept. 2008) (explaining that a nurse could not administer an HIV test to an incarcerated person in a coma because the incarcerated person could not consent to the test).

68. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 390.15(1)(a) (McKinney 2018) (stating that the sex offense must be an act of “sexual intercourse,” “oral sexual conduct,” or “anal sexual conduct” as defined by N.Y. Penal Law § 130.00).

69. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 390.15(6)(a)(ii) (McKinney 2018).

70. N.Y. CRIM. PROC. LAW § 390.15(8) (McKinney 2018).

71. 28 C.F.R. § 549.12(a)(1) (2020).

72. 28 C.F.R. § 549.12(a)(1) (2020). See Chapter 18 of the JLM, “Your Rights at Prison Disciplinary Hearings,” for more information about the consequences of prison incident reports.

73. Walker v. Peters, 989 F. Supp. 971, 975 (N.D. Ill. 1997) (finding that deprivation of HIV medication cannot be considered deliberate indifference unless incarcerated person has received a positive HIV test first). See Chapter 23 of the JLM, “Your Right to Adequate Medical Care,” for more information on the deliberate indifference standard.

74. 28 C.F.R. § 549.13(c) (2020).

can test you if you are being considered for release, parole, good conduct time release, furlough, or placement in a community-based program. If you test positive, the prison cannot deny you participation in activities and programs just because of the result.⁷⁵

Outside of New York State, many states conduct involuntary HIV tests when you enter prison,⁷⁶ during custody, and/or upon your impending release.⁷⁷ Involuntary HIV testing has been challenged in court on the basis of the Eighth Amendment, which prohibits cruel and unusual punishment, the Fourth Amendment, which prohibits unreasonable searches and seizures, the right to privacy, and the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. However, courts tend to uphold involuntary testing because it is reasonably related to a “legitimate penological interest,” which means that it is a valid interest for the prison to have.⁷⁸

(b) TB Testing

While HIV cannot be passed from person to person by casual contact, TB is spread through the air. So, prison TB testing policies are usually different from prison HIV testing policies. In New York State, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision (“DOCCS”) policy requires all incarcerated people entering prison to be tested for TB. The TB screening includes a chest x-ray and a skin test, where a small amount of purified protein derivative (“PPD”) is injected beneath your skin and observed for a reaction. After the initial test, you will be re-tested yearly. If you refuse testing, medical personnel will tell you about the benefits of the test. If you still refuse, then you will be placed in medical keeplock (also known as “tuberculin (TB) hold”) for up to a year until you have received three negative chest x-rays or you agree to be tested. While in TB hold, you are only allowed one hour of solitary exercise per day and three showers a week. You will lose your telephone privileges but you can receive visits from lawyers.⁷⁹

Courts have generally upheld the New York State DOCCS TB testing policy against challenges claiming that the policy violates the Fourth Amendment protection against unreasonable searches and challenges claiming the policy violates the Eighth Amendment prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment. This is because courts think the policy is reasonably related to preventing the spread of TB in prisons.⁸⁰ Additionally, some courts have said mandatory TB testing or confinement in TB hold

75. See 28 C.F.R. § 549.13(b) (2020) (stating that incarcerated people may be limited in programming if they have an infectious disease that can be transferred through casual conduct. HIV cannot be transmitted through casual conduct). See also 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1 (stating generally that the government shall not impose “substantial burdens” on the religious activity of incarcerated people unless the government can show that such burdens further a compelling governmental interest using the least restrictive means possible). Various circuits have their own tests for “substantial burden.” This is limited to federally funded programs available to institutionalized persons. See also 42 U.S.C. § 2000d-4a(1)(A) (defining “program or activity” as “all of the operations of a department, agency, special purpose district, or other instrumentality of a state or local government”). Note that this only applies to religious activity, which means that this law does not prevent you from being excluded from a nonreligious activity if you test positive for HIV. But, you may still be excluded from religious activities if the government can show a compelling interest in doing so.

76. Alabama, Georgia, Idaho, and Missouri are among the states that mandate testing of incarcerated people entering the prison system. See ALA. CODE § 22-11A-17(a) (LexisNexis 2019) (subjecting all persons sentenced to confinement or imprisonment for more than 30 consecutive days to mandatory testing); GA. CODE ANN. § 42-5-52.1(b) (2009); IDAHO CODE § 39-604(1) (2013); MO. ANN. STAT. § 191.659(1) (2003).

77. Alabama, Idaho, and Missouri are among the states that test upon release. See ALA. CODE § 22-11A-17(a) (LexisNexis 2019); IDAHO CODE ANN. § 39-604(1) (2013); MO. ANN. STAT. § 191.659(1) (2003).

78. See, e.g., Dunn v. White, 880 F.2d 1188, 1196–1198 (10th Cir. 1989) (finding no 1st, 4th, or 14th Amendment constitutional violations when incarcerated person claimed he was threatened with disciplinary segregation if he failed to submit to the HIV blood test even though he claimed his religious beliefs did not allow the test).

79. See N.Y. Dept. of Corr. Servs., Request for Proposals #2016-11, at 133 (2016), available at http://www.doccs.ny.gov/pdf/RFP_2016-11_Operation_of_a_Skilled_Nursing_Services_Program.pdf (Last visited Oct. 13, 2019); Smith v. Wright, No. 9:06-CV-00401 (FJS/DEP), 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109058, at *5–6 (N.D.N.Y. Aug. 31, 2011) (describing the conditions and rules for TB hold).

80. See Smith v. Wright, No. 9:06-CV-00401, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109058, at *60–62 (N.D.N.Y. Aug. 31, is legal even if the test is against the incarcerated person's religious beliefs.⁸¹ However, DOCCS TB policy states that the prison may, though is not required to, make changes to the TB test if the prison can do this without putting other incarcerated people's and staff's health in significant danger.⁸² According to the policy, if you refuse the PPD test because of your religion, you will be placed in TB hold while the Chief Medical Officer decides if you are telling the truth. If the Chief Medical Officer thinks that you actually hold a religious belief that prohibits PPD testing, he may ask you to take a blood test and chest x-ray instead of the skin test. You will remain in TB hold until the results of the blood test, chest x-ray, and physical examination show that you do not have latent TB (TB that is hidden because you do not have any symptoms).⁸³

If the TB test is against your religion and you want to challenge the policy as a violation of your First Amendment right to free exercise of religion, you should try to show how the policy, as applied to you, does not make sense.⁸⁴ If you have submitted to the test in the past or are willing to undergo a 2011) (unpublished) (stating that DOCS has a strong, legitimate interest in containing contagious diseases, including TB, within its facilities and that confinement in keeplock under normal conditions does not constitute a violation of an incarcerated person's 8th Amendment rights); Lee v. Frederick 519 F. Supp. 2d 320, 327 (W.D.N.Y. 2007) (finding that incarcerated person's 8th Amendment rights were not violated when he was placed on TB hold because, while plaintiff did suffer some loss of his freedom of movement, he did not present evidence that he suffered a serious deprivation of his rights or that defendants acted with the required state of mind associated with the "unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain"); Delisser v. Goord, No. 9:02-CV-00073 (FJS/GLS), 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 488, at *4, *16, *18–19, *22–23 (N.D.N.Y. Jan. 15, 2003) (unpublished) (holding that an incarcerated person, who was placed in TB hold for a total of 52 days for refusing to submit to PPD test and then for refusing to take TB medication, did not suffer a violation of his 8th or 14th Amendment rights); Word v. Croce, 169 F. Supp. 2d 219, 222, 222 n.1, 225, 230 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (finding that where plaintiff alleged violations of the 4th Amendment because she was put on TB hold, her claims were more appropriately brought under the 8th Amendment, but also finding that the TB hold was not a violation of her constitutional rights); Davidson v. Kelly, No. 96-2066, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 33796, at *4–5, *8 (2d Cir. Nov. 24, 1997) (unpublished) (holding that placing an incarcerated person in TB hold for three days until he agreed to be tested for TB did not violate the incarcerated person's 8th Amendment rights because it furthered a legitimate penological (prison-related) interest).

81. See Smith v. Wright, No. 9:06-CV-00401, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109058, at *49–53 (N.D.N.Y. Aug. 31, 2011) (unpublished) (stating that DOCS amended its testing policy in 2004 to accommodate those with religious objections to the PPD test and there is no case law for concluding it to violate the 1st Amendment); Redd v. Wright, 597 F.3d 532, 537 (2d Cir. 2010) (finding that the TB policy was motivated by a legitimate public health concern, not animus, and so did not target incarcerated people for engaging in a religious practice); Rossi v. Portuondo, 277 A.D.2d 526, 527, 714 N.Y.S.2d 816, 817 (3d Dept. 2000) (holding that giving incarcerated people the option of testing or being placed in medical confinement is "reasonably related" to the "legitimate penological interest" of preventing the spread of the disease; therefore, the testing policy did not violate incarcerated person's 1st Amendment right to free exercise of religion).

82. See Smith v. Wright, No. 9:06-CV-00401, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109058, at *53–54 n.26 (N.D.N.Y. Aug. 31, 2011) (unpublished).

83. See Smith v. Wright, No. 9:06-CV-00401, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109058, at *6–8 (N.D.N.Y. Aug. 31, 2011) (unpublished).

84. Reynolds v. Goord, 103 F. Supp. 2d 316, 337 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (holding that Rastafarian incarcerated person who expected to be in tuberculin hold for a year after refusing a TB test showed a clear likelihood of proving at trial that the prison policy as applied to him violated his 1st Amendment rights because it was a substantial burden on his constitutional rights). Note that an incarcerated person making a 1st Amendment claim in this context must frame the 1st Amendment right as one that is clearly established and not too generalized. See, e.g., Redd v. Wright, 597 F.3d 532, 536 (2d Cir. 2010) (holding that, if the court can determine that the rights were not clearly established at the time of the alleged violation, the court is not required to determine if the incarcerated person's rights are violated under the 1st Amendment). If you are incarcerated in federal prison, also see Jolly v. Coughlin, 76 F.3d 468, 478–480 (2d Cir. 1996) (stating that prison officials likely violated the incarcerated person's religious freedom under the Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA), 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000bb–bb-4). If you are incarcerated in state prison, however, RFRA is no longer good law and Jolly will not apply to your case. City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507, 117 S. Ct. 2157, 138 L. Ed. 2d 624 (1997). After RFRA was declared unconstitutional as applied to states, some states enacted state laws modeled on RFRA to fill the gap. If you are incarcerated in state prison, you should check to see if your state has enacted a "mini-RFRA" state law. If you are a state or federal incarcerated person, you may also be able to make an argument under the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA) which states that "[n]o government shall impose a substantial chest x-ray, you might increase your chances of winning.⁸⁵ Although courts do not always agree with incarcerated people's Eighth Amendment claims, you may also be able to argue that being placed on TB hold is a violation of your Eighth Amendment right to be free from cruel and unusual punishment. This is especially true if your prison's ventilation system does not prevent the air in your cell from getting to other incarcerated people or staff. You might be able to argue that the keeplock policy should not be applied to you because the air from your cell can still reach others through the vents, which means that your confinement does not help protect others' safety.⁸⁶

If you are in a federal prison, you must undergo a PPD test and possibly a chest x-ray when you enter the facility.⁸⁷ If you refuse both tests, the prison will test you without your consent, meaning that the prison can test you even if you do not agree to take the test.⁸⁸ Refusing to be tested may result in an incident report, although you will not be placed in medical isolation unless the prison has a reason to think you have TB.⁸⁹

(c) Hepatitis B and Hepatitis C

New York State requires prisons to offer HCV (which means Hepatitis C virus) testing for all incarcerated persons born between 1945 and 1965. It also suggests prisons offer such testing to all burden on the religious exercise of a person residing in or confined to an institution" unless the government establishes that the burden furthers "a compelling governmental interest," and does so by "the least restrictive means." 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1(a)(1)-(2). For a discussion of a possible RLUIPA argument, see Johnson v. Sherman, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 24098, at *6-7, *14 (E.D. Cal. Apr. 2, 2007) (unpublished) ("Preventing the spread of tuberculosis among the closely confined population within the prison by use of the least restrictive means possible greatly outweighs the harm posed to the plaintiff by submitting to the skin test. While the harm to plaintiff's ability to practice his belief is no doubt burdened, the CDCR has a grave responsibility to protect the inmate populations confined within its prisons from the spread of a highly contagious and debilitating disease.").

85. See Selah v. Goord, 255 F. Supp. 2d 42, 54-55 (N.D.N.Y. 2003) (holding DOCS TB policy as applied to petitioner was irrational since he had been tested while incarcerated); Word v. Croce, No. 00 CIV. 6496 (SAS), 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 9071, at *10-13 (S.D.N.Y. July 5, 2001) (unpublished) (describing that it is DOCS practice to exempt an incarcerated person from TB hold if he who refuses the PPD test on religious grounds undergoes a chest x-ray instead); Reynolds v. Goord, 103 F. Supp. 2d 316, 337 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (holding that Rastafarian incarcerated person who expected to be in TB hold for a year after refusing a PPD test showed a clear likelihood of proving at trial that the prison policy as applied violated his 1st Amendment rights).

86. Smith v. Wright, No. 9:06-CV-00401, 2011 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 109058, at *23-24 (N.D.N.Y. Aug. 31, 2011) (unpublished) (indicating that the 8th Amendment could be violated by keeplock confinement if it deprived an incarcerated person of a basic human need); Jolly v. Coughlin, 76 F.3d 468, 480 (2d Cir. 1996) (finding a substantial likelihood of an 8th Amendment violation when New York State prison officials placed an incarcerated person in "medical keeplock" for three-and-a-half years, after the incarcerated person refused to undergo a TB test for religious reasons). In Jolly, the court considered these facts: (1) incarcerated people who refused to be tested were placed in medical keeplock; (2) medical keeplock did not involve "respiratory isolation" and thus did not reduce the risks of infection; (3) incarcerated people were allowed to leave their cells only once each week for a 10-minute shower and could leave for meetings with counsel; and (4) plaintiff suffered headaches, hair loss, rashes, and difficulty standing or walking due to his confinement. Jolly v. Coughlin, 76 F.3d 468, 472 (2d Cir. 1996). Although the portion of Jolly addressing RFRA violations is no longer good law for people incarcerated in state prison (see footnote 72), it is still good law for both state and federal incarcerated people for arguments based on Eight Amendment violations.

87. FED. BUREAU OF PRISONS, U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE, PROGRAM STATEMENT P6190.04, INFECTIOUS DISEASE MANAGEMENT 7 (2014), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/6190_004.pdf (last visited Oct. 5, 2019); see also Washington v. Cambra, No. 96-16925, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 30072, at *2-3 (9th Cir. 1998) (unpublished table decision) (holding that the policy of conducting TB tests was reasonably related to the legitimate penological goal of detecting and containing TB).

88. See, e.g., Ballard v. Woodard, 641 F. Supp. 432, 437 (W.D.N.C. 1986) (performing a PPD test without an incarcerated person's consent does not constitute the denial of any federal constitutional rights where the prison had a legitimate interest in "orderly and uniform implementation" of the test); Dunn v. Zenk, No. 1:07-CV-2007-RLV, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73891, at *9 (N.D. Ga. Oct. 1, 2007) (unpublished) (holding that involuntary testing for TB does not violate incarcerated person's constitutional rights).

89. FED. BUREAU OF PRISONS, U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE, PROGRAM STATEMENT P6190.04, INFECTIOUS DISEASE MANAGEMENT 9 (2014), available at http://www.bop.gov/policy/progstat/6190_004.pdf (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

incarcerated persons who are determined to be at high risk.⁹⁰ You may be considered to be at high risk of Hepatitis B or Hepatitis C if you have a history of any of the following: HIV, intravenous drug use (which means drugs that are injected), intranasal cocaine use (inhaling cocaine through your nose), sexually-transmitted diseases, blood transfusions before July 1992, hemodialysis, infusion of clotting factor before 1987, tattoos or body piercing with non-sterile equipment, solid organ transplants, or symptoms of hepatitis.

In New York State, during your initial health screening, you may be offered a hepatitis A or hepatitis B vaccine, and the New York State Department of Health recommends vaccination for hepatitis A and B if you have already been diagnosed with hepatitis C. The policies surrounding access and qualifications for these vaccines vary from facility to facility so check with your doctors and nurses about what is available.⁹¹

If you are in a federal prison, you will be screened to determine if you have HBV or HCV. Like the TB policy in the federal prison system discussed in Part (D)(1)(b), refusal to take the test will result in an incident report.

(d) MRSA

The Federal Bureau of Prisons recommends that all incarcerated people should be checked for skin infections at their initial intake screening and also after returning from the hospital.⁹² Incarcerated people at high risk for MRSA infections are supposed to be screened at all routine medical examinations.⁹³ Incarcerated people with HIV, diabetes, or open wounds are considered high risk for MRSA.

2. Right to Testing upon Request

(a) HIV Testing

Many states provide HIV tests for incarcerated people upon request. If you are denied a test, you might want to challenge the denial as a violation of the correctional facility's own policy. In New York State prisons, you will be offered a test when you first enter the facility. Also, anonymous testing (which means a test where you do not include your identity) is available through the Criminal Justice Initiative ("CJI").⁹⁴

If you are incarcerated in federal prison, you can request HIV testing, but only once per year.⁹⁵ Some federal courts do not recognize the constitutional right to HIV testing, especially if you cannot give a reason for why you think you might have HIV.⁹⁶ But, even in those courts, you may have an

90. See N.Y. Dept. of Health, DOH Review of Corrections HIV and HCV Policy and Procedures 14, 18 (2015).

91. See N.Y. Dept. of Health, "Hepatitis C in Prison and Jail", available at https://www.health.ny.gov/diseases/aids/providers/corrections/docs/hcv_inmate_brochure.pdf.

92. FED. BUREAU OF PRISONS, U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE, MANAGEMENT OF METHICILLIN-RESISTANT STAPHYLOCOCCUS AUREUS (MRSA) INFECTIONS—CLINICAL PRACTICE GUIDELINES 2 (2012), available at <https://www.bop.gov/resources/pdfs/mrsa.pdf> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

93. FED. BUREAU OF PRISONS, U.S. DEPT. OF JUSTICE, MANAGEMENT OF METHICILLIN-RESISTANT STAPHYLOCOCCUS AUREUS (MRSA) INFECTIONS—CLINICAL PRACTICE GUIDELINES 2 (2012), available at <https://www.bop.gov/resources/pdfs/mrsa.pdf> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

94. The Criminal Justice Initiative is a project funded by the New York Department of Health's AIDS Institute. Community-based organizations go into prisons and provide tests, counseling, peer education, and discharge planning through the initiative. Criminal Justice Initiative, HIV/STD/HCV Prevention and Related Services, N.Y. DEPT. OF HEALTH, <https://www.health.ny.gov/diseases/aids/general/about/prevsup.htm#cji> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

95. 28 C.F.R. § 549.12(a)(4) (2020).

96. See St. Hilaire v. Lewis, No. 93-15129, 1994 U.S. App. LEXIS 14867, at *9–10 (9th Cir. June 7, 1994) (unpublished) (finding no constitutional violation for failure to provide an HIV test because incarcerated person was not a member of a high-risk group and had no alleged exposure to HIV); Doe v. Wigginton, 21 F.3d 733, 738–739 (6th Cir. 1994) (finding no 8th Amendment violation where an incarcerated person was refused an HIV test).

Eighth Amendment claim if you are high-risk and are denied an HIV test, because this will prevent you from getting proper medical care. Additionally, if your prison has listed standards for who should get an HIV test and you meet them but are refused a test, you may have a claim.⁹⁷ You should check to see how the courts in your state have decided this issue.

(b) Hepatitis

While there is no right to be tested for Hepatitis B specifically, if you are a federal incarcerated person given a work assignment which staff think might expose you to blood or bodily fluids, you should be offered the Hepatitis B vaccine.⁹⁸

(c) MRSA

If you have a skin infection that you think may be caused by MRSA, you can ask to be tested. If you were recently hospitalized, you may be specifically instructed to self-report any skin infections or fevers for a few weeks after.⁹⁹

3. Consequences of Testing Positive for HIV in New York

States have different rules about what happens after an incarcerated person tests positive for HIV. New York State has had the HIV Reporting and Partner Notification (HIVRPN) law since 2000.¹⁰⁰ This law requires doctors and other medical providers (including the laboratories doing the tests) to report to the Department of Health the names of people infected with HIV, HIV-related illness, or AIDS.¹⁰¹ The information is supposed to remain confidential.¹⁰² However, New York regulations allow for HIV status to be given to employees or agents of the Division of Probation and Correctional Alternatives, Division of Parole, Commission of Correction, or any local probation department. An incarcerated person's HIV status can only be given to people who need the information in order to because the state policy required an HIV test only if an incarcerated person “provides a presumptive history of exposure” and the incarcerated person did not provide such information).

97. See Doe v. Wigginton, 21 F.3d 733, 739–740 (6th Cir. 1994) (holding the prison did not violate the 8th or 14th Amendments for refusing to test for HIV on request because the prison could reasonably limit the testing based on an incarcerated person's history, medical symptoms, prior drug use, or sexual activity). It is possible the court would have allowed Doe's claim if he had given officials information indicating that he met the criteria for testing and was still refused a test.

98. 28 C.F.R. § 549.15(b) (2020) (providing that an incarcerated person given a work assignment with risk of exposure to blood or bodily fluids will receive annual training to reduce exposures and be offered vaccination for Hepatitis B).

99. See Fed. Bureau of Prisons, U.S. Dept. of Justice, Management of Methicillin-Resistant Staphylococcus aureus (MRSA) Infections (2012), available at <https://www.bop.gov/resources/pdfs/mrsa.pdf> (last visited Oct. 14, 2019).

100. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 10, §§ 63.1–63.11 (2020). See also What You Need to Know about the Law, N.Y. Dept. of Health, http://www.health.ny.gov/diseases/aids/regulations/reporting_and_notification/about_the_law.htm#quest1 (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

101. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 10, § 63.4(a)(1) (2020). See also What You Need to Know about the Law, N.Y. Dept. of Health, http://www.health.ny.gov/diseases/aids/regulations/reporting_and_notification/about_the_law.htm#quest1 (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

102. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 10, § 63.6 (2020). See also What You Need to Know about the Law, N.Y. Dept. of Health, http://www.health.ny.gov/diseases/aids/regulations/reporting_and_notification/about_the_law.htm#quest1 (last visited Oct. 5, 2019) (“Under the law, identifying information about people with HIV infection is ONLY to be used to help the Health Department track the epidemic and for partner notification. The Health Department will NOT disclose this information to other government or private agencies like...police, welfare, insurance companies or landlords.”). The Health Department will also not disclose this information to Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE).

carry out their jobs.¹⁰³ If you are diagnosed with an HIV-related illness, your medical care provider will ask for the names of your spouse, sexual partners, and/or needle-sharing partners.¹⁰⁴ If you provide those names, those individuals will receive notice they are at risk of being infected with HIV,¹⁰⁵ and they will be offered counseling and HIV testing.¹⁰⁶ Your name will not be given to them.¹⁰⁷ You have the right to refuse to tell your doctor the names of your partners, and will not face any legal penalty (civil or criminal) if you choose not to share this information.¹⁰⁸

E. Legal Rights and Prevention of Infectious Diseases

1. Prevention and Prison Policy

The government has a responsibility to give medical care to incarcerated people.¹⁰⁹ This duty may also include protecting incarcerated people from infectious diseases, such as TB.¹¹⁰ But, it is also very important to take the necessary precautions to protect yourself and others from disease. If you have anal, vaginal, or oral sex, it is extremely important to use latex condoms in order to protect yourself against HIV infection and other sexually-transmitted diseases. This is particularly important in the prison system, where more people are HIV-positive. Very few jails or prisons provide condoms for incarcerated people. A few jails in Los Angeles, New York City, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Washington, D.C., Mississippi, and Vermont supply condoms on a limited basis.¹¹¹

Prisons have some duty to prevent MRSA's spread once they know the infection is present within the prison. As an incarcerated person, you have limited options to make the prison protect you. If you show that the prison is "deliberately indifferent" to your serious medical needs, you can bring an Eighth Amendment claim against the jail or prison for failing to protect you from MRSA.¹¹² Courts generally say that prisons do not have to take every possible measure to prevent MRSA's spread. As long as a prison takes reasonable steps, you will not be able to make a constitutional claim by showing that the prison could have done more to protect you.¹¹³

103. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 10, § 63.6(a)(13) (2020).

104. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 10, § 63.8(a)(3) (2020).

105. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 10, § 63.8(a)(3) (2020).

106. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 10, § 63.8(g) (2020).

107. N.Y. COMP. CODES R. & REGS. tit. 10, §§ 63.6(b)(3), 63.8(a)(3) (2020).

108. What You Need to Know about the Law, N.Y. Dept. of Health, http://www.health.ny.gov/diseases/aids/regulations/reporting_and_notification/about_the_law.htm#quest1 (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

109. See Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 103, 97 S. Ct. 285, 290, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 259 (1976) (confirming "the government's obligation to provide medical care for those whom it is punishing by incarceration"). See JLM Chapter 23 for more information on a prison's duty to provide medical care and what you can do if you are not receiving proper care.

110. See Lareau v. Manson, 651 F.2d 96, 109 (2d Cir. 1981) (finding that a prison's failure to adequately screen incoming incarcerated people constituted a serious "threat to the well-being of the inmates," and because defendants lacked justification for the policy the practice was considered punishment under the Due Process clause); Smith v. Sullivan, 553 F.2d 373, 380 (5th Cir. 1977) (holding that though a prison is not required to conduct medical exams on incarcerated people within 36 hours of entering the facility, leaving persons with communicable or contagious diseases, like scabies or gonorrhea, among other incarcerated people for a month or more without medical care, violated the standard of adequate medical services).

111. Beth Shuster, Sheriff Approves Handout of Condoms to Gay Inmates, L.A. Times, Nov. 30, 2001, at A38, available at <http://articles.latimes.com/2001/nov/30/news/mn-10008>. George Lavender, California Prisons Aim to Keep Sex Between Inmates Safe, If Illegal, Npr, Jan. 21, 2015, available at <https://www.npr.org/2015/01/21/378678167/california-prisons-aim-to-keep-sex-between-inmates-safe-if-illegal>.

112. See Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 104, 97 S. Ct. 285, 291, 50 L. Ed. 2d. 251, 260 (1976).

113. See Lopez v. McGrath, No. C 04-4782 MHP, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 39409 at *24–25 (N.D. Cal. May 31, 2007) (unpublished) (stating that while taking more hygienic measures would have reduced the risk of infection, there is no evidence they were necessary to reduce risk to the plaintiff to acceptable levels); Walker v. Floyd County, No. 4:07-CV-0014-SEB-WGH, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 56134 at *25–27 (S.D. Ind. July 31, 2007) (unpublished) (holding that a showing that there were additional measures a prison could have taken to stop MRSA's spread is not enough to demonstrate a constitutional violation).

2. Segregation of Incarcerated People with Infectious Diseases

(a) Mandatory Segregation

(i) Mandatory Segregation of Incarcerated People with TB

Prisons may want to segregate (separate) incarcerated people with infectious diseases from other incarcerated people to prevent the disease's spread. This type of segregation is often mandatory and involves separate housing. New York State law allows prison officials to separate incarcerated people if a "contagious disease" (which means a disease that spreads easily) becomes widespread.¹¹⁴ But, New York law also says that all incarcerated people who are "sick shall receive all necessary care and medical assistance," and that all such incarcerated people should be transferred back to the general population as soon as possible.¹¹⁵

Because TB can be spread through the air, the law often treats incarcerated people with TB differently from incarcerated people who have other diseases. Normally, prisons can separate incarcerated people who are suffering from TB to prevent the spread.¹¹⁶ New York City law even allows non-incarcerated persons infected with TB to be detained in a hospital in certain circumstances.¹¹⁷ DOCCS TB policy requires incarcerated people with contagious TB to be placed in respiratory isolation. If you are in respiratory isolation, you are only allowed to leave the area for certain medical treatment and you will have to wear a surgical mask.¹¹⁸

(ii) Mandatory Segregation of Incarcerated People with HIV

Because HIV does not spread as easily as TB, New York state prisons¹¹⁹ and federal prisons¹²⁰ do not decide housing or program assignments based only on HIV status. New York prisons are not allowed to automatically separate HIV-positive incarcerated people. New York state courts have found 114. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 141 (McKinney 2014).

115. N.Y. CORRECT. LAW § 141 (McKinney 2014).

116. See Washington v. Cambra, No. 96–16925, 1998 U.S. App. LEXIS 30072, at *3 (9th Cir 1998) (unpublished) (holding that a policy of testing incarcerated people twice for TB is reasonably related to the legitimate penological goal of detecting and containing TB and that the second test did not violate the incarcerated person's rights under the 8th or 14th Amendments); Davidson v. Kelly, No. 96–2066, 1997 U.S. App. LEXIS 33796, at *4 (2d Cir. Nov. 24, 1997) (unpublished) (holding that placing an incarcerated person in TB hold for three days until he agreed to be tested for TB did not violate the incarcerated person's 8th Amendment rights because it furthered a legitimate penological interest); McCormick v. Stalder, 105 F.3d 1059, 1061–1062 (5th Cir. 1997) (holding that prison policy requiring TB patients to be medicated or isolated was reasonably related to legitimate penological interests); Dunn v. Zenk, No. 1:07-CV-2007-RLV, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 73891, at *9 (N.D. Ga. 2007) (unpublished) (holding that states have a legitimate penological interest in controlling the spread of tuberculosis so that the involuntary administration of a TB test does not offend the Constitution); Delisser v. Goord, No. 9:02-CV-00073 (FJS/GLS), 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 488, at *16, *18–19, *23 (N.D.N.Y. Jan. 15, 2003) (unpublished) (holding that incarcerated person, who was placed in TB hold for a total of ninety-three days for refusing to submit to PPD test and then for refusing to take TB medication, did not suffer a violation of his 8th or 14th Amendment rights).

117. See 24 RCNY Health Code § 11.21(d)(1) (2018) (authorizing "the removal to and/or detention in a hospital or other treatment facility for appropriate examination for tuberculosis of a person who has active tuberculosis or who is suspected of having active tuberculosis and who is unable or unwilling voluntarily to submit to such examination by a physician or by the Department"); City of New York v. Doe, 205 A.D.2d 469, 470, 614 N.Y.S.2d 8, 9 (1st Dept. 1994) (holding that a patient could be detained pursuant to then-New York City Health Code § 11.47 where there was no less restrictive way to treat patient's TB infection).

118. DIV. OF HEALTH SERVS., NEW YORK DEPT. OF CORR. SERVICES, HEALTH SERVICES POLICY MANUAL: TUBERCULOSIS, § 1.18 at 10–11 (June 21, 2004).

119. See, e.g., Nolley v. Erie, 776 F. Supp. 715, 719 (W.D.N.Y. 1991) (noting that "DOCS stopped isolating HIV+ inmates from the general population in 1987").

120. 28 C.F.R. § 549.13(c) (2020) ("Except as provided for in disciplinary policy, no special or separate housing units may be established for HIV-positive inmates."). However, as a person incarcerated in federal prison, you can be placed in controlled housing if there is reasonable evidence that you will pose a health risk to others. 28 C.F.R. § 541.61 (2020).

that mandatory segregation because of your HIV status violates your right to privacy—specifically, your right to medical confidentiality. This is because housing in an AIDS unit tells other incarcerated people and staff that you are HIV-positive.¹²¹ If you are incarcerated in federal prison and have HIV or AIDS, the prison can only separate you if prison officials have reasonable evidence to think that you pose a health risk.¹²² For more information on confidentiality issues, see Part F of this Chapter, and for information regarding discriminatory treatment based on your health status, see Part H of this Chapter.

Although New York prisons cannot separate HIV-positive incarcerated people, some states say that all HIV-infected incarcerated people must live separately from other incarcerated people. Many courts outside of New York have upheld prisons' decisions to separate HIV-positive incarcerated people. Courts generally think that segregation is a reasonable way to prevent other incarcerated people from getting HIV, and courts consider preventing the spread of HIV to be a legitimate interest of prisons.¹²³ Additionally, at least one federal court of appeals found that there is a high risk of HIV spreading in prison. In that case, the prison did not present evidence that HIV spread between incarcerated people, but the court thought that because there was high-risk behavior in the prison—like intravenous drug use, sex, and violence—this was enough to prove that there was a significant risk of HIV spreading.¹²⁴ The court also rejected the incarcerated people's argument that the prison should either hire more corrections officers or identify incarcerated people who were both HIV-positive and also likely to engage in high-risk conduct. The court found that these two suggestions were unreasonable and created an "undue hardship" on the prison facility.¹²⁵ The court's ruling might make it more difficult to argue that your segregation because of your HIV-positive status is unconstitutional.

(iii) Mandatory Segregation of Incarcerated People with MRSA

Prisons may segregate incarcerated people who have active MRSA infections to prevent the spread of the infection to others through contact. But the Federal Bureau of Prisons generally says that incarcerated people do not need to be housed separately if they have MRSA wounds that are not draining or that can be easily covered with bandages.¹²⁶ As the infection becomes more serious or develops into MRSA pneumonia, separate housing may be recommended or required.¹²⁷ A prison may have the right to threaten you with solitary confinement if you refuse to accept the prison's prescribed treatment for your MRSA infection.¹²⁸

121. See Nolley v. Erie, 776 F. Supp. 715, 733–736 (W.D.N.Y. 1991) (holding that segregating HIV-positive incarcerated people violated constitutional and statutory rights to privacy because HIV status was improperly disclosed to non-medical personnel); Doe v. Coughlin, 697 F. Supp. 1234, 1240–1241 (N.D.N.Y. 1988) (holding that involuntary segregation of incarcerated people with HIV or AIDS violates incarcerated people's right to privacy).

122. 28 C.F.R. § 541.61 (2020).

123. See, e.g., Moore v. Mabus, 976 F.2d 268, 271 (5th Cir. 1992) (holding that Mississippi prisons had reasonable interests in segregating HIV-positive incarcerated people, and that segregation did not violate rights to privacy, equal protection, or due process).

124. Onishea v. Hopper, 171 F.3d 1289, 1299 (11th Cir. 1999) (holding that risk of HIV transmission justified segregation of HIV-positive incarcerated people, including exclusion from programs and activities offered to other incarcerated people).

125. Onishea v. Hopper, 171 F.3d 1289, 1302–1304 (11th Cir. 1999) (finding that the cost of special programs to reduce the risk of HIV transmission would be too high).

126. See Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Management of Methicillin-Resistant Staphylococcus Aureus (MRSA) Infections—Clinical Practice Guidelines 33 (2012), available at <http://www.bop.gov/resources/pdfs/mrsa.pdf> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

127. See Fed. Bureau of Prisons, Management of Methicillin-Resistant Staphylococcus Aureus (MRSA) Infections—Clinical Practice Guidelines 33 (2012), available at <http://www.bop.gov/resources/pdfs/mrsa.pdf> (last visited Oct. 5, 2019).

128. See Keller v. County of Bucks, No. 05-2146, 209 F. App'x 201, 205–206 (3d Cir. 2006) (unpublished) (holding that it was not a constitutional violation to isolate a pre-trial detainee who refused treatment for a MRSA infection when the isolation was medically determined); Munoz v. Fortner, No. 6:07cv170, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS

(iv) Segregation Requested by Incarcerated People

If you are afraid of contracting an infectious disease, read Part B of this Chapter to get a sense of the steps that you can take to protect yourself. In general, incarcerated people who are afraid of getting infectious diseases from other incarcerated people have not been able to successfully sue prison officials. Some incarcerated people have tried to get prisons to separate other incarcerated people who are infected with a communicable disease, but these incarcerated people have been generally unsuccessful. Incarcerated people who already are infected have also been unsuccessful when they request that the prison give them a single cell or vaccinate other incarcerated people so that they do not spread their diseases.¹²⁹ Courts will generally support a prison's decision not to separate incarcerated people with HIV-related illnesses.¹³⁰

Although prisons may have a legal responsibility to protect incarcerated people from exposure to communicable diseases,¹³¹ to win a lawsuit against prison officials for exposing you to infectious diseases, you must prove that: (1) there was a specific and significant risk of infection, and (2) prison officials were aware of that risk, but disregarded it.¹³² In order to win this kind of a lawsuit, you must show that there is a significant possibility that you will contract the virus or disease. For example, some courts have decided against a prison when incarcerated people are housed with people who have known MRSA infections. In order to meet the standard, however, the infected incarcerated person must have open wounds that are not being adequately covered or cleaned and that are likely to infect other incarcerated people.¹³³ You will not win if you only have a general fear of getting the virus.

91543, at *20–21 (E.D. Tex. Dec. 13, 2007) (unpublished) (holding that it does not violate the Constitution to threaten to put incarcerated people in isolation who have MRSA and do not comply with recommended treatment).

129. Johnson v. Horn, 782 A.2d 1073, 1076–1077 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 2001) (refusing to give court order forcing prison officials to assign incarcerated person to a single cell so he would not spread hepatitis C to other incarcerated people).

130. See Glick v. Henderson, 855 F.2d 536, 539–540 (8th Cir. 1988) (holding that incarcerated person's fear of contracting HIV either through sharing work assignments with an HIV-infected incarcerated person or through eating food that might have been prepared by an HIV-infected incarcerated person was not sufficient to justify an order to segregate HIV-infected incarcerated people); Deutsch v. Fed. Bureau of Prisons, 737 F. Supp. 261, 267–268 (S.D.N.Y. 1990), aff'd, 930 F.2d 909 (2d Cir. 1991) (holding that incarcerated person did not have the right to have another HIV-positive incarcerated person segregated unless the incarcerated person poses a known health risk).

131. See Hutto v. Finney, 437 U.S. 678, 682–688, 98 S. Ct 2565, 2569–2572, 57 L. Ed. 2d 522, 529–533 (1978) (finding prison conditions unconstitutional under the Eight Amendment where, among other concerns, incarcerated people in “punitive isolation” were crowded into cells and some had infectious conditions such as hepatitis and venereal diseases); Lareau v. Manson, 651 F.2d 96, 109 (2d Cir. 1981) (finding that prison's failure to adequately screen incoming incarcerated people violated the due process and Eight Amendment rights of other incarcerated people) [overruled in part]; Smith v. Sullivan, 553 F.2d 373, 380 (5th Cir. 1977) (stating that leaving persons with communicable or contagious diseases, such as scabies or gonorrhea, without medical attention for over a month and in the midst of other incarcerated people violated the required standard of adequate medical services).

132. See Massick v. N. Cent. Corr. Facility, 136 F.3d 580, 581 (8th Cir. 1998) (holding that there was no Eight Amendment violation when prison officials placed the plaintiff in a cell with an HIV-positive incarcerated person, who had open bleeding wounds, without warning the plaintiff of his cellmate's HIV status; the court found no constitutional violation, because the risk of plaintiff contracting HIV was small and because prison officials acted reasonably by granting plaintiff's request to change cellmates); Billman v. Ind. Dept. of Corr., 56 F.3d 785, 788–789 (7th Cir. 1995) (holding that prison officials who knowingly and without warning assigned an incarcerated person to share a cell with an HIV-positive incarcerated person with a known propensity to rape, constitutes an Eight Amendment violation due to the official's “deliberate indifference” to the “fear and humiliation inflicted by the rape and the fear of contracting the AIDS virus”); DeGidio v. Pung, 920 F.2d 525, 532–533 (8th Cir. 1990) (holding that prison officials' pattern of reckless or negligent responses to tuberculosis outbreaks was sufficient to constitute deliberate indifference, violating the Eight Amendment).

133. See Lopez v. McGrath, No. C 04-4782 MHP, 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30409 (N.D. Cal. May 31, 2007) (unpublished) (finding an issue of fact where plaintiff claimed that administrators knew medical staff were putting incarcerated people with MRSA infections back into the general population, possibly creating “substantial risk” to other incarcerated people); Kimble v. Tennis, No. 4:CV-05-1871, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 36285 (M.D. Pa.

Additionally, the Prison Litigation Reform Act (“PLRA”) makes winning money damages even more difficult. Under the PLRA, if you seek money damages, you will have to show you were physically injured, not just mentally or emotionally injured, or placed at an increased risk of being infected. For more information on the PLRA, see JLM Chapter 14, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act.”

F. Legal Rights and Confidentiality

Under the U.S. Constitution, you have a right to privacy (a “privacy interest”) regarding the disclosure of personal matters.¹³⁴ For information about your medical privacy, please see Part E(3) of JLM Chapter 23, “Your Right to Adequate Medical Care.”

Incarcerated people with infectious diseases generally have a limited right to have information about their medical condition kept confidential. Some courts have held that the right to medical confidentiality also applies to an individual’s HIV status.¹³⁵ But, other courts have held that there is no constitutional right to privacy regarding HIV status.¹³⁶ If you are in federal prison, your HIV test results, if positive, must be disclosed to the prison’s employees.¹³⁷

In New York state, your HIV-related information cannot be disclosed to anyone other than you and certain individuals or institutions who are authorized to know by law.¹³⁸ Individuals who are authorized to receive your HIV information include health care providers (when knowledge is necessary to provide you with adequate care),¹³⁹ employees of the Division of Parole,¹⁴⁰ employees of the Division of Probation and Correctional Alternatives or local probation department,¹⁴¹ the medical director of the local correctional facility,¹⁴² or an employee or agent of the Commission of Correction.¹⁴³ These authorized individuals are allowed to access your HIV information only if they need the information to carry out their duties and functions.¹⁴⁴

In New York, incarcerated people have won lawsuits that found statutory and constitutional rights violations when their HIV status was improperly disclosed. In particular, it is not allowed for a prison official to disclose your HIV status to other incarcerated people or non-medical personnel.¹⁴⁵ The courts

June 5, 2006) (unpublished) (holding that evidence that prison doctor authorized release of a MRSA-infected incarcerated person with open sores to the general population may be sufficient to support a claim of deliberate indifference).

134. See Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589, 599–600, 97 S. Ct. 869, 876, 51 L. Ed. 2d 64, 73 (1977) (finding that the U.S. Constitution protects your right to make personal decisions about the disclosure of your personal information) (non-prison case); O’Connor v. Pierson, 426 F.3d 187, 201 (2d Cir. 2005) (“Medical information in general, and information about a person’s psychiatric health and substance-abuse history in particular, is information of the most intimate kind.”) (non-prison case).

135. See Doe v. Delie, 257 F.3d 309, 315–317 (3d Cir. 2001) (finding incarcerated people have a right to medical privacy and that the right is “particularly strong” regarding one’s HIV status); Doe v. New York, 15 F.3d 264, 267 (2d Cir. 1994) (“Individuals who are infected with the HIV virus clearly possess a constitutional right to privacy regarding their condition.”).

136. See, e.g., Sherman v. Jones, 258 F. Supp. 2d 440, 444 (E.D. Va. 2003) (holding that there is no constitutional right to privacy of HIV status and noting that different circuit courts have reached different conclusions on this issue).

137. 28 C.F.R. § 549.14 (2020).

138. N.Y. PUB. HEALTH LAW § 2782 (McKinney 2012). State agencies authorized to obtain confidential HIV-related information should have regulations to prevent discrimination, prohibit unauthorized disclosure, and establish rules for determining who should receive the information and when. N.Y. PUB. HEALTH LAW § 2786(2)(a) (McKinney 2012).

139. N.Y. PUB. HEALTH LAW § 2782(1)(d) (McKinney 2012).

140. N.Y. PUB. HEALTH LAW § 2782(1)(l) (McKinney 2012).

141. N.Y. PUB. HEALTH LAW § 2782(1)(m) (McKinney 2012).

142. N.Y. PUB. HEALTH LAW § 2782(1)(n) (McKinney 2012).

143. N.Y. PUB. HEALTH LAW § 2782(1)(o) (McKinney 2012).

144. N.Y. PUB. HEALTH LAW §§ 2782(1)(l)–(o) (McKinney 2012).

145. See Lipinski v. Skinner, 781 F. Supp. 131, 140 (N.D.N.Y. 1991) (allowing incarcerated person to force protected media sources to give deposition testimony in connection with lawsuit against law enforcement officials and prison officials when they disclosed incarcerated person’s HIV status to a newspaper); Matter of V. v. New seem to permit disclosure of your HIV status only if such disclosure is reasonably related to legitimate prison interests, like protecting incarcerated people or corrections officers from infection. But unnecessary disclosure of such information for humor or gossip violates your constitutional rights.¹⁴⁶

In other jurisdictions, courts are divided about medical privacy. Some courts find that an incarcerated person's right to medical privacy is not that strong.¹⁴⁷ Other courts protect medical privacy rights for incarcerated people and people who are arrested.¹⁴⁸ But now that the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) has been passed, similar cases brought today might turn out differently. For more information on the PLRA, see Chapter 14 of the JLM. It is important to remember that the PLRA requires a showing of physical injury, not just mental or emotional injury, to recover monetary damages. Thus, to be successful in a lawsuit, you would probably have to prove that the prison official's actions physically injured you. Some courts may require you to show the harm is likely to occur again in order to get injunctions (orders requiring officials to stop or change a policy).¹⁴⁹

G. Legal Rights and Medical Treatment

1. Right to Medical Treatment

If you are denied medical treatment for an infectious disease, you may have a claim that the prison violated your rights under the Eighth Amendment. The Eighth Amendment protects you from cruel and unusual punishment. To win an Eighth Amendment claim, you must prove that prison officials showed "deliberate indifference" to your "serious medical needs."¹⁵⁰ It is important to remember that York, 150 Misc. 2d 156, 157–158, 566 N.Y.S.2d 987, 988–989 (N.Y. Ct. Cl. 1991) (holding that an incarcerated person stated a proper claim for relief when he accused his prison of improperly revealing his HIV information); Doe v. Coughlin, 697 F. Supp. 1234, 1240–1241 (N.D.N.Y. 1988) (temporarily forbidding a plan to segregate AIDS-infected incarcerated people, because it would disclose their AIDS status and therefore violate their right to privacy). But see Cordero v. Coughlin, 607 F. Supp. 9, 11 (S.D.N.Y. 1984) (holding that a plan which segregated incarcerated people with AIDS did not violate the incarcerated people's 1st Amendment right to privacy, because the right to privacy is limited by the prison's needs and by the incarcerated people's confinement).

146. See Powell v. Schriver, 175 F.3d 107, 112–113 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding that a prison official does not violate an incarcerated person's right to medical privacy, if the official's actions are reasonably related to legitimate prison interests. A prison official does violate an incarcerated person's medical privacy if he discloses an incarcerated person's medical information as gossip or a joke); see also Baez v. Rapping, 680 F. Supp. 112, 115 (S.D.N.Y. 1988) (holding that prison officials did not violate an incarcerated person's right to confidentiality when they warned other officials to avoid contact with incarcerated person's body fluids). But see Nolley v. Erie, 776 F. Supp. 715, 725–728 (W.D.N.Y. 1991) (holding that a policy of putting red stickers on HIV-positive incarcerated people's possessions, and therefore revealing incarcerated people's HIV status, violated privacy rights under New York law).

147. See Anderson v. Romero, 72 F.3d 518, 523–524 (7th Cir. 1995) (holding that incarcerated people do not have a constitutional right to the confidentiality of their HIV status, especially in light of the fact that HIV-positive incarcerated people could be identified when segregated from the rest of the prison population); Doe v. Wigginton, 21 F.3d 733, 740 (6th Cir. 1994) (holding that the incarcerated person's right to privacy was not violated when a corrections officer opened his file in the presence of other witnesses after the incarcerated person refused to answer questions about his medical condition); Adams v. Drew, 906 F. Supp. 1050, 1055–1058 (E.D. Va. 1995) (stating that prison officials' unintentional disclosure of incarcerated person's HIV status to another incarcerated person did not violate right to privacy).

148. See A.L.A. v. W. Valley City, 26 F.3d 989, 990–991 (10th Cir. 1994) (stating that an arrestee brought a valid claim against the police for disclosing that he was HIV-positive to his family and strangers, even though it was later found that the arrestee was not HIV-positive).

149. See Davis v. District of Columbia, 158 F.3d 1342, 1346–1347 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (holding that an HIV-positive incarcerated person could not obtain an injunction against prison officials for the unauthorized disclosure of his medical files because he could not show a threat that it might happen again).

150. See Chance v. Armstrong, 143 F.3d 698, 702 (2d Cir. 1998) (describing the standard for bringing an 8th Amendment claim for failure to receive proper medical care) (citing Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 104, 97 S. Ct. 285, 291, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 260 (1976)). HIV and hepatitis are generally considered "serious medical needs." Brown v. Johnson, 387 F.3d 1344, 1351 (11th Cir. 2004) (finding that the PLRA did not deprive the incarcerated person of his right to amend his complaint that defendants had withdrawn his prescribed medications and were deliberately indifferent to his serious medical needs).

courts do not think that every claim of inadequate medical care is bad enough to be a constitutional violation.¹⁵¹ But a few courts have held that a denial of prescribed AIDS or hepatitis C medical treatment does violate an incarcerated person's constitutional rights.¹⁵² See Chapter 23 of the JLM, "Your Right to Adequate Medical Care," for more information on how to bring an Eighth Amendment claim for failure to provide adequate medical treatment.

Courts generally do not believe incarcerated people have a constitutional right to a private doctor or experimental medication.¹⁵³ You may still be able to get experimental drugs, but you will probably not have an Eighth Amendment claim against your facility if it does not prescribe them for you. But some prisons have participated in clinical trials for anti-retroviral therapy for AIDS. To take part in such trials, you must first get approval from the Institutional Review Board of the testing site and your prison's medical department.¹⁵⁴

If you believe that your health is suffering because you are being wrongfully denied medication, you will probably have to show that the medical community agrees that this medication will help your condition. Otherwise, the court may see your claim as a simple disagreement between you and the prison doctor.¹⁵⁵ If you want to bring a claim about medical treatment or medication that was denied to you sometime in the past, a court may look back to see what the accepted medical practices were at that time.¹⁵⁶

If you got medical treatment, but you think that a prison doctor incorrectly diagnosed your condition, it will be hard to bring a successful case against the prison officials. In the past, courts have

151. See Smith v. Carpenter, 316 F.3d 178, 184, 186–87 (2d Cir. 2003) (citing Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 104, 97 S. Ct. 285, 291, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 260 (1976)) (holding that brief interruptions of HIV medications, with no noticeable bad effects, was not a denial of serious medical needs. However, the court also noted that a showing of increased risk, even without noticeable symptoms, might be serious enough to be denial of medical care).

152. See Montgomery v. Pinchak, 294 F.3d 492, 500 (3d Cir. 2002) (finding HIV-positive incarcerated person's claim regarding violation of his right to adequate medical treatment had merit and holding that, because HIV is a life-threatening disease if left untreated, the incarcerated person had met the serious medical need prong of Estelle v. Gamble). But see Johnson v. Wright, 412 F.3d 398 (2d Cir. 2005) (finding that although a facility's refusal to give an incarcerated person the medication most incarcerated people received for hepatitis C because he had used illegal drugs constituted deliberate indifference, there was medical reason for denying the prison therapy); Niemiec v. Maloney, 448 F. Supp. 2d 270 (9th Cir. 2006) (finding that the denial of a medicine subsequent to a failed drug test does not violate Due Process under the 14th Amendment, especially given that a decision to deny the medicine to active drug users is in accord with medical custom).

153. See Chance v. Armstrong, 143 F.3d 698, 703 (2d Cir. 1998) ("[M]ere disagreement over the proper treatment does not create a constitutional claim."); McKenna v. Wright, No. 01 Civ. 6571 (WK), 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3489 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 4, 2002) (unpublished) (dismissing plaintiff's claim on the basis that the doctor's treatment decision was his medical judgment and consistent with current medical literature); Carter v. Cash, No. 92-CV-5526 (JG), 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 22209 (E.D.N.Y. May 31, 1995) (unpublished) (finding that incarcerated person was not entitled to medication of his choice if doctor decided, based on his professional judgment, that it would not be in the incarcerated person's best interest).

154. You can find information about clinical trials from publications such as the American Foundation for AIDS Research ("AMFAR") AIDS/HIV Treatment Direction. AMFAR's contact information is included in Appendix A at the end of this chapter.

155. See Perkins v. Kan. Dept. of Corrs., 165 F.3d 803, 811 (10th Cir. 1999) (upholding the denial of protease inhibitor to incarcerated person with HIV because other treatment was provided); Loch v. County of Bucks, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 62620, at *10–11 (E.D. Pa. Sept. 1, 2006), No. 03-cv-4833, 2006 WL 2559296, at *3, available at <http://www.paed.uscourts.gov/documents/opinions/06D1114P.pdf> at 5 (last visited Oct. 6, 2019) (holding that an incarcerated person who had been treated for conditions including MRSA did not assert a constitutional violation simply because they claim the treatment they received was inadequate); Matthews v. Crosby, No. 3-06-CV-38, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35049, at *7 (N.D. Fla. May 31, 2006) (holding that a complete denial of available treatment, but not a dispute over the care received, could be a constitutional violation).

156. See Parker v. Proffit, Civ. A. No. 94-00815-R, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15941, at *19 (W.D. Va. Oct. 27, 1995) (unpublished) (evaluating denial of medication by standards of medical treatment at time of denial); Adams v. Poag, 61 F.3d 1537, 1543 (11th Cir. 1995) (holding that to show a prison official's actions were deliberately indifferent, a plaintiff could produce opinions of medical experts stating that the official's actions were contrary to medical practices accepted at the time).

dismissed cases for different reasons. One reason could be because the incarcerated person could not prove that the prison officials had personal involvement.¹⁵⁷ In other cases, the incarcerated person could not show any physical harm or the incarcerated person could not show that his needs were ignored.¹⁵⁸

If you have hepatitis C and prison officials determine that you should receive a certain treatment for a certain length of time, and you are then denied that treatment, you may have a claim under the Eighth Amendment. The first requirements to bring a claim will be met if you can say that being denied the prescribed treatment is risking your life by not treating your disease.¹⁵⁹ You do not have to also claim that you have suffered a separate harm in addition to your disease in order to bring your claim.¹⁶⁰ Meeting these requirements allows you to begin your case, but does not mean that you will win. You will still need to show that there was “deliberate indifference” to your medical needs.¹⁶¹

This does not change the rule that courts do not like to question doctors’ medical decisions. If you have received treatment for hepatitis C but think you should have been given different treatment,¹⁶² or if your doctors said you do not have a condition requiring any treatment, this rule will not allow you to bring suit.¹⁶³

2. Right to Refuse Medical Treatment

Some people, for a variety of reasons, choose to refuse medical treatment. Competent people—people who can think and understand well enough to make medical decisions for themselves—have the right to refuse treatment, even if it means they will die as a result.¹⁶⁴ However, your right to refuse treatment is limited as an incarcerated person.¹⁶⁵ Most courts have held that prisons can treat TB-

157. See Timmons v. N.Y. State Dept. of Corr. Servs., 887 F. Supp. 576, 580 (S.D.N.Y. 1995) (holding an incarcerated person’s bringing a claim against prison officials for misdiagnosing him with HIV in 1986 had not shown the officials had any personal involvement in the alleged violations and was thus not entitled to relief under 42 U.S.C. § 1983). Section 1983 governs suits against prison officials for federal statutory and constitutional violations and is described in detail in JLM Chapter 16, “Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Law.”

158. See Smith v. Carpenter, 316 F.3d 178, 184 (2d Cir. 2003) (dismissing 8th Amendment claim because incarcerated person failed to show that he suffered any adverse medical effects from the sporadic lack of treatment).

159. See Erickson v. Pardus, 551 U.S. 89, 93, 127 S. Ct. 2197, 2200, 167 L. Ed. 2d 1081, 1085 (2007) (holding that the pleading requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 8(a)(2) were met by statements that an incarcerated person with hepatitis C had been removed from his prescribed course of treatment and denied all treatment for his disease due to suspicion of drug use).

160. See Erickson v. Pardus, 551 U.S. 89, 93, 127 S. Ct. 2197, 2200, 167 L. Ed. 2d 1081, 1085 (2007) (stating that allegations (that is, the incarcerated person’s claims of harm) in complaint were sufficient to bring an initial claim and that no claim of “cognizable independent harm” (that is, separate harm) apart from removal from treatment is required).

161. See Estelle v. Gamble, 429 U.S. 97, 104, 97 S. Ct. 285, 291, 50 L. Ed. 2d 251, 260 (1976).

162. See Loukas v. Mich. Dept. of Corr., No. 2-07-CV-142, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14724, at *2 (W.D. Mich. Feb. 27, 2008) (holding that an incarcerated person who has received medical care, but just questions whether the treatment he has been receiving is adequate, does not have an 8th Amendment claim).

163. See Hix v. Tenn. Dept. of Corr., 196 Fed.App’x. 350, 357 n.1 (6th Cir. 2006) (stating that hepatitis C does not require treatment in all cases, and a difference of opinion over medical treatment does not violate the 8th Amendment).

164. For New York law, see N.Y. Pub. Health Law §§ 2960–2979 (McKinney 2007) (“Orders Not to Resuscitate”) (regulating right of “adult with capacity” to direct issuance of orders not to resuscitate); N.Y. Pub. Health Law §§ 2980–2994 (McKinney 2007) (“Health Care Agents and Proxies”) (allowing appointment of agents to make important health care decisions including the refusal of life-saving treatment for the appointer); Quill v. Koppell, 870 F. Supp. 78, 84 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) (“It is established under New York law that a competent person may refuse medical treatment, even if the withdrawal of such treatment will result in death.”). See also Quill v. Vacco, 80 F.3d 716 (2d Cir. 1996) (holding that physicians can prescribe death-inducing drugs for mentally competent patients who wish to end their lives during the end stages of terminal illness. This case could help the argument that a competent person may refuse medical treatment, even if such refusal will result in death).

165. See Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 223–227, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1037–1040, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178 infected incarcerated people without their consent.¹⁶⁶ Courts balance your interest in refusing treatment with the prison's "legitimate penological interest" in preventing the spread of disease. Courts will also consider whether the prison's actions are reasonably related to the prison's interests. If you do not have a disease that is transmitted through air, the prison will have a weaker argument for forcing you to take medication than if you have a disease such as TB that is easily spread. See Part C of Chapter 29, "Special Issues for Prisoners with Mental Illness," for more information about your right to refuse medical treatment.

H. Discriminatory Treatment and Infectious Diseases

1. Constitutional Rights

The Fourteenth Amendment may protect you from being discriminated against for having an infectious disease. For example, your rights under the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment prohibit discrimination by the state that is not rationally related to a legitimate purpose.¹⁶⁷ The Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment forbids the prison facility from taking away your life, liberty, or property without due process of law.¹⁶⁸ The Eighth Amendment protects you from "cruel and unusual punishment."¹⁶⁹ Keep in mind, however, that the courts balance these constitutional rights against legitimate penological interests,¹⁷⁰ which may allow prison officials to lawfully infringe upon or violate your rights. Prison policies are valid if they are reasonably related to a legitimate penological (prison-related) interest; however, the prison is required to use the least restrictive means of achieving the goals of the policy.¹⁷¹

(1990) (recognizing 14th Amendment right to refuse medical treatment, using Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89–91, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64 (1987) (superseded by statute), balancing incarcerated person's rights against the state's duty to treat mentally ill incarcerated people and protect the safety of incarcerated people and correction officers, and finding the state did not deprive right to refuse treatment without due process).

166. See McCormick v. Stalder, 105 F.3d 1059, 1062 (5th Cir. 1997) (holding that prison officials did not violate the 8th Amendment when they required an incarcerated person with TB to undergo drug therapy without his consent).

167. U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 1 ("No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.").

168. U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 1. ("No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.").

169. U.S. CONST. amend. VIII ("Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.").

170. See Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89–91, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64 (1987) (superseded by statute) (analyzing whether prison regulations that burden fundamental rights are "reasonably related" to legitimate penological objectives).

171. See Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 91, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 80 (1987) (superseded by statute) ("But if an inmate claimant can point to an alternative that fully accommodates the prisoner's rights at de minimis cost to valid penological interests, a court may consider that as evidence that the regulation does not satisfy the reasonable relationship standard." This means if an incarcerated person can point to a different procedure not requiring more money or time, the alternative can be used as evidence that the challenged policy is not reasonable); Perkins v. Kan. Dept. of Corr., 165 F.3d 803, 810–11 (10th Cir. 1999) (holding HIV-positive incarcerated person could claim a constitutional violation for being forced to wear a face mask whenever he left his cell and noting that wearing such a mask could become a humiliating form of branding that violated the 8th Amendment's prohibition of punishing individuals for a physical condition). But see Parker v. Proffit, Civ. A. No. 94-00815-R, 1995 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 15941, at *19–21 (W.D. Va. Oct. 27, 1995) (unpublished) (stating that making an HIV-positive incarcerated person wear a mask and protective clothing may have caused some embarrassment, but the practice did not rise to a constitutional violation of the 8th Amendment prohibition on cruel and unusual punishment).

If you bring a suit challenging a prison practice under the Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process Clause, you must prove you were entitled to something the prison took away.¹⁷² Any entitlement must be created by state law. If you think you are entitled to something, you should first determine whether or not a state statute or regulation gives you a right to that entitlement. Also know that prison officials can treat incarcerated people with infectious diseases differently from other incarcerated people if they have legitimate penological interests in doing so;¹⁷³ however, the reasons must be rational and not purely discriminatory.

The Fourteenth Amendment only applies to the states, but the Fifth Amendment's Due Process Clause protects your rights against the federal government. If you are in a federal prison, you might also consider bringing your lawsuit under federal statutes, instead of under the Fifth Amendment.

2. Statutory Rights

Certain laws protect you from forms of discrimination based on disabilities, including HIV status. The Federal Rehabilitation Act of 1973 ("FRA") prohibits discrimination, or denial of programs or benefits based on disability, by a federal, state, or local government agency, or any recipient of federal funding.¹⁷⁴ Similarly, the Americans with Disabilities Act ("ADA") prohibits public and private entities from discriminating, excluding, or denying services, programs, or activities to a person with a disability.¹⁷⁵ These laws recognize TB and HIV infection as a form of disability because they are physical impairments limiting major life activities.¹⁷⁶ Also, in Bragdon v. Abbott, the Supreme Court clearly stated that under the ADA, "HIV infection satisfies the . . . definition of a physical impairment during every stage of the disease."¹⁷⁷

Although HIV is viewed as a disability according to the FRA and the ADA, your rights are limited to some extent if: (1) your HIV infection poses a significant risk to the health or safety of others; or (2)

172. See Anderson v. Romero, 72 F.3d 518, 527 (7th Cir. 1995). (ruling that a state statute making prisons provide "barber facilities" gave the plaintiff an entitlement to a haircut, and keeping plaintiff from this entitlement because of his HIV status deprived him of his property and liberty rights under the 14th Amendment's Due Process Clause).

173. See Laureano v. Vega, No. 92 Civ. 6056 (LMM), 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2107, at *23–24 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 23, 1994) (unpublished), aff'd, 40 F.3d 1237 (2d Cir. 1994) (rejecting incarcerated person's claim that he had received difficult work assignments because of his HIV status; holding that he had failed to establish any retaliatory motive by prison officials and that there is no right to a particular prison job); Farmer v. Moritsugu, 742 F. Supp. 525, 528 (W.D. Wis. 1990) (finding that prison had legitimate interest in maintaining security and order and therefore refusal of HIV-infected incarcerated person's request for food service job was not denial of equal protection); Doe v. Coughlin, 71 N.Y.2d 48, 54, 56, 60, 518 N.E.2d 536, 540, 541, 544, 523 N.Y.S.2d 782, 786, 787, 790 (1987) (upholding prison officials' refusal to allow an incarcerated person with AIDS to participate in a Family Reunion Program and holding that incarcerated person's privacy rights and his rights under the Due Process Clause and the Equal Protection Clause had not been violated, reasoning that there is no right to marital relations and that the prison officials had a rational basis to believe that such visits would help the spread of a disease). Note, however, the New York State Department of Corrections and Community Supervision's official policy does not currently deny participation in the Family Reunion Program based solely on the HIV status of the incarcerated person. Instead, there is a special review of each incarcerated person's application because of potential health risks to the visitor. N.Y. Comp. Codes R. & Regs. tit. 7 §§ 220.2–220.9.

174. 29 U.S.C. §§ 701(a)–(c).

175. 42 U.S.C. § 12132.

176. 28 C.F.R. §§ 35.108(a)(1)(i), (b)(2) (2018) ("Physical or mental impairment includes, but is not limited to, contagious and non-contagious diseases and conditions such as . . . [HIV disease] (whether symptomatic or asymptomatic), tuberculosis . . ."); 42 U.S.C. § 12102(1)(A)–(C) ("The term 'disability' means . . . a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more of the major life activities of such individual; a record of such impairment; or being regarded as having such an impairment.").

177. See Bragdon v. Abbott, 524 U.S. 624, 637, 118 S. Ct. 2196, 2204, 141 L. Ed. 2d 540, 556–57 (1998). This case was about a dentist's refusal to examine an HIV-infected patient in his office. Though the facts did not involve incarcerated people, the legal principle is the same regarding HIV infection as a disability. For a lower court decision finding an HIV-positive incarcerated person disabled under the FRA and ADA, see, e.g., Dean v. Knowles, 912 F. Supp. 519, 521 (S.D. Fla. 1996).

it would be an undue hardship on the prison facility to accommodate your needs.¹⁷⁸ Also, the U.S. Supreme Court has decided that individuals cannot recover monetary damages from the state for its failure to comply with the ADA.¹⁷⁹ However, you can still seek injunctive relief, which means that you can file a claim in which you ask the court to require the state to end practices that violate the ADA.¹⁸⁰

If you are suing for violation of your statutory rights, you should cite both the FRA and the ADA, since the remedies, procedures, and rights are the same under both laws.¹⁸¹ The only difference is the FRA only applies to public (government) entities while the ADA can support a claim against both private and public entities. You should also check the law of your state and city since sometimes states and localities enact additional laws to protect people with communicable diseases, like HIV or hepatitis, from discrimination. In New York State, the Executive Law prohibits discrimination in several settings against people who carry diseases like HIV or hepatitis.¹⁸² If you are suing in New York, you should review New York law to see if it applies to your circumstances.

Most prison facilities are controlled and financed by federal, state, or local governments, so the ADA and FRA usually apply to prison facilities. Furthermore, the U.S. Supreme Court has stated the ADA and FRA prohibit discrimination in the prison system.¹⁸³ This means prison facilities cannot exclude or deny incarcerated people “benefits of the services, programs, or activities of a public entity” or subject them to discrimination.¹⁸⁴ Benefits include recreational activities, medical services, and educational and vocational programs.¹⁸⁵

However, when a court evaluates a prison policy, it will consider whether the restriction is reasonably related to a legitimate penological interest.¹⁸⁶ When a prison is defending a policy, it only has to show that the possibility of a risk exists; it does not have to demonstrate that the risk has actually occurred. Examples of interests cited by prison authorities include prison safety and undue financial or administrative burden.¹⁸⁷

178. See Onishea v. Hopper, 171 F.3d 1289, 1297–1299, 1305 (11th Cir. 1999) (holding any amount of risk through a “specific and theoretically sound means of possible transmission” is a significant risk, and allowing segregation of HIV-positive incarcerated people).

179. See Bd. of Trs. of the Univ. of Ala. v. Garrett, 531 U.S. 356, 374, 121 S. Ct. 955, 968, 148 L. Ed. 2d 866, 884 (2001) (holding Alabama State employees could not recover damages because of state’s failure to comply with the ADA).

180. See Bd. of Trs. of the Univ. of Ala. v. Garrett, 531 U.S. 356, 374 n.9, 121 S. Ct. 955, 968 n.9, 148 L. Ed. 2d 866, 884 n.9 (2001) (“[ADA] standards can be enforced by . . . private individuals in actions for injunctive relief.”).

181. 42 U.S.C. § 12133 (“The remedies, procedures, and rights set forth in [29 U.S.C. § 794(a)] shall be the remedies, procedures, and rights this subchapter provides to any person alleging discrimination on the basis of disability in violation of [42 U.S.C. § 12132].”).

182. See N.Y. EXEC. LAW § 296 (McKinney 2018).

183. See Pa. Dept. of Corr. v. Yeskey, 524 U.S. 206, 213, 118 S. Ct. 1952, 1956, 141 L. Ed. 2d 215, 221 (1998) (“[T]he plain text of Title II of the ADA unambiguously extends to state prison inmates.”).

184. 42 U.S.C. § 12132.

185. See Pa. Dept. of Corr. v. Yeskey, 524 U.S. 206, 210, 118 S. Ct. 1952, 1955, 141 L. Ed. 2d 215, 219 (1998) (stating that “[m]odern prisons provide inmates with many recreational ‘activities,’ medical ‘services,’ and educational and vocational ‘programs,’ all of which at least theoretically ‘benefit’ the prisoners.”).

186. See Gates v. Rowland, 39 F.3d 1439, 1448 (9th Cir. 1994) (finding that a legitimate penological interest allowed prison to discriminate against HIV-positive incarcerated people by denying them food service jobs). In Gates the prison claimed that although the medical risk of infecting other incarcerated people through food service is admittedly small, the perception of a risk by other incarcerated people could be threatening and could lead to violence. Thus, the prison interest was not in preventing the spread of HIV so much as promoting prison safety, a typical prison interest. See also Onishea v. Hopper, 171 F.3d 1289, 1300–1301 (11th Cir. 1999) (finding that the prison’s interest in avoiding violence based on incarcerated people’s HIV status was a valid penal interest).

187. See Bullock v. Gomez, 929 F. Supp. 1299, 1305–1308 (C.D. Cal. 1996) (finding the California Men’s Colony possibly violated the ADA and the FRA when it prohibited HIV-infected incarcerated people from visiting their spouses in a family visiting program permitting incarcerated people to visit immediate family members in private conditions for relatively extended periods of time, including overnight stays; stating that the discrimination may be justified under the standard in Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2261–2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987) (superseded by statute), as a legitimate penological interest if accommodating

I. Sentencing Persons with Infectious Diseases

If you have an infectious disease and you have been indicted for a crime but not yet sentenced, you may be able to ask the judge to dismiss the indictment or decrease your sentence because of your health condition. Different states have different rules, so be sure to look at your state's statutes and cases.

If your case is in New York State and you have a terminal illness, you may: (1) ask for lower bail, (2) ask to be released on your own recognizance, or (3) make a Clayton motion to have your case dismissed "in the interest of justice" (under New York Criminal Procedure Law § 210.40 and § 210.45).¹⁸⁸ The court will look at the evidence of guilt, the seriousness of the offense, your character, and your criminal record.¹⁸⁹ To support a request for dismissal, try to provide medical documentation that imprisonment would worsen your health.

If you have a terminal disease and are in prison because you violated your parole, you can request to: (1) be returned to parole status, (2) be released to time served or granted conditional release to probation, or (3) have your case adjourned in contemplation of dismissal. The adjournment may be extended indefinitely, which may allow you to live your last days out of prison.

If you are facing sentencing in federal court, judges consider the sentencing guidelines on an advisory basis.¹⁹⁰ This means the court can give you a lesser sentence ("downward departure") if mitigating circumstances exist.¹⁹¹ The U.S. Sentencing Commission Guidelines Manual states, "an extraordinary physical impairment may be a reason to depart downward; e.g., in the case of a seriously infirm defendant, home detention may be as efficient as, and less costly than, imprisonment."¹⁹² Courts usually do not reduce sentences for diseases like AIDS unless the defendant's AIDS is serious enough to be an "extraordinary physical impairment."¹⁹³ Some courts only consider the defendant's health at the time of sentencing, even if the disease will likely worsen in prison.¹⁹⁴

HIV-positive incarcerated people proved to be an undue financial or administrative burden, or if the concerns of other incarcerated people could lead to prison violence; and noting that proof of previous prison violence is not required to prove a legitimate penological interest).

188. See People v. Clayton, 41 A.D.2d 204, 208, 342 N.Y.S.2d 106, 110 (2d Dept. 1973) (listing factors a court should consider where defendant seeks to dismiss case "in the furtherance of justice," including the (1) nature of the crime; (2) available evidence of guilt; (3) defendant's prior record; (4) punishment already suffered by defendant; (5) purpose and effect of further punishment; (6) any prejudice to defendant by the passage of time; and (7) the impact of the indictment's dismissal on the public interest); see also People v. Lawson, 198 A.D.2d 71, 73, 74, 603 N.Y.S.2d 311, 313 (1st Dept. 1993) (dismissing indictment of defendant, described as "thin as a rail" and unable to stand properly, who had not been involved in any other criminal activity, was honorably discharged from the Air Force, and was in final stages of AIDS), aff'd, People v. Herman L., 83 N.Y.2d 958, 960, 639 N.E.2d 404, 405, 615 N.Y.S.2d 865, 866 (1994) (dismissing indictment pursuant to N.Y. Crim. Proc. Law § 210.40 (McKinney 1993), which allows dismissals "in furtherance of justice" and in judge's discretion).

189. See, e.g., People v. Sierra, 149 Misc. 2d 588, 590–591, 566 N.Y.S.2d 818, 819 (Sup. Ct. Kings County 1990) (refusing to dismiss conviction because defendant suffered from AIDS Related Complex ("ARC") and would eventually develop AIDS, since he was a repeat felon with a long criminal history; the court also considered the evidence of the defendant's guilt, the offense's seriousness, his character, and criminal history to find he was not entitled to dismissal).

190. See United States v. Booker, 543 U.S. 220, 245, 125 S. Ct. 738, 756–757, 160 L. Ed. 2d 621, 651 (2005) (holding that the use of facts under the sentencing guidelines are not binding on federal judges).

191. U.S. SENTENCING GUIDELINES MANUAL, § 5H1.4 (U.S. Sentencing Comm'n 2015); § 5C1.1 app. n.7 (U.S. Sentencing Comm'n 2015).

192. U.S. SENTENCING GUIDELINES MANUAL, § 5H1.4 (U.S. Sentencing Comm'n 2015).

193. See Downward Departure Under § 5H1.4 of United States Sentencing Guidelines Permitting Downward Departure for Extraordinary Physical Impairment, 16 A.L.R. Fed. 2d 113 (2007).

194. See United States v. Thomas, 49 F.3d 253, 261 (6th Cir. 1995) (denying downward departure because defendant's HIV infection had not progressed into advanced AIDS and was not an "extraordinary physical impairment"); United States v. Woody, 55 F.3d 1257, 1275–1276 (7th Cir. 1995) (refusing downward departure because HIV-positive defendant did not have "full-blown AIDS"); United States v. Rabins, 63 F.3d 721, 729 (8th Cir. 1995) (denying downward departure because defendant's AIDS had not become life-threatening; also holding that the defendant's condition should be assessed at the time of sentencing, regardless of the serious physical

Most courts require you to be very sick before dismissing an indictment or reducing your sentence. But one federal district court did grant a downward departure to an HIV-positive defendant in stable condition. The court thought that the defendant believed his good health was a result of his special regimen of strict diet, regular exercise, acupuncture, and a combination of vitamins and natural supplements under the close supervision of a medical professional.¹⁹⁵ In this case the judge was not worried about whether the treatment actually contributed to the defendant's good health. The judge thought that since the defendant believed his regimen was effective, he would suffer emotional harm if he had to change treatments in prison.¹⁹⁶

If you are trying to get your sentence dismissed or reduced because of your health, you have a greater chance of success if you suffer from a very serious illness, like advanced-stage AIDS. You should try to present medical documentation that being in prison will harm your health. Also, keep in mind that courts might not be sympathetic to you if you have a long criminal history. Remember, courts have discretion to grant downward departures. The law does not say exactly what an "extraordinary physical impairment" is, so you may be able to get a reduced sentence or dismissal even if you do not have AIDS but have TB or hepatitis instead.

J. Life After Imprisonment: Planning for Your Release

Chapter 35 of the JLM, "Getting Out Early: Conditional & Early Release," contains information about compassionate release and medical parole. If you have been diagnosed with an infectious disease, you should read that Chapter carefully to see whether you might be eligible for either of these options.

If you are about to be paroled or released, you should get a confidential HIV test before leaving prison. Getting a test can be more difficult or expensive outside of prison. If you do have HIV/AIDS or hepatitis, you should continue to take preventative measures to protect others. Before release, you should also try to contact local agencies and organizations for help transitioning from prison to community life. You can contact the public health department in your area for free brochures. Appendix A lists other helpful agencies.

K. Conclusion

If you have AIDS, TB, hepatitis B or C, MRSA or another infectious disease, people may treat you differently due to ignorance and fear. Protect yourself by becoming aware of the facts of the disease and your legal rights. As an incarcerated person, you may find that information and support is not always readily available. But many of the organizations in Appendix A of this Chapter work with incarcerated people and may be able help you.

difficulties that may develop over the years).

195. See United States v. Blarek, 7 F. Supp. 2d 192, 212 (E.D.N.Y. 1998).

196. See United States v. Blarek, 7 F. Supp. 2d 192, 212 (E.D.N.Y. 1998).

APPENDIX A

RESOURCES FOR INFORMATION, COUNSELING, AND SUPPORT

National AIDS Organizations

Center for Disease Control National AIDS Hotline (CDC-INFO)

Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, 1600 Clifton Rd., Atlanta, GA 30333

Phone: (800) CDC-INFO (232-4636) (Monday through Friday, 8:00 am to 8:00 pm, in English, en Español)

TTY (for callers with hearing impairments): (888) 232-6348 (Monday through Friday, 8:00 am to 8:00 pm)

Center for Disease Control HIVInfo

Phone: (800) 448-0440

TTY (for callers with hearing impairments): (888) 480-3739 (M–F 9:00 am to 6:00 pm ET)

HIV/AIDS Treatment Information Service (AIDSinfo)

P.O. Box 4780

Rockville, MD 20849

Toll-free: (800) 448-0440 (M–F 1:00 pm to 4:00 pm ET)

<http://www.aidsinfo.nih.gov/>

Free literature, including U.S. guidelines on HIV treatment from the Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS).

HIV/AIDS/HCV Education Project

ACLU NATIONAL PRISON PROJECT

915 15th St. NW, 7th Floor

Washington D.C. 20005

<https://www.aclu.org/issues/hiv>

Referrals to city and state programs nationwide. Resource center, including free copies of PLAY IT SAFER, a booklet on STIs (sexually transmitted infections), and HIV/AIDS magazines.

National Hepatitis Corrections Network

1621 South Jackson Street, Suite 201

Seattle, WA 98144

Phone: (206) 732-0311 or (800) 218-6932

E-mail: mandy@hepeducation.org

<http://www.hevinprison.org/>

Education, advocacy and support for incarcerated people with hepatitis C and HIV co-infection.

National Minority AIDS Council

Prison Initiative

1000 Vermont Ave. NW, Ste. 200

Washington, DC 20005-4903

Phone: (202) 870-0918

<http://www.nmac.org/>

E-mail: info@nmac.org

The Prison Initiative is a project of NMAC, which helps community and faith-based organizations, correctional facilities and health departments evaluate, improve, and implement effective discharge planning for HIV positive incarcerated people and formerly incarcerated people.

National Native American AIDS Prevention Center

1031 33rd St #270

Denver, CO 80205

Phone: (720) 382-2244

Fax: (720) 382-2248

Automated fax info: (800) 283-6880

Hours: Monday–Friday 9:00 am to 5:00 pm

<http://www.nnaapc.net/>

E-mail: information@nnaapc.org

The National Native American AIDS Prevention Center (NNAAPC) offers a variety of programs to help promote education about HIV/AIDS, support prevention efforts, and help foster healthy attitudes about sexuality and sexual health in the Native community.

AIDS Organizations in New York

Hudson Valley Community Services

HVCS Headquarters

40 Saw Mill River Road Suite UL-5

Hawthorne, NY 10532

Tel: (914) 345-8888

Fax: (914) 785-8299

Orange County

280 Broadway 4th Floor

Newburgh, NY 12550

Phone: (845) 562-5005

Fax: (845) 562-5212

<http://www.hudsonvalleycs.org/>

Counseling, education, food, and pantry.

American Foundation for AIDS Research

120 Wall Street, 13th Floor

New York, NY 10005-3902

Phone: (212) 806-1600

Toll-free: (800) 392-6327

Fax: (212) 806-1601

This group is a non-profit organization that supports AIDS research, HIV prevention, treatment education, and the advocacy of AIDS-related public policy.

Asian Pacific Islander Coalition on HIV/AIDS

400 Broadway

New York, NY 10013

Phone: (212) 334-7940

(866) 274-2429 (Infoline)

Fax: (212) 334-7956

This group is a non-profit organization providing HIV/AIDS-related services, education, and research to Asian and Pacific Islander Communities in New York City. Services include HIV testing, STI screening and treatment, acupuncture, and more.

Correctional Association of New York

PO Box 793

Brooklyn, NY 11207

Phone: (212) 254-5700

Fax: (212) 473-2807

*This organization provides advocacy, research, information, and referral to incarcerated people and parolees living with HIV.*Gay Men's Health Crisis

307 W 38th St.

New York, NY 10018

Phone: (212) 367-1000

Toll-free: (800) 243-7692 (Hotline) (in English, en Español) (Mon-Fri. 9:00 am to 6:00 pm)

*Assists incarcerated people with obtaining public benefits when on parole, and publishes a variety of informational brochures. It provides legal services to anyone who is HIV-positive. It also provides referrals and serves women and children.*HIV Law Project 81 Willoughby St.

Brooklyn, NY 11201

Phone: (212) 577-3001 (in English, en Español)

Fax: (212) 577-3192

*This organization provides legal advocacy. However, it only deals with civil law, not criminal law, cases. It provides free civil legal services primarily related to entitlements, housing, immigration (including permanency planning), and family law. It serves residents of Manhattan and the Bronx, and homeless people in all five boroughs. Collect calls are accepted.*Hispanic AIDS Forum, Inc.

Manhattan Office:

1767 Park Avenue, 4th Floor

New York, NY 10035

Phone: (212) 563-4500 (in English, en Español)

Fax: (212) 868-6237

Bronx Office:

975 Kelly Street, Suite 402

Bronx, NY 10459

Phone: (718) 328-4188 (in English, en Español)

Fax: (718) 328-2888

Queens Office:

76-11 37th Avenue, Suite 206

Jackson Heights, New York 10372

Phone: (718) 409-5309

The Hispanic AIDS Forum is New York's largest Latino-run AIDS outreach organization. It has a bilingual staff and provides seminars, outreach programs, case management services, counseling and other support, and referrals to other organizations.

Latino Commission on AIDS

24 West 25th Street, 9th Floor

New York, NY 10010

Phone: (212) 675-3288

Fax: (212) 675-3466

A grass-roots organization working in collaboration with the AIDS in Prison Project.

Legal Action Center (LAC)

225 Varick Street #401

New York, NY 10014

Phone: (212) 243-1313

Toll-free: (800) 223-4044

Fax: (212) 675-0286

This organization provides legal services for ex-offenders with HIV, such as help with housing and employment discrimination.

New York AIDS Coalition (NYAC)

400 Broadway

New York, NY 10013

Phone: 646-744-1597

Fax: 212-334-7956

Brings together community-based HIV/AIDS organizations and their supporters to work for increased funding and fair policies for people living with HIV/AIDS in New York State.

The Osborne Association AIDS in Prison Project

809 Westchester Avenue

Bronx, NY 10455

Phone: (718) 707-2600

Fax: (718) 707-3102

E-mail: info@osborneny.org

AIDS in Prison Project Hotline (718) 378-7022 (T,W,R, 3:00 to 8:00 pm; collect calls accepted)

<http://www.osborneny.org>

<https://healthyoxfordhills.org/resources/aids-prison-projects-hotline/>

Provides information, counseling, education, placement in service organizations, and medical advocacy for incarcerated people in New York.

Prisoners' Rights Project of the Legal Aid Society

199 Water Street

New York, NY 10038

Phone: (212) 577-3300

Fax: (212) 509 8433

Provides services to incarcerated people only. It also helps incarcerated people in New York City and New York State with medical concerns and brutality cases.

Prisoners Legal Services of New York (PLSNY)

Albany Location:

41 State Street, Suite M112

Albany, NY 12207

Prisons served: Bedford Hills, CNYPC, Coxsackie, Downstate, Eastern, Edgecombe, Fishkill, Great Meadow, Greene, Greenhaven, Hale Creek, Hudson, Marcy, Midstate, Mohawk, Otisville, Queensboro, Shawangunk, Sing Sing, Sullivan, Taconic, Ulster, Wallkill, Walsh, Washington, Woodbourne.

Buffalo Location:

14 Lafayette Sq., Suite 510

Buffalo, NY 14203

Prisons served: Albion, Attica, Collins, Gowanda, Groveland, Lakeview, Orleans, Rochester, Wende, Wyoming.

Ithaca Location:

114 Prospect St.

Ithaca, NY 14850

Prisons served: Auburn, Cape Vincent, Cayuga, Elmira, Five Points, Southport, Watertown, Willard.

Plattsburgh Location:

24 Margaret St., Suite 9

Plattsburgh, NY 12901

Prisons served: Adirondack, Altona, Bare Hill, Camp Gabriels, Chateaugay, Clinton, Franklin, Gouverneur, Lyon Mountain, Moriah Shock, Ogdensburg, Riverview, Upstate.

(Due to the large number of inquiries, PLSNY does not accept telephone calls from incarcerated people and their family members). PLSNY is a non-profit legal services organization providing civil legal services to indigent incarcerated people in New York State correctional facilities in cases where no other counsel is available.

Women's Prison Association

Reentry Unit

110 2nd Avenue

New York, NY 10003

Phone: General Info: (646) 292-7740

Reentry Services: (718) 637-6877

Fax: (646) 292-7763

WPA Reentry Services include a full array of prison, jail, and community-based assistance aimed at helping women become full participants in community life following incarceration or other criminal justice involvement.

AIDS Organizations in CaliforniaSan Francisco AIDS Foundation

1035 Market St, Ste. 400

San Francisco, CA 94103

Phone: (415) 487-8000

Fax: (415) 487-8079

<http://www.sfaf.org>

Provides vital services and programs designed to improve the quality of life for people living with HIV/AIDS and to reduce the number of new infections that occur each year.

Center for Health Justice

900 Avila Street, Stes. 102 & 301

Los Angeles, CA 90012

Phone: (213) 229-0985

Fax: (213) 229-0986

E-mail: info@healthjustice.net

<http://www.healthjustice.net>

Provides HIV legal and education information inside and outside correctional facilities.

Project Inform's National HIV/AIDS Treatment Hotline

273 Ninth Street

San Francisco, CA 94103

Toll-free: (800) 822-7422

Hours: Monday-Friday, 10:00 am to 4:00 pm Pacific Time (PT).

Nightline: (800) 628-9240

Hours: 5:00 pm to 5:00 am every day.

Provides legal and educational information for those with HIV/AIDS. Will mail out materials to incarcerated people and accepts collect calls from correctional institutions.

AIDS Project Los Angeles

611 South Kingsley Drive

Los Angeles, CA 90005

Phone: (213) 201-1600

<http://www.aplahealth.org/>

AIDS Organizations in IllinoisIllinois AIDS Hotline

Toll-free: (800) 243-2437 (in English, en Español)

Hours: daily 8:00 am to 10:00 pm Central Time (CT).

Up-to-date information on HIV transmission, HIV counseling and testing sites. Offers information and support resources, risk reduction. Bilingual.

AIDS Organizations in PennsylvaniaLewisburg Prison Project

115 Farley Circle, Suite 110

Spring Run Professional Park

Lewisburg, PA 17837

Phone: (570) 523-1104

Fax: (570) 523-3944

E-mail: info@lewisburgprisonproject.org

Non-profit organization that provides legal and other assistance to incarcerated people in Central Pennsylvania for non-criminal issues. Counsels and assists incarcerated people who encounter treatment they perceive as illegal or unfair, including medical treatment.

Pennsylvania AIDS Hotline

Toll-free: (800) 662-6080

Up-to-date information on HIV transmission, HIV counseling and testing sites. Offers information and support resources, risk reduction.

AIDS Organizations in Texas

Prism Health North Texas
351 West Jefferson Blvd. #300
Dallas, Texas 75208
Phone: (214) 521-5191
Fax: (214) 528-5879
TDD: (214) 231-0151
<http://www.phntx.org>

Assists individuals in accessing the healthcare, resources, and support necessary to successfully manage the challenges of living with HIV/AIDS. Assists incarcerated people in obtaining information regarding HIV/AIDS and other STIs.

AIDS Foundation Houston

6260 Westpark Dr. #100
Houston, TX 77057
Phone: (713) 623-6796
Fax: (713) 623-4029
E-mail: info@AFHouston.org
<http://www.aidshelp.org>

Special Prison Initiative Program. Prevention counseling, health education/risk reduction, HIV prevention education, STI prevention education, street outreach, peer education, case management for HIV/AIDS, hepatitis education/counseling, hotline/telephone counseling, peer counseling, food pantry, nutrition services, volunteer services, HOPWA, emergency financial assistance, clothing assistance, housing programs.

National Hepatitis B Organization

Hepatitis B Foundation
3805 Old Easton Rd.
Doylestown, PA 18902
Phone: (215) 489-4900
Fax: (215) 489-4920
E-mail: info@hepb.org

Hepatitis B Foundation provides information and support for people with Hepatitis B and supports research for a cure. It also offers an online support group.

CHAPTER 27

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM IN PRISON*

A. Introduction

While you are in prison, you have the right to observe and practice the religion of your choice.² The Constitution, as well as federal and state laws, protect this right. This Chapter describes these protections and explains how courts determine whether an incarcerated person's right to religious freedom has been violated. Part B of this Chapter discusses the First Amendment Establishment Clause. Part C discusses the First Amendment Free Exercise Clause and RLUIPA or RFRA protections. Part D discusses your rights under selected state statutes, and Part E considers recent developments in faith-based rehabilitation programs. The Appendix lists some religious organizations that may provide you with additional support.

1. Constitutional Protections

The First Amendment to the Constitution provides the most basic protection to your right to religious freedom. This Amendment says that “Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.”³

The first part of the Amendment—“Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion”—is known as the Establishment Clause. It prohibits government officials from establishing a national religion. Generally, this means that the government is not allowed to set up a religion, to aid one religion, to aid all religions, or to favor one religion over another.⁴

The second part of the First Amendment—“or prohibiting the free exercise thereof”—is known as the Free Exercise Clause. It means that government officials cannot prevent you from practicing your religion. However, under the Free Exercise Clause, prison officials can impose restrictions on your exercise of religion that are “reasonably related” to legitimate prison goals.⁵ In other words, you might be barred from performing a religious practice if the justification reasonably relates to the prison's legitimate aims. These justifications may include preventing crime, rehabilitating incarcerated people, and ensuring the internal security of the correctional facility.⁶

* See Chapter 2 of the JLM, “Introduction to Legal Research,” for information on how to conduct legal research in prison.

2. See Burwell v. Hobby Lobby Stores, Inc., 573 U.S. 682, 688, 134 S. Ct. 2751, 2759, 189 L.Ed.2d 675, 689 (2014) (holding that the exercise of religion for the purposes of the Free Exercise Clause involves not only belief and profession, but the performance of, or abstention from, physical acts for religious reasons). See also Cruz v. Beto, 405 U.S. 319, 321–322, 92 S. Ct. 1079, 1081–1082, 31 L. Ed. 2d 263, 268 (1972) (finding that incarcerated people retain First Amendment protections, including its requirement that no law shall prohibit the free exercise of religion).

3. U.S. CONST. amend. I.

4. See Everson v. Bd. of Educ., 330 U.S. 1, 15, 67 S. Ct. 504, 511, 91 L. Ed. 711, 723 (1947) (“The ‘establishment of religion’ clause of the First Amendment means at least this: Neither a state nor the Federal Government can set up a church. Neither can pass laws which aid one religion, aid all religions, or prefer one religion over another.”).

5. Turner v. Safley, 482 U.S. 78, 89–90, 107 S. Ct. 2254, 2262, 96 L. Ed. 2d 64, 79 (1987) (“[W]hen a prison regulation impinges on inmates’ constitutional rights, the regulation is valid if it is reasonably related to legitimate penological interests.”).

6. See Pell v. Procunier, 417 U.S. 817, 822–823, 94 S. Ct. 2800, 2804, 41 L. Ed. 2d 495, 501–502 (1974) (finding that deterrence of crime, rehabilitation of incarcerated people, and security within a correctional facility are legitimate prison goals); see also McKune v. Lile, 536 U.S. 24, 47–48, 122 S. Ct. 2017, 2032, 153 L.Ed.2d 47 (2002) (stating that sexual abuse treatment programs serve legitimate prison goals); Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 412–413, 94 S. Ct. 1800, 1811, 40 L. Ed. 2d 224, 239 (1974) (finding preservation of internal order and discipline, maintenance of institutional security against escape or unauthorized entry, and rehabilitation of

Even though the Establishment Clause and the Free Exercise Clause are both part of the First Amendment, courts address these clauses separately. This Chapter will also address them separately.

2. Statutory Protections

The U.S. Congress and state legislatures pass laws that provide additional protections to your religious freedom. Depending on whether you are in a state or federal prison, different laws apply. If you are in a state prison, the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA) protects your religious freedom.⁷ If you are in a federal prison, the Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993 (RFRA) protects your religious freedom.⁸

Although RLUIPA and RFRA are two different laws, both use the same language to describe the religious free exercise protections given to incarcerated people.⁹ Therefore, if you are a federal incarcerated person protected by RFRA, this Chapter's discussion of RLUIPA can still help you figure out how strong your RFRA claims are. You can also cite cases decided under either RLUIPA or RFRA to support your claim, regardless of whether you are in federal or state prison.¹⁰

Some states have also enacted additional laws that further protect the religious freedom of incarcerated people in their correctional facilities. These laws are discussed in more detail in Part D of this Chapter.

3. Bringing a Religious Freedom Lawsuit

If you believe prison officials have violated your constitutional or statutory rights to religious freedom and you want to sue them, you will first need to follow your institution's administrative grievance procedure.¹¹ See Chapter 15 of the JLM, "Inmate Grievance Procedures," for further information on inmate grievance procedures.

If you do not receive a favorable result through the grievance procedure, you can file suit in federal court. Depending on which type of prison you are in, you will need to bring different types of claims. If you are incarcerated in a state facility, you should bring a RLUIPA claim under 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc and a First Amendment claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983. If you are incarcerated in a federal facility, you should bring a RFRA claim under 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb and a First Amendment claim in a Bivens action.¹² incarcerated people are justifiable interests of the government), overruled on other grounds by Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 413–414, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1881–1882, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 473 (1989).

7. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA) of 2000, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000cc-cc-5 (codifying that no government shall impose a substantial burden on the religious exercise of a person in jail unless the government demonstrates that the burden serves a compelling governmental interest and does so by the least restrictive means).

8. Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA) of 1993, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000bb-bb-4.

9. Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA) of 2000, 42 U.S.C. § 2000cc-1(a); Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA) of 1993, 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb-(1)(a)–(b). See Lovelace v. Lee, 472 F.3d 174, 182 (4th Cir. 2006) (finding that Congress enacted RLUIPA in response to restrictions on religious liberties in prisons that were "egregious and unnecessary," and applying the statute such that, when a prison substantially burdens an inmate's exercise of religion, the prison must demonstrate that imposing the burden serves a compelling government interest and does so by the least restrictive means).

10. See, e.g., Fowler v. Crawford, 534 F.3d 931, 938 (8th Cir. 2008) (holding that a RFRA case "dictate[d] the outcome" in the RLUIPA case before the court).

11. See Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) of 1995, 42 U.S.C. § 1997e(a) ("No action shall be brought with respect to prison conditions under section 1983 of this title, or any other Federal law, by a prisoner confined in any jail, prison, or other correctional facility until such administrative remedies as are available are exhausted."); Cutter v. Wilkinson, 544 U.S. 709, 723 n.12, 125 S. Ct. 2113, 2123 n.12, 161 L. Ed. 2d 1020, 1035 n.12 (2005) ("[A] prisoner may not sue under RLUIPA without first exhausting all available administrative remedies."); Jackson v. District of Columbia, 254 F.3d 262, 266–67 (D.C. Cir. 2001) (holding that PLRA's requirement that incarcerated people exhaust all available administrative remedies applies in actions brought under RFRA).

12. A Bivens action allows incarcerated people to sue federal officials for constitutional violations. See Chapter 16 of the JLM, "Using 42 U.S.C. § 1983 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331 to Obtain Relief From Violations of Federal Regardless of which types of claims you bring, when you draft your complaint, you should be sure to begin by asserting a RLUIPA claim (if you are incarcerated by the state government) or a RFRA claim (if you are incarcerated by the federal government), followed by a First Amendment claim. This is because it is easier to meet the RLUIPA or RFRA standards than the First Amendment standards. You are therefore more likely to receive relief under RLUIPA or RFRA than under the First Amendment.¹³

If you are incarcerated in a state facility, you can also file an action in a state court. If you are in a New York state prison, you can either file an action in the Court of Claims, or you can file an Article 78 petition, depending on what kind of relief you want. More information on all of these types of cases can be found in Chapter 5 of the JLM, “Choosing a Court and a Lawsuit,” Chapter 14 of the JLM, “Prison Litigation Reform Act,” Chapter 16 of the JLM, “42 U.S.C. § 1983 and Bivens actions,” Chapter 17 of the JLM, “The State’s Duty to Protect You and Your Property: Tort Actions,” and Chapter 22 of the JLM, “How To Challenge Decisions Using Article 78 of the New York Civil Practice Law and Rules.”

If you end up pursuing any claim in federal court, you should make sure to read Chapter 14 of the JLM, “The Prison Litigation Reform Act,” on the Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) before you file your claim. If you do not follow PLRA requirements, you can, among other things, lose your good time credit and your right to bring future claims in federal court without paying the full filing fee.

B. The First Amendment Establishment Clause

The Establishment Clause of the First Amendment states that “Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion.”¹⁴ This means that neither the federal government nor the states may set up a religion, aid all religions, aid one religion, or favor one religion over another.¹⁵ Thus, prison officials violate the Establishment Clause if they give special treatment to certain religious groups. For example, if prison officials were to set up a church within the prison and force incarcerated people to attend religious services, their actions would violate the Establishment Clause.¹⁶

Law,” for a detailed discussion. See also Corr. Servs. Corp. v. Malesko, 534 U.S. 61, 72, 122 S. Ct. 515, 522, 151 L. Ed. 2d 456, 467 (2001) (finding that a federal incarcerated person alleging a constitutional violation can bring a Bivens claim against the offending federal officer).

13. See Shakur v. Schriro, 514 F.3d 878, 888 (9th Cir. 2008) (“RLUIPA...mandates a stricter standard of review for prison regulations that burden the free exercise of religion than the reasonableness standard [used to review regulations under the 1st Amendment].”); see also Smith v. Allen, 502 F.3d 1255, 1265–1266 (11th Cir. 2007) (noting that RLUIPA affords more “protection from government-imposed burdens” than the First Amendment does), abrogated on other grounds by Sossamon v. Texas, 563 U.S. 277, 293, 131 S. Ct. 1651, 1663, 179 L. Ed. 2d 700, 714 (2011); DeSimone v. Bartow, No. 08-C-638, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64419, at *11 (E.D. Wis. Aug. 12, 2008) (unpublished) (noting that RLUIPA provides more expansive protections than the First Amendment does for those in the custody of the state, as it prohibits “institutions that receive federal funding from substantially burdening an inmate’s exercise of religion, even by a rule of general applicability, unless that burden is the least restrictive means of furthering a compelling governmental interest.”).

14. U.S. CONST. amend. I.

15. Sch. Dist. of Abington Twp. v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 216, 8 S. Ct. 1560, 1568, 10 L. Ed. 2d 844, 855 (1963) (quoting Everson v. Bd. of Educ., 330 U.S. 1, 15, 67 S. Ct. 504, 511, 91 L. Ed. 711, 723 (1947)) (“[n]either a state nor the Federal Government can set up a church. Neither can pass laws which aid one religion, aid all religions, or prefer one religion over another”); Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38, 60–61, 105 S. Ct. 2479, 2492, 86 L. Ed. 2d 29 (1985) (finding state laws violated the Establishment Clause because they “conveyed a message of endorsement” of a particular religion); Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 92, 96 S. Ct. 612, 669, 46 L. Ed. 2d 659, 729 (1976) (stating the government may not aid one religion at the harm of another religion; the government may not place a burden on one religion that is not placed on others; and the government may not even help all religions), overruled on other grounds by Citizens United v. Fed. Election Com’n, 558 U.S. 301, 130 S. Ct. 876 (2010); Cantwell v. Conn., 310 U.S. 296, 303, 60 S. Ct. 900, 903, 84 L. Ed. 1213, 1218 (1940) (applying the Establishment Clause to the states).

16. See Campbell v. Cauthron, 623 F.2d 503, 509 (8th Cir. 1980) (holding that allowing religious volunteers into a cell block did not violate the Establishment Clause, but that prison officials were required to make sure

In order for your Establishment Clause claim to succeed, you will first need to prove that there was “government action.” This is often referred to as “state action.” The Supreme Court has held that “state action may be found. . . only if. . . there is such a ‘close nexus between the State and the challenged action’ that seemingly private behavior ‘may be fairly treated as that of the State itself.’”¹⁷ In other words, the connection between the State and the behavior of the private individual or organization must be so close that it seems as though the State caused the individual or organization to perform the action.

Generally, courts will consider actions by prison officials and private groups acting under the authority of prison officials to be state action.¹⁸ For example, in 2007, the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit held that when a department of corrections gave private religious organizations the power to incarcerate, treat, and discipline incarcerated people, as well as access to facilities and substantial aid to support a faith-based program, those religious organizations were considered to be state actors.¹⁹

Unauthorized actions by individuals, on the other hand, may be less likely to constitute state action. For example, in 1998 the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit held that there was no state action when a prison officer, who was also a Christian minister, brought his Bible to work and put it in the view of incarcerated people, sang Christian songs, debated and discussed religion with incarcerated people, and tried to convert incarcerated people to Christianity.²⁰ The court found no Establishment Clause violation because the officer had no authority to make religious policies for the jail.²¹ Additionally, the jail had not ratified or endorsed the officer’s actions, had trained its staff to avoid such conduct, and had transferred the officer soon after the plaintiff complained.²²

After you show that the practice or regulation you are challenging constitutes government action, you will need to prove that this action violates the Establishment Clause. Courts use different tests to determine whether a prison regulation or practice violates the Establishment Clause.²³ These tests include the Lee coercion test²⁴ and the Lemon test.²⁵ Both tests are explained below. While some courts that no incarcerated people were subjected to forced religious indoctrination).

17. Brentwood Acad. v. Tenn. Secondary Sch. Athletic Ass’n, 531 U.S. 288, 295, 121 S. Ct. 924, 930, 148 L. Ed. 2d 807, 817 (2001) (quoting Jackson v. Metro. Edison Co., 419 U.S. 345, 351, 95 S. Ct. 449, 453, 42 L. Ed. 2d 477 (1974)) (finding that a not-for-profit athletic association’s enforcement of penalties against a private school’s violation of athletic recruiting rules constituted “state action” because of the association’s significant connections to public institutions and public officials).

18. See Monroe v. Pape, 365 U.S. 167, 184, 81 S. Ct. 473, 482, 5 L. Ed. 2d 492, 503 (1961) (finding that constitutional violations committed by state officers in performance of their duties were committed “under color of” state law, and rejecting the argument “that under color of state law included only action taken by officials pursuant to state law”), overruled on other grounds by Monell v. Dep’t of Soc. Serv. of N.Y., 436 U.S. 658, 663, 98 S. Ct. 2018, 2022, 56 L. Ed. 2d 611, 619 (1978); Ancata v. Prison Health Servs., Inc., 769 F.2d 700, 703 (11th Cir. 1985) (“Although [the defendant] and its employees are not strictly speaking public employees, state action is clearly present. Where a function which is traditionally the exclusive prerogative of the state ... is performed by a private entity, state action is present.”).

19. Am. United for Separation of Church & State v. Prison Fellowship Ministries, Inc., 509 F.3d 406, 421–423 (8th Cir. 2007).

20. Canell v. Lightner, 143 F.3d 1210, 1214 (9th Cir. 1998).

21. Canell v. Lightner, 143 F.3d 1210, 1213–1214 (9th Cir. 1998).

22. Canell v. Lightner, 143 F.3d 1210, 1213–1214 (9th Cir. 1998).

23. See Ross v. Keelings, 2 F. Supp. 2d 810, 816–818 (E.D. Va. 1998) (noting that courts have sometimes used the Lemon test and other times declined to apply the Lemon test in favor of the Lee test).

24. See Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 578, 112 S. Ct. 2649, 2655, 120 L. Ed. 2d 467, 480 (1992); Warner v. Orange Cty. Dep’t of Probation, 115 F.3d 1068, 1074–1075 (2d Cir. 1997) (applying the Lee coercion test to determine whether a probation practice violates the Establishment Clause); Warburton v. Underwood, 2 F. Supp. 2d 306, 318 (W.D.N.Y. 1998) (holding that while proof of government coercion is not necessary to prove an Establishment Clause violation, it is sufficient).

25. See Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 91 S. Ct. 2105, 29 L. Ed. 2d 745 (1971); Kaufman v. McCaughtry, have combined these tests,²⁶ the Supreme Court has yet to rule that either of these tests represents the only constitutional standard.²⁷ As a result, you should try to argue in your complaint that the challenged prison regulation or practice fails both of the Establishment Clause tests.

1. The Lee Coercion Test

To determine whether a prison regulation or practice violates the First Amendment's Establishment Clause, a court may ask whether it amounts to "coercion." In Lee v. Weisman, the U.S. Supreme Court announced that "at a minimum, the Constitution guarantees that government may not coerce anyone to support or participate in religion or its exercise[.]"²⁸ Applying this rule, the Court held that it was unconstitutional for public schools to force students to participate in prayer at their graduation ceremonies.²⁹ More specifically, the court ruled that a policy that allowed public schools to invite clergy members to recite prayer at graduation failed the coercion test because it constituted forced participation in religion.³⁰

Although Lee dealt with religious freedom in the school context, other lower courts have held that a showing of coercion alone may be sufficient to prove an Establishment Clause violation in the prison or probation context.³¹

For instance, in Kerr v. Farrey, an incarcerated person brought a federal civil rights claim against state corrections officials.³² The incarcerated person alleged that the officials required him to attend religious-based Narcotics Anonymous meetings as part of his rehabilitation.³³ The Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals applied the Lee coercion rule by asking three questions: (1) whether there was state action, (2) whether the action was coercive or forceful, and (3) whether the object of the coercion was religious or secular (meaning non-religious).³⁴

In answering these three questions, the court found that the prison program violated the Establishment Clause's prohibition against the state's favoring religion over non-religion. First, there was state action, because the state had acted through the prison officials by forcing the incarcerated person to participate in the Narcotics Anonymous meetings. Second, the state action was coercive or 419 F.3d 678, 683–684 (7th Cir. 2005) (applying the Lemon test to determine whether a prison practice violates the Establishment Clause). But see Gray v. Johnson, 436 F. Supp. 2d 795, 799 n.4 (W.D. Va. 2006) ("When deciding similar cases, the Second Circuit, the Seventh Circuit, and the Eastern District of Virginia have opted to apply a more basic coercion test in lieu of Lemon. These courts have simply examined whether the challenged program accomplished coerced religious participation, finding each time that the program did.").

26. See, e.g., Gray v. Johnson, 436 F. Supp. 2d 795, 799 n.4 (W.D. Va. 2006) (explaining how the Fourth Circuit has incorporated both the coercion and endorsement tests into the Lemon test's second prong).

27. See Van Orden v. Perry, 545 U.S. 677, 685–686, 125 S. Ct. 2854, 2860–2861, 162 L. Ed. 2d 607, 615–616 (2005) (explaining that in many cases, the Supreme Court has either not relied on the Lemon test or has applied it only after concluding that a regulation was invalid under a different First Amendment Establishment test); Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 597, 112 S. Ct. 2649, 2660–2661, 120 L. Ed. 2d 467, 487 (1992) ("Our Establishment Clause jurisprudence remains a delicate and fact-sensitive one."); County of Allegheny v. ACLU, 492 U.S. 573, 595, 109 S. Ct. 3086, 3102, 106 L. Ed. 2d 472, 496 (1989) (quoting Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 694, 104 S. Ct. 1355, 1370, 79 L. Ed. 2d 604, 623 (1984)) ("Every government practice must be judged in its unique circumstances to determine whether it [endorses] religion."); Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 679, 104 S. Ct. 1355, 1362, 79 L. Ed. 2d 604, 613 (1984) ("[W]e have repeatedly emphasized our unwillingness to be confined to any single test or criterion in this sensitive area.").

28. Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 587, 112 S. Ct. 2649, 2655, 120 L. Ed. 2d 467, 480 (1992).

29. Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 599, 112 S. Ct. 2649, 2661, 120 L. Ed. 2d 467, 488 (1992).

30. Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 599, 112 S. Ct. 2649, 2661, 120 L. Ed. 2d 467, 488 (1992).

31. See, e.g., Warburton v. Underwood, 2 F. Supp. 2d 306, 318 (W.D.N.Y. 1998) (holding proof of government coercion is sufficient but not necessary to prove an Establishment Clause violation).

32. Kerr v. Farrey, 95 F.3d 472 (7th Cir. 1996).

33. Kerr v. Farrey, 95 F.3d 472, 473–474 (7th Cir. 1996). For a more detailed discussion of faith-based addiction treatment options, see Part E of this Chapter.

34. Kerr v. Farrey, 95 F.3d 472, 479 (7th Cir. 1996).

forceful, because the penalty for not attending the meetings was a higher security risk classification and negative effects on the incarcerated person's parole eligibility. And, third, the object of the coercion was religious, because the Narcotics Anonymous meetings contained a religious element.³⁵ Similarly, in Warner v. Orange County Department of Probation, the Second Circuit Court of Appeals concluded that because the department of probation had required an incarcerated person to attend a religious Alcoholics Anonymous program as a condition of probation, it "plainly constituted coerced participation in religious exercise" and thus violated the Establishment Clause.³⁶

2. The Lemon Test

If you are unable to show that the prison regulation or practice amounted to coercion, you might still have a valid First Amendment claim under the Lemon test.³⁷ This test, which comes from the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Lemon v. Kurtzman,³⁸ is a "central tool" in the court's analysis of Establishment Clause cases³⁹ and is frequently cited. Therefore, you should be prepared to argue that the regulation that you are complaining about fails the Lemon test.

In order to demonstrate a violation of the Establishment Clause under the Lemon test, you must show one or more of the following:

- (1) The regulation has a non-secular (religious) purpose,
- (2) Its principal or primary effect is to advance or inhibit religion, or
- (3) It fosters excessive government entanglement with religion.⁴⁰

In assessing the first part, a court may be more likely to find that a prison regulation or practice has a non-religious purpose if it permits the presentation of more than one religious view. For example, in Murphy v. Missouri Department of Corrections, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals found that a prison had not violated the Establishment Clause when it allowed a "broad spectrum" of religious programming to be shown on prison television, but refused to show programs of a specific incarcerated person's religious group.⁴¹ A central tenet of the incarcerated person's religion was that "its members must all be Caucasian because they are uniquely blessed by God and must separate themselves from all non-Caucasian persons."⁴² The court explained that the prison's "purpose in providing the religious channel was to create a forum in which a large range of religious messages could air, subject only to 35. Kerr v. Farrey, 95 F.3d 472, 479–480 (7th Cir. 1996). See also Warner v. Orange Cty. Dep't of Probation, 115 F.3d 1068, 1074–1075 (2d Cir. 1996), vacated on other grounds by 115 F.3d 1068 (2d Cir. 1997) (holding that the county probation department could be held liable for violating the Establishment Clause by requiring a probationer to attend Alcoholics Anonymous meetings that contained religious content); Ross v. Keelings, 2 F. Supp. 2d 810, 818 (E.D. Va. 1998) (holding that prison officials violated the Establishment Clause by forcing an incarcerated person attend a drug rehabilitation program that included a religious study component). But see Quigg v. Armstrong, 106 F. App'x 555, 556 (9th Cir. 2004) (holding that a privately-run pre-release program that served as an alternative to prison was free to offer religion-based treatment without providing nonreligious alternatives because the program employees were not state actors).

36. Warner v. Orange Cty. Dep't of Probation, 115 F.3d 1068, 1076 n.8 (2d Cir. 1996), vacated on other grounds by 115 F.3d 1068 (2d Cir. 1997).

37. See Alexander v. Schenk, 118 F. Supp. 2d 298, 301 (N.D.N.Y. 2000) ("In cases not involving coercion courts are required to examine whether practice [satisfies the Lemon test].").

38. Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 91 S. Ct. 2105, 29 L. Ed. 2d 745 (1971) (finding that the state cannot give direct aid to parochial schools), noted in Zelman v. Simmons-Harris, 536 U.S. 639, 668–670, 122 S. Ct. 2460, 2476, 153 L. Ed. 2d 604, 627–628 (2002). The Lemon test has not been used recently by the Supreme Court, and some authors have suggested that the Supreme Court may abandon it. However, as recently as 2005, the Supreme Court affirmed a district court judge's use of the first factor of the test, and refused to abandon the "purpose" factor. See McCreary Cty. v. ACLU, 545 U.S. 844, 859, 125 S. Ct. 2722, 2733, 162 L. Ed. 2d 729, 746 (2005).

39. Zelman v. Simmons-Harris, 536 U.S. 639, 668, 122 S. Ct. 2460, 2476, 153 L. Ed. 2d 604, 627 (2002) (O'Connor, J., concurring).

40. Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 612–613, 91 S. Ct. 2105, 2111, 29 L. Ed. 2d 745, 755 (1971).

41. Murphy v. Mo. Dept. of Corr., 372 F.3d 979, 985 (8th Cir. 2004).

42. Murphy v. Mo. Dept. of Corr., 372 F.3d 979, 981 (8th Cir. 2004).

[the department of corrections'] economic and security concerns.”⁴³ The court found no evidence that the prison favored any one religion in its programming; the individual incarcerated person's religious programming posed a security risk that other religious programming did not.⁴⁴ Therefore, the prison did not violate the Establishment Clause when it aired other religious programming but refused to air the individual incarcerated person's religious programming.⁴⁵

Similarly, in Gray v. Johnson, a district court found that a prison substance abuse program that involved some discussion of religion at non-mandatory Alcoholics Anonymous (AA) and Narcotics Anonymous (NA) meetings and offered both secular and religious library materials did not amount to a violation of the Establishment Clause, even if some participants had sung a gospel song at a talent show and preached religion outside of the program.⁴⁶ The court held the residential substance abuse treatment program for incarcerated people passed the Lemon test because a reasonable observer would not interpret religious activities taking place within the broader program as advancement of religion by the state, since all activities involved free expression by program participants.⁴⁷ The program's dominant purpose was to rehabilitate inmates with a history of substance abuse, which the court found was not a sham secular purpose.⁴⁸

By contrast, the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals found in Kaufman v. McCaughtry that a prison violated the Establishment Clause by refusing to allow incarcerated people to organize an atheist study group.⁴⁹ The prison had failed to show why such a gathering would pose a greater security risk than meetings of incarcerated people of other faiths.⁵⁰ Thus, the court vacated a grant of summary judgment for the prison because it had not given a non-religious purpose for discrimination against the atheist group.⁵¹

In assessing the second and third parts of the Lemon test, which some courts have treated as a single question,⁵² courts have looked to whether the challenged practice either endorses or disapproves of religion.⁵³

In summary, to bring a successful First Amendment Establishment Claim, you should be able to show:

- (1) The practice or regulation that you are challenging is a government action, and either;
- (2) The practice or regulation fails the Lee test because it has the effect of coercing you to practice religion, or;
- (3) If there is no coercion, the practice or regulation fails the Lemon test because it either (a) has a religious purpose; (b) endorses, advances, or inhibits a religion; or (c) constitutes an excessive government entanglement with religion.

43. Murphy v. Mo. Dept. of Corr., 372 F.3d 979, 985 (8th Cir. 2004).

44. Murphy v. Mo. Dept. of Corr., 372 F.3d 979, 985 (8th Cir. 2004).

45. Murphy v. Mo. Dept. of Corr., 372 F.3d 979, 985 (8th Cir. 2004).

46. Gray v. Johnson, 436 F. Supp. 2d 795, 800 (W.D. Va. 2006).

47. Gray v. Johnson, 436 F. Supp. 2d 795, 801 (W.D. Va. 2006).

48. Gray v. Johnson, 436 F. Supp. 2d 795, 800 (W.D. Va. 2006).

49. Kaufman v. McCaughtry, 419 F.3d 678, 683 (7th Cir. 2005).

50. Kaufman v. McCaughtry, 419 F.3d 678, 684 (7th Cir. 2005).

51. Kaufman v. McCaughtry, 419 F.3d 678, 684 (7th Cir. 2005).

52. See Bader v. Wren, 532 F. Supp. 2d 308, 313 (D.N.H. 2008) (“The second and third questions have been fused into one, because the same evidence often answers both questions.”); Zelman v. Simmons-Harris, 536 U.S. 639, 668–669, 122 S. Ct. 2460, 2476, 153 L. Ed. 2d 604, 627 (2002) (O'Connor, J., concurring) (“[T]he degree of entanglement has implications for whether a statute advances or inhibits religion.”); Agostini v. Felton, 521 U.S. 203, 232–233, 117 S. Ct. 1997, 2015, 138 L. Ed. 2d 391, 420 (1997) (combining excessive entanglement into the effects inquiry).

53. Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 690, 104 S. Ct. 1355, 1368, 79 L. Ed. 2d 604, 621 (1984) (O'Connor, J., concurring) (“The effect prong asks whether, irrespective of government's actual purpose, the practice under review in fact conveys a message of endorsement or disapproval. An affirmative answer to either question should render the challenged practice invalid.”).

C. The First Amendment Free Exercise Clause, the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act of 2000 (RLUIPA), and the Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA)

This section discusses your religious freedom rights under the First Amendment Free Exercise Clause and RLUIPA or RFRA.⁵⁴ Although this section begins with a description of the First Amendment Free Exercise Clause, it is absolutely critical that, when drafting a complaint, you state a claim for relief under RLUIPA or RFRA first. The RLUIPA or RFRA standards are easier to meet than the First Amendment standards, so you are more likely to receive relief under RLUIPA or RFRA than under the First Amendment.⁵⁵ After you make your RLUIPA or RFRA claim, you can then make an additional First Amendment claim.

1. First Amendment Free Exercise Clause

Before the enactment of the Religious Freedom Restoration Act, under the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment,⁵⁶ prison officials had to provide you with a “reasonable opportunity” for you to exercise your religious freedom without fear of penalty.⁵⁷

However, in certain circumstances, prison officials may restrict this right to exercise or practice your religious beliefs.⁵⁸ Specifically, a prison may lawfully impose rules or regulations that interfere with your sincerely held religious beliefs, provided that these rules or regulations are “reasonably related” to a “legitimate penological purpose or goal” of the prison.⁵⁹ These legitimate goals might include maintaining prison order, discipline, safety, and security, among others.⁶⁰

So, in order to successfully challenge a prison regulation or practice under the Free Exercise Clause, you must be able to show that:

- (1) Your belief is religious in nature,⁶¹

54. RLUIPA and RFRA provide essentially the same protections; the main difference is that RLUIPA applies to state and municipal incarcerated people, while RFRA applies to federal incarcerated people. See Cutter v. Wilkinson, 544 U.S. 709, 715, 125 S. Ct. 2113, 2118, 161 L. Ed. 2d 1020, 1030 (2005) (noting that courts of appeals have held that RFRA remains operative on the federal government and explaining that RLUIPA applies to state and local governments).

55. See Shakur v. Schriro, 514 F.3d 878, 888 (9th Cir. 2008) (“RLUIPA . . . mandates a stricter standard of review for prison regulations that burden the free exercise of religion than the reasonableness standard [used to review regulations under the 1st Amendment.]”).

56. U.S. CONST. amend. I (“Congress shall make no law . . . prohibiting the free exercise [of religion].”).

57. Cruz v. Beto, 405 U.S. 319, 322, 92 S. Ct. 1079, 1081, 31 L. Ed. 2d 263, 268 (1972), superseded by statute, RFRA. In the Cruz case, a Buddhist incarcerated person was not allowed to use the prison chapel and was placed in solitary confinement for sharing his Buddhist religious materials with other inmates. The court found he was “denied a reasonable opportunity of pursuing his faith comparable to the opportunity afforded fellow prisoners who adhere to conventional religious precepts.”

58. See O’Lone v. Estate of Shabazz, 482 U.S. 342, 353, 107 S. Ct. 2400, 2406, 96 L. Ed. 2d 282, 292 (1987) (restricting incarcerated people who were on work detail from participating in Jumu’ah did not violate the Constitution because it was reasonably related to legitimate penological objectives of security and rehabilitation), superseded by statute, RFRA.

59. See O’Lone v. Estate of Shabazz, 482 U.S. 342, 349–350, 107 S. Ct. 2400, 2404–2405, 96 L. Ed. 2d 282, 290 (1987) (superseded by statute, RFRA); Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 223, 110 S. Ct. 1028, 1037, 108 L. Ed. 2d 178, 199 (1990).

60. See Pell v. Procunier, 417 U.S. 817, 822–823, 94 S. Ct. 2800, 2804, 41 L. Ed. 2d 495, 501–502 (1974) (“[A] prison inmate retains those First Amendment rights that are not inconsistent with his status as an incarcerated person or with the legitimate penological objectives of the corrections system,” including deterrence of crime, protection of society, rehabilitation of the inmate, and internal security within corrections facilities); Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 412, 94 S. Ct. 1800, 1811, 40 L. Ed. 2d 224, 239 (1974) (“The identifiable governmental interests at stake in [the maintenance of prison institutions] are the preservation of internal order and discipline, the maintenance of institutional security against escape or unauthorized entry, and the rehabilitation of the prisoners.”), overruled on other grounds by Thornburgh v. Abbott, 490 U.S. 401, 413–414, 109 S. Ct. 1874, 1881–1882, 104 L. Ed. 2d 459, 473 (1989).

61. See Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 209, 92 S. Ct. 1526, 1530, 32 L. Ed. 2d 15, 21 (1972) (finding that the beliefs of Amish parents were (1) religious and (2) sincere enough to support their challenge of a state law

- (2) Your belief is sincerely held, and
- (3) The prison regulation is not reasonably related to a legitimate penological (prison) purpose or goal.⁶²

The answer to the first two questions must be “yes” before a court will consider whether the regulation is reasonably related to a legitimate purpose or goal.⁶³ The following section looks at each of these requirements in more detail.

(a) Religious Nature of Your Beliefs

The court will first decide whether your beliefs are religious.⁶⁴ The First Amendment only protects religious beliefs; therefore, if the court determines that your beliefs are simply moral or philosophical, it will not find any violation of the Free Exercise Clause.⁶⁵

While this rule is fairly clear, courts have had difficulty defining exactly what constitutes a religious belief.⁶⁶ The Supreme Court has cautioned that “[t]he determination of what is a ‘religious’ belief or practice is more often than not a difficult and delicate task,”⁶⁷ and the court has not yet authoritatively or comprehensively defined “religion.”⁶⁸

Without a fixed definition, lower courts have adopted various approaches. For example, the Third Circuit has adopted an objective test to determine whether a belief is religious. In Africa v. Pennsylvania, the court identified three factors that help distinguish a religion:

that required school attendance for their children). Yoder was overruled by the Supreme Court in Employment Division v. Smith, 494 U.S. 872, 874 (1990). However, when Congress passed the RFRA, it intended to restore the principles of Yoder and prevent such burdens on religious exercise in the future. RFRA's stated purpose is to “restore the compelling interest test as set forth in Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 83 S.Ct. 1790, 10 L.Ed.2d 965 (1963) and Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 92 S.Ct. 1526, 32 L.Ed.2d 15 (1972) and to guarantee its application in all cases where free exercise of religion is substantially burdened.” 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb(b)(1).

62. See O’Lone v. Estate of Shabazz, 482 U.S. 342, 350, 107 S. Ct. 2400, 2405, 96 L. Ed. 2d 282, 291 (1987) (finding the prison’s restriction on incarcerated people who were on work detail from weekly Muslim religious services was reasonably related to legitimate penological goals. In addition, incarcerated people were able to participate in other religious ceremonies.).

63. See Murphy v. Mo. Dept. of Corr., 372 F.3d 979, 983 (8th Cir. 2004) (“In analyzing [a First Amendment Free Exercise Claim], we consider first the threshold issue of whether the challenged governmental action ‘infringes upon a sincerely held religious belief,’ and then apply the Turner factors to determine if the regulation restricting the religious practice is ‘reasonably related to legitimate penological objectives.’” (internal citations omitted)).

64. See Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 215, 92 S. Ct. 1526, 1533, 32 L. Ed. 2d 15, 25 (1972) (considering first whether beliefs of Amish parents were religious and sincere enough to support their challenge of a state law that required children to attend school before considering whether state law was reasonably related to a legitimate purpose or goal).

65. See Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 215, 92 S. Ct. 1526, 1533, 32 L. Ed. 2d 15, 25 (1972) (“A way of life, however virtuous and admirable, may not be interposed as a barrier to reasonable state regulation of education if it is based on purely secular considerations; to have the protection of the Religion Clauses, the claims must be rooted in religious belief.”).

66. See, e.g., Cloutier v. Costco Wholesale, 311 F. Supp. 2d 190, 196 (D. Mass. 2004) (“[C]ourts are poor arbiters of questions regarding what is religious and what is not.”).

67. Thomas v. Review Bd., 450 U.S. 707, 714, 101 S. Ct. 1425, 1430, 67 L. Ed. 2d 624, 631 (1981).

68. See Scott C. Idleman, The Underlying Causes of Divergent First Amendment Interpretations, 27 Miss. C. L. Rev. 67, 73–79 (2008). The most the Supreme Court has been willing to describe religion is as in the following cases: Davis v. Beason, 133 U.S. 333, 342, 10 S. Ct. 299, 300, 33 L. Ed. 637, 640 (1890), overruled on other grounds by Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620, 116 S. Ct. 1620, 134 L. Ed. 2d 855 (1996) (“The term ‘religion’ has reference to one’s views of his relations to his Creator, and to the obligations they impose of reverence for his being and character, and of obedience to his will.”); Minersville Sch. Dist. v. Gobitis, 310 U.S. 586, 593, 60 S. Ct. 1010, 1012, 84 L. Ed. 1375, 1378 (1940), overruled on other grounds by W. Virginia State Bd. of Educ. v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 63 S. Ct. 1178, 87 L. Ed. 1628 (1943) (describing religion as “the affirmative pursuit of one’s convictions about the ultimate mystery of the universe and man’s relation to it . . .”); Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 216, 92 S. Ct. 1526, 1533, 32 L. Ed. 2d 15, 25 (1972) (stating that “philosophical and personal rather than religious” beliefs are not protected by the Constitution).

- (1) A religion addresses fundamental and ultimate questions having to do with deep and imponderable matters;
- (2) A religion is comprehensive in nature: it consists of a belief-system as opposed to an isolated teaching; and
- (3) A religion often can be recognized by the presence of certain formal and external signs.⁶⁹

By contrast, the Second Circuit has adopted a more subjective test, that looks towards the “individual’s inward attitudes towards a particular belief system” instead of the external features of the belief system.⁷⁰ In Patrick v. LeFevre, the court described religion as “the feelings, acts, and experiences of individual men in their solitude, so far as they apprehend themselves to stand in relation to whatever they may consider the divine.”⁷¹ Thus, courts in the Second Circuit will probably look to whether your beliefs are religious in your “own scheme of things.”⁷²

These tests are not the only ones used in state or federal courts, so be sure to research the law in your state or federal circuit. Although predicting whether a particular court will recognize a particular belief system as a religion is hard, you should be aware of some guideposts.

First, the U.S. Supreme Court has stated that the main consideration in deciding whether beliefs are religious is the role they play in the life of the person making the claim.⁷³ Second, the Supreme Court has emphasized that “religious beliefs need not be acceptable, logical, consistent, or comprehensible to others in order to merit First Amendment protection.”⁷⁴ Likewise, your religion does not need to be organized like a traditional church,⁷⁵ conform to an established doctrine,⁷⁶ or otherwise meet any organizational or doctrinal test.⁷⁷

For example, a federal district court recently held that an incarcerated person who had invented his own religion had a potentially valid claim under the First Amendment and RLUIPA.⁷⁸ In

69. Africa v. Pennsylvania, 662 F.2d 1025, 1032 (3d Cir. 1981) (citing Malnak v. Yogi, 592 F.2d 197, 207–210 (3d Cir. 1979)) (holding that although members of the MOVE organization, a “revolutionary organization absolutely opposed to all that is wrong,” held sincere beliefs, these beliefs did not amount to a religion).

70. Patrick v. LeFevre, 745 F.2d 153, 157 (2d Cir. 1984) (holding that subjective issues of sincerity of belief and the perceived religious nature of that belief are questions of fact, rather than law, and reversing and remanding the lower court’s grant of summary judgment for further consideration of the incarcerated person’s request for religious recognition).

71. Patrick v. LeFevre, 745 F.2d 153, 158 (2d Cir. 1984) (quoting United States v. Sun Myung Moon, 718 F.2d 1201, 1227 (2d Cir. 1983) (quoting W. James, The Varieties of Religious Experience 31 (1910))). This definition is similar to the Supreme Court’s description of religious belief as one “based upon a power or being, or upon a faith, to which all else is subordinate or upon which all else is ultimately dependent.” United States v. Seeger, 380 U.S. 163, 176, 85 S. Ct. 850, 859, 13 L. Ed. 2d 733, 743 (1965); accord Welsh v. United States, 398 U.S. 333, 339–341, 90 S. Ct. 1792, 1796–1797, 26 L. Ed. 2d 308, 318–320 (1970).

72. Jackson v. Mann, 196 F.3d 316, 320 (2d Cir. 1999) (quoting Patrick v. LeFevre, 745 F.2d 153, 157 (2d Cir. 1984); United States v. Seeger, 380 U.S. 163, 185, 85 S. Ct. 850, 863, 13 L. Ed. 2d 733, 747 (1965)).

73. See U.S. v. Seeger, 380 U.S. 163, 185, 85 S. Ct. 850, 863, 13 L. Ed. 2d 733, 747 (1965) (“[C]ourts . . . are not free to reject beliefs because they consider them ‘incomprehensible.’ Their task is to decide whether the beliefs professed by a [prisoner] are sincerely held and whether they are, in his own scheme of things, religious.”).

74. Thomas v. Review Bd. of Ind. Employment Sec. Div., 450 U.S. 707, 714, 101 S. Ct. 1425, 1430, 67 L. Ed. 2d 624, 631 (1981).

75. See, e.g., Marria v. Broaddus, No. 97 Civ. 8297, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 13329, at *26–29 (S.D.N.Y. July 31, 2003) (unpublished) (finding the incarcerated person’s beliefs as a member of the Nation of Gods and Earths to be sincere and religious, despite it being a non-traditional religious organization).

76. See Sequoyah v. Tenn. Valley Auth., 620 F.2d 1159, 1163 (6th Cir. 1980) (finding that “there is no requirement that a religion meet any organizational or doctrinal test,” that “[o]rthodoxy is not an issue” and that “[t]he Cherokees have a religion within the meaning of the Constitution. . .”).

77. See Sequoyah v. Tenn. Valley Auth., 620 F.2d 1159, 1163 (6th Cir. 1980) (finding that despite having “no written creeds and no man-made houses of worship . . . [t]he Cherokees have a religion within the meaning of the Constitution . . .”).

78. DeSimone v. Bartow, No. 08-C-638, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64419, at *13 (E.D. Wis. Aug. 12, 2008) (unpublished) (finding that an incarcerated person who had created his own religion, which he referred to as the “Religious Society of Atlantis and the Sanctuary of the Yahweh,” had a potentially valid claim under the First Amendment and RLUIPA).

DeSimone v. Bartow, the incarcerated person argued that prison officials had violated his right to free exercise of religion when they prohibited him from keeping journals written in a language that he invented.⁷⁹ The incarcerated person asserted that he believed that biblical scripture commanded him to write in this language and that the act of writing was itself a religious act.⁸⁰ The court accepted his argument and allowed the suit to proceed, finding that the incarcerated person had set forth cognizable claims under both the First Amendment and RLUIPA.⁸¹

Note, however, that although courts have held that non-major religions are entitled to First Amendment protection,⁸² you may encounter greater difficulty if your religion is not well-known.

(b) Sincerity of Your Beliefs

If the court determines your belief is religious, it will next consider whether your belief is sincerely held.⁸³ Prison officials and courts may require that you demonstrate “sincerity,” meaning a true and deep commitment to your religion.⁸⁴

In making this decision, courts are not supposed to judge whether your beliefs are “accurate or logical,”⁸⁵ or rule on the correctness of your beliefs.⁸⁶ Thus, a court may still find your belief sincerely held, even if the clergy says you are not a member of the religion.⁸⁷ Indeed, “clergy opinion has generally been deemed insufficient to override an incarcerated person’s sincerely held religious belief.”⁸⁸

79. DeSimone v. Bartow, No. 08-C-638, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64419, at *10 (E.D. Wis. Aug. 12, 2008) (unpublished).

80. DeSimone v. Bartow, No. 08-C-638, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64419, at *12 (E.D. Wis. Aug. 12, 2008) (unpublished).

81. DeSimone v. Bartow, No. 08-C-638, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64419, at *13 (E.D. Wis. Aug. 12, 2008) (unpublished) (“DeSimone’s allegations can be understood to allege that he considers writing in Atlantean as central to his faith, and that the Defendants have targeted his writing, as opposed to the writings of other inmates in foreign languages, because of his uncommon religious beliefs. Thus, Desimone will be permitted to proceed with his claims that by forbidding him from writing in Atlantean, the Defendants violated the First Amendment and RLUIPA.”), dismissed on other grounds, No. 08-C-638, 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 48689 (E.D. Wis. June 10, 2009).

82. See Africa v. Pennsylvania, 662 F.2d 1025, 1031 (3d Cir. 1981) (“[W]e must avoid any predisposition toward conventional religions so that unfamiliar faiths are not branded mere secular beliefs.”).

83. See generally Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 207, 92 S. Ct. 1526, 1529, 32 L. Ed. 2d 15, 20 (1972) (holding that Amish children could be exempted from required high school attendance because formal education beyond eighth grade violated sincerely held Amish religious beliefs).

84. Cf. United States v. Seeger, 380 U.S. 163, 185, 85 S. Ct. 850, 863, 13 L. Ed. 2d 733, 747 (1965) (holding that a belief must be “sincerely held” to qualify a believer for exemption from service in the armed forces).

85. See Jackson v. Mann, 196 F.3d 316, 320 (2d Cir. 1999) (“In determining whether a prisoner’s particular religious beliefs are entitled to free exercise protection, the relevant inquiry is not whether, as an objective matter, the belief is ‘accurate or logical.’” (quoting Jolly v. Coughlin, 76 F.3d 468, 476 (2d Cir. 1996))).

86. Cf. Presbyterian Church in United States v. Mary Elizabeth Blue Hull Mem’l Presbyterian Church, 393 U.S. 440, 451–452, 89 S. Ct. 601, 607, 21 L. Ed. 2d 658, 666–667 (1969) (holding that the Constitution prohibits a court from interpreting church doctrine to settle a property dispute that depends upon whether a group is adhering to the doctrine); Bear v. Nix, 977 F.2d 1291, 1294 (8th Cir. 1992) (holding that a court would unconstitutionally intrude upon a good faith “application of religious doctrine by a recognized spiritual leader of the relevant faith” if it overruled a refusal to admit plaintiff into a Native American religion).

87. See Jackson v. Mann, 196 F.3d 316, 320 (2d Cir. 1999) (remanding case in which a lower court incorrectly evaluated the incarcerated person’s claim that he was Jewish by relying on a chaplain’s report that the incarcerated person was not Jewish, rather than determining whether the incarcerated person’s belief was “sincerely held”).

88. Koger v. Bryan, 523 F.3d 789, 799–800 (7th Cir. 2008) (citing Ford v. McGinnis, 352 F.3d 582, 593–594 (2d Cir. 2003)) (holding that an incarcerated person’s belief regarding the importance of the Eid ul Fitr feast to his practice of Islam and not the testimony of Muslim clerics as to the proper celebration of the feast was determinative of whether the prison’s decision to deprive incarcerated people of a post-Eid meal constituted a substantial burden on his freedom of religion); Jackson v. Mann, 196 F.3d 316, 320–321 (2d Cir. 1999) (holding that it was the sincerity of an incarcerated person’s beliefs, and not the decision of Jewish religious authorities, that determined whether the incarcerated person was an adherent of Judaism entitled to a kosher meal); cf.

